

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Second Session of the Thirty-First Parliament

February 21-April 7, 1978

ERRATA

The following errata for the Second Session of the 31st Parliament (February 21 - December 15, 1978) have already appeared in previous daily issues of Hansard. They are reprinted here in bulk so that subscribers can ensure that the corrections have been made.

No.	Page	Column	Line	Should read:
1	11	—	53-54
Ruston, R. F.				Essex North L
Samis, G.				Cornwall NDP
8	267	1	8	Bill 19, An Act to amend the Mental Health
8	267	1	14	Bill 20, An Act to amend the Public Vehicles
8	267	1	20	Bill 21, An Act to amend the Public Com-
11	413	—	55	Stong, A. (York Centre L)
14	522	1	45	Mr. Bolan: I would suggest to the hon.
27	1143	1	56	Mr. Reed: Just as a point of clarification,
27	1143	2	10	Mr. Reed: That being the case, then the
27	1143	2	22	Mr. Reed: I understand that, and I under-
31	1300	2	19	of Bill 11, An Act to amend the Vital Sta-
39	1625	2	4	nature to question 45, order paper 35, which
41	1703	2	15	The House adjourned at 10:49 p.m.
48	1955	1	55	Treasury ministry entitled, "Canada's share
54	2218	1	25	Mr. Samis moved first reading of Bill Pr21
57	2356	2	5	Bill Pr7, An Act respecting the City of
60	2437	1	5	motion for second reading of Bill 71, An Act
60	2459	1	47	teric languages as Gujrati, Punjabi and Urdu,
61	2482	1	13	to men-
63	2552	2	59	moved first reading of Bill Pr13, An Act
69	2789	2	6	respecting the City of London.
84	3357	1	23	of at least 600 square feet and valued at no
89	3577	1	30	of Bill Pr18, An Act to revise the Hamilton
92	3730	1	30	Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary: Given
106	4387	2	37	that
106	4393	1	55	Bill 124, An Act to amend the Residential
113	4667	2	23	97. Mr. D. Warner (Scarborough-Elles-
113	4676	1	5	Mr. S. Smith: In 1970 the then Minister
125	5121	2	11	of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) said, "if the
145	5899	1	25	industry doesn't do it the government will take over."
				there was really no effective way, if
				Mr. Wildman: Why don't you lower the park fees, then?
				Mr. Handleman: I want to express my hope now that Bill 166, An Act to establish the Ministry of is for the Ontario Energy Corporation, which in

No. 1

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Tuesday, February 21, 1978

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

An alphabetical list of members of the Legislature of Ontario, together with lists of members of the executive council and parliamentary assistants, appears as an appendix at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. Phone 965-2159.

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, February 21, 1978, being the first day of the second session of the 31st Parliament of the province of Ontario for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable P. M. McGibbon, Lieutenant Governor of the province.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1978

The House met at 3 p.m.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having entered the House and being seated upon the throne, was pleased to open the session with the following gracious speech.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. P. M. McGibbon (Lieutenant Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker and members of the legislative assembly, the opening of the second session of the 31st Parliament of Ontario occurs at a time when Ontarians face clear and direct challenges to the continuing strength of our province and our nation.

The most crucial challenges are of an economic nature, running to the very heart of the forces that make our economy both prosperous and free, and that allow us to provide the many services that are essential to the well-being of all our citizens. Dealing with these basic challenges is not a task to be met simply through legislation or instant policy changes. It is a matter which requires at the outset an implicit belief in the kind of society we are seeking to preserve and enhance.

Nos actions, doivent, d'abord et avant tout, se fonder sur la confiance. Certains, lorsqu'ils font allusion aux difficultés qui nous assaillent, parlent de crises. S'il existe une crise au Canada aujourd'hui, c'est bien une crise de confiance—à l'égard de notre patrimoine, de nous-mêmes et de notre aptitude à bâtir sur des atouts qui font l'envie de beaucoup à travers le monde.

The foundation of our actions must, first and foremost, be confidence. There are those who refer to the difficulties that face us in terms of crises. If a crisis exists in Canada today, it is a crisis of confidence—in our heritage, in ourselves and in our ability to build upon assets that are the envy of many throughout the world.

The health of the provincial economy, the security and generation of workers' jobs and incomes will be the primary targets of government action during this session. These needs will largely be met through alternatives to a doctrinaire reliance on public spending. The government must assume a flexible and progressive role in shaping the economic framework on which the strength of the total society depends.

Since our current economic difficulties are related to circumstances that are both national and international in scope, every effort must be made to move towards full economic recovery through co-operation with our sister provinces and with the federal government. An important initial step in this direction was taken last week when the first ministers of this country gathered in Ottawa.

Relieving the current state of unemployment is, in many respects, beyond the control of a provincial jurisdiction. Ontario believes, therefore, that we must seek national answers to national problems and that we will strengthen Canadian responses to the larger economic challenge only through co-ordinated initiatives. In this context, the Ontario government presented a clear program for national action to the first ministers' conference with specific proposals both for job creation in the short term and for a medium-term economic development strategy.

Among the several employment proposals on which there was agreement was the need for accelerated investment for major energy projects, and for new capital investments to improve Canada's rail system, and automotive and fishing industries. As well, the conference endorsed the creative use of unemployment insurance for job creation and the provision of tax incentives or credits for industrial research and development.

It is clear that, from both provincial and national perspectives, we must continue to restrain government spending while encouraging the private sector to adopt, through all means at its disposal, measures that will assure domestic economic strength and international competitiveness. Program details must now be developed on the basis of the general agreement reached.

There are several key areas of initiative, notwithstanding the limits of provincial jurisdiction, on which Ontario is determined to act. The worst unemployment in Ontario—as in Canada—is among the youth. Lack of economic expansion and other structural difficulties have conspired to limit opportunity for the young people who are our future. Any meaningful response to unemployment in general must be spearheaded by a direct attack on the problem as it besets those under the age of 24.

Employment and placement of young people in productive occupations must receive a high priority within our entire economic system, and government must look to organized labour and the business sector to follow its lead.

Last year the Ontario government sponsored two programs which provide incentives to the private sector to create new jobs for young workers. The Ontario career action program encourages employers to provide on-the-job work experience. The Ontario youth employment program, for summer employment of students, provides a wage subsidy of $1 an hour by direct payment to the employer. My government will provide additional funds for these two programs in 1978 for the creation of 36,000 jobs at a total cost of $26 million.

Despite the numbers of unemployed and under-employed, a shortage of skilled tradesmen has been recurring in the manufacturing sector. This paradox can only be resolved by a training program especially geared to satisfying the manpower needs of industry. Development of such a program will be given the highest priority during the year. The new training scheme will emphasize employer-centred training and will provide the required level of skills in the shortest possible time.

The labour market information program begun last fall will assist the private sector in matching jobs with people to achieve higher employment, by identifying and analysing the critical supply and demand requirements of the provincial labour market. To ensure the effectiveness of this program, and a fully co-ordinated effort by those involved, the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) will, in the near future, convene a conference with college and university personnel, representatives of labour and business, as well as provincial and federal officials directly concerned.

National economic recovery will not be attained without the full and harmonious support of all segments of our population. The withdrawal of the federal anti-inflation program this spring must be replaced by effective self-discipline on the part of price setters and wage earners alike, both in the public and private sectors. There will be a need for new levels of industrial harmony in striving for the commonly held goals of limited inflation and increased employment.

[3:15]

The Ministry of Labour will continue efforts to improve employees' working conditions throughout Ontario through the help of the quality of working life advisory committee, composed of senior representatives of labour and management. Support will be provided through the allocation of funds for research, promotion and training, as well as pilot projects in industry. These projects will give employees more involvement in, and responsibility for, their total working environment. While the primary aim is to increase job satisfaction, improved productivity—as one of the keys to economic recovery—should be a beneficial by-product of a successful program.

Good-faith bargaining and respect for the mutually critical roles of labour and management will be basic to continuing economic recovery. The government expects to receive a report from the Kelly Commission on Grievance Arbitration whose recommendations, it is anticipated, will aid the resolution of collective bargaining disputes in a fair, expeditious and less costly manner.

Ontario supports the decision of the first ministers that, for a limited period following termination of controls, the Economic Council of Canada be asked to play a key role in analysing price and cost developments. For its part, the province will set fair and firm guidelines with respect to public sector spending and is confident that compensation for public servants will be moderated accordingly.

As announced last September, increased provincial government spending for the coming fiscal year will be held well below revenue increases to strengthen Ontario's economic position further in the move towards a balanced budget. Specific measures in the 1978 Ontario budget, to be presented by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) on March 7, will provide the leadership and example required of government in seeking the co-operation of the overall community in this area.

We must strengthen our industrial structure in order to be competitive on an international scale. Ontario's involvement in the search for solutions beyond our borders has included consultations with the federal government for the current Geneva negotiations on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. While we recognize that certain sectors of our economy will benefit from freer and fairer trade, we remain concerned about the likelihood of real reciprocity being achieved, particularly with respect to secondary manufacturers. We must, therefore, ensure that Canadian-based industries are given adequate protection through periods of adjustment and possible rationalization in the years immediately ahead.

In this respect, agreement was reached at the first ministers' meeting on the need for early establishment of adjustment mechanisms to protect Canadian industry and labour from short-term economic dislocation resulting from tariff changes. The aim is to improve our balance of payments, reverse our deficit position in such fields as tourism, and help us to identify import replacement opportunities. Increasing efforts will be made to find new export markets for Canadian products and Canadian technology.

Capital investment is a key factor in job creation and improved productivity within the growing Ontario labour force. In the face of the slower rate of industrial investment over the past few years, other jurisdictions, particularly northern states and municipalities in the United States, have initiated more aggressive industrial development programs.

In order to remain competitive with these jurisdictions, the government of Ontario will introduce measures to provide appropriate incentives and to promote Ontario as a desirable investment location.

New initiatives will be developed to sell more of our food commodities abroad.

An amendment to the Public Commercial Vehicles Act, while facilitating the movement of Ontario produce within the province, will enhance export opportunities to the United States.

Ontario will continue to press for a reduction in the trade imbalance under the Auto Pact and will examine other possibilities for encouraging a mutually beneficial flow of trade. With the assistance of the federal government, appropriate steps will be taken to ensure that a fair share of future development in North American auto and auto parts manufacturing takes place in our province.

At home, Ontario's participation in the Buy Canada campaign will cover all sectors of consumer and business activity. We must, as a province and nation, realize the full potential of the Canadian market. Support for domestic products in manufacturing and agriculture is absolutely basic to fighting inflation and to building demand and economic strength. This program, proposed as a fundamental precept of our strategy for economic recovery, will be pursued as a joint federal-provincial initiative.

My government is determined to remove unnecessary encumbrances that hinder appropriate industrial expansion or efficient business operation. With this in view, all ministries will undertake a thorough examination of the statutes, regulations and related policies that currently govern business practices and procedures, and will modify or eliminate out-moded and restrictive requirements. This exercise in cutting red tape, usually referred to as deregulation, should benefit big and small business alike, and also individual members of the public who all have dealings with government in one way or another.

In addition, the government will establish a mechanism to review the operation of agencies, boards and commissions, which have responsibility for many of the regulatory functions that are now carried out.

New measures relative to regional and resource development are proposed to provide direct assistance to northern and eastern Ontario as priority areas in the overall economic thrust of Ontario's growth and development.

High transportation costs, particularly in the north, have long been a concern with shippers and consumers. Programs have been introduced at various times to help resolve this and related difficulties. The government has concluded that the adoption of a policy for selective deregulation of the trucking industry will go a long way to removing the inequities that remain. Additional benefits should derive from the effects on the cost of doing business and in terms of encouraging the expansion of secondary industry.

The select committee on highway transportation of goods, which reported to the Legislature last year, advised against the disruption of transportation patterns or services which non-licensed operators have established with the shipping public. The committee recommended that truckers who have operated services without licence between October 1974 and October 1976 be allowed to obtain operating authority under the Public Commercial Vehicles Act. The law will be amended during this session to follow these recommendations.

The North Bay restriction, imposed in the 1930s to protect the developing trucking industry but which now only adds to costs for shipment or receipt of goods, will be removed from public commercial vehicle licences. A further amendment to the Act to exempt the transportation of lumber and lumber by-products will help encourage processing of these products at the source.

A highway link will be constructed between Atikokan and Ignace to encourage new resource industry activity. A special northern program to allow the purchase of Crown land for private recreational use will help increase jobs in the construction and building trades.

There will be increased efforts on the part of Ontario to advance tripartite negotiations involving the federal government and native organizations, aimed at rationalizing the delivery of services to status Indians, resolving land claims and dealing with aboriginal rights.

A series of studies relating to a commuter air service for eastern Ontario, linking key agricultural and urban areas to other parts of the province, will be undertaken by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications to pursue both private and public options for air travel in that area.

Work will be started on co-ordination and implementation of a large-scale drainage, reclamation and resource development project covering the 1,500-square-mile South Nation River watershed. This will enhance the economic productivity of 900,000 acres of agricultural and forest land in eastern Ontario.

Ontario has a body of environmental protections under law of which we can be justly proud, but a proper and careful balance must be struck between the short-term and long-term good. It remains for us, therefore, to summon the technology, the sense of responsibility and the will to reconcile both environmental protection and resource development in order to create productive jobs and a safe, healthy and habitable climate for our people.

Secure and adequate energy supplies are crucial to our social and economic future. Nuclear power and other conventional sources of energy will continue to play a key role in Ontario. At the same time, the government will increase its investment in energy conservation and renewable projects and, during this session, will set out a program to develop our renewable energy resources.

Despite production and supply initiatives related to all forms of energy, it remains as important as ever that government, industry and the general public continue unremitting efforts to conserve energy and to reduce the rate of growth in our demand for energy.

It must be re-emphasized that the realities we face today require changing attitudes by the public at large, as well as by government. In many of our institutions—schools, universities, hospitals—the challenge of coping with the unprecedented growth of the 1960s has been replaced by the need for a reordering of priorities, to do better with relatively less.

Yet, even with the need for fiscal restraint, progress, in qualitative terms, must continue. At this time, therefore, the government will seize the opportunity to place an increasing emphasis on special education in our elementary and secondary schools.

A plan of increased funding has been introduced to stimulate and support expanded special education programs and services at the local school board level. Initiatives will be taken to place more emphasis on early identification of children with learning disabilities, and to ensure that all school boards provide appropriate levels of service for all students within their jurisdictions, regardless of their disabilities and handicaps.

In addition, a demonstration school will be established for limited numbers of children with severe learning disabilities who require services which can only be provided in a residential facility.

[3:30]

The need for reforms in meeting the economic demands of our social systems is equally clear in the field of health care. My government's approach in tempering these demands will be sensible and sensitive.

The future strength of the health system lies in its redirection away from institutional care and toward community and residential forms of care. The commitment to maintain the quality of the system remains at the heart of the government's policy. In turn, by assuming more personal responsibilities for the demands they place on it, members of the public as well as of the health professions can do their part to ensure that ours remains one of the finest health care delivery systems anywhere in the world.

Legislation will be reintroduced for interim improvements to the Mental Health Act and to ensure the highest standards of design and operation in the province's mental health facilities.

The obligation of the individual to the community is rooted in and nurtured by that single most important social institution—the family. Ontario families, like families in other parts of the world, have undergone profound and rapid change in the last quarter century. There has been increasing full-time participation in the labour force by women. Traditional parental roles have changed, as have the functions of the extended family, including grandparents, aunts and uncles and other relatives outside the immediate family circle.

While these changes in family living have, for the most part, enhanced family life and encouraged the fuller development of individual members, they have also created uncertainty about the traditional strength of the family and its role in society.

My government shares the concerns of thoughtful citizens who see a need for concerted action, and is prepared to take a leading part in supporting and strengthening the family in Ontario.

First, the government will undertake a comprehensive review of its policies and programs as they affect the family, with the aim of making appropriate changes to enhance the role and authority of the family unit. Better understanding and appreciation of family concerns will be fostered through special attention to the needs of single-parent families, working mothers and their children; and family care for the handicapped, the sick and the elderly. All of these efforts will be co-ordinated by the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch).

As well, the government will encourage full participation by municipalities, community groups and private organizations in launching a variety of activities during May, which has traditionally been Family Unity Month.

Renewed focus on the family in Ontario throughout 1978 can also serve to direct our attention more toward children within the family unit, rather than in isolation, as we prepare for next year's observation of the Year of the Child, a world-wide event that will be sponsored by the United Nations.

The ongoing commitment of the government to resources for education and its emphasis on children's services are but two symbols of a passionate belief and confident hope in the future of this province. Significant protections for children will be included in legislation to implement recommendations of the consultation paper on children's services which was tabled in the House last December. The main areas of concern relate to child abuse, improvements in licensing of group homes for children and additional protection of the rights of children in residential care facilities.

Human behaviour and social mores are not at the will of governments to dictate; but while times change, basic codes of behaviour remain constant inasmuch as they are fashioned by public consensus. This principle is reflected in Ontario's comprehensive family law reform legislation which will receive final reading and proclamation at this session.

New legislation will be introduced to protect children caught up in family disputes. The bill will deal with custody and access proceedings and with the increasing problem of kidnapping of children by parents. Steps will also be taken to explore the use of independent legal representation as a means of protecting the interests of children in family law cases.

The support of the House will be sought for a series of initiatives towards an overall approach to combat alcohol abuse in our society. These will include proposals pertaining to liquor advertising, enforcement of liquor legislation, drunken driving and the drinking age.

My ministers have approved in principle the introduction of compulsory automobile insurance in Ontario with a view to implementation in December 1979. The program, to be developed by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, will take into account recommendations of the select committee on company law whose report on the enforcement aspects of such a plan is expected soon.

Only by maintaining and improving the processes in the administration of justice can the rights enjoyed by all citizens be adequately protected and the claim of each citizen to equal justice under the law be guaranteed. My government will introduce a new Provincial Offences Act as part of the overall program to streamline and support the justice system. This legislation will simplify trial procedures for offences against provincial law, cases whose numbers currently threaten to overburden the courts. Under the simplified procedure, citizens will be able to have their cases dealt with more efficiently while preserving their legal rights.

The superior courts will be made more accessible to citizens and steps will be taken to enhance the capacity of the Supreme Court of Ontario to hear cases in all parts of the province.

Several new pilot projects will be introduced in the community work program of the Ministry of Correctional Services.

The measure of tolerance and respect that citizens can expect from the community is of central importance to the overall social balance. The sense of fairness that defines our view of society in Ontario and much of the tolerance that we cherish are set out in the Ontario Human Rights Code.

Consideration is currently being given to the range of recommendations concerning the code and the role of the commission that emanated from the most recent review. In the meantime, however, the government will move to protect the rights of the physically handicapped. The status of affirmative action and equal opportunity programs will be clarified, so that they are not deemed to conflict with the provisions of the code.

Greater attention will be devoted to the promotion of harmonious race relations among all the people of Ontario through a closer partnership between government and the community.

It need hardly be stated that Ontario's cultural pluralism is a vital force in, and integral to, the day to day life of the province. The focus of our multicultural groups and organizations, like that of individual Ontarians, is anxiously directed towards the need for the strengthening and reaffirmation of the Canadian identity.

The Ministry of Culture and Recreation is offering funding support for public conferences, seminars and community activities towards this end through the new Canadian cultural identity and citizenship program which already is earning wide and satisfying response.

The fundamental rights of Franco-Ontarians to education in the French language have long been recognized in Ontario. Franco-Ontarians also have a commitment from the government for the expansion of government services in the French language in accordance with need and population distribution.

We shall continue to build upon the strong foundation already laid in the field of education to ensure that French-language programs are available at all levels, where practicable, to French-speaking Ontarians. At the same time, the expansion of opportunities for English-speaking pupils to develop French-language capacity remains a priority.

During this session, there will be legislation to increase the availability of French-language court trials in areas of the province where this service is needed. Amendments to the Judicature Act and the Juries Act will guarantee the steps taken in this direction. As well, the government will review proposals related to the use of French in regulatory and other administrative tribunals.

Present government translation services will be augmented to make more public documents, publications and forms available in both French and English. Of particular importance, a special section will be established to begin work on translating Ontario's statutes into French.

All ministries will undertake a program to identify government buildings and give highway directions in both English and French in predominantly francophone areas.

The appointment of full-time co-ordinators of French-language services in an additional number of ministries will enhance the capability of the government in responding to the community.

Minority language rights in the larger national context must be viewed from a national perspective. The spirit of the St.

Andrews meeting of provincial premiers, in the consensus reached on economic matters and the advancement of minority-language education, should give us much hope. Ontario will be an active participant when the premiers meet again later this week to pursue these discussions and will continue to advance the case for minority-language educational guarantees as a matter that falls more appropriately within the context of constitutional change.

Ontario shares with the other provinces the fortune of belonging to one of the most favoured nations in the world. Our society will continue to thrive if we give heed to shifting priorities within the context of the new realities that are upon us.

The goals which my government has outlined—to reduce inflation, increase employment opportunities, move towards economic recovery and restore public confidence—may all be considered important in their own right. But they are also of utmost importance to the cause of a united Canada.

My government is firmly convinced that the assurance of a secure future and fair opportunity for all citizens of Canada are essential ingredients to a harmonious and unified nation. There seems little doubt that to satisfy such requirements, both constitutional restructuring and economic realignment will be necessary.

Ontario stands ready to play its part, in the full awareness and confidence that all sides of this House will work together towards these objectives. There cannot be any doubt that it is within the capacity of this Legislature, in its day-to-day undertakings, to exert a positive influence throughout Ontario and the nation as a whole, to build and strengthen our future.

Honourable members, my government presents these measures, which are now subject to your consideration and judgement, as being in the best interests of the people of Ontario. May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

In our Sovereign's name, I thank you.

God bless the Queen and Canada.

[3:45]

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was then pleased to retire from the chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that to prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy of Her Honour's speech, which I shall now read.

Reading dispensed with.

TRUSTEE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 1, An Act to amend the Trustee Act.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. O'Neil moved first reading of Bill 2, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this House be taken into consideration tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Davis moved that the member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg) be deputy chairman of the committee of the whole House for this session.

Motion agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Davis, the House adjourned at 3:50 p.m.

APPENDIX

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF MEMBERS OF THE
LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

(125 members)

Second Session of the 31st Parliament

Speaker: Hon. John E. Stokes

Clerk of the House: Roderick Lewis, QC

Member	Constituency	Party
Ashe, G.	Durham West	PC
Auld, Hon. J. A. C.	Leeds	PC
Baetz, Hon. R. C.	Ottawa West	PC
Belanger, J. A.	Prescott and Russell	PC
Bennett, Hon. C.	Ottawa South	PC
Bernier, Hon. L.	Kenora	PC
Birch, Hon. M.	Scarborough East	PC
Blundy, P.	Sarnia	L
Bolan, M.	Nipissing	L
Bounsall, E. J.	Windsor-Sandwich	NDP
Bradley, J.	St. Catharines	L
Breaugh, M.	Oshawa	NDP
Breithaupt, J. R.	Kitchener	L
Brunelle, Hon. R.	Cochrane North	PC
Bryden, M.	Beaches-Woodbine	NDP
Campbell, M.	St. George	L
Cassidy, M.	Ottawa Centre	NDP
Charlton, B.	Hamilton Mountain	NDP
Conway, S.	Renfrew North	L
Cooke, D.	Windsor-Riverside	NDP
Cunningham, E.	Wentworth North	L
Cureatz, S.	Durham East	PC
Davidson, M.	Cambridge	NDP
Davis, Hon. W. G.	Brampton	PC
Davison, M.	Hamilton Centre	NDP
Deans, I.	Wentworth	NDP
di Santo, O.	Downsview	NDP
Drea, Hon. F.	Scarborough Centre	PC
Dukszta, J.	Parkdale	NDP
Eakins, J.	Victoria-Haliburton	L
Eaton, R. G.	Middlesex	PC
Edighoffer, H. (Deputy Speaker)	Perth	L
Elgie, R.	York East	PC
Epp, H.	Waterloo North	L
Foulds, J. F.	Port Arthur	NDP
Gaunt, M.	Huron-Bruce	L
Germa, M. C.	Sudbury	NDP
Gigantes, E.	Carleton East	NDP
Grande, A.	Oakwood	NDP
Gregory, M. E. C.	Mississauga East	PC
Grossman, Hon. L.	St. Andrew-St. Patrick	PC
Haggerty, R.	Erie	L
Hall, R.	Lincoln	L
Handleman, S. B.	Carleton	PC

Member	Constituency	Party
Havrot, E.	Timiskaming	PC
Henderson, Hon. L. C.	Lambton	PC
Hennessy, M.	Fort William	PC
Hodgson, W.	York North	PC
Johnson, J.	Wellington-Dufferin-Peel	PC
Jones, T.	Mississauga North	PC
Kennedy, R. D.	Mississauga South	PC
Kerr, Hon. G. A.	Burlington South	PC
Kerrio, V.	Niagara Falls	L
Lane, J.	Algoma-Manitoulin	PC
Laughren, F.	Nickel Belt	NDP
Lawlor, P. D.	Lakeshore	NDP
Leluk, N. G.	York West	PC
Lewis, S.	Scarborough West	NDP
Lupusella, A.	Dovercourt	NDP
MacBeth, J. P.	Humber	PC
MacDonald, D. C.	York South	NDP
Mackenzie, R.	Hamilton East	NDP
Maeck, Hon. L.	Parry Sound	PC
Makarchuk, M.	Brantford	NDP
Mancini, R.	Essex South	L
Martel, E. W.	Sudbury East	NDP
McCaffrey, B.	Armourdale	PC
McCague, Hon. G.	Dufferin-Simcoe	PC
McClellan, R.	Bellwoods	NDP
McEwen, J. E.	Frontenac-Addington	L
McGuigan, J.	Kent-Elgin	L
McKeough, Hon. W. D.	Chatham-Kent	PC
McKessock, R.	Grey	L
McMurtry, Hon. R.	Eglinton	PC
McNeil, R. K.	Elgin	PC
Miller, Hon. F. S.	Muskoka	PC
Miller, G. I.	Haldimand-Norfolk	L
Newman, B.	Windsor-Walkerville	L
Newman, Hon. W.	Durham-York	PC
Nixon, R. F.	Brant-Oxford-Norfolk	L
Norton, Hon. K.	Kingston and the Islands	PC
O'Neil, H.	Quinte	L
Parrott, Hon. H. C.	Oxford	PC
Peterson, D.	London Centre	L
Philip, E.	Etobicoke	NDP
Pope, A.	Cochrane South	PC
Reed, J.	Halton-Burlington	L
Reid, T. P.	Rainy River	L. LAB.
Renwick, J. A.	Riverdale	NDP
Rhodes, Hon. J. R.	Sault Ste. Marie	PC
Riddell, J.	Huron-Middlesex	L
Rollins, C. T.	Hastings-Peterborough	PC
Rotenberg, D.	Wilson Heights	PC
Rowe, R. D.	Northumberland	PC
Roy, A. J.	Ottawa East	L
Ruston, R. F.	Essex North	NDP
Samis, G.	Cornwall	L

Member	Constituency	Party
Sargent, E.	Grey-Bruce	L
Scrivener, M.	St. David	PC
Smith, G. E.	Simcoe East	PC
Smith, S.	Hamilton West	L
Snow, Hon. J. W.	Oakville	PC
Stephenson, Hon. B.	York Mills	PC
Sterling, N. W.	Carleton-Grenville	PC
Stokes, Hon. J. E.	Lake Nipigon	NDP
Stong, A.	York Centre	L
Swart, M.	Welland-Thorold	NDP
Sweeney, J.	Kitchener-Wilmot	L
Taylor, G.	Simcoe Centre	PC
Taylor, J. A.	Prince Edward-Lennox	PC
Timbrell, Hon. D. R.	Don Mills	PC
Turner, N.	Peterborough	PC
Van Horne, R.	London North	L
Villeneuve, O. F.	Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry ...	PC
Walker, G.	London South	PC
Warner, D.	Scarborough-Ellesmere	NDP
Welch, Hon. R.	Brock	PC
Wells, Hon. T. L.	Scarborough North	PC
Wildman, B.	Algoma	NDP
Williams, J.	Oriole	PC
Wiseman, Hon. D. J.	Lanark	PC
Worton, H.	Wellington South	L
Yakabuski, P. J.	Renfrew South	PC
Young, F.	Yorkview	NDP
Ziemba, E.	High Park-Swansea	NDP

MEMBERS OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

Hon. W. G. Davis	Premier and President of the Council
Hon. R. Welch	Minister of Culture and Recreation and Deputy Premier
Hon. J. A. C. Auld	Chairman of Management Board of Cabinet
Hon. R. Brunelle	Provincial Secretary for Resources Development
Hon. T. L. Wells	Minister of Education
Hon. G. A. Kerr	Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General
Hon. L. Bernier	Minister of Northern Affairs
Hon. J. W. Snow	Minister of Transportation and Communications
Hon. M. Birch	Provincial Secretary for Social Development
Hon. C. Bennett	Minister of Housing
Hon. W. D. McKeough	Treasurer of Ontario, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs
Hon. W. Newman	Minister of Agriculture and Food
Hon. F. S. Miller	Minister of Natural Resources
Hon. J. R. Rhodes	Minister of Industry and Tourism
Hon. D. R. Timbrell	Minister of Health
Hon. H. C. Parrott	Minister of Colleges and Universities
Hon. B. M. Stephenson	Minister of Labour
Hon. R. McMurtry	Attorney General
Hon. L. C. Henderson	Minister of Government Services and Chairman of Cabinet
Hon. K. C. Norton	Minister of Community and Social Services
Hon. F. Drea	Minister of Correctional Services
Hon. L. Grossman	Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations
Hon. G. McCague	Minister of the Environment
Hon. L. Maeck	Minister of Revenue
Hon. R. Baetz	Minister of Energy
Hon. D. J. Wiseman	Minister without Portfolio

PARLIAMENTARY ASSISTANTS

Mr. G. Ashe	Assistant to the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs
Mr. R. G. Eaton	Assistant to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations
Mr. R. Elgie	Assistant to the Minister of Community and Social Services
Mr. W. Hodgson	Assistant to the Minister of Housing
Mr. T. Jones	Assistant to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development
Mr. R. D. Kennedy	Assistant to the Minister of Education
Mr. J. Lane	Assistant to the Minister of Transportation and Communications
Mr. R. K. McNeil	Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture and Food
Mr. A. Pope	Assistant to the Minister of Culture and Recreation
Mr. G. E. Smith	Assistant to the Minister of Industry and Tourism
Mr. N. W. Sterling	Assistant to the Attorney General
Mr. J. Turner	Assistant to the Minister of Health
Mr. P. J. Yakabuski	Assistant to the Minister of Natural Resources

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 21, 1978

Speech from the Throne, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor	3
Trustee Amendment Act, Mr. McMurtry, first reading	9
Employment Standards Amendment Act, 1974, Mr. O'Neil, first reading	9
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Davis, agreed to	9
Appendix: Alphabetical list of members of the Legislature and executive council of Ontario	10

No. 2

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Wednesday, February 22, 1978

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON COMPANY LAW

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, perhaps as a forbearance before I turn to the matter of privilege, I would like to express to all of the colleagues in the House on all sides who wished me well when I was away by force of doctor's orders last fall how pleased I am to be able to return and to join in the deliberations of the assembly.

My matter of privilege, and I take the first opportunity to present it, is that the Globe and Mail in articles on January 26 and on subsequent days, through its reporter Yaffe and columnist Webster, implied that I, along with other colleagues on the select committee on company law, were engaged in ripping off the public purse. That implication, Mr. Speaker, is a lie.

I further note that the Globe and Mail in the course of that particular controversy made the value judgement that travels by select committees and in particular the select committee on company law are a useless expenditure of public funds. Such a value judgement may well be made by those who have taken the trouble to follow the work of that select committee over a long period of time. Unfortunately, the Globe and Mail showed little if any interest over 10 years in the work of that committee and, with the exception of the attendance by Mr. Lawrence Welsh, the insurance reporter of the Globe and Mail, at our sittings in Toronto, has on no occasion paid any attention to the work of the select committee on company law, which is now completing the charter given to it over 10 years ago to reform the corporate law of the province of Ontario in all its aspects. That work is nearing completion. The value judgement by the Globe and Mail would be useful, had they had any understanding of the work in which the committee had taken part.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, a week ago today the conference of first ministers on the economy concluded in Ottawa. It was in my view an important meeting, one which I perceive as a turning point in federal-provincial relations in this country.

This afternoon I would like to take the opportunity to report to the House on that meeting and to table a number of documents from it. The documents are the agenda, the final communiqué, two documents presented to the conference by Ontario entitled, firstly, Immediate Actions for Job Creation, and secondly An Economic Development Policy for Canada. I am also tabling notes on three major statements I made during the conference; these were on the economic outlook and objectives, commercial policy, and consultative arrangements on the economy.

Since much of the conference was covered by television, with the exception of the second day for a period of time, and was extensively reported by all the media, I shall confine my comments on this occasion to what I regard as the meeting's main accomplishments and the considerable Ontario contribution to its success.

The intergovernmental significance of the conference deserved more attention than it received in much of the commentary both before and after the meeting. Let me simply say that in my judgement and experience this was the first time that the government of Canada, whatever its motives may be, has recognized that the economy must be number one on the public agenda in this country, and that national economic policies must be the product of close federal-provincial consultation and co-operation if they are to be effective.

For the past seven years at conferences of first ministers and finance ministers, Ontario has consistently put forward this point of view. Indeed, I made a proposal along these lines in October 1971 to the very first conference of first ministers that I attended as Premier. As recently as last October in this House, I reiterated this view and called for a conference to chart our economic future. The adoption at long last by the government of Canada of this approach should be regarded as a real breakthrough towards improving economic co-operation among the governments of this country for the benefit of all Canadians.

It is my aim over the next several months and at the next conference of first ministers to build on this fresh attitude of co-operation and to secure ways to enhance the quality of our consultative arrangements to ensure that we arrive at clear and effective national economic policies which promote recovery.

A second and equally major accomplishment of the conference was the agreement that was reached on the main directions in which all 11 governments wish to see Canada's economy develop. These directions, with their strong emphasis on continued public sector restraint and on encouraging the private sector (which communiqué, incidentally, was signed by the Premier of Saskatchewan) to play a more significant role in the economic development of Canada, provide a strong foundation for meaningful co-operation between governments and the activities of business, labour and other private sector groups. This is the only way, in my view, that we will secure the objective of having the whole country move together to strengthen the economy.

I take satisfaction, as I am sure all members of this House do, in noting that our efforts at this conference served to underpin much of the discussion. Moreover, many of the more specific suggestions put forward by Ontario are reflected in whole or in part in the conference conclusions.

In the unlikely event that hon. members think I am exaggerating this promising turn of events, let me read a passage from one notable statement at the conference. There were several notable statements, but I will only quote from one:

"There are many who argue that our governments have grown too fast and too large. They say that in our attempts to provide government services for people we sacrificed economic efficiency and competitiveness. I have some sympathy with this point of view. I recognize, as we all must, that if we are not efficient and competitive, if we do not create wealth in the country, we cannot sustain our efforts to help those who need it and build a more humane and equitable society.

"Our aim must be to constrain the growth of our governments. We must reduce our share of gross national product. But, even more important, we must reduce the intrusion of bureaucracy in the daily lives of Canadians.

"We have got the message. In 1976, for the first time in a long while, governments' share of gross national product fell. Federal expenditures, excluding transfers to your governments, grew by less than nine per cent, while gross national product grew by almost 15 per cent. Provincial expenditures followed a similar pattern. In 1977 our growth rate will be very close to the growth in the gross national product and hopefully slightly below. Expenditure restraint will continue."

Those are the public words of the Prime Minister of Canada on the first day of the conference. I welcome and applaud his conversion to our cause of sensibly managing and encouraging a more flourishing economy.

Mr. Roy: It took you two elections to realize that.

Mr. Conway: That's why Darcy should be Premier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It took him a while, but he's done it. Give him credit.

The Prime Minister went on to cite as a creative model which others might emulate, the introduction by this government of our refundable tax credit system to provide relief from property and sales tax for low- and middle-income taxpayers.

I would be glad to supply a copy to any member who wishes the precise wording used by the first minister of this country. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, it was really a very thoughtful presentation. There were some who suggested to me after it was made that somebody in the province of Ontario had prepared it. We didn't. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. Conway: We Liberals are eminently thoughtful.

Mr. Samis: You are better off in Montreal.

Mr. Roy: You couldn't prepare your own failures.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In summary, the conference was a remarkably successful beginning. I am hopeful that it will contribute to restoring the confidence of all Canadians and our friends abroad in the ability of our economy to grow and develop, and of establishing effective continuous arrangements for federal-provincial economic consultations.

Mr. Warner: Tell us about jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, we do not intend to rest on this initial achievement. In the coming months and years—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh no, we'll keep moving. You fellows may want to slow down.

Mr. Conway: Not if you are going to be Captain Bligh.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can assure members that in its unvaryingly constructive fashion, the government of this province will be making every effort to ensure that the federal government honours both the spirit and the letter of its new commitment—

Mr. S. Smith: Like Edmonton.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—to having Canadians and their governments work together so that all of our citizens may enjoy the prosperity which this great country affords.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: Before we get into oral questions, I am sure all members would like me to call to their attention that we have an hon. gentleman with us in the Speaker's gallery, the Hon. G. Mercier, Attorney General for Manitoba. Would you please join me in welcoming the hon. gentleman,

(Applause)

Mr. Lewis: That's enough. The government members can stop now.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Keep it going.

Mr. Samis: You'll regret Sterling.

NDP LEADER

Mr. S. Smith: Before I begin with oral questions, I just want to say a word of welcome if I might to the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) in his new role. I feel there was a time when I thought to myself that what I really ought to wish for him was that same degree of joy and pleasure that I had during my first couple of years as leader. But then I realized that even here we ought not to inflict cruel and unusual punishment on anyone. So I simply welcome him to the ranks of leader of an opposition party and wish him well.

ORAL QUESTIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct a question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. In the Throne Speech there is mention made of the fact that unemployment among our young people under 25 is the worst unemployment, and in percentage terms and perhaps in social terms, I am sure that is a fact. Can the Premier tell us what measures his government is prepared to take for the other very important and hard-hit group of unemployed—those in their peak earning years, 25 to 54, who are often the only support for their families and for whom the number of unemployed has actually risen 42 per cent over the last two months, a 47,000 increase between November and January? Can he tell us what measures his government is planning with regard to that very critical and important group?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are several important critical groups. The Leader of the Opposition has mentioned one, I think the average in that group over the past year was about 3.9 per cent; I think that is the rough percentage figure for the group we have highlighted in the Throne Speech.

Mr. S. Smith: Six point nine per cent.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There will be, of course, amplification in the budget as to the general policies of this government with respect to our financial situation. We highlighted the young people in the Throne Speech because I guess on percentage terms there is about a 13 per cent factor.

Mr. Wildman: You are only giving them summer jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think with the unemployed women it is probably around seven per cent and then with the males between 25 and 55 or 60—whatever the data base is—it is a much lower percentage.

Mr. Speaker, our hope is that with the restoration of confidence and the investment by the people of this province and, of course, across this country, we can develop economic policies on a co-operative basis that will see a number of these people who are at present unemployed given employment opportunities.

Part of it, as was referred to in the Throne Speech, is alterations in our retraining programs so that in those areas where specific skills are required, and the personnel are not available for them, once again with the kind of co-operation that will be necessary from both business and labour—I emphasize—I think we can rectify some of this situation.

I would suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that while we could single out that particular group where there has been some increase—but in percentage terms lower than the area that we focused upon in the Throne Speech—with our policies as a government, and this includes our approach and co-operative approach with the government of Canada, if we set our minds to it, we can instil the spirit of confidence that I think is necessary in terms of consumer purchasing and the availability of savings funds, which are fairly substantial at this moment, and we can do much to restore economic activity in this province.

[2:15]

Mr. Cassidy: That sounds like a precis of the speech yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was asked about the Throne Speech. I would be prepared to go ahead with a further precis of all those other suggestions in the Throne Speech, if the member likes. I thought the member might be asking me a question or two about it and I was saving some for that occasion. I think I have answered it at sufficient length. If there is a supplementary, I'd be delighted to entertain it.

Mr. Mackenzie: We would need a lot of questions to get any answers out of that speech.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does the Premier take issue with the figures, which I will put before the House, that in November 1977, taking men and women together as humans with regard to the age group 25 to 54—

Mr. Foulds: Which is a good way to take them.

Mr. Lewis: The Liberal Party learns, if one gives them time.

Mr. S. Smith: The figures indicate 4.3 per cent unemployment in November 1977 and 6.1 per cent two months later in January 1978, a difference of 47,000 people? Does he have any plans to deal with the desperate situation in our manufacturing sector in Ontario, which affects a good many people in that age group?

Mr. Makarchuk: Tell them about your hopes for the auto pact.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is abundantly clear that I do differentiate between men and women, not in the same way as others perhaps, but I do. In terms of employment, I do not.

Mr. Reid: That certainly nails it down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wasn't referring to the member for Rainy River. Don't get so defensive. I would just say that I am not going to debate the figures with the Leader of the Opposition. We have stated and we recognize the need to have further economic growth and employ more of our people, and I do not make a distinction between male and female employment opportunities. What I have said, and I think it is important both from an economic and social standpoint, is that in terms of providing programs, particularly for young people, some of whom are students, this is an area where the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in his budget will be outlining, we think, some significant issues.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that the government says that its priority is now on the economy—

Some hon. members: No applause?

Mr. Roy: The enthusiasm is overwhelming.

Mr. Cassidy:—can the Premier explain why this government has so effectively passed the buck to the federal government and to the private sector that the only significant action it has promised in the Throne Speech is a temporary program of employment for young people?

Mr. Mackenzie: At no more than $2.15 an hour.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if you don't rule me out of order, I had planned to do this on the member's first question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can't hear the answer.

Mr. Roy: There is no answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was just going to extend my congratulations and best wishes in a more limited sense, I guess, to the new leader of the New Democratic Party. We had a very brief chat on the phone yesterday and I wished him well—not too well—but I want to make sure that he understands. I do understand the onerous responsibilities he has assumed. While I think it is fair to state the new leader and I will disagree on some issues—

Mr. Deans: Everything.

Mr. Breaugh: Sure, he's going to be right.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Not any oftener than he has been in the past.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—I do wish him well, and I say that most sincerely. To answer the question, without having to go back too far in my memory, I think the government of this province emphasized the economy well prior to the government of Canada.

Mr. MacDonald: In rhetoric.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was in our presentation at the previous first ministers' conference, prior to the one last week and we have been endeavouring to deal with it here within our own areas of provincial responsibility.

Ms. Gigantes: Summer jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are not, in fact, passing the responsibility to the government of Canada. The fact of the matter is the government of Canada has a very basic responsibility. If one is dealing with the manufacturing sector, there is no question that the competitive aspect of some industries in this province may have to be improved. We have made significant representations to the government of Canada relating to the GATT negotiations at present going on, that will have, I think, some very profound effects on the future of manufacturing in this province.

Mr. Warner: Just confess. You don't know how to run the store.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Rather than the criticism of passing the buck, yes, we have stated to the government of Canada for some months that they have to come to grips with economic issues—

Mr. Warner: In fact, you've mortgaged the store. The store's empty.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and, as I mentioned in my opening statement, we think at long last they too have recognized the importance of this to the future of this country.

Mr. Warner: You're left with one thing to do. You should resign and get it over with. You can't manage the store; you've mortgaged the store. There's nothing left.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That was both ethically and morally bankrupt.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere does not have the floor.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the Premier how much discussion, both at the first ministers' conference and with the Treasurer, has he had on the structure of Ontario manufacturing, specifically as it relates to the large branch plant economy that unfortunately has grown up in the province of Ontario? What is he going to do about changing that aspect of our industrialization in the province?

Mr. Laughren: That's a Liberal question? You're worried about that?

Mr. Warner: It's now a warehouse economy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I hear the New Democrats saying that the distinguished member is trying to steal their economic philosophy. I'd never say that of the hon. member. They might, but I never would.

There was some discussion. I think it's fair to state that it was limited. It was raised by Premier Blakeney, as a matter of fact, I think in living colour.

Mr. MacDonald: He always raises the basic points.

Mr. Breaugh: Always a leader.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I have great respect for Premier Blakeney. I don't hesitate in saying it.

Mr. MacDonald: You should. You should.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He knows that I think he's politically and philosophically misguided but, as an individual, I have great respect for him.

An hon. member: At least he has a philosophy.

Mr. MacDonald: He's the only intellectual match for the Prime Minister, in a sense.

Mr. Speaker: Just answer the question, please. Ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is fair to state that the conference itself did not feel that this was the fundamental problem that was facing this country or Canadians, and while there was some discussion, I think it's fair to state there was no discussion in great detail of that particular facet.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I'm just trying to extract the substance out of what the Premier is saying.

Mr. Nixon: It is difficult.

Mr. Peterson: Does the Premier agree with the Treasurer's stated and quoted view that unemployment is not a provincial responsibility and therefore the Premier has washed his hands of the matter? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. W. Newman: That's not what he's saying.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Why don't you get a hearing aid?

Hon. Mr. Davis: For the hon. member for London Centre, I will go through it again. The hon. member should really pay more attention to what the Treasurer of this province says, because the hon. member would learn a little better.

Mr. Peterson: The Premier had better pay more attention to what he says.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Treasurer of this province has never said that unemployment is totally a federal responsibility. I have never said it.

Mr. Bolan: You said it yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What we have said is that we will not solve the problems of this province, or of this country, without a greater measure of co-ordination and co-operation among all governments. That is what has been said.

Mr. Peterson: You have washed your hands of it.

An hon. member: Pontius Pilate.

DARLINGTON NUCLEAR PLANT

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy: In view of the fact that the primary rationale for exempting the Darlington station from the Environmental Assessment Act was the need for this plant to be operating in time to avoid supposed power shortages in the mid-1980s, and in keeping with the new study with regard to the projected growth in electrical power consumption, does the minister now agree that the tremendous degree of rush that was referred to, no longer exists and that it is possible to have that project referred under the Environmental Assessment Act as was originally suggested from this side of the House and that in fact it should be done?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker—

(Applause)

Mr. Foulds: They are trying to give the minister time to think of an answer.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As perhaps the hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, the projected load for hydro has by no means been accurately assessed by Hydro itself.

Mr. Breaugh: Or anybody else.

Mr. Deans: That's been the problem for years.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is a very complex subject. There are many implications, many ramifications for management. We have been told by Hydro that within the next few weeks we will be getting a detailed report from Hydro as to what will be entailed as far as stretch-outs or curtailment are concerned, depending on their study from the operating side; and only once we have that study will we be able to see what public policies are involved in this. Until such time, I think it would be very premature to try to answer that question or for anyone else, in fact, to try to answer that question.

Mr. McClellan: Just say you don't know.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary to the minister, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not prepared to say to this House, given the report of Middleton Associates as to the savings that could be brought about by some very minor conservation measures and given the new load forecast of Hydro, that, in fact, the need for Darlington can be put off for at least the amount of time it would take to do the environmental assessment? Is he not prepared at least to tell us that the load forecast recognizes that at least one nuclear station can be delayed at least two years, based on the new load projections?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would simply like to say, Mr. Speaker, by way of reiteration, that until we have a full and detailed report from Hydro which we should surely give them proper time to prepare, it would be precipitous on our part to make any statement or to make any decision as far as Darlington or for that matter any other generating station is concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary to the original question asked by the Leader of the Opposition: Since the government wasted the two-year period from 1975 to 1977 when they could have done an environmental assessment, and now when they have some prospect in face of the lower forecast for the mid '80s when allegedly the lights might go out, why don't they proceed immediately so that they can get their environmental assessment done in time to incorporate any results from it in the construction of Darlington, when and if they ever get around to it?

Mr. Makarchuk: Sounds sensible.

Mr. Martel: Too sensible.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, again I can only answer by further reiteration—until such time as we get a full report from Hydro there is no way we should be asking for an environmental assessment. This would be simply inappropriate and precipitous.

Mr. Foulds: The minister doesn't know what is going on.

Mr. MacDonald: Having wasted two years, you are going to waste more.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier should have stayed with Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, do the replies we have heard indicate that the minister does not have any revised load forecast on his desk?

Mr. Foulds: No.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, we do have a very tentative revised forecast—

Mr. MacDonald: The only thing tentative is what to do about it.

Ms. Gigantes: Not tentative; it's official.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As everyone here knows, it reached the press. We have that. But they are not detailed. No one has been able to say whether this is a temporary situation.

Mr. MacDonald: It has been consistent for the last two years: going down.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Whether it's to be a long-term forecast or whatever, we need details, and before we have details we simply cannot in all good conscience take any other action.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister why it is that Hydro load forecasts are used as a justification for building plants, but won't be used apparently by this government as a justification for taking the time to do an environmental assessment for a plant we really don't need.

An hon. member: Right on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think it is really impossible to answer that question—as I have said on three occasions now—until we have the information that we need to make a responsible and a sensible decision.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy has indicated he is not prepared to add further to his initial answer. I will now recognize the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

[2:30]

(Applause)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I hope it's like this every day and not just at the beginning. I want to thank both the leader of the Liberal Party and the Premier for their good wishes, and just express the wish that they will feel as kindly about me in one year's time as they have been in expressing their sympathies here today.

Mr. Sterling: No chance.

Mr. Cassidy: Maybe not, eh.

Interjections.

Mr. Lewis: Calm down over there.

Mr. Speaker: Could we have some order. Perhaps the hon. members will now do us the courtesy of allowing the member to be heard.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Ed Ziemba is the only honest guy; he didn't applaud.

Mr. Makarchuk: At least we woke Paul up.

Mr. Conway: Let's hear from the grass roots now.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: In view of the fact that the program which he took before the first ministers' conference was titled Immediate Actions for Job Creation and that it stretched so far as seeing the construction of a deep sea fishing fleet in Nova Scotia, can the Premier explain why no reference was made to an action by the federal government which could have been endorsed by the premiers at the conference, and translated into legislation this very week in order to ensure the creation of more jobs within Canada, namely insistence that the pipe for the new arctic pipeline in the west be made in Canada and not be opened up to the rest of the world?

Mr. Roy: In fact you should have insisted that the pipeline go through Ontario.

Mr. Kerrio: We are even, Mike.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am delighted to see that the new leader supports in philosophical terms a suggestion made by this province that one way to stimulate the economy in immediate terms is the policy of buy Canadian; that applies to the pipe.

Mr. MacDonald: That is rhetoric, now what are the facts?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to state that the province of Ontario has made it clear, not just at that conference but on a number of occasions—and others have also made it very clear, including the Premier of Saskatchewan—that we are very anxious to see that the pipe for the new pipeline is Canadian-made pipe. The government of Canada, in its wisdom, has taken the approach it has.

I think it is fair to state that from my understanding of it, the steel companies in this province feel they are in a pretty competitive position. I read the headlines yesterday, about the possible opportunity for a number of new jobs. This government, through the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, will continue to monitor and to press to make sure that this country, and obviously this province, obtains a very fair share of not only the pipe but other material going into that pipeline.

Mr. Wildman: It is a pipe dream.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, it is not.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I'd ask the Premier if he doesn't think it would have been preferable for the federal government to have included a clause in its bill which would have provided for the use of Canadian pipe. If he thinks that should have been done, did he make any specific proposal at any time for including such a clause in the bill; and if not, why not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, actually, the specific piece of legislation was not discussed at the conference. This province has made its representations to the government of Canada; it knows full well our views on this subject. We will continue to press, as I said, for the use of Canadian material in the pipeline.

We have no control over what the government of Canada includes in this legislation. I'm the last one to defend the government of Canada, but I'd be very surprised if they weren't anxious, in fact I know they're anxious, that the majority of this material is purchased in Canada. I don't think there's any question about that.

Mr. Cassidy: Since this question concerns the glaring omissions in the Premier's 10-point program before the conference last week, can the Premier also explain why, in his presentation before the first ministers' conference, he made no reference to the situation in Sudbury and to this government's deliberate undermining of the recommendations of the select committee of this Legislature, which would have had the effect of preserving and creating jobs for miners in the Sudbury area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think there was some discussion as it related to the resource industry generally. There was reference and discussion as it related to the market for not only that resource but others. I think there was—if the leader of the New Democratic Party was watching faithfully, as I'm sure he was—

Mr. Swart: Apprehensively.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —a reference to at least one concern that was expressed by all provinces which was the complexity of the taxation laws as it relates to the resource industry. That does not have an impact in immediate terms on the situation at Inco, I don't debate that for a moment—

Mr. Peterson: Was Reuben speaking for you in that matter?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —but I think it is fair to state that this government was not undermining, undercutting, or doing anything of that nature to the recommendations of the select committee. I appreciate the effort which the select committee put into its interim report.

Mr. Cassidy: You depreciated them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What this government was not prepared to do, as was not the government of Canada, was to get into the concept of stockpiling this particular resource.

Interjections.

Mr. Wildman: That is not what we asked.

Mr. Laughren: That is dishonest. There was no mention of stockpiling.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The leader of the New Democratic Party can argue with that.

Hon. B. Stephenson: What are you going to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is a fair issue to debate, but please don't suggest we were undermining the committee's report. We didn't agree with that aspect and I don't debate that. If the leader wishes to debate the committee report as it relates to the concept or policy of stockpiling—

An hon. member: You didn't listen to your own minister.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why didn't you come up with an alternative then?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —I think it's a fair area for discussion.

Mr. Mackenzie: That was just an excuse. You could have turned it down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But please understand

we weren't undermining or ignoring, although it came fairly late. We were neither undermining nor ignoring; we didn't agree with that particular recommendation.

An hon. member: Your members did.

Mr. Mackenzie: That was just an excuse.

Mr. Conway: Tell Mickey Hennessy that. He will never come south again.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary of the Premier concerning what he interpreted as stockpiling. Is the Premier aware that the select committee was merely asking for a loan of money to continue the overproduction for a period of only 30 days, coupled to a 30-day work-sharing program, which would have allowed them a 60-day moratorium for the other two items in the select committee report to take effect, all of which were aimed at reducing the overproduction and reaching the level that both nickel companies had to reach in order to satisfy their customers and that what we were asking was merely a loan and we were not talking about stockpiling at all?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into a semantic argument as to whether it was stockpiling.

Mr. Mackenzie: You couldn't win it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the hon. member is asking was I aware that the one recommendation was related to the other, the concept of work-sharing for a further 30 days, yes, I was aware of that. The government was aware of it. Of course, if that suggestion had come forward earlier, that in itself might have been a partial solution. If it had been accepted by those who were involved in it, that might have provided a partial solution for a period of time. I recognize that was also contained in the report, yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre has a final supplementary.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the government rejected a buy-Canadian policy when it was proposed by the New Democratic Party in the budget debate a year ago, can the Premier say what specific steps Ontario intends to take now to ensure an increase in purchases of Canadian goods and which of these initiatives, if any, Ontario is prepared to take on its own without waiting for federal action?

Hon. W. Newman: We're already doing it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and Food will tell you we're already doing this. I heard him from here.

Mr. Foulds: It's the first time you've heard of it, eh?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, it's not the first time I've heard it, it's come from the Minister of Agriculture and Food for many months.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to go back in my memory again. I don't think we rejected it. I don't think it was a question of rejecting it. It was a question, when we went to that conference, of trying, in as constructive a fashion as we could—

Mr. Wildman: It's taking the government a long time to accept it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —to delineate some areas where we think certain immediate actions could be taken to assist in the upturn of the economy. That happens to be one of them.

I think it's important in the context and in the phraseology of the program that we have suggested that it be a national program with the co-operation of the provinces. Our ministries will be working with the government of Canada to see that this program is commenced. If—and I emphasize “if”—if other events intervene, who knows, we will explore ways where we can as a provincial government move, in any event, but I'm hopeful that the government of Canada, because they accepted this proposition, will move with this in a co-operative way which I think would be in the best interests of this province.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that many a maiden will say that a failure to embrace is equal to a rejection, and that's what happened with our proposal last year for a buy-Canadian program.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It depends on whether you are hypersensitive or not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have not had that experience.

Mr. Cassidy: You're not a maiden, I guess.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I hope that is obvious.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the urgency of the economic situation in the province today, why can't the government put some real impetus to the direction proposed in the Throne Speech by acting now—here, at once—to bring in a comprehensive buy-Canadian program to govern purchases for the public sector in Ontario which are entirely within this government's jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I find the question interesting and intriguing. I can only restate what I said to the hon. member, that I think such a program would be infinitely better if it were national, with the co-operation of the provinces, and we intend to pursue it in that direction. As I said, if for some reason other events intervene that take up the time of the federal ministers or ministries, we are prepared to see what we can do on our own initiative, but I really think it should be a national program.

TEACHERS' STRIKE

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. I am sure he is probably aware of the teachers' strike in the separate school system in the county of Essex. Has the minister been advised, by his Education Relations Commission, of any action he should take? And is the minister concerned that 37 school days have been lost in the school strike?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, of course I am concerned that for about 37 days the elementary students in the Essex County Roman Catholic Separate School Board jurisdiction have not been in school. They haven't been in school because of the resultant strike between the teachers of that jurisdiction and the board, carried on legally under the bill that all of us in this Legislature passed.

What I would like to point out to my friend is that the procedures to end that strike now, within a few hours, remains with those parties. I agree they have been negotiating for over a year, and that they have gone through a variety of processes. They may not be able to arrive at a negotiated settlement but the processes under that legislation are available to them to end that dispute and have the children back in school tomorrow, if they would just do it.

The processes, of course, are third-person arbitration or final-offer selection. The Education Relations Commission is ready to go down this afternoon or tonight to help those parties enact the kind of agreement that would allow that kind of resolution to their problem. That, I think, is the sensible way for that dispute to be ended. Those who feel that it should be ended—be they parents, ratepayers or any other person concerned in that area—should direct their attention to both the parties and urge them to do that if they can't get a negotiated settlement.

I checked with the Education Relations Commission and its members indicate that they have not had any request from either of the parties to hold a hearing to declare that the pupils' learning process was in jeopardy; the Education Relations Commission has not been asked by either party to hold one of those hearings. I would admit that they have been asked by some of the parents' groups.

Mr. Ruston: Supplementary. Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not feel that when seven weeks go by, and when neither side will agree to something, it's time that someone else should step in?

Hon. Mr. Wells: That is exactly what I said, Mr. Speaker. If the member wants my opinion, it's quite obvious the matter is probably not going to be settled by negotiations between the parties. They should therefore look to the legislation and put into effect the remedies that are provided in the legislation for another party to settle it. But that remains within their hands; they can do that themselves, right away. If they really wanted they could have the schools open tomorrow.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary for the Minister of Education: Since it appears that the board in Essex county would like to surrender its authority to the provincial government, would the minister make it very clear to the Legislature that he will not bring in legislation to force arbitration in this dispute and therefore make it clear to both parties that they are going to have to negotiate a settlement?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think I have indicated my position in the remarks that I just gave in answer to the previous question.

[2:45]

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that for this period of seven weeks both sides have had the opportunity to end the strike or dispute, as the minister has already stated to this House; and in view of the fact that has not been done and very shortly these 10,000 students in the county of Essex will be near losing their school year, does the Minister of Education not feel that it is now his responsibility to intervene and to end the strike with legislation?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I don't like to repeat myself, but I suggest that my friend make these remarks to the Essex County Roman Catholic Separate School Board. He should tell them to get on with the matter and, if they can't negotiate a settlement, agree that the two parties will go to some form of third-party settlement of the dispute. They can do it today and the schools can be open tomorrow. So why ask us to solve their problem?

Mr. S. Smith: Since it seems perfectly obvious that the two parties to the dispute are at this point stubbornly refusing to engage in the behaviour which the minister has suggested that they might logically engage in; and since neither of them seems to be suffering as much as the children and their parents —the children have now missed 37 school days; and since I assume that even under the minister's administration one learns something in 37 school days; is it not time for the minister to request the Education Relations Commission to make an assessment of the harm being done to the education of these children and then to take action as the Minister of Education in this province?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think I've answered that question. I don't feel that it is my place, at this point in time, to ask the Education Relations Commission to make—

Mr. Lewis: You know what they want. They want a bill and they want it tomorrow.

Mr. S. Smith: Why don't you ask the ERC?

Mr. Mancini: Ten thousand students out of school.

Mr. Speaker: No further supplementaries.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker—

(Applause)

Mr. Deans: You don't know how much you're loved until you lose.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I don't know; Peterson never gained anything.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't be so sure.

ONTARIO ECONOMIC STRATEGY

Mr. Deans: I want to ask a question of the Treasurer. I have been following with some interest the Treasurer's statements of the last two or three months with regard to the state of the Ontario economy. Given that he has been at the helm for at least six years and given that his party has been in charge for at least 35 years, can he tell me how he proposes to bring about any change that would be beneficial, since everything that we suffer from was brought about by him?

Mr. Roy: And you were pulling for him in the leadership.

Mr. Wildman: It's a federal matter, isn't it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, recognizing that my friend has not yet settled down from the rhetoric of the campaign—

Mr. Deans: Oh, I have settled down.

Mr. MacDonald: The Treasurer hasn't settled down since 1971, what is he complaining about?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —I suppose I would simply quietly point out to him two things: that in addition to things which I may or may not have been responsible for, there have been a few things going on in the world around us. I would refer specifically to the oil price increases of 1973, by OPEC, which have meant that really the whole western industrialized world has not grown, in the mid-seventies and late seventies, at the rate at which it grew during the sixties and the early seventies. The growth rate in this country for the last three or four years, cumulatively, has been as good or better than most of the western industrialized world.

Our growth rate in Canada last year was not satisfactory to any of us, but I think one can take some satisfaction in the fact—and if I am to be honoured with the blame or take the abuse I do take some satisfaction in the fact—that the growth rate in Ontario last year, in real growth, was better than that of every other province except Alberta.

Mr. S. Smith: And for less than the Treasurer predicted.

Mr. Deans: I have a supplementary question. I wonder if the Treasurer could tell me how he rationalizes that position with the statement which he made on February 16, to the Canadian Business Editors Association, in which he points out, "that in a healthy economy by all traditional standards, the paper argues, last year we would still have had a deficit in Ontario of some $369 million and probably closer to $700 million"?

If he is such a good manager, capable of doing all the things he claims he could have done, how can it be that we would have had a deficit of almost $700 million even if the economy had been operating at full tilt?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I'm glad the member is reading my speeches.

Mr. Deans: I read a lot of what the Treasurer says.

Mr. Nixon: He has a very large mailing list.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Perhaps the member might precis it for his new leader.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The point I was attempting to make in that speech—and obviously the member has grasped it—is that the answer to our problems—

Mr. Deans: Oh yes, I grasped it; the Treasurer can't manage the economy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —is not higher and higher government spending, which is advocated by his party—

Mr. Deans: Which he has been doing.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and his party almost exclusively.

URANIUM DRILLING

Mr. Gaunt: I have a question of the Premier. Will the Premier intervene to hold off any exploratory drilling for uranium in Lake Wanapitei until a thorough environmental assessment of any commercial or industrial development, including drilling in or next to the lake, is undertaken, as was recommended by the Lake Wanapitei study committee?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand there may be some litigation on that matter. The hon. minister who is familiar with it will be here. I will look into this; though I won't be here later on this afternoon or tomorrow. I will get some information to the hon. member even in my absence.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: In view of his refusal to meet the requests of the regional council to rescind the cabinet order allowing drilling for uranium in Lake Wanapitei, will the Premier, based on the over 10,000 signatures that I am about to send to him petitioning the cabinet to rescind that order, reconsider his position and follow what he did in Elliot Lake and prevent drilling for uranium on the lake which is the city's drinking water supply?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As this volume of material is coming across to me, I would say to the hon. member first thank you very much for the petition. Second, as I said to the member, I will be looking at this matter and I will have an answer for him perhaps tomorrow or Friday.

Mr. Martel: One further supplementary question: While the Premier is reconsidering his position, in view of the fact that under Bill 164 this government gave to the regional municipality of Sudbury the responsibility for drinking water for the region, should he not think that he would honour that autonomy he gave them, and that responsibility he gave them, by meeting their requests not to allow that drilling to proceed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am very sympathetic to the responsibilities of any municipality.

Mr. Laughren: Prove it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I just have to tell the member I don't want to go back to some of the inconsistencies his people have presented when they have said to us—

Mr. Swart: What about breaking the Edmonton commitment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —"Don't worry about the autonomy of the municipalities. Move in and hit them over the head and do what you think we should do." Please be consistent. The member's party is not always consistent.

Mr. Laughren: Think of our drinking water supply; never mind the red herring.

Mr. Martel: The Premier believes in local autonomy when it's convenient.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If it suits their interest they want autonomy; if it doesn't suit their interest they don't want it.

Mr. Martel: That's what the Premier does too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All I'm saying is it is a matter, I think, of great public interest to Sudbury and to others. I will give the hon. member, or some minister will, an answer tomorrow or Friday. I want to make it quite clear that if the member is suggesting that the government is reconsidering, I didn't say that.

MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Mackenzie: To the Minister of Labour: Would the Minister of Labour tell this House why in blazes we have to wait another five months for the miserly increase in the minimum wage; and why it only amounts to less than four per cent over the last two years when inflation has increased at a rate of about 10 per cent a year over the last two years?

Mr. Kerrio: Why isn't it your $4 plan? You forgot to ask the rest of the question.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is within the economic interest of those people who are employed in this province, I think, to give employers the longest possible lead time when we are considering moving the minimum wage. It is specifically addressed to the problems of the hospitality industry which is, as every member of this House knows, undergoing some grave difficulty in its direct competition with the hospitality industry in the northern United States.

We therefore feel very strongly that although we must increase the purchasing power of those people who are employed at the level of minimum wage, it must be done at the cost of the smallest number of employment opportunities, for both our young people and those people in the hospitality industry.

An hon. member: To cater to the American tourists.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Does the minister realize the number of concessions we have already given to the tourist industry; and when are we going to start considering the low-wage employees in that industry? Will she not also consider carrier boys who are being exploited—covering them under the minimum wage? What about young people who are trying to remain in school and are going to remain at $2.15 an hour? Isn't it time we took a look at those situations as well?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I think it is much preferable that those young people have jobs than that they have no jobs at all and no income.

Mr. Deans: Why doesn't the minister talk to the Treasurer about that mess too?

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would ask the hon. member to list for me all those concessions which he seems to think we have given to the hospitality industry. There is one small segment of that industry to which tip differential is applied—only one small segment. I would remind the hon. member that in other provinces in this country, and many states in the union, the tip differential applies to all workers within the hospitality industry; and it is much larger than it is in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: A bad precedent is no precedent at all to follow.

Hon. B. Stephenson: And it will remain much larger even when ours expands slightly.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister is raising the minimum wage—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Oh, oh. We know where the power is over there.

Mr. Foulds: —could the minister explain why, in view of the fact that since July 1975 the industrial wage composite has gone up over 20 per cent, the minister did not bring in an increase in the benefits for injured workers? How much longer is she going to discriminate against these people because of their commitment to the work ethic?

Mr. Speaker: That's not supplementary to the original question.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: If we could have our final supplementary then—

Mr. Speaker: You had it; it was out of order.

GLENDALE TRAINING CENTRE

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. It is in regard to the closing of the Glendale Adult Training Centre in Simcoe.

The first question is, has the minister received a copy of the citizens' committee report which recommends retaining the program? If so, has he had an opportunity to review it? I think all parties in the House have received a copy of the citizens' committee's report recommending retention of the program.

Secondly, how can the minister justify doing away with a program which has only been in operation three years and only now appears to be working well; and which has a lot of public support?

Thirdly, in view of the fact that the minister has indicated that Canadian produce is being utilized at these jails, would he say why it appears that offshore beef is being used at this particular facility?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I have just received the report. Obviously the member forgot to send it.

Mr. Conway: Has the minister been in his office this month?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: He wasn't down in Florida getting a tan.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In all fairness, my deputy minister and I met last Friday with the citizens' committee from Glendale; and even as late as last Friday—they were in my office for three hours—they didn't leave this. I appreciate this copy, coming as it did from the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Kerrio: The minister had them mesmerized.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In terms of the second question—and I would appreciate it if the member would raise the third one as a supplementary; I had some difficulty hearing it.

[3:00]

Question number two was, how could we close an institution that has only been operating for three years? The Glendale Adult Training Centre was a training school for juveniles up until 1974. At that time we did have jurisdiction over juveniles as well as adults and my predecessors in this ministry transferred that institution into an adult centre. The difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is that within those three years a great number of changes have taken place.

First of all, the program that is at Glendale will now be duplicated in the community via community resource centres. A community resource centre is not a halfway house, it is a residence in the community. It is a jail without bars, that operates under jail conditions; where the superintendent is in charge. The significant difference is that rather than institutionalizing the youthful offender—and the entire complement or the entire number of inmates at Glendale are between 17 and 23, first reformatory offence—they will now remain in the community. They will serve their sentence in that community resource centre and those centres will not be run by the government. Those centres will be run by private social agencies. They will be run by the John Howard Society, the Elizabeth Fry Society, the Fortune Society,

St. Leonard's Society; and indeed, Mr. Speaker, where any one of that particular group, which has laboured very long in this country for penal reform and for community activity, does not exist in that particular community, groups of citizens will band together even without the umbrella tag.

It will be an equal business partnership. It will not be on the basis of funding and so on and so forth, which has ruined and almost put out of existence the private social agency. They will present proposals to us and on the basis of their proposals we will make solid bona fide business arrangements covering a particular period of time. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the private social agencies of this province are extremely enthusiastic about this program.

So rather than continue institutionalizing youthful offenders, which is exactly what we do at Glendale, they will be in the community. I think one of the things that is agreed upon in the corrections field is that the re-entry point of the offender back into the community is the most significant. That's what makes or breaks; and in that case it will be handled directly in the community.

I apologize, I have a cold and I couldn't hear the third part of the question. If the member would ask it as a supplementary I would be pleased to answer.

Mr. G. I. Miller: The third question was, does the minister realize that offshore beef is being utilized at Glendale? Since I think he has indicated that Ontario institutions utilize Ontario produce.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that if there is produce, particularly meat, that doesn't have its origin in this country, I would be pleased if the member would tell me about it, because I will be down there today—

Mr. Ruston: He just told you.

Mr. Peterson: You don't even know what a cow is, Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —I will be down there today, my friend, and there won't be any offshore beef or anything else.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: In view of the fact that we do not have the community resource centres, in view of the fact that we do not have the staff out there in the community to look after the people, and in view of the fact that the people the minister is going to shovel off into the community are people with all sorts of emotional, character problems, sex problems and everything else, does he not feel that although his program may have merit eventually in the community, when he has those resources in the community, that at this time it is premature for him to consider closing Glendale?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, I have new community resource centres, in addition to the 32 that we have now, coming on stream across this province.

Mr. Lewis: What do you mean, you have?

Hon. Mr. Drea: We are taking proposals from them right now. It disturbs me somewhat that a member would refer to inmates serving a first reformatory or first correctional centre sentence, such as are at Glendale now, as people having severe emotional and other problems. They do not.

It also disturbs me no end that, of all the places in the House, from the party that led the way for the deinstitutionalizing of the training schools we now have a member saying that I should maintain a post-graduate training school. Mr. Speaker, I do not follow the consistency in that.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The party of reaction; that's what they are.

Mr. Makarchuk: Can the minister at this time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can't hear the question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This is the new emphasis on the economy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Those are your principles. If we don't like them, you have got others.

Mr. Makarchuk: Can the minister at this time file with the House the addresses or the location of the community resource centres and the personnel associated with them?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, on a general basis let us say that there will soon be one in Barrie—within the immediate future. There will be two in Toronto; one by the Fortune Society, another probably by one of two social agencies that have made proposals. There will be an additional one in Hamilton. There will be an additional one in Kitchener. I don't want to mention the agencies that are making the proposals because their proposals—

Mr. Roy: Are secret.

Hon. Mr. Drea:—may not be acceptable to either one of us. I respect their privacy. We have asked them to make that type of proposal.

Mr. Foulds: How long will they take to get them in place?

Mr. Cassidy: You are closing Glendale now and they're not ready. They're proposals.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will tell the hon. member that by the time on March 31 that my friend and colleague, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), takes over Glendale and runs it as a juvenile institution—

Mr. Makarchuk: They didn't even know they were taking it over a while ago.

Hon. Mr. Drea:—I will have across this province the community resource centres which are perfectly capable of taking the inmates who ordinarily would have been referred to Glendale.

Mr. Foulds: Listen to this. Listen to this, Keith.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park-Swansea with a new question.

Mr. Ziemba: It's not a new question. It's a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: We have had enough supplementaries. The hon. member for Bellwoods.

DEATH OF KIM ANNE POPEN

Mr. McClellan: If I may ask the Minister of Community and Social Services a question respecting the investigation into the death of Kim Anne Popen: Firstly, can the minister confirm a story that was reported in the Sun of February 1 to the effect that a Mr. William Higgins, the lawyer for the Popen family in both the family court custody hearing and in the manslaughter trial of Mr. and Mrs. Popen, was at the same time a member of the board of directors of the Lambton County Children's Aid Society?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my information at this point the lawyer in question did in fact serve on the board of the Children's Aid Society, but I understand not at the time of the hearing relating to the custody of the child, Kim Anne Popen. Presumably that and other aspects of the matter are being looked into at the present time by the committee—I'm speaking now from recollection on the basis of questions that were raised last fall with respect to the role of the counsel in that case.

If there has been any change or updating of that information, I will certainly communicate it to the hon. member, but at this point, that's my understanding.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, in view of the fact, as I understand from the minister, that the lawyer did represent the family in the manslaughter trial and there's some doubt about the custody hearing; and, secondly, as county court judge Meehan has accused the Lambton County Children's Aid Society of "almost criminal neglect"—and that's a quote—I want to ask the minister would he not agree that he should disband the cosy little in-house review of the matter that he has established under the direction of Margaret Farina of the OACAS and establish instead a proper judicial inquiry under section 3 of the Child Welfare Act?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would take exception, first of all, to the description that the hon. member has given to the committee. I have, through the representative of our ministry on that committee, been attempting to monitor their progress—

Mrs. Campbell: Still cosy.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—and I can assure the hon. members at this point that it has been anything but cosy. I think the task they have undertaken, they have taken very seriously. The reporting date, as I recall, is the end of this month and I hope to have some further comments on that more specifically, perhaps before the end of this week.

REPORTS

RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Havrot from the standing resources development committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill 70, An Act respecting the Occupational Health and Occupational Safety of Workers.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill 59, An Act to reform the Law respecting Property Rights and Support Obligations between Married Persons and in Other Family Relationships.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

MOTION

SELECT COMMITTEE ON COMPANY LAW

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I move that the select committee on company law be authorized to meet concurrently with the House on Thursday afternoons for the purpose of writing its report.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Welch moves that the select committee on company law be authorized to meet concurrently with the House on Thursday mornings—

Hon. Mr. Welch: I must apologize. The only reason we would need a motion is if the committee was meeting in the afternoon when the House was in, which was my understanding. If, in fact, they are going to meet Thursday mornings, obviously we don't need the motion. I wish somebody had communicated that to us.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

GASOLINE AND HEATING OIL UNIFORM PRICING ACT

Mr. Lane moved first reading of Bill 3, An Act to require a Single Price for Gasoline and Heating Oil Sold in Ontario by a Wholesaler.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to speak on this bill but this is the first opportunity I have had to raise a question of privilege which concerns the order of the private members' ballot. I suggest to you, sir, that some time next week when time is more available, rather than involving the House—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order if I may. Should not the bill be completed before the hon. member takes the floor?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Handleman: May I speak to my point of privilege, Mr. Speaker? I am speaking on a question of privilege concerning the ballot items 20 and 21 which will be placed on the order paper.

[3:15]

Mr. Conway: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, shouldn't the member for Algoma-Manitoulin have a chance to speak to his bill?

Mr. Handleman: I am not objecting to his bill. The hon. member will have an opportunity, I suggest, to speak to the bill when I've put my question of privilege. I have no intention of speaking to the bill but on a question of privilege which, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, precedes that.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, why do you allow the member for Carleton to sabotage the efforts of the member for Algoma-Manitoulin? Let him speak on first reading and then raise the question of privilege, for heaven's sake.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, if that's your wish I'm quite prepared to sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Speaker, in reference to the bill I have just introduced, I intended to introduce it yesterday but it got lost en route to my desk, and I was unable to do so. I would hope the House would agree to debate this bill on March 9, even though it's one day late being introduced.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous consent?

Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It's agreed that it will be brought up on March 9. Now the hon. member for Carleton.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Mr. Handleman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly had no wish to deny the hon. member the consent that he sought.

I wish to raise a question of privilege but not in detail. I understand the constraints of time for the mover and seconder to the Speech from the Throne, but I want to reserve the position, so that there won't be a point of order raised later on. I am raising it at the first opportunity, that is, that my privileges as an individual member of the House have been infringed upon by the continuation of the ballot list without an order of this House authorizing that continuation. I don't want to go into detail on it. I think I would rather raise it when more time is available.

There was no order of the House to continue the ballot order and that is required under the rules which this House has adopted. I'd like to speak to it at greater length some time next week when there is more time to do so.

Mr. Lewis: It's a good thing he's out of cabinet. It must have been a nightmare. Does he nitpick like this all the time?

ASSESSMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Leluk moved first reading of Bill 4, An Act to amend the Assessment Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Leluk: The bill provides an exemption from municipal taxation for additions and improvements to residential property that are designed to aid persons who are physically disabled.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I draw the attention of the hon. members to provisional order 25 which allocates a minimum of eight sitting days for the debate on the motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and requires the completion of this debate before the introduction of the budget. As the Treasurer has already publicly announced, the budget will be brought down on Tuesday, March 7, at 8 o'clock in the evening. This will allow the Throne Speech debate to be completed on Monday, March 6.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Consideration of the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. McCaffrey moved that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To the Honourable P. M. McGibbon, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario.

May it please Your Honour: We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. McCaffrey: It is an honour and a privilege for me to move adoption of the second Speech from the Throne of this 31st Parliament, constituted of an assembly duly chosen by the people of Ontario.

I believe all of us have just cause to support the approach to the priorities in the province as set out in the government's program outlined in Her Honour's address yesterday. The Speech from the Throne made it clear the most crucial challenges facing us are of an economic nature running to the very heart of the forces that make our economy both prosperous and free and that allow us to provide the many services that are essential to the well-being of all our citizens. There remains therefore a clear recognition by this government that only a strong and growing private sector can produce the jobs, the profits, and thus the taxes that the people of Ontario will need in order to improve and develop the social services we all deem to be essential.

Mr. Wildman: Just like Inco did.

Mr. Peterson: Did Darcy write this for you?

Mr. McCaffrey: It is challenge enough at the best of times to convince others in this Legislature of that essential fact.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Especially when they don't listen.

Mr. McClellan: Don't drop your script.

Mr. McCaffrey: Our free enterprise system, this rather fragile system, is our only long-term route to a time when we can pay for those social services and programs we all demand. It is an even greater challenge to keep this basic tenet intact when the citizens of this province are caught up in the somewhat more bleak international and national economies of today and when some levels of their governments are still trying to underwrite social programs that the system can't afford. We in Armourdale are understandably concerned about the state of our national economy. I would go further and say that generally we recognize that things are not what they were. We know that we face difficult times, yet we remain confident that the right, not only the easy, steps will be taken to get us through this period. Generally speaking, in my community our own level of demand for new government services or programs has abated somewhat. The intelligent readjusting or restraint that we practise in our own homes, in our own businesses, is what we expect from all levels of government serving us. What is of particular importance to the people of my constituency is to note how this government responds in the face of these problems, to note how the government sees its role today.

Mr. Wildman: That was shown by your response to the Inco report.

Mr. McCaffrey: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is refreshing for us to see in the Speech from the Throne a candid assessment of our major problems—

Mr. Wildman: You quite obviously didn't read the report.

Mr. McCaffrey:—and an honest series of statements as to how the government must play its particular role. For one thing, there is recognition that capital investment is a key factor in job creation and improved productivity within the growing Ontario labour force. In order to remain competitive the government of Ontario will introduce measures to provide appropriate incentives and to promote Ontario as a desirable investment location.

The government is determined to move more aggressively to deregulate where possible, to make it easier for businessmen both large and small to concentrate on their own affairs. A mechanism will be established to review the operation of agencies, boards and commissions in this jurisdiction. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) introduced a private member's bill last session which recognized the need for such a step. Many of my own colleagues, in particular the member for London South (Mr. Walker) have pressed for legislation to enact what is now popularly referred to as a sunset law. So by encouraging investment in this province where possible and by making life a little easier for business this government exercises its proper mandate in a responsible manner and my constituents support this approach.

This government recognizes, and it was again reflected in the Speech from the Throne yesterday, that we must co-ordinate our initiatives with the federal government. All Canadians witnessed last week at the first ministers' conference in Ottawa—

Mr. Wildman: You leave it all up to them.

Mr. McCaffrey:—what Ontario citizens have known for years, that a rational program for national economic growth originated with this government. Now we in Ontario are accustomed to seeing good federal programs originate with this government, but our ability to exercise some form of national leadership has never been more urgent. More importantly, it was made clear in yesterday's address that our government does not intend to wait for Ottawa to unveil their economic strategy for us. We are told that our Minister of Labour will shortly convene a conference with college and university personnel, representatives of labour and business as well as provincial and federal officials directly concerned.

I am confident that all members of the Legislature will applaud and support this initiative by the minister and the government. This minister can't wait and won't wait to get on with the job of identifying our national labour market needs in order to satisfy our more provincial objectives.

No discussion of the role of government during a period of general economic slowdown would be complete without reference to a continuing responsible restraint program in the area of government spending.

I find it amusing that a discussion about restraint in government spending in this Legislative Assembly sounds redundant and certainly in this jurisdiction it is old news. We could only wish that all other levels of government in this country had adopted a stance as early as this government did.

The Speech from the Throne restates this government's long-term objectives. The generation of workers' jobs and incomes, while primary targets of government action, will be met through alternatives to a doctrinaire reliance on public spending, alternatives which we have mentioned, alternatives like encouraging capital investment in this province and deregulating where possible to ensure that the burden of growth in Ontario is carried by the private sector.

An intelligent, responsible restraint program does not preclude this government from again using taxpayers' dollars to help create the greatest number of short-term jobs when circumstances judge that to be wise. That this government can assume a flexible and I would call it a progressive role in job creation is reflected in the determination to follow up on last year's success in providing incentives to the private sector to create new jobs for young workers in our province.

I know all members of this Legislature will support the spending of $26 million this year to help provide 36,000 jobs under the Ontario Career Action Program and the Ontario Youth Employment Program.

Mr. Wildman: A gum drop instead of a pill.

Mr. McCaffrey: These successful programs provide excellent present day illustrations of how the best traditions of the Progressive Conservative Party can serve our present and future needs.

Ms. Gigantes: They're not just illustrations, they're all you've got.

Mr. McCaffrey: Our party has always known that the government can and must exercise its muscle when no other agency or group is able to solve the problem.

The success of last year's programs to help create new jobs for young workers can be surpassed this coming summer. While assisting the young people in our province, this government also challenges today's youth with the very real need to reassess the role that alcohol has played in their lives. Faced with the all too prevalent fact of alcohol abuse in our society, the government proposes to attack the problem in a stern but equitable manner and we are confident in our party that the young people will accept their new responsibilities.

Mr. Wildman: Get them more jobs.

Mr. McCaffrey: The government is to be congratulated for refusing to merely isolate the young drinker. Rather, a broader package of initiatives will be introduced that speak to the serious problem of alcohol abuse by all ages. The people in our community wanted, and are going to get, more strict enforcement of liquor legislation and more severe penalties for drunken drivers of every age.

There will understandably be criticism of some of the government's proposals on specific economic or social programs—

Mr. Wildman: Oh, I doubt it.

Mr. McCaffrey: —as outlined in yesterday's address and these differences will be debated in this Legislature in the months ahead. It is understandable too that some of the differences between the three parties' positions will be pretty fundamental ones and that the debate should be heated. On a more personal note, I hope that the discussions to come on national unity and on the question of minority language rights in this province shall be constructive and not too heated.

[3:30]

Let me say as candidly as I can that I am concerned about this issue of French language rights in our province and the manner in which it be handled in the days ahead. The Premier of Ontario in a speech made earlier this month restated several basic positions which are supported by our party. "The principle of bilingualism," he said, "the notion of co-equal respect and opportunity for both major language groups, is a basic principle of Canadian society. In Ontario, the national principle of bilingualism must be preserved in the provincial jurisdiction through our French language service program. That program, guaranteeing equal educational opportunity, access to services in areas of Ontario where population justifies it, and an increasing scope of French language guarantees in respect of health services and the courts, has progressed steadily since the 1960s. No English-speaking province has spent more per capita or proceeded in practical terms more intensively than Ontario."

Mr. Wildman: So has separatism.

Mr. McCaffrey: Later on in the same speech, the Premier stated very simply what his government's role has been, and stated a position that I hope all members here will support: "Ontario has chosen moderation, careful progress and practical programming in this area."

I had never run for public office before the June election last year. The question of national unity was discussed often during those summer weeks of campaigning. Let me say that I was not only proud to be a candidate for the Progressive Conservative Party in our constituency, and proud to be associated with the Premier's remarks on the issue of national unity during that period, I was proud in a broader sense to be a small part of a provincial campaign where all three leaders spoke intelligently—and, I would say, with some sensitivity—to this issue. I hope, to put my concern simply, that that same constructive attitude dominates our deliberations to come.

Almost immediately after the June election this Parliament met, and I don't mind admitting that the manner in which all members of this Legislature approached the difficult problem in Essex county had a profound effect on me. I think what we did here in the summer of 1977 was right and proper, and I know it was not an easy or popular matter for many.

Ontario is a jurisdiction that has long enjoyed a government capable of resisting short-sighted impulse, and capable of responding to tomorrow's needs and problems with consistency in leadership. As a member of the Progressive Conservative Party and as a supporter of this government, it is a privilege, indeed, to share in the determination of our future. This is a time when the qualities of discipline, courage and compassion must serve to shape the path our province and nation will follow.

The remarks of Her Excellency, the Lieutenant Governor, charted a course for Ontario, a course characterized by sound and strong decision. A government capable of such direction is one which I am honoured to serve and for whose Throne Speech I am pleased to move thanks.

Mr. G. Taylor: Naturally, it is an honour for me to second the motion that a humble address be presented to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor. It is traditional that the mover and seconder of the motion be younger or newer members in this House. Since I qualify on both counts—despite the grey hair—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One out of two isn't bad.

Mr. G. Taylor: —I am happy to rise at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kerrio: You have to be a newer member to say that.

Mr. G. Taylor: I recently sent out a questionnaire to many of the people in my riding, and on that questionnaire I had one brief question: "You have been elected Premier of Ontario; what would your first priorities be?" One of the answers that came back was: "Commit suicide." It was followed by, "What if you became a member?" And that was, "To commit murder." It didn't suggest upon whom, but to commit murder.

I am reminded again of the Premier's words of welcome to the new members on June 28. He spoke that a member would go through three stages, and that we would all go through these three stages in this House. The first stage, for those of you who may have forgotten the Premier's words on that occasion and have forgotten your earlier stages in this House, would be as you saw some strange goings-on and would wonder why you left that peaceful, tranquil life back in the riding. You may indeed wonder why you are here.

The second stage, as you became more expert in the programs and more knowledgeable in what was going on, is, you'd wonder why all the other members were here. Then that last stage—why you cannot bring yourself to leave. I'm not sure what stage I'm at yet or what stage some of the other members in this House are at, but I do not want to leave yet, nor do I want this government to leave.

One thing I am sure of is that there are 58 Progressive Conservative members here who are working hard, working diligently to bring about some good legislative programs—sometimes with the assistance of the opposite side of the House. This party continues to give strong, sensible leadership to the province of Ontario. I know that, the people of my riding of Simcoe Centre know that, my colleagues on this side of the House know that.

A central section of the Speech from the Throne dealt with the crisis of confidence, and we all know that so well. I would like to state right now that we in Simcoe Centre have confidence. We have confidence in this government, we have confidence in the government of Canada, we have confidence in the people and the workers of the province of Ontario and in Canada. We have faith that whatever crisis afflicts Canada, it will be weathered and that we will prosper and bring prosperity to the province of Ontario. That confidence is based in no small part on the leadership and stewardship of this government and in the resources of the province of Ontario.

Sometimes I think Ontario is a very blessed place, blessed with great richness. We do have complaints about taxation. We do have complaints about cost of living. We do have complaints about some of the items that go on as legislative processes in this province.

I have just returned from a much-criticized but sometimes, I believe, worthwhile study trip to some of the nations of Europe and the Middle East, and I have seen some of their standards of living. I have seen some of their governments, some of their world leaders, and truly we're blessed with some of the greatness and beautiful items of the province of Ontario that many of those people envy us for.

We have an excellent educational system. We have first-class health care, first-class roads, reasonably priced food. I'm sure when I make that remark that one of the members who travelled with us would remember the cost of coffee in Copenhagen.

On one of these tours you are often blessed with major events. You see what we have here—the loads of water and what it would mean to an impoverished nation such as Israel was and is. When you have been down to the River Jordan, and there to have been baptized by the member for Lakeshore, you realize how blessed we are in Ontario.

Mr. Lawlor: You need a little more holy water.

Mr. G. Taylor: It was just a small spattering of water.

When you look at this River Jordan, when you have seen it and heard about it in history and through the Bible and see that it is, by our standards, a meagre stream, you marvel at what they do from this water. You see the flourishing crops they bring forth from the desert. Here we are blessed with great things in our province and sometimes we do not do enough with our resources.

But I'm hoping that with this new proposal, with the material that we have, with the form of government legislation that will come forth, that we will bring forth from this province the good things and the good life that the people in this province and this country desire.

Mr. Warner: Singular applause.

Mr. Eaton: What about the good Jaffa oranges?

Mr. G. Taylor: I believe the reason Ontario has played a central role in the—

Mr. Germa: Who wrote that for you? You've acquired a Darcianic complex.

Mr. Warner: The heavy hand of Darcy McKeough.

Mr. G. Taylor: It's the company I've been keeping with the member for Lakeshore. When you've been baptized, it comes upon you, this religious fervor for the province of Ontario. These words come forth, I say to the member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Warner: You wrote the speech and then threw the pen away.

Mr. Conway: Tell the truth: It was the trip to Jerusalem.

Mr. G. Taylor: I point out, however, that Ontario has been and continues to be well governed. I believe it is partly for that reason the province of Ontario played a great part in the conference in Ottawa last week. The other provinces know that on the basis of performance the government of Ontario is sensible, sober and successful. We are able to urge restraint in government spending. Because we have been so successful in restraining the spending in Ontario we have created jobs, and in creating these jobs we have been able to create an increase in excess of 140,000 jobs in the past year—a remarkable performance.

Mr. Conway: It is a remarkable speech.

Mr. G. Taylor: In short, the consensus reached on Ontario's proposals at the federal-provincial conference can be interpreted as acknowledgement of Ontario's governmental record. The contributions we make in this country are many, and it is the quiet strength of the government and of Premier Davis that is recognized from coast to coast and was recognized in the federal-provincial conference. I think it is only reasonable, therefore, that the programs of this government as contained in the Speech from the Throne be given confidence, and they should merit the confidence of all members of this House.

One of the things I am most pleased about is the government's leadership in that it will not be tempted to play with the economy of the province and the policies that have given us good government in the past. I am sure, as this session unfolds, our legislation will be well received by those who understand that we have given good leadership.

Mr. Reed: That is the joke of the year.

Mr. G. Taylor: In this vein I am also happy to see the general concept of deregulation and that it will be embodied in the establishment of a mechanism to review the operation of agencies, boards and commissions.

Mr. Reid: More red tape.

Mr. G. Taylor: We have had a member on this side of the House, the member for London South (Mr. Walker), who has put forward these plans.

Mr. Reid: And the leader of the Liberal Party. If you were around at the last election, you heard it there first.

Mr. G. Taylor: And for those who do not understand the review of agencies, boards and commissions, that can be translated into a term so all can understand—sunset.

Mr. Reed: In other words, a Liberal policy.

Mr. Reid: At the rate you are going it will be sunset before we hear anything new.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you sink slowly in the west?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. G. Taylor: One might hope that the sunset would occur on the opposite side of the House so that in the morning the sun would come upon them and shed some light. Once again Ontario has an excellent opportunity to practise what it preaches, by providing a means whereby unnecessary activity can be halted. The hallmark of the sunset concept is efficiency, and if we are urging business to be efficient, we must provide that same efficiency in government.

Incidentally, I might point out that the Leader of the Opposition, as he was then—he was also the Prime Minister at one time—urged a conservative notion by saying, “The true conservative does not fail to lop the withered branch.” Mr. John Diefenbaker is said to be the author of that.

Mr. Reid: That is what Joe Clark has been trying to do to him ever since.

Mr. G. Taylor: In our sunset provisions, should we reduce the inefficiency of government boards, I am sure we shall be more than happy on this side.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Don't let the sunset provisions apply to the old Dief now.

Mr. G. Taylor: I am most happy that the Speech from the Throne included references to increased emphasis on energy conservation and renewable energy projects. There again, these can be aided by tax concessions that may be forthcoming in the budget to come on March 7.

Mr. Reed: Another Liberal policy.

Mr. Martel: We're being blackmailed over oil now.

Mr. G. Taylor: Many of us continue to take our fuel, our hydro and other sources of power for granted. We forget to shut off our unneeded lights. We forget to turn down the heat. We forget and waste water. We must practise in our own lives that care and that conservation so it will save us millions of dollars.

Mr. Martel: That is what John White said: Put another sweater on.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Were you here that day?

Mr. Martel: I was here that day.

Mr. Conway: Is Stephen Roman around?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The member for Simcoe Centre has the floor.

Mr. G. Taylor: The economic world is slowly coming to realize that many schemes produce lasting jobs for us—but with some of those schemes where the government gets involved to too heavily a point, they do not. So we are emphasizing the productive roles of job creation in the private sector. That is why in the main our incentives will be for ongoing enterprises to grow and expand.

[3:45]

Mr. Warner: Is the member talking about Ontario Hydro?

Mr. G. Taylor: At the same time, new industry will be stimulated by enhancing the opportunities for investment in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Turn over Ontario Hydro to private enterprise.

Mr. G. Taylor: I am gratified to see the establishment of Ontario's position on “Buy Canada.”

Mr. Warner: Americans already have. They have bought practically all of it.

Mr. G. Taylor: I agree with supporting our domestic products, products that are manufactured here in Ontario and in Canada, and our agricultural products.

Mr. Conway: Buy Canada; buy Denison.

Mr. G. Taylor: We will build a demand and growth on economic strength in our province. I have seen the economic possibilities in my own riding. There we have many products. I do not remind the members lightly that we have new industries growing in Simcoe Centre and in Simcoe county all the time. Indeed, we have such products as toilet seats—

An hon. member: Fur lined?

Mr. G. Taylor: —where the Moldex company has given us a slogan, “Born in Barrie, raised everywhere”—one that the manager hopes to transfer throughout the world from the Mecca of Barrie.

Mr. Warner: You should mail them a copy of your speech.

Mr. G. Taylor: We also have such other industries there as a new industry for boats. They make custom tops for boats.

Mr. Reid: If we only had more members like the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) we would have a bigger industry.

Mr. G. Taylor: There again, recently the man has launched upon a program to go about the world selling his boat tops rather than just in this vigorous area of Simcoe Centre and that of Canada.

Mr. Conway: Born in Barrie, raised in Barrie.

Mr. G. Taylor: Deregulation is another one that was put in our Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Bradley: A pack of slogans.

Mr. G. Taylor: There again in the area of small businesses, deregulation is a very pertinent thing for those who carry on their business by day and their books by night. We had recently in my town of Barrie the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations with his much talked about road show. He's here in the House today.

Mr. Reid: Travelling circus.

Mr. Conway: Do you mean you couldn't get somebody important?

Mr. Warner: The minister of corporate protection.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He was in Israel and I was in Barrie.

Mr. G. Taylor: I left my riding in good hands. The minister lent me his cap and off I went to Israel.

Mr. Reid: Tell them how you walked into the River Jordan. You didn't have to be baptized.

Mr. G. Taylor: He looked after Simcoe Centre while I was away but he received much information from the small businessmen there.

Mr. Reed: They told him they were going to vote Liberal.

Mr. G. Taylor: Again I am sure some of that will be translated into easing the problems of carrying on business in the small business sector—

Mr. Martel: Who put all those regulations there in the first place?

Mr. G. Taylor: —the Ma and Pa businesses where the persons work too diligently on filling out government forms.

Mr. McClellan: Whose government?

Mr. Martel: That was the former Minister of Revenue who did that.

Mr. Conway: Are you born again?

Mr. Reid: Born-again-George, they call him. It is too late for that.

Mr. Conway: I want to hear about Jordan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Simcoe Centre has the floor.

Mr. G. Taylor: Not only that, Mr. Speaker, they are making a mess of my transcript for the people of Simcoe Centre. Some members do send these out to their constituents and some constituents read them.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's why they are doing it.

Mr. Warner: Don't worry, they'll never understand it anyway. No one understands your speeches.

Mr. Reid: If they read the first three lines, they wouldn't worry about the rest.

Mr. G. Taylor: They'll know that I am the only sensible one down here after they read these interjections.

Mr. Reid: You don't have to worry. We are mailing it out to them.

Mr. G. Taylor: I might continue here and talk a little bit about my riding of Simcoe Centre.

Mr. Warner: After all, they talk about you.

Mr. G. Taylor: I hope, and I have been working to have it included, because although the people are industrious and hard-working they do not gain some of the benefits because we are so close to that large metropolitan area that they think we have their riches.

Mr. Peterson: Poorly rated, that's why.

Mr. Martel: You just said things were so good—but. It's an old Tory speech. It's a great riding and everything's good—but.

Mr. G. Taylor: However, there in the riding of Simcoe Centre and county of Simcoe we would like to be included—and of course I have requested of my ministers that we be included—in the Wintario grants for eastern Ontario so that we get the same benefits they do in capital spending.

Mr. Conway: Anything there would be an improvement.

Mr. G. Taylor: It's the same thing in Industry and Tourism. I hope the new minister there will consider my request to have us included in the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation so that we may have there the same benefits as those people in the east do.

Mr. Eakins: How do they feel about the new licence fees, tell us?

Mr. G. Taylor: Again, after mentioning those two little items—

Mr. Conway: And they are little.

Mr. G. Taylor: If the interjections are reduced, we may get away earlier today than regularly scheduled, so that those members may get back and prepare their replies to the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Martel: Slightly different than yours.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you going to prepare this year, guys?

Mr. G. Taylor: I want them to have much longer to prepare theirs. They need the time.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It doesn't do them any good.

Mr. G. Taylor: I'm certain that with the government and industry and general public working together we can significantly reduce the rate of growth in energy and the demands made upon our energy field so that we can conserve, as the Minister of Energy has said—

Mr. Warner: Sure, shut down all the plants.

Mr. G. Taylor: —and conservation is one of those points in the speech. Again, though, it takes a very determined attitude on the part of the public to reduce these demands on conservation. As I said earlier, it will be a very difficult task for us all to reduce those things that we have been accustomed to and cut back a little bit of our pleasures so that we all may move ahead in the years to come. We grew accustomed to great growth patterns in the 1960s when our institutions grew by leaps and bounds. Those days are over now. As was put so clearly in the message from Her Honour, the challenge is to do better with relatively less.

Mr. Martel: You obviously didn't prepare for the bad days.

Mr. G. Taylor: We all know that some of our institutions are feeling the pinch. We can read the complaints daily in our press. That is only natural. Any program of restraint which follows on a period of boom will bring some dislocation and grumbling. It must be realized, however, Mr. Speaker, that the efficient management of resources will have long-term benefits for our society and restraint does not have to mean diminution. The government is committed to progress in qualitative terms.

Mr. Conway: Give the resources all away to Stephen Roman if you can.

Mr. G. Taylor: This approach is typified by the government's intention to increase funding for expanded special educational services. Early identification of those children with learning disabilities should prove of enormous benefit to the children, their families and society in general. Possibly had we looked at those early problems and had early identification, maybe some of the members on the other side of the House would not be here today.

As well, by making sure that all school boards provide adequate and appropriate levels of service for all students with disabilities and handicaps, the government will be contributing to the overall opportunities to be gained by all of our children.

In the matter of health care, I think it is both appropriate and fair that individuals, patients and health care practitioners alike will be asked to assume a more personal responsibility for the demands we make on our excellent system. By engaging in activities that promote good health such as exercise programs and watching our diets we can reduce some of the demands on our health care system and leave more of our resources for the development of excellence. The old axiom that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure should take on new meaning for all of us.

One of the central themes in the Speech from the Throne is a commitment for improving the quality of life for all of us in Ontario. There is perhaps no place that that commitment will be more appreciated than in the measures to be introduced regarding the family.

Mr. McClellan: Measures? There are no measures.

Mr. Warner: It's all hot air.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You want to nationalize them too, eh guys?

Mr. G. Taylor: We are all aware of the strains that have been placed on our family institutions.

Mr. Conway: John Rhodes, take a bow.

Mr. Martel: It's called the year of the dragon.

Mr. Peterson: I thought this was the year of the horse, not the year of the kid.

Mr. G. Taylor: Economic conditions have dictated in many instances that both parents must be working parents in today's family. Many marriages have not been able to withstand the pressures and the figures for separations and divorces have increased dramatically and bear this problem out.

Mr. McClellan: What has your government got planned for the families?

Mr. Martel: Why do the wives have to work in this affluent society of ours?

Mr. G. Taylor: Quite apart from the emotional and psychological damage such ruptures promote in the individuals considered, especially when children are involved, the central fact is that more and more family services are demanded every day.

Mr. Peterson: Why don't you make the single members get married and show a little leadership?

Mr. G. Taylor: The government is well aware of these demands and will shortly undertake a thorough review of all our policies and programs that affect the family. This will be in addition to the specific measures—

Mr. Martel: You are going to raise the family benefits to a decent level for openers.

Mr. G. Taylor:—contained in the comprehensive package of family law reform introduced by the Attorney General.

In the same vein, I must commend the government's approach to the problem of alcohol abuse. There again we have had many instances in this past session and forthcoming in this session to bring forth a package of laws concerning the drinking age, advertising and alcohol.

Mr. Eakins: Oh, the ball parks you mean.

Mr. Martel: Tell me about the ball parks.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You abuse free speech.

Mr. G. Taylor: My friend from Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins)—these double-barrelled names are far too difficult for me—remarked that while in attendance in Israel they gave us one statistic. The community there, perhaps because of their religious background, but in Israel they have no drinking problems.

Mr. McClellan: Except for visiting Canadians.

Mr. G. Taylor: Indeed, their statistics, unlike ours, where we keep them and daily become inundated with higher and higher statistics for drinking and driving problems, there they have stopped keeping statistics on drinking and driving problems because they are so insignificant that they are no longer recognizable and are very difficult to keep. There again there is a nation to be seen and watched for its background.

Mr. Peterson: If you revoked the licence at the Albany Club you would cut out half the consumption in this province.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: How about the London Hunt Club?

Mr. Warner: We should never wake you up.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: He's almost as bad as you are, David.

Mr. Conway: Bette the Bear is back.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Conway: I just hope you read those Globe editorials and do something about it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I thought the cartoons were better.

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, if I might bring to the attention of this House an even more pressing problem that is not in the Speech from the Throne but I am sure it will come up as we move along and that is there is presently a royal commission going about the province called the Haley commission on suggestions for pensions. There again, I have many people in my riding, particularly retired civil servants, who come to me and say, "I can no longer live on the pension I have been provided with. Can you do something about that?" I hope that when the recommendations come in from that royal commission they will listen to those civil servants who ask why, when we increase our pensions and give an across-the-board increase of eight per cent to those retired civil servants, or whatever the figure is, why are they across the board? Surely when one retires one's usefulness to the government and to the previous employer is then ceased? Should we not give pensions to those people and increase those at a greater rate at the lower scale where they need the money than at the higher scale where they do not need the money? So I would say I hope that the commission will review that and will consider those features.

Ms. Gigantes: Great idea. Tell Darcy.

Mr. Warner: Tell Darcy about it.

Mr. Peterson: How do you feel about ex-cabinet ministers on pension who work for the government? You're a lousy counsel. They're going to kick you out of there, George.

Mr. Martel: You will have to trade places with Bruce.

Mr. G. Taylor: Again, to come back to my area of Simcoe Centre that I so dearly love, I was down there and we were speaking of world competition. We must get into world competition with our product and be competitive. In that riding they are. We have, as I mentioned, the boat dealer who is going out to sell his tops across the world and get into that competitive market. The toilet seat manufacturer is not to go unforgotten. The vegetable grower at Bailey River Farms when I opened that processing plant last year, Mr. Speaker, there again he is delivering a product, if you can imagine, delivering vegetables from the market garden of the Holland Marsh. He was delivering those vegetables and competing with California by selling those vegetables in Texas, in Arizona, in Florida. So there again we can become competitive if we go about it and do it as that family, the Arrigo family, carried out in that operation.

Mr. Warner: That's right. It's bologna anywhere.

Mr. G. Taylor: I look upon deregulation of the trucking industry as a godsend for our area because many of them take their trucks out of the Barrie area, go elsewhere, deliver their product and then deadhead back at great cost to us. It's difficult for conservation, expanding our valuable oil reserve. There again, I hope when we deregulate that trucking industry those people will benefit from it, and I am sure they will.

Compulsory auto insurance was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. That's another area that I had put forward to my Premier in our caucus before. Why should those people that are driving automobiles pay for those that will not take out automobile insurance?

Mr. Peterson: Up in Parry Sound you get a licence, I tell you that.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Only a devious Liberal would do a thing like that.

Mr. Conway: George, it sounds like part of that fox hunt in Griffith Island.

[4:00]

Mr. G. Taylor: It is not a right but a privilege to drive on our roads, and with that privilege goes the responsibility of requiring compulsory auto insurance.

Mr. Warner: They'll still be able to do it until 1980.

Mr. G. Taylor: That portion of our expenditures for the automobile which is ever increasing, that unsatisfied judgement fund as it is so often called, should be reduced more and more. The person taking the risk should pay for those risks and those causing the increased auto insurance costs should pay for them. So I'm glad to see that the government has taken a step towards compulsory auto insurance in the future.

I see the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) is not here. I was hoping he would be, but I guess he is exercising his new QC and is off playing with it. But I see that the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) is bringing forth the new Provincial Offences Act. He is going to simplify it and streamline it to help my friend from Ottawa East so he will be able to spend more days in the House with us with that new simplified and streamlined procedure that is coming forth from the new Provincial Offences Act which the Attorney General is coming forth with.

Mr. Bradley: He is not here either.

Mr. Cunningham: When do you get your QC?

Mr. Conway: They gave one to Grossman.

Mr. G. Taylor: The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) again has some new programs that have been of great help to us—

Mr. Ruston: They love him in Simcoe.

Mr. G. Taylor: —in Simcoe Centre. Because we have so many people who come through, commit offences; and because of our super police forces there, they are convicted, tried, and sometimes sentenced, we must have these community resource centres. First in Barrie on an experimental basis to try those tourists who do come through now and then and commit criminal acts.

Again on the Ministry of Correctional Services, we did benefit, as did many of the people even from the large metropolitan areas here to the south, from the new programs put forth by the Minister of Correctional Services. At the most recent Barrie winter carnival some prisoners from Camp Hillsdale did volunteer to go out and put up some of the fencing for the sports events in the carnival. We appreciate greatly the service provided by those inmates of Camp Hillsdale and the Ministry of Correctional Services.

Mr. Bradley: What about that carnival in Georgia?

Mr. Conway: Was the minister the star attraction at that carnival?

Mr. G. Taylor: I am able to inform this House that the Minister for Correctional Services was able to be a firsthand witness to the system carried out at the Barrie winter carnival.

Mr. Bradley: Careful, he is in the House now.

An hon. member: He has just arrived.

Mr. Martel: He was leading the chain gang.

Mr. G. Taylor: He did come to Barrie and attended the winter carnival in very formal dress and was immediately jailed for offences to the winter carnival spirit by wearing a shirt and tie. So, like some other colleagues in this House, he also has firsthand knowledge of jails.

Mr. Martel: That goes way back.

Mr. Warner: It is called inside experience.

Mr. G. Taylor: All right, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure my next words in conclusion—

(Applause)

Mr. Martel: Well, they meet with approval.

Mr. G. Taylor: —will be received I'm sure by my colleagues with great sympathy.

We come back now to one of the other features of the Human Rights Code amendment that was put forth. There again I plead that those amendments will come forth quickly, and will take care and some cognizance of the physically handicapped—those of us who are less fortunate with some type of handicap—that may bring job—

Mr. McClellan: What is your handicap?

Mr. Conway: What's your handicap, George?

Mr. Warner: Having to make speeches.

Mr. Conway: Is speechmaking the handicap?

Mr. G. Taylor: —opportunities that are not available to many of us. They will get those opportunities in a much better way if it is put in the Human Rights Code so employers can see that they are able to carry out a job because there are many jobs they can carry out.

Indeed, I was just so pleased to learn that one of my constituents who was physically handicapped now has a taxi dispatcher's job which is suitable for that individual. Indeed, when they are able to perform like that and show that they can perform some tasks, when they come in a wheelchair they should not automatically be dispelled with the words: "We cannot employ that individual." There are jobs for those individuals; and if the amendments come to the Human Rights Code to protect those people, it will be greatly welcomed by them.

Mr. Davidson: It took you 35 years to realize that, to realize that disabled people could work.

Mr. G. Taylor: One of the final items put forth in the Speech from the Throne was that of Canadian unity. Canadian unity, Mr. Speaker, should be dear to all of us in this House. I'm sure that it is. We have a great nation here. We are recognized throughout the world—as, indeed this province is recognized throughout this world—

Mr. Warner: You guys know zilch about it.

Mr. G. Taylor: We have put together in a period of years, a little over 100 years, a nation. It was put together with a constitution. Indeed, that constitution may from time to time need some revision; but we have worked, as all people have worked in this country, putting together ribbons of steel—through water channels, through canals; we now have ribbons of asphalt, ribbons of airlines that bring this nation together; and, more modern, ribbons of communication.

Mr. Peterson: Sounds like a big bouquet.

Mr. G. Taylor: And those ribbons of communication are the ones that will keep this nation going forward; those between the different provinces; and indeed with that province—the province of Quebec—

Mr. Warner: You should cut your speeches to ribbons.

Mr. G. Taylor:—which demands certain things, requests certain things, pleads for itself some of those jurisdictions that the federal government so possesses unto itself as if they were locked in with some chastity belt and could not be given off to any other jurisdiction for fear that it could not be handled properly. They must come to learn that when the provinces speak they usually speak with a unified voice; that some of these items all the provinces desire, all the provinces want; and that all the provinces can work better should they have those jurisdictions. They can plan for them; they can plan for their people of their provinces so that they can—

Mr. Bradley: You sound like Rodrigue Biron.

Mr. G. Taylor: Shall I keep going with my Canadian speech?

Canadian unity is not only language, not only culture that keeps us together; it is common desires, common goals; common privileges, rights and laws. Some of these will have to have some changes made to them; they're desired by all provinces. We have a changing pattern and that has been our strong point over the years, that we can adjust to these changing patterns.

We are such a young nation compared to many. We are going through the strife and problems of a young nation. Some nations older than ours are going through the same problems. But, Mr. Speaker, when we look forward to meeting these challenges, meeting the challenge of change, why can we not go forward with a spirit of co-operation, a spirit of—

Mr. Warner: You could start the change by resigning.

Mr. G. Taylor:—Canadian unity that should pervade all of our thoughts when we go forward—

An hon. member: You haven't given up yet Warner?

Mr. G. Taylor:—with legislation here in this Legislative Assembly for the forthcoming session.

It has given me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, even with all the interruptions that I've had. I'm sure it added greatly to the thunderous words that I've put forward, words that will fall upon this House and carry forth this House in its endeavours in this session, so that —

Mr. Warner: That's right, we hope you come forth.

Mr. G. Taylor:—we might have the legislation that is desirable for the people of the province of Ontario. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your attention.

Mr. Nixon moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 4:10 p.m.

ERRATUM

	No.	Page	Column	Lines
	1	11	1	53-54
Should read:
Ruston, R. F.		Essex North		L
Samis, G.		Cornwall		NDP

CONTENTS

Wednesday, February 22, 1978

Point of privilege re news articles on select committee on company law, Mr. Renwick	17
First ministers' conference, statement by Mr. Davis	17
Words of welcome to new NDP leader, Mr. S. Smith	19
Unemployment, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Reid, Mr. Peterson	19
Darlington nuclear plant, questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. MacDonald, Mr. Reed, Ms. Gigantes	21
Job creation, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Swart, Mr. Martel	23
Teachers' strike, questions of Mr. Wells: Mr. Ruston, Mr. Cooke, Mr. Mancini, Mr. S. Smith	25
Ontario economic strategy, questions of Mr. McKeough: Mr. Deans	26
Uranium drilling, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Gaunt, Mr. Martel	27
Minimum wage, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Mackenzie	28
Glendale training centre, questions of Mr. Drea: Mr. G. I. Miller, Mr. Makachuk	28
Death of Kim Anne Popen, questions of Mr. Norton: Mr. McClellan	30
Report, standing resources development committee, Mr. Havrot	31
Report, standing administration of justice committee, Mr. Philip	31
Motion re select committee on company law, Mr. Welch	31
Gasoline and Heating Oil Uniform Pricing Act, Mr. Lane, first reading	31
Point of order re private members' business, Mr. Handleman	32
Assessment Amendment Act, Mr. Leluk, first reading	32
Business of the House, Mr. Welch	32
Throne Speech debate, Mr. McCaffrey, Mr. G. Taylor	32
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Nixon, agreed to	42
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Welch, agreed to	42
Erratum	42

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Baetz, Hon. R. C.; Minister of Energy (Ottawa West PC)
Bolan, M. (Nipissing L)
Bradley, J. (St. Catharines L)
Breugh, M. (Oshawa NDP)
Campbell, M. (St. George L)
Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
Davidson, M. (Cambridge NDP)
Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
Drea, Hon. F.; Minister of Correctional Services (Scarborough Centre PC)
Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
Eaton, R. G. (Middlesex PC)
Edighoffer, H.; Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
Gigantes, E. (Carleton East NDP)
Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (St. Andrew-St. Patrick PC)
Handleman, S. B. (Carleton PC)
Henderson, Hon. L. C.; Minister of Government Services and Chairman of Cabinet (Lambton PC)
Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General (Burlington South PC)
Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
Lane, J. (Algoma-Manitoulin PC)
Laughren, F. (Nickel Belt NDP)
Lawlor, P. D. (Lakeshore NDP)
Leluk, N. G. (York West PC)
Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
Mancini, R. (Essex South L)
Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
McCaffrey, B. (Armourdale PC)
McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
McKeough, Hon. W. D.; Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs (Chatham-Kent PC)
Miller, G. I. (Haldimand-Norfolk L)
Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
Norton, Hon. K.; Minister of Community and Social Services (Kingston and the Islands PC)
Parrott, Hon. H. C.; Minister of Colleges and Universities (Oxford PC)
Peterson, D. (London Centre L)
Philip, E. (Etobicoke NDP)
Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
Renwick, J. A. (Riverdale NDP)
Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
Roy, A. J. (Ottawa East L)
Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)

Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)
Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
Sterling, N. W. (Carleton-Grenville PC)
Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)
Taylor, G. (Simcoe Centre PC)
Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)
Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)
Wells, Hon. T. L.; Minister of Education (Scarborough North PC)
Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)
Ziembra, E. (High Park-Swansea NDP)

No. 3

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Thursday, February 23, 1978

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: I know that all hon. members would wish to join with me in welcoming distinguished visitors to our Legislature. Seated in the Speaker's gallery are the Hon. Gerard Amerongen, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, and Mrs. Amerongen, accompanied by Mrs. Nancy Edighoffer, the wife of our Deputy Speaker. Would you help us in welcoming them please.

FRENCH LESSONS FOR PAGES

Mr. Speaker: I have another announcement that I'm sure would be welcomed by most members of the Legislature. I am pleased to announce the implementation of an oral French program for our legislative pages. We are most appreciative of the fact that the Ministry of Education has arranged for the Alliance française de Toronto to supply a teacher three mornings a week beginning today. In total, the pages will receive two and one-quarter hours of French instruction per week.

I think you will agree that this will be a most worthwhile educational experience for these boys and girls.

BOARD OF INTERNAL ECONOMY

Mr. Speaker: I would like to inform the House that I have laid on the table a copy of the order in council approved by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, dated February 22, 1978, appointing the following members to the Board of Internal Economy: Hon. Messrs. Welch, Auld and Wiseman and Messrs. Gregory, Nixon and Martel.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

DEATH OF KIM ANNE POPEN

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that I have decided to hold a judicial inquiry relating to the Kim Anne Popen case of child abuse and the role and operation of the Sarnia-Lambton Children's Aid Society.

Mr. Cassidy: It took until the House met for you to decide that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Kim Anne Popen was a child in the care of that society who was returned to her parents under supervision and subsequently met a tragic death in her own home. At a time when my ministry was about to initiate its own investigation of the matter, I decided to participate in a joint investigation in co-operation with the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies, and appointed a staff member from the child welfare branch of my ministry as part of the three-person review team.

Chairman of the group is Mrs. Margaret Farina, assistant executive director of the association, and the third member is Mr. Arne Petersen, a senior staff member of the London-Middlesex Family and Children's Services.

The work of this review committee is still proceeding and their report is not yet completed. I have been keeping in touch with the work of the committee through our ministry representative, and also through consultations between the whole committee, senior staff of the children's services division, and the president of the society's board of directors.

The review committee's work to date has been extensive and has been most helpful in bringing to my attention certain matters to which I wish to respond without delay. These concerns relate not only to the fact of the case but also to the role of certain individuals involved in the case, and to the role of the agency itself in the management of this case and child protection matters generally. Serious concerns such as these need to be aired in a full and fair hearing where all parties have the protections of due process and where all relevant evidence can be brought to light. I have therefore decided to proceed immediately with a judicial inquiry under the authority of section 3 of the Child Welfare Act.

The terms of reference of the inquiry and the name of the judge appointed to conduct the inquiry will be announced within the next few days. In the meantime, I have asked staff of the ministry to meet with the board of directors of the society to determine ways in which the ministry can assist the society to carry out its responsibilities under the legislation during the course of the inquiry.

I might also add, sir, that I have been in contact this morning with the president of the society and with the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies and they fully support the decision which I have now made.

Mr. Lewis: You should have asked for it at the outset.

FOX INVESTIGATION

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I want to inform you and the members of the Legislature of the investigation conducted by the Ontario Provincial Police into the matter involving Mr. Francis Fox. I would not normally make a public statement on the result of a police investigation, but because of the nature of this case and because of the legal principles involved, I believe that the public is entitled to an explanation to the fullest extent that is reasonably possible for me to give.

Let me say at the outset that this investigation has been thorough and extensive in all respects. Two senior officers of the OPP and two senior officials of my ministry were given responsibility for the investigation.

I am satisfied that their investigation, which was completed yesterday, dealt with all relevant aspects, that all necessary witnesses have been interviewed and that all relevant facts have been brought to my attention. I would also like to state that Mr. Fox and all other persons questioned have co-operated fully.

It is my conclusion that no charge should be brought against Mr. Fox. The senior law officers of the Crown and the police officers involved share that opinion and support it completely.

I want to stress that this decision is based entirely on the circumstances of this particular case and the law and legal principles which relate to it. One principle has been of overriding importance—equality before the law. The protection of justice extends to every member of the community; therefore, justice must and will be administered evenhandedly, without regard to the position of the potential accused.

Mr. Fox therefore is being treated in exactly the same manner as any member of the public would be in a similar situation. The decision to charge or not must be based entirely on the merits of the case.

It would be absolutely unacceptable if a prominent person escaped being charged under circumstances in which ordinary members of the public would be charged. It would be equally unacceptable if a public figure were charged under circumstances in which an ordinary citizen would not be.

It is my belief that an ordinary citizen should not be charged under the set of circumstances that I will set out and, therefore, nor should be Mr. Fox.

I will deal first with the letter to Prime Minister Trudeau which led to Mr. Fox's resignation.

The investigation revealed no sign of any oblique motive on behalf of the author of this letter, a private citizen. In particular, there has been no suggestion whatsoever of blackmail. Nor has there been any suggestion that the complaint was politically motivated or orchestrated by any organized group.

The complaint was simply the complaint of an individual who felt that the Prime Minister should be aware of an alleged misdeed by a member of his cabinet.

The investigation has revealed that the citizen was completely unaware of the ramifications of the complaint and did not contemplate the necessity of Mr. Fox's resignation or the possibility of the laying of criminal charges.

All statements in the letter were fully investigated. At no time did the citizen suggest that criminal charges be pressed against Mr. Fox.

The evidence indicates that Mr. Fox had a brief liaison with a woman who became pregnant. The woman informed Mr. Fox of her pregnancy but told him that she could look after the matter herself, since she felt that she qualified for a therapeutic abortion on medical grounds unrelated to the cause of her pregnancy.

The therapeutic abortion committee of the hospital, after considering her application, granted a certificate permitting the abortion. The attending physician specifically told the woman that the consent of the husband was not required for the abortion.

Acting under this belief, the woman attended at the hospital on the appointed date. After she was admitted, and some hours before the operation was to take place, the hospital administrative staff informed her that her husband was required to sign a form.

As the woman's husband was unavailable since he was out of town, and being afraid that she might be denied the abortion, she asked Mr. Fox to come to the hospital to help her.

Mr. Fox arrived at the hospital and, without question from the staff, was handed a form and asked to sign. Mr. Fox then affixed the name of the woman's husband to the form.

In fact, there was no legal requirement that the husband sign the form. The investigation has revealed that in all likelihood the abortion would have been carried out even if Mr. Fox had not signed the form. In fact, in another case the hospital in question apparently decided to proceed over a husband's failure to sign the document.

In the context of these facts, the senior members of my ministry have reviewed the relevant sections of the Criminal Code. The offence which has been most frequently mentioned in public discussions of this case is that of forgery. However, proving this offence presents very real problems in view of the circumstances of this case and, in particular, the fact that the signature on the document was in all likelihood immaterial to whether or not the abortion would be carried out.

On the basis of the facts I have just cited, I consider that there is evidence upon which a peace officer might have reasonable and probable grounds to lay charges concerning one or more offences under the Criminal Code of Canada. However, this does not settle conclusively the question as to whether or not a charge should be laid.

[2:15]

Because of the considerable public attention which this case has attracted, it is important for me to state to the Legislature the basis on which I, as the chief law officer of the Crown, have considered whether a prosecution would be justified in this case.

A prosecution is not automatically launched in every case where there is some evidence to support the laying of criminal charges. Police officers and the Crown law officers who advise them have broad powers to decide whether or not to launch a prosecution, taking into account all the circumstances surrounding the case.

Henry Bull, the late Crown attorney for York county, and indeed a very highly respected prosecutor for many years, once wrote that the Crown's duty in deciding whether a prosecution is justified is two-fold. The first duty is to determine whether a criminal offence is disclosed by the facts in the sense that a prima facie case is made out. The second duty is then to determine whether a prosecution would be justified in a particular case.

This exercise of judgement was best put by two Attorneys General of England, Sir John Simon and Sir Hartley Shawcross, both speaking in the House of Commons. I quote: "There is no greater nonsense talked about the Attorney General's duty than the suggestion that in all cases the Attorney General ought to prosecute merely because he thinks there is what lawyers call 'a case'. It is not true, and no one who has held the office supposes that it is."

Sir Hartley Shawcross supported Sir John Simon's position: "It has never been the rule in this country . . . that suspected criminal offences must automatically be the subject of prosecution. . . . The public interest . . . is the dominant consideration."

Sir Hartley outlined how he directed himself in deciding whether or not to prosecute in a particular case. I quote: "The Attorney General may have to have regard to a wide variety of considerations, all of them leading to the final question: Would a prosecution be in the public interest; including in that phrase, of course, in the interests of justice? [In] the ordinary case . . . one . . . has to review the evidence, to consider whether the evidence goes beyond mere suspicion and is sufficient to justify a man being put on trial for a specific criminal offence.

"In other cases, wider considerations than that are involved. It is not always in the public interest to go through the whole process of the criminal law if, at the end of the day, perhaps because of mitigating circumstances, perhaps because of what the defendant has already suffered, only a nominal penalty is likely to be imposed."

Mr. Speaker, I would stress that not merely is this the law of Canada as well as England, but that it also reflects very accurately the responsibilities of the Attorney General of Ontario, certainly as I have experienced them during the last two-and-a-half-years.

To launch a prosecution in this case would be to bring disproportionately harsh consequences to a person of good character, who has already suffered greatly as a result of his act. This bears on the circumstances of the case itself and not the fact that Mr. Fox assumed high public office after the event in question. The holders of public offices will receive the same treatment under the law as the ordinary citizen, even though the consequences may be more injurious.

My decision does not mean that I think a former cabinet minister should get any more lenient treatment because the consequences of prosecution are far more grave for him as a public figure. My decision stands for the proposition that Crown law officers, in deciding whether a prosecution should be launched or should proceed, must be scrupulously to treat all members of the community equally without any regard to their position.

In this case, the public interest dictates that a number of factors in addition to the evidence be considered in deciding whether a prosecution would be justified.

Firstly, I want to stress that the abortion in question was an authorized therapeutic abortion. The woman dealt with at least three physicians and her application for an abortion was put before the therapeutic abortion committee of the hospital involved. The certificate for a therapeutic abortion was granted solely on medical grounds by virtue of the woman's past medical history. She would have qualified for a therapeutic abortion regardless of the identity of the father.

The investigation has shown that Mr. Fox played absolutely no part in the application for a certificate for the operation. The therapeutic abortion committee did not require the consent of any person other than the woman herself. The attending physician, in fact, informed the woman patient that no such consent was required by law. There is no legal requirement in statute, regulation or hospital bylaw that a husband consent to a therapeutic abortion performed on his wife; nor does the law require that he should release the hospital from any liability resulting from the abortion.

The document that Mr. Fox signed was not a consent as such. It appears that it was simply an unwritten hospital policy that the husband's signature be obtained, whenever possible, on the form in which the wife purportedly released the hospital from responsibility.

Turning to the individuals caught up in this case, I would emphasize that their tragedy must also be a factor to be taken into account. The woman's husband, who might be considered the most aggrieved individual in this case, has requested that criminal proceedings not be taken against Mr. Fox. It goes without saying that such a request cannot be lightly disregarded.

If Mr. Fox were charged, then it would follow that the woman in question must also face criminal charges, since the investigation has revealed that she was equally responsible for Mr. Fox's signing the document. In short, no distinction can be drawn between the degree of participation by Mr. Fox and the woman in question.

Moreover, the case could not be tried without making public the identity of the family involved. Obviously, there are a number of innocent parties in the case. To reveal the woman's identity would cause irreparable harm to all those directly involved. The embarrassment and anguish to innocent parties must be weighed against any possible advantage that might result from bringing criminal charges against either Mr. Fox or the woman in question. On this consideration alone, the merits of not prosecuting far outweigh those of proceeding against the parties involved.

Let me, in conclusion, reiterate what I have stated. Every day police officers and Crown attorneys decide not to prosecute potential accused. On many occasions charges are not laid, even though the police and the Crown would be fully justified in proceeding to prosecute. It is not, therefore, a question of whether the individual is rich or poor, prominent or not. Rather, it is a question of whether proceedings are appropriate, taking into account the public interest and the fair administration of justice.

Obviously, each decision must turn on the facts of each individual case. In this case, I have concluded that there is no more reason to prosecute Mr. Fox than there would be to prosecute any ordinary citizen caught up in the same circumstances. In my opinion, the public interest and the interests of the administration of justice would not be well served by a prosecution.

ORAL QUESTIONS

REED PAPER

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister substantiate press reports which indicated that the Premier (Mr. Davis) has held private meetings with officials of Reed Paper Limited and that certain cabinet ministers were present at these meetings? And if he can substantiate that, can he tell us whether there were, among other topics for discussion at the meeting, the following topics: The extension of the control order regarding the Dryden mill of Reed Paper and any intention that the company may have to sell off all its assets in Canada, as reported in the newspapers recently; and finally, any other matter, if he is able to disclose it?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The answer to the first question is yes, the Premier did meet with representatives of Reed. I was there. The matter of the control order was discussed. The other matter was not discussed.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, perhaps the minister could tell us what other matters were discussed. Secondly, was any decision taken or any stand indicated with regard to this control order; and is it common for the Premier to meet with companies that are requesting relief from pollution enforcement in this province?

Hon. Mr. McCague: One part of the meeting was in connection with the control order.

I will not divulge the other matters that were discussed. I will tell the Leader of the Opposition that there was no decision made on the matters that we discussed regarding the control order.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Was this meeting in line with the new policy enunciated in the Throne Speech that the government is preparing to abandon its concerns about the environment in the interests of other aims?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We do have distinguished visitors in our gallery. We have a lot of young people who are listening in on our proceedings. I don't think it does anybody any good to be barracking back and forth. We do have a question-and-answer period. Questioners have a right to be heard; and answerers also have a responsibility to answer in a way that they can be heard. Do them the courtesy of being quiet.

Hon. Mr. McCague: To ask a dumb question like that!

Mr. Nixon: This wouldn't happen in Alberta.

Hon. Mr. McCague: The leader of the third party's misapprehension cannot be answered.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Will a new control order be issued for the Dryden mill; and if so what will the terms of that control order be?

Hon. Mr. McCague: At this point I have no idea.

Ms. Bryden: I would like to ask the minister if the control order which was issued in 1970, and extended finally to December 31, 1976, has been met.

Hon. Mr. McCague: My understanding is no, it was not met in its entirety. There was a charge laid; the charge was heard, a fine was levied and it was not appealed by either the government or the industry.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: What was the amount of the fine?

Hon. W. Newman: Does the member not read the paper?

Mr. Gaunt: It was not in the paper.

Mr. Lewis: It must have been $200 at least.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I believe the fine was $5,000.

Mr. Lewis: A licence to pollute.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: How much weight was given to the opinion of the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), as publicly expressed on February 4, that Reed should be given an easement of the control order?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I have already indicated the matter has not been dealt with. I did hear, through a person from a radio station that the Minister of Northern Affairs did make some statements. I think they were statements that probably truly reflected the thoughts of the people in his riding, and he is at liberty to do that I presume. We have not dealt with the matter at this point, as I indicated earlier.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Northern Affairs doesn't consult with his colleagues before he makes statements.

[2:30]

GRAY COACH-GREYHOUND BUS SERVICES

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister report to the House on the results of the meeting that he and his deputy minister held with officials of Gray Coach and Greyhound regarding the specific interpretation of the recent cabinet decision concerning those companies? Could he, while he's at it, explain the rationale behind the pooling proposal which he brought forward, and how it is that he can be so certain that with this pooling arrangement, Gray Coach will remain sufficiently financially viable to carry on its services to the smaller centres of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, first I might say that there was no meeting held between Greyhound, Gray Coach, my deputy minister and myself. My deputy minister met with the two company representatives. I did not attend that meeting, but there was a meeting held with the senior officials of both coach-line companies and Mr. Gilbert at which clarifications were asked as to the exact interpretation of the orders in council. I understand this meeting was quite successful and that the president of Gray Coach Lines Limited followed up the meeting with a letter to Mr. Gilbert. The letter thanked him for his participation in the meeting and said that Gray Coach Lines were quite prepared to accept, and I believe were quite happy with, the overall results of the review.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, does the minister mean to say that the Gray Coach Lines have expressed satisfaction with the cabinet decision or merely with the nature and tenor of the meeting? Could the minister please explain to us, or provide for us the figures on which he based his pooling decision so that we can understand the rationale of that decision? Most people have been left rather mystified by what it means.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Certainly since the cabinet decision was announced I have had no indication from Gray Coach Lines or Greyhound Lines that either party were unhappy with the decision of the cabinet.

Mr. Kerrio: Greyhound shouldn't be unhappy; I guess not.

Hon. Mr. Snow: In arriving at the decision, cabinet gave a great deal of consideration to a great many matters, not the least of which by any means is the matter of the provision of service to the public, especially the public served by the bus lines from northern Ontario connecting through to Toronto. It was no simple matter to deal with and cabinet gave a great deal of consideration to it, eventually coming to the decision that it did.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the minister provide the figures?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I won't.

Mr. Cassidy: Does that confirm that the government policy recently enunciated on Gray Coach and Greyhound are part of the philosophy of deregulation that was contained in the Throne Speech? And does that ultimately not mean that it is preparing to throw Gray Coach to the wolves in favour of a foreign-owned corporation?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, that is not the case at all. I think the policy statements which were included in my statement released following the decision of cabinet are quite explicit. They lay down certain guidelines which the board should consider in considering applications for licences.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a final supplementary for myself, do I understand the minister correctly that he believes his pooling arrangement in no way impairs the financial viability of Gray Coach, and that he has seen evidence to assure himself and his colleagues of that? And if so, why will he not provide the figures on which that decision rests—the evidence that convinced him—for the rest of us in this House to look at?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I might say that the decision of cabinet was that certain routes that had been awarded by the Highway Transport Board to Greyhound Lines of Canada and Eastern Canadian Greyhound Lines, certain of those routes would be pooled with Gray

Coach Lines. Pooling in the bus industry is not a new procedure in any way, as I am sure the hon. Leader of the Opposition is aware. It is a case where, in order to supply a better service to the travelling public, a pooling arrangement is entered into. There are pooling arrangements—for instance, between Greyhound Incorporated of the United States and Gray Coach Lines—that have been in existence for many years, where Gray Coach buses travel beyond Buffalo into the United States and Greyhound Lines travels this way, eliminating—

Mr. S. Smith: We know that.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Well, I didn't know whether you were aware or not because of the questions—

An hon. member: Answer the question.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the minister give us the figures?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Now, if I may explain—

Mr. Reid: Where are the figures?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have got no figures to hide.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Snow: First of all, there are no figures available because—

Mr. Reid: Why didn't the minister say that?

Hon. Mr. Snow: All right, now, just a moment.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You don't want the answer, obviously.

Mr. Reid: The minister has given us three different answers.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River doesn't have the floor.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He doesn't have the answer either.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, the routes that were to be pooled: it was in the order in council that of the, I believe, it is four routes per day between Toronto and Buffalo, of which two were to be pooled, Gray Coach Lines were to have the first choice of the four routes. Obviously, I expect they will choose the particular trip, the time of day, that they feel will be the most profitable route because they will get the profit from that route. Greyhound Lines, I believe, have the choice of the second route that will be pooled.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister must have looked at numbers to assure himself of its viability. What is the number?

Hon. Mr. Snow: The same takes place with the pooling of the routes to Sudbury. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the pooling of these trips will afford the best possible service to the public of Ontario. There will be no need to transfer buses. There is no secret about the fact that since the awarding of these licences, Greyhound Lines have doubled the service available to the communities on the north shore of the Great Lakes from Thunder Bay to Sudbury and there is no doubt that the people in those communities want that service continued.

Mr. Warner: Squeeze Gray Coach out of business.

Mr. S. Smith: There are no numbers; you are not going to give numbers.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We have supplied a solution that will allow that service to continue. It allows a sharing of the revenues and the profits; and I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that although I haven't had any direct indication from Gray Coach Lines, the letter that was sent—

Mr. Warner: The profit goes south of the border.

Hon. Mr. Snow:—to my deputy minister indicates that Gray Coach are prepared to accept and are reasonably happy with that solution.

Mr. Kerrio: They have no choice.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: In the light of the uncertainty caused by the statements by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) about privatization and deregulation which were re-echoed in the Speech from the Throne, and in the light of the fact that the minister has not yet given us any projections on the turn-around financial condition that Gray Coach will be in as a result of this decision, will the minister at least table in the House the government's position on public transportation in this province, and indicate where the government's policy is going in terms of public transportation here in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Snow: In the statement that I released, following the Gray Coach/Greyhound decision, certain principles of statement of policy of the government were included in that statement. I also included in that statement a statement that I would be introducing legislation—an amendment to the Public Vehicles Act—in the House. This I expect to do next week or at least within a few days; it will provide for the formal transmission of government policy recommendation to the board. I will be doing that.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Deputy Premier and government House leader in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis). Can the government state whether it intends to heed the view taken by a clear majority of the select committee on Hydro that it is not in the public interest of Ontario to conclude the proposed contract with Denison Mines which would extract a windfall profit of at least $1.6 billion from hydro consumers and the taxpayers of this province?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am unable to respond to that, not knowing whether the Premier has received the correspondence as yet.

Mr. MacDonald: He has.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would assume that once he has received some correspondence from the committee to which the matter was assigned, he will be responding in due course.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary—and I put this forward partly for the Premier's benefit: In view of the recommendations of such well-known socialists as George Gathercole, former chairman of Ontario Hydro, the vice-president of Consolidated Edison of New York City and the Hydro officials who prepared the report for Project Wellesley, that it is emphatically in Ontario's interest to acquire the source of supply for the province's nuclear generating stations, and in view of the finding of the staff of the select committee that acquisition of Denison is as economically attractive now as it was in 1975, is the government prepared to move at once either to the acquisition of Denison or to the acquisition of Denison's uranium assets?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can't add anything further. I am sure the Premier will be making a statement on this matter in due course.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: There is no useful purpose to continue to ask supplementaries when, in effect, the hon. acting House leader has said there is nothing further to add. I will hear the hon. member's second question.

Mr. Conway: Only acting House leader now?

Mr. Martel: He's been demoted.

Mr. Cassidy: Will the Deputy Premier assure the House that a statement will be given to this Legislature by the Premier before action, such as the signing of a contract, is in fact undertaken by the government?

Mr. Speaker: I will not permit an answer. The hon. government House leader has said that he has nothing further to add. I will hear the hon. member's second question.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Let's have a debate.

Mr. Deans: Would you like a debate? I'd like a debate.

USE OF PCBs

Mr. Cassidy: A question to the Minister of the Environment: In view of the information that Ontario's roads are being oiled with six million gallons a year of waste lubricants that are contaminated with highly toxic PCBs, polychlorinated biphenyls, will the minister give an immediate assurance to this House that this irresponsible practice will be terminated forthwith?

Hon. Mr. McCague: No, Mr. Speaker, I won't give that commitment. We need to do further studies. As the hon. member will realize, there won't be road oiling for a few weeks yet. We want to do further investigation and at that time we will make the decision as to whether it should or should not be discontinued.

Mr. Warner: After 30 years.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister state how long the ministry has been aware that the contamination has been taking place and what tests have been undertaken by the ministry to determine what damage has resulted to the health of road workers, to wildlife, to livestock and in the form of pollution of drinking supplies?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I can't agree with those assumptions that have been made. We are going to study it.

Mr. McClellan: You mean you haven't studied it?

Mr. Warner: For 30 years you poured the oil out and never studied it.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Better study what the hon. member is pouring out.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Talk about pollution!

Mr. Martel: It will be more than the drivel that's coming right now, I can assure you.

Mr. Warner: I apologize for waking the minister up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot hear what is being said.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, we are going to study the matter further. If it is a hazard, the practice will be discontinued.

Mr. Warner: We know it is.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You don't know that!

Mr. Deans: Since we don't know that, would the minister agree not to continue the practice until after the study has been completed?

Mr. Conway: Deans for leader.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I hope the hon. member understands that we are not oiling roads at this time of year.

Mr. Deans: I understand it is winter. Okay?

Hon. Mr. McCague: We will be studying the matter; if there is a problem with it so that it appears dangerous to health, to water, to wildlife or what have you, the practice will be discontinued this year.

Mr. Deans: But will the minister agree not to do it until he finds out?

[2:45]

Mr. Martel: Supplementary to the minister: Will the minister table those studies which have already been done? And will he indicate to us when he will be prepared to—or if he is prepared to table the reports of the studies which are going to be undertaken?

Mr. Foulds: How long will it take?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes, there will be a press release today, accompanied by the data that we have. It's not a report. There is data and that will be given to the press and tabled and any further reports we have will be public knowledge.

HYDRO CORRIDORS

Mr. Reed: My question is for the Minister of Energy. With the disturbing revelations in recent Toronto Star editions concerning Hydro corridor construction alleging Hydro bungling and government favouritism through five years, and understanding that the new load forecast takes the urgency temporarily off the system, will the minister, one, declare a moratorium on construction of the parts of the line not yet up; two, will he undertake immediately to correct the injustice his predecessors have refused to correct, and three, will he formulate a procedure for corridor acquisition which is fair and understandable and which will prevent this tragedy from ever happening again?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think perhaps in that question there were at least six questions.

Mr. Kerrio: Take your time.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will try to answer them if I can recall them all.

Mr. Reid: Try to answer one. That will be better than yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The first referred to a series of articles which have just appeared in the Toronto Star and which I would describe as accusations through innuendo. There is nothing new in those articles whatsoever.

Mr. Warner: No, the bungling is old.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Nothing. If the hon. member would look into Hansard for November

1976, he would have seen a rather complete statement on some of the subject matter to which those articles alluded—

Mr. Sweeney: You still haven't changed that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—and he would have seen that fully explained by my predecessor, the Minister of Energy at that time, the Hon. Dennis Timbrell.

Mr. Foulds: Bring back Jim Taylor.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It's all in Hansard. There are no secrets. The accusation is through innuendo. As far as your talking about the fumbling, the bumbling of Hydro in establishing transmission power lines—

Mr. Cassidy: You were such a nice fellow before you came into this place.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—that is a premise that I do not accept.

Mr. Lewis: Does the ministry do it to the incumbent or does the incumbent do it to the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I do not accept this for a number of reasons. One, of course, is that the transmission line that was finally decided on was based on Dr. Solandt's recommendation—

Mr. McClellan: That portfolio is a contagious disease.

Mr. Samis: Tayloritis, Reuben.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—Dr. Solandt is the person who was given charge of the environmental aspects of the line.

It would appear as if it's almost a no-win situation. You complain when Hydro follows the transmission route it thinks is in the best interest of the public. You complained then that there was no Solandt study done. When Hydro then follows the Solandt study, you complain that that's the wrong route to follow. There's just no end to your complaining.

Mr. Warner: It just shows you how wrong you are over there.

Mr. Nixon: You can't make up your minds.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: It is possible that you might be wrong.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would also say that I have looked at all of the procedures and all of the legislation which governs the expropriation, which governs the determination of where these hydro lines should go. I am satisfied that there is legislation in place to protect the best interests of the Hydro consumers and also the people through whose property the lines do go. If we here feel, in spite of all the legislation that has been enacted, that there are still loopholes which create some injustice for some people through whose property the hydro lines go, I would like to hear about it and I will certainly take steps to introduce legislation to fill those loopholes. I am as concerned as anybody that Hydro does not intimidate nor even appear to intimidate the people whose property it crosses. We are as much concerned about this as anybody across the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: Then why didn't the government state it years ago?

Mr. Riddell: Speak to Darcy.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And please let's look at the procedures and policies.

I can also say that Hydro has done everything to avoid inconveniences and personal hardships. As a matter of fact, I was encouraged yesterday, and somewhat amused, to find that Hydro even changed its hydro transmission lines somewhat to make way for the West Virginia butterfly, so that it can get back to West Virginia—

Mr. Warner: The minister should have an electric chair.

Mr. Martel: That's a ministerial statement.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—because naturalists felt that the hydro line was going to go through a woodlot near your neighbourhood where the West Virginia butterfly was hibernating.

Mr. Sweeney: That's great for butterflies; what about people?

Mr. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the supplementary is somewhat shorter than the original question—and the answer.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief and to the point. If the minister is so righteously indignant about the correctness of the procedures used by his predecessors, and by the procedures used by Hydro in the acquisition of the corridor, then why is he agreeing to meet with the citizens to discuss the problem once again? Since his own ministry has agreed that Dr. Solandt did not study the north-south route, why is he standing up in the House now and once again claiming that he did?

Mr. McClellan: Okay, Reuben, it's your turn.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The line I referred to was the east-west line and Dr. Solandt did study that route.

I have agreed to meet with the interested citizens' group because I happen to believe in citizen participation.

An hon. member: You must be joking.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That is the reason—I want to hear what they have to say.

An hon. member: Afterwards.

Mr. Warner: The minister has already made up his mind.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And I have also told them my door is open at any time, at any time they can come—citizens' groups with credible alternatives to things as they are now.

Mr. Kerrio: Be careful of the butterflies.

An hon. member: Is it an open-door policy?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am prepared to listen and I am prepared to open up the matter with cabinet.

Mr. McClellan: The minister should nationalize Hydro.

CANADIAN JOHNS-MANVILLE PLANT

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Now that the name of one of the principals in the purchase of the Canadian Johns-Manville plant in North Bay, a Mr. Paul Lechlitrer is public knowledge, and in view of the concern this has generated among the employees of the plant, has the minister looked into the matter? Has he investigated the past track record of this gentleman? Has he received any guarantees that the plant will continue to operate and the jobs of the workers will be protected?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, no, I haven't had an opportunity to check into the background of that particular gentleman because I became aware of his name—I am assuming—when the hon. member did.

Mr. Peterson: You have been making too many speeches, John, that don't make sense.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: We will inquire as to whether or not he does have a record that—as suggested—is not good. I have no reason to believe that.

As far as the sale of the particular firm is concerned, this is a matter of a decision that was made by the owners—Canadian Johns-Manville—who determined that they wished to sell for a particular price to this gentleman. So I really have not interfered in what was a private transaction between these two business people.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister then be prepared to intervene on behalf of the employees who also wished to purchase the plant in a partnership arrangement, and who have apparently put up at least the same price and who would certainly have a stake in continuing to operate a successful plant at that location?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: No, Mr. Speaker, I would not intervene in this particular matter. I think this is a business deal between two principals. I am assuming that we are still living in a society where, if you wish to sell something you own, you may sell it to whom you wish.

Mr. Cassidy: Including selling out the province.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Kind of a shock to you, Mike?

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary to the same minister: In view of the fact that allegations were made by the workers that there is an effort on the part of the company to phase out production—to stop production or terminate production—of that plant, and allegations that personnel are being let go, allegations that everything is being done to stop the operation of the plant when at the same time another company, Tembec, was prepared to move in there to continue the operation and expand the operation, would the minister not feel that it's his responsibility to see that those jobs are preserved and perhaps a greater number of people are employed in that plant?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, as I told the previous questioner, I intend to check on the principals who are making the purchase, because there have been some allegations—unsubstantiated I might add—about their track record. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think you would appreciate, as I hope the hon. member would, that if I start running around this province checking out every allegation that is made by somebody we are going to be awfully busy. These are only allegations—

Mr. Warner: We don't expect you to be busy.

Mr. Martel: Don't travel as much as Claude and look after things at home.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes:—and the member cannot substantiate the allegations at all.

HYDRO POLICY

Mr. Peterson: A question of the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker: Since the Minister of Energy upon his installation as minister expressed some unhappiness and discomfort with the relationship between the ministry and Ontario Hydro, could he update us please on what his thoughts are and what policy he is evolving to forge a new relationship with Ontario Hydro?

Mr. Warner: You are going to nationalize it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to answer that rather general question in a very brief way. I would like to assure the hon. member that since coming into my ministry I have had the closest and most cordial of relationships with Hydro; in particular, the chairman of the board. I intend to keep this on a daily basis.

Mr. Deans: That's what happens to all of the new ministers.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Is that the answer?

Mr. Deans: That's the answer.

Mr. Conway: Dinner and dancing—it always starts that way.

Mr. Deans: That has happened to every single minister.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are losing, that's why you want it to stop.

Mr. Cassidy: You get sucked in in three weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. We are having enough trouble with the sound system as it is without all of the barracking back and forth.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think under the circumstances I would like to answer that question in fuller detail to the hon. member opposite perhaps when we are together some time, because obviously some of his colleagues aren't interested in the answer anyway.

Mr. Peterson: It's not easy for me but I apologize for these people, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eaton: That's why you're not leader.

Mr. Peterson: I think it is a very important question, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to pursue it with some degree of seriousness in this sense. Since it has been revealed, I think after the fact, that certain very important projects were not brought to the ministry's attention, is the minister going to trust on just personal relationships or is he seeking to formalize that relationship in some more direct way, as, for example, placing the deputy minister or himself on the board of Hydro? Is he looking to that kind of thing? Is he looking at changes in legislation? Or is he going to just have the same old trust that his previous and long-departed predecessor had in this job?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, certainly the formal relationships between government and Hydro are spelled out in the various pieces of legislation. I agree, however, that neither those pieces of legislation nor any kind of formal understanding that we may draft through a memo of understanding or whatever other format is enough, and that what we do need is a daily personal contact between the Minister of Energy and the chairman of the board of Hydro. We have established that contact and we will certainly continue it; at least, I am sure we will. I have no reason to believe it will not continue, and I am getting the information that I have been expecting.

Mr. Deans: That's what Jim Taylor used to think.

Mr. Warner: It runs by itself.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As far as a more formal step whereby the Minister of Energy or somebody on the minister's staff should be on the board of directors of Ontario Hydro, maybe I can be persuaded otherwise, but certainly at this moment I don't think that is a very desirable modus operandi and certainly I am not persuaded that the arrangement—

Mr. Martel: They put Jim Taylor on the board.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —in Saskatchewan where the Minister of Energy is in fact as I understand it also the chairman of—what is it, potash or one of the other companies—I don't think that's a suitable relationship at all.

Mr. Warner: Not for you.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: So I would like to continue as we have started in the last few weeks. I think it may work that way.

[3:00]

Mr. Warner: It runs by itself. Why don't you nationalize it?

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, is the minister satisfied that he is going to do any better in terms of extracting information than his predecessors without improving the relationship in a more formal sense or through a more formal mechanism? How can he be sure that—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Reed: —the strength of his own obvious personality is going to prevail here?

Mr. Martel: Just say yes.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think, Mr. Speaker, you said the question has been answered. Did I hear you correctly, sir?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, he said the question was asked.

Mr. Speaker: No, I said the question was asked.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If it has been asked previously it has also been answered, yes.

NUCLEAR WASTE

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I was going to direct a question to the Minister of Energy but I think I'll switch to the Minister of the Environment in the hope of getting an answer.

I'd like to ask the Minister of the Environment if he or his colleague, the Minister of Energy, has made any representation to the federal government and especially to the House of Commons committee on national resources and public works with regard to the Hare report, The Management of Canada's Nuclear Wastes, and that particular committee's search for a nuclear waste dump site, possibly in northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McCague: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not made any representations on that report.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Does the minister not think that it is a responsibility of the province at least to have some stand and position with regard to nuclear waste disposal and the location of that in the province? Also, would such a disposal site be subject to the Environmental Assessment Act? What assurances can the minister give the people of this province, no matter where the dump site is located, if in fact one is located, that it will be environmentally sound for the quarter million years which is the life of the radioactive and damaging wastes?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I presume the member is referring to disposal sites away from the actual plant.

Mr. Foulds: That's right.

Hon. Mr. McCague: First, I would say that there were some staff people from my ministry, I think, working along with that report. The answer about environmental assessment would be yes. I understand that a federal review also would be necessary.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary. Mr. Speaker: Would the minister think it would be in the best interests of the people of Ontario for him to become involved in the earlier stages of negotiating for the uranium to make some kind of an agreement as to the disposal of these huge quantities that we will be involved with, particularly as we're looking at these contracts on the table now?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think that's a matter that could be left with Energy, but no doubt they would be consulting with our ministry.

OMB HEARINGS

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Attorney General. He was here a minute ago. I'll direct it to the Deputy Premier. In view of the fact that one of Kitchener-Waterloo's leading builders is leaving the area because of what he describes as "increasing regulations and bureaucratic crap"—

Mr. Martel: Oh, my! The language.

Mr. Epp: —and because of the fact that he is not the only one who is leaving the area—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Elie, did you write that question?

Mr. Epp: —because of the great bureaucracy that we have in the province and going to the United States in order to build homes there—

Mr. Swart: A good corporate citizen. Support him.

Mr. Epp: —where they are able to expedite zone changes within about three months, and in view of the fact that the Ontario Municipal Board sometimes takes three months to establish a hearing date and another three months or more to have a hearing, I wonder if the Deputy Premier could indicate whether he has any plans to expedite hearings. Secondly, if he does not have any plans, would he be prepared to expedite those hearings to make them one or two months rather than six months or more?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very happy to refer that matter to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and have him respond to that at his next opportunity.

DARLINGTON NUCLEAR PLANT

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, first to clarify a reply he gave yesterday and then, following that, a specific question.

In replying to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) yesterday, he made the comment that the projected load forecasts of Ontario Hydro "have not been accurately assessed by Hydro." My understanding is that once those forecasts are made, and on the basis of those forecasts, Hydro then assesses and reviews its construction program. Am I correct in my assumption that government policy with regard to the exemption of environmental assessment in Darlington or anything else is awaiting that assessment of the construction program? If so, would the minister table in the House the various options that are now being considered by Hydro—such as a delay of one, two or three years for Darlington; such as the elimination of Wesleyville because it is founded on domestically outmoded and priced-out-of-the-market oil; and so on? Would he list the options that are now being considered?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I appreciate the fact that the hon. member for York South has clarified a statement I made yesterday. It is correct, as he has indicated, that I was referring to the assessment of the reduced load forecast on construction plans and future expansion plans. As the hon. member has suggested, the forecast work load of Hydro is decided by the board of directors of Hydro so there is no further guesswork about that. They have indicated it's thus and so. It is the impact of that reduced load on the building programs and on the expansion programs of Hydro that is under assessment.

As to the second part of the question, the very point that the hon. member has raised as to what Hydro needs to look at now, the various scenarios: Do we go ahead at Darlington? Do we go ahead at Wesleyville? Do you do this? Do you do that? Do you do the next thing? All the variables that get into this. This is exactly the kind of work that Hydro is engaged in at this very moment. But Hydro has told us that it cannot bring to us a detailed report for another several weeks. That is what we are waiting for, and I think really it is in the best public interest if we do not engage in too much speculation and conjecturing here as to what might happen until we have this specific information from Hydro.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that those scenarios include the possibility of the postponement for one, two, even three years on Darlington's part, why is the minister delaying further? Why could he not cancel the exemption order and get on with the environmental assessment?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I tried to indicate yesterday, I think for this government at this stage, not having all of the facts from Hydro that we are awaiting, to unilaterally make a decision on Darlington would be irresponsible. I, frankly, would not recommend it.

Mr. Martel: How would it be irresponsible?

CHILD ABUSE

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), I would like to ask this question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. It has to do with the unfortunate situation in Ottawa involving Adrienne Paquette whose mother pleaded guilty to criminal negligence causing death in early January of this year. I would like the minister to advise whether he agrees with the official of Children's Aid in Ottawa, Mr. Messner, when he indicates that section 43 of the Criminal Code makes it exceedingly difficult to protect children from parents? The protection given under section 43, according to him, is more favourable towards the parent than it is to the children. Secondly, is the minister looking into the situation in Ottawa with Children's Aid and a budget cut that has been imposed by his ministry that makes it exceedingly difficult to find adequate foster homes for children who find themselves in this situation?

Hon. Mr. Norton: With respect first to the first question, I have not seen in its entirety the statement that the director made. I had heard that he had made reference to that section of the Criminal Code. Although I have not formally assessed the statement at this point or assessed the impact of that section, I do agree in essence with what I understand he was directing himself to, that is, the whole question of the rights of children with respect to assault. There is surely a very serious question as to why a distinction should be made between a child and an adult when they are the victim of an assault. I would agree that that is a very real concern which should be addressed by the federal government as it is within their jurisdiction under the Criminal Code.

As the member knows, we are addressing in our proposals that are under discussion at the present time and which, hopefully, will be part of the law reform package, some aspects of the whole issue of child abuse and the rights of children. Again I have not received a formal complaint from the director on the question of the problems that he might be experiencing with respect to foster homes. The budgets for this coming year are currently being reviewed. We have received the preliminary estimates from most societies now and in fact have responded to almost 40 per cent of them; I do not know the exact number at this point. We will have a much earlier resolution of budget questions this year, hopefully within the next month or so.

I am not aware of it but I will check into it to see whether that particular issue has been raised in the course of discussions with that society about their budget allocations for this coming year.

Mr. Roy: May I ask a supplementary question to say to the minister, in view of his response, I am somewhat surprised that since similar situations have taken place in the Kawartha Lakes area, Guelph, Sarnia and Toronto, and now in Ottawa, that his ministry and himself as minister have not made representation to the federal government pertaining to section 43 of the Criminal Code and the concern expressed by the people in Children's Aid that Crown attorneys will not even look at certain prosecutions under this section except in very serious situations.

Secondly, is the minister not aware of the situation in Ottawa where apparently no assistance or proper temporary home could be found for this youngster, Miss Paquette, except for a five-month period with her grandmother?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I understand there was some difficulty experienced by the society in that particular case. I would also indicate that that particular case is still actively under investigation by the children's services division of my ministry. There are other aspects of the handling of that case that I am not happy with that don't necessarily relate to the availability of a foster home.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Since a number here have been a little unhappy with the actions of the Ottawa Children's Aid Society on this and some related matters, is it possible that the minister would consider instituting in the Paquette case what he has instituted today in the case of Kim Anne Popen and at least, if not a judicial inquiry, have some kind of more formal investigation that extends beyond the children's services division?

Hon. Mr. Norton: As soon as I have information indicating that that is desirable and necessary in this case, I would certainly consider any alternative that is necessary to completely clear up the situation. I would point out that it is my information, following this particular case, the Ottawa Children's Aid Society has instituted a revamped and new procedure with respect to handling of child abuse cases. Those are part of what is at present under further investigation by my ministry in an assessment as to their effectiveness. I have been assured by my staff that I will have a full report on that within the next two weeks. I would hope at that point to be in a better position to assess whether any further investigation is necessary.

[3:15]

It's rather different from the situation in the Popen case because, as I indicated earlier, there was information that I think was not available to me or to members of the opposition that came to my attention as recently as a couple of days ago, at which time I immediately decided that a judicial inquiry was necessary. Further, I'm not in a position to fully discuss the details of it because of the implications for individuals who have not yet had an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Lewis: No one pressed you.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I agree. But there is one issue that has come out in this case that may also explain better for me why I did not have adequate information earlier in this case.

Mr. Roy: In view of the fact that the sentencing of this matter is going to take place tomorrow, and in view of the fact that the Crown attorney in this particular case apparently has subpoenaed the officials of the Children's Aid Society, would the minister advise whether his ministry is taking advantage of this situation possibly to monitor the evidence that's given before the court at that time? Secondly, can he advise whether some of his officials will be down there to assist the court and to give some explanation as to how a situation like this could be allowed to happen again in this province?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have requested that two officials from my ministry be present at the hearing tomorrow. They have not been requested at this point, to the best of my knowledge, to participate in the hearing but they certainly will be there. They are also the two individuals who are conducting the investigation.

BELL CANADA

Mr. Swart: My question, Mr. Speaker, is of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. The minister is aware, is he not, that Bell Telephone is asking the CRTC for authority to increase its rates for residential customers by 20 per cent, for business customers by 28 per cent and for other services even more than that. This will mean that there will be some additional $200 million charged to the residents of this province. I would ask the minister if he doesn't think that's an unconscionable request in these times. Also, is he going to intervene vigorously at the CRTC hearings on behalf of the citizens of this province to prevent that kind of an increase?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that my ministry will be appearing at the CRTC hearings.

Mr. Warner: On whose side?

Hon. Mr. Snow: We have received a considerable amount of data relating to the requested rate increase, which does seem very substantial. My staff are assessing this at the moment and will be preparing our submission. We certainly will be appearing at the CRTC hearings on behalf of the residents of the province of Ontario to make sure that no larger increase is granted to the Bell Telephone Company than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Martel: You should recommend a cutback.

Mr. Swart: By way of a supplementary, could I get some more specific information? With the 9.5 per cent residential rate increase granted Bell last July and with the resultant 13 per cent increase in Bell's profits for the last quarter of last year, will the minister give a commitment to this House that he will fight to see that the increase granted does not exceed at least a six per cent guideline level?

Mr. Martel: Cut it back.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I can't give any commitment to the hon. member or to this House that the increase will not exceed a specific limit. As the hon. member surely knows, the CRTC and the federal cabinet will decide what that increase will be.

Mr. Cassidy: You sure jumped on wages, you know.

Mr. Martel: It's easy to get that done. Even the Minister of Labour wouldn't support the workers.

Hon. Mr. Snow: What my staff will be doing in attending those hearings is asking very probing questions into all matters of the request for the increase to make sure that it is not higher than necessary.

Mr. Swart: I have a very short supplementary. Would the minister not agree that a maximum six per cent increase would be a reasonable goal within the policy his government has taken?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not necessarily, no.

Mr. Cassidy: The workers are one thing; Bell is another.

TOURIST RESORT SIGNS

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. With the latest figures showing a very great increase in the tourism deficit in Canada, and since Ontario stands to lose a great deal, what justification is there for his ministry to introduce new directional resort signs at this time, when the resorts in Ontario are fighting for survival?

Hon. Mr. Snow: The reason we are introducing a new signing policy and a complete new format of signs for tourist establishments is because we have been requested to do so by the tourism industry, which has been working together with the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) and with our ministry to get better, more concise, more attractive signs than the present format being used, which was established over 20 years ago.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Is this program mandatory immediately—is there a delay period? And did the minister have the approval and support of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and also Resorts Ontario, the voice of the Ontario tourism industry?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I personally didn't meet with Resorts Ontario, Mr. Speaker, although I did meet with people from the tourism industry, or segments of it, who asked to meet with me. I don't believe I met with the organization known as Resorts Ontario, but we did certainly prepare this new policy in conjunction with and with the support of the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

I might say that I don't think there's any objection from anyone as to the format of the new signs and the purpose for which they are being developed. The concern of some of the tourist operators that I have heard is that the cost is going to be higher than that of the old signs. The old signs have been at the same price for something over 20 years—20 or 22 years. There has not been a change in the cost of putting up a sign for an establishment or the cost of its maintenance.

To answer the other part of the hon. member's question, we obviously won't be—I don't believe we will anyway—changing all the signs at one time and I don't believe it will be mandatory. We will be working with those people to do it on a phased basis because it would be physically impossible to change every sign at one time.

But the new signs are very attractive. They are more costly, unfortunately; we are still not recovering the full cost to our ministry of the new signs, but we feel we should get a substantial portion of the cost of putting up and maintaining these signs for the private operators from them rather than from the public purse.

MINE DEATH INQUIRY

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General, and it's with reference to the coroner's inquest into the death of Mr. William Irving who was killed on February 16 at the Froot mine of Inco Limited in Sudbury. Is the minister aware that the coroner, Dr. Bloomfield, is desirous of having the jury visit the site on the 2,600 level of Froot? And is the minister aware that Inco has responded by saying that if the jury does visit the site, they would not guarantee their safety; secondly, that the jury would have to be all male; and thirdly, that the jury would have to be all young and healthy?

Mr. Mackenzie: That's Inco.

Mr. Germa: Will the minister intervene on behalf of the coroner to ensure, first, that the work site is preserved for viewing by the jury; and would he also take steps to convince Inco that they should in fact take steps to guarantee the safety of the jury when they do visit the site?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I was aware of the incident that the hon. member has mentioned and also the fact that there would be an inquiry. I wasn't aware of the conditions that have been laid down by the company in respect to—

Mr. Martel: What right have they got?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —visiting the particular mine. I will discuss that with the chief coroner and decide what should be done to make sure that the inquest is properly carried out.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

MOTIONS

SITTINGS OF HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that commencing on March 1, this House will not sit in the chamber on Wednesdays unless otherwise ordered.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, just before calling the orders of the day, it is usual on Thursdays that the government House leader give some indication as to the business of the House for the ensuing week. Perhaps it would be sufficient at this stage to indicate that next week will be pretty well occupied with the first order; that is, the adjourned debate on the motion relative to the Throne Speech. The House will sit on Monday afternoon, Tuesday afternoon and evening, Thursday afternoon and evening, and Friday morning; and after the routine proceedings will devote all that time to the Throne Speech debate.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(continued)

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to respond to this motion and to deal with items that were in the Throne Speech and with items which ought to be of concern to every Ontarian at this time.

I would say for the benefit of members that during my discussion I will have a few introductory remarks, some remarks regarding the economy, some remarks regarding the uranium contracts recently discussed in select committee, and some remarks regarding the place of the French language in Ontario. I would expect, also for the benefit of members, that my remarks probably will conclude somewhat after 4:30 p.m.; perhaps around 4:40 p.m.

To begin with, our feeling about the Throne Speech—and certainly this is the way it struck me—is that although there were some reasonable efforts made to tie up some of the loose ends that remain from years gone by, there was very little in the speech, if anything, to give us a sense of what direction this government feels is the appropriate one for the province of Ontario.

There is a certain amount of housekeeping in the bill, and some of it is good. But in general the Throne Speech, it seems to me, lacks that sense of direction; that sense of where this government hopes to take Ontario in the near future, while it has responsibility for its affairs, and where it hopes ultimately the future of Ontario will lie for the benefit of our young people, the people finishing their education now, and the people among whom uncertainty and worry is very much a part of their lives right now.

There is no clear idea that this government understands why we are in the difficulties that currently beset us. Nor is there any clear idea that the government has any real sense of the direction to take in order to surmount these difficulties. There is most certainly no willingness on the part of the government to accept responsibility for the difficulties, but in the real world of politics that would be too much to ask.

I feel disappointed—I guess that would be the main word, disappointed—in the Throne Speech because of the fact that there is no real indication of where we are going. There is no clarion call to the people of Ontario to get behind the government in the pursuit of some noble purpose, in the pursuit of some new direction, in the pursuit of some newly understood, or even newly-to-be-explained policy and explanation for what has happened to us at this point.

I believe that we are a nation of very fine people and that Ontario need at no time take a pessimistic view. My personal belief is that Canadians have surmounted difficulties before; that in many ways we have come through much worse times than those which currently are upon us; and that the people of Ontario, given proper leadership, have the ability, the resilience and the dynamism to overcome whatever our difficulties are at the moment.

My great feeling, however, is that we are not being shown the leadership in this province to enable us to galvanize our energies and to aim at something a little better than that which we have at present. I'll have more to say about this with regard to the economy of our province.

[3:30]

I want to make passing mention, however, of a couple of statements in the Throne Speech which caused me some considerable uneasiness. Perhaps I'm reading more into the phrasing than deserves to be there and I hope that my anxieties will in some way be assuaged as time goes by. But I'll point out that there was a statement with regard to health care, suggesting that somehow we, as individuals, are going to have to take more responsibility for our health care.

I'm not too sure what that means. I have this vague suspicion that the government was not referring merely to a collective notion that perhaps we should cut down on our smoking or our over-eating. I have this nagging suspicion that the government has in mind hitting us in the pocketbook in some way. Considering the recent report which was released with regard to health care, which made it very clear that the administration of health care has been a shambles for some time, I trust that the punishment for this shambles and the remedy for it will be sought first of all in the administration and not first of all among the patients and the ordinary citizens of Ontario.

Again, there is the possibility that I may be reading in more than deserves to be read, but I see in the statement that there is somehow going to be a new balance struck between the protection of the environment and the provision of jobs. I see a slightly dangerous chord being struck there, because unless the government is simply admitting that its present legislation is unbalanced in some way, I have the feeling that the temptation to go abroad among the populace, at a time when people are very legitimately concerned about jobs and when people can truly understand in plain terms what a job is and what unemployment is; the temptation to cater to that worry and at the same time obscure the longer term but just as vital—and maybe in the long run even more vital for our children and our children's children—concern that we all have with the planet on which we are living, with the need to stop fouling our own nest as only human beings seem capable of doing for some reason; and the temptation to relax what are already very weak environmental regulations, may be somehow raising itself in the minds and spirits of the members of the government. Before they clarify that little statement that was in the Throne Speech, I appeal to them to recognize the responsibility we have to future generations, and not simply to cater to the worries, and perhaps even the unnecessary worries, of some who have raised their voices recently on behalf of certain corporations.

I would also point out to the government that with only the slightest imagination—and I will speak about this when I refer to the economy—they could recognize that in the control of the environment, in the control of pollution, in the treatment of waste, in the treatment of toxic substances—in conservation generally—there exists the potential for jobs by the thousands and by the tens of thousands in Ontario. In conservation related industries, in the technologies related to conservation, there exists the potential for Ontario to achieve new heights in terms of not only employment, but in terms of world leadership in these important and vital fields. I hope they won't try to sell to the population of Ontario some simplistic notion that, "You've got a choice of jobs on the one hand or a clean environment on the other"; because it just isn't so.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Only a mind as weak as yours could figure that out. How absolutely incredible.

Mr. Roy: We don't expect you to understand that.

Mr. S. Smith: Let me say that I am very pleased to see in the Throne Speech some mention of an increase on the government's intentions to stimulate and support special education programs. I recognize that in a lot of the suggestions that are made in the Throne Speech, the government is now responding to suggestions which originated in one or the other of the opposition parties. And, of course, it is reasonable that that be the case. We do have a function on this side of the House. Both parties from time to time do attempt to be constructive, and I for one am not going to decry the fact that these ideas have been pursued; I am pleased that they are being pursued. I hope frankly they can even be improved upon in the implementation. There is no concern on my part about that.

I want to be clear that the government deserves commendation for bringing in—they have promised to do—a much better program with regard to special education, some improvement in children's services. I trust that what I heard about the handicapped means that they will be bringing into the Human Rights Code certain provisions to deal with the disabled and the handicapped.

I am very pleased to see that there is going to be some serious consideration given to compulsory auto insurance, to selective de-regulation in the trucking industry, and one or two other matters.

Mr. Nixon: The implementation might be inadequate; it is difficult to tell at this time.

Mr. Conway: Piracy nonetheless.

Mr. Haggerty: Plagiarism.

Mr. S. Smith: I wish, therefore, to go on record as saying that these ideas are good ones and that the government can count on our support in the implementation of these ideas.

Mr. Nixon: They were lifted from the Liberal program holus bolus.

Mr. Conway: Just like the member for York Mills (B. Stephenson) and her sidekick from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes); lifted from the Liberal fold.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: The enthusiasm of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, is such that it hardly knows any bridle.

Mr. Swart: Or any direction.

Mr. S. Smith: I wish now to turn my attention, if I might, to certain of the problems that I think are the major ones right now; and I start with the economy of this province.

Let me begin by saying that we understand that the difficulties that beset our economy in Ontario cannot all be laid at the doorstep of the provincial government. We recognize fully that, first of all, a lot of what has happened to us economically in Ontario and in this country frankly is beyond the understanding of economists and so-called experts—at least the ones I have come in contact with, and I have met quite a few.

As far as I am concerned, there has been a combination of circumstances in the free world which partly is related to the increased energy costs and the change that has come about in our understanding of energy supplies for the future; maybe partly as a result of the waste of real resources that occurred in the Vietnam war; partly as a result of the general direction of government policies in the free world. But frankly, I don't think anybody knows all the reasons why we are now beset by this peculiar and drastically bad combination of unemployment and economic slowdown on the one hand, and yet continuing inflation on the other. I believe, frankly, that there are many explanations from many economists.

Mr. Philip: Some say it's 10 years of Liberal mismanagement.

Mr. S. Smith: Although economists have been defined as that group of persons who can usually provide the answers to yesterday's questions, I have found that in this instance most of the economists can't even do that. The situation now is simply beyond the total understanding of anyone.

Furthermore, the situation in Canada obviously has a very large impact, for the policies of the federal government, be they unwise or wise, and I am not going to get into that here, have a drastic effect on Ontario, and Ontario is limited in what it can do within a world and federal context.

But I say this sincerely: There is much that can be done within Ontario to help us understand the dilemma we are now in economically, and to influence the direction in which we should be going. We can do this directly as a government that can form opinion in the province, as a government that can form financial policy in the province, and as a government that can influence the federal government and other provincial governments. There is a real role for Ontario to play.

Although I don't want to exaggerate this—and I really would like, in my reply to the Throne address to try to be reasoned without exaggerating the situation at all—I do believe, and I say this from the bottom of my heart, that there has been an excessive abdication of responsibility in the present unemployment crisis as far as the provincial government is concerned. I say this fully aware that the blame doesn't lie entirely here. It may lie here only in small measure.

Mr. Cassidy: You believe in abdication without going quite so far.

Mr. S. Smith: There has been an abdication of what could have been done as far as the job situation is concerned. I don't want to take up time unnecessarily to regale a knowledgeable audience, such as the members of this House, with regard to the numbers of persons unemployed, but we know that the sheer numbers and the percentages are far beyond what any reasonable person, what any member of this House would regard as acceptable and as something of which we can be proud.

Certain parts of the province of course are suffering even more than others. We know about the problems in northern Ontario. How many people realize, for instance, that in the St. Catharines-Niagara Falls area and in Windsor the unemployment percentage is 11.4 per cent? These have traditionally been thought of as prosperous parts of Canada.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Northern Ontario is much better.

Mr. S. Smith: The Minister of Labour is expressing a certain pleasure, or perhaps just a statistical accuracy, in the fact that northern Ontario is actually even better in terms of the unemployment rate than the situation in the peninsula. Well she is correct. However, with the layoffs in Sudbury I suspect that the statistics for northern Ontario are shortly going to become just as bad as those in the peninsula.

In any event, there is no cause here for rejoicing at the fact that in Sudbury before the Inco layoffs there was 7.1 per cent unemployment and in Ottawa 9.4 per cent, while in Windsor there is 11.4 per cent. There was a time a few years ago when the Treasurer of Ontario said that anything above three per cent was unacceptable in this prosperous province. We are not now talking about outposts in Newfoundland and so on, where it may be difficult for people to derive other forms of employment when there is a little trouble in the one resource that normally employs them; we are speaking of highly populated, very complex areas of Ontario where such unemployment really should not be tolerated.

What has the Ontario government accepted as its responsibility in its Throne Speech regarding the stimulation of employment during this time of unacceptable unemployment? What they have said basically is that relieving the current state of unemployment is really in many respects beyond the control of a provincial jurisdiction. They have basically come up with no proposal whatsoever with regard to those unemployed who are over the age of 24. As I pointed out yesterday in this chamber, the actual rate of increase in unemployment in that group is even worse than the rate of increase in the already seriously unemployed and under-employed youth of our province.

Yet there is not a single proposal regarding that particular age group. What we have in the Throne Speech is a promise to create 36,000 jobs for $26 million.

Let's look at that promise, Mr. Speaker. One must realize that the two programs they are talking about in order to accomplish this are the Youth Employment Program, which is a summer job program, and the Career Action Program, which I believe is six months to 12 months, as a means of employing certain young people. Without in any way wishing to be critical of these programs—although there are certain administrative aspects which the Provincial Auditor has criticized—but even accepting that these are worthy programs, the fact is that last year the Youth Employment Program provided approximately 26,000 summer jobs at a cost of approximately $12 million and the Career Action Program provided 4,500 jobs for $7.3 million.

If you total that, Mr. Speaker, you realize that last year the government spent some $19.3 million and all they are suggesting this year is an increase of $6.7 million. The only item that this government is willing to advance to deal with the present terrible crisis in unemployment, possibly the worst since the Great Depression, is $6.7 million. I suspect they spend that amount on postage stamps in the course of a year. It is incredible that on a $12 billion or $13 billion budget they are able to provide a grand total additional expenditure of $6.7 million with regard to the provision of jobs.

[3:45]

And what will this provide in the way of jobs, Mr. Speaker? It will provide an increase from last year's 26,000 summer jobs and 4,500 Career Action jobs to a sum total of 36,000. That means a total of 5,500 new jobs—5,500 when 316,000 people are unemployed, and even these 5,500 are almost entirely going to be summer temporary jobs.

Mr. Conway: So much for the charter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's a lot like yours.

Mr. S. Smith: I really believe Mr. Speaker, even though I think you know very well that we are totally unwilling to launch a large public expenditure in the way of creating new public service jobs—we do not believe we should go into huge expenditures of this kind for make-work projects and so on—we believe that $6.7 million is an embarrassingly, pathetically low amount of money at this time of crisis. It is an absolute insult to the unemployed of this province and something I think the government should be thoroughly ashamed of.

Mr. Foulds: How much should they spend?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh now, that's a tough one.

Mr. S. Smith: There are a few items that the government has mentioned with regard to manpower planning.

Mr. Foulds: You are saying they shouldn't expend large expenditures and $6.7 million is too small. Give us your figure.

Mr. Rotenberg: Michael will tell us.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Harold will send them in a note.

Mr. S. Smith: The Throne Speech has made a number of vague promises with respect to manpower planning and labour relations.

Mr. Foulds: What would be a Liberal amount?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It depends when the election is.

Mr. S. Smith: Provincial policies with respect to manpower forecasting, career counselling and manpower training have, in my view, been shameful. We know of teachers, we know of nurses and many others who have had their expectations raised, and then destroyed. As far as I'm concerned, there's a human tragedy in this. To lure people into teaching and into nursing when it has been obvious for years that there would be no employment for these people is absolutely tragic and utterly wrong.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Lure? Nobody's luring anybody. Is he taking lessons from Cassidy?

Mr. S. Smith: The fact of the matter is that while these people have been educated in a way that leaves them with little alternative but to leave the province in order to find employment—

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I have a towel for you when you need it.

Mr. S. Smith:—while these people have had to leave the province to find employment, we have another very peculiar situation. Many Ontario employers, Mr. Speaker, are facing a shortage of skilled labour, including machinists, welders, certain types of engineers.

The fact is that in Kent county, for instance, in an area represented in part by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), there is an urgent need for 300 skilled tradesmen and they'll require an additional 1,700 tradesmen over the next 10 years. But we have not been producing these people. In another example of shortsightedness on the part of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education, there has been little effort made to provide the kinds of job market information that would have led to the training of people to fill these jobs. There has been mention in the Throne Speech of some improvement in this regard, but we'll wait to see exactly what this consists of.

You will remember that we in this party have called for a vastly expanded apprenticeship program to provide relevant, on-the-job training in a variety of occupations, and that in fact we also said in June of last year that we would establish a labour market information service and vocational counselling service.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's already been done, Stuart, you don't have to do it.

Mr. S. Smith: And now they're just going to start to think about it in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Eakins: Now, Bette, just listen.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I just want him to keep up to date. It's already been done.

Mr. Eakins: You look at your record over there.

Mr. Gaunt: Tick that one off.

Mr. S. Smith: Let me talk a bit, Mr. Speaker, about the manufacturing industry in this province. I put it to members of this House that we in this country and in this province have been basically living on our resource wealth. There has been an assumption made at the federal and provincial levels that we simply can look at Canada as a vast storehouse of natural resources; that foreign countries would be quite happy to lend us money almost without limit and trust our ability to repay these loans because of the resource wealth of this great country.

We have simply assumed as a small population, able to exploit these resources, that we have had it made. We have made the assumption that, based on that wealth, we can borrow without limit; that we can invite other countries to handle our resources and to create manufacturing opportunities simply behind a tariff, without worrying about the potential for export or about competitiveness in the real world; and that most of us and our children could be employed in the service sector. The wealth would come from the resources and the rest of the people would become social workers, doctors, nurses, teachers, civil servants and so on.

For a while that worked very well. For a while, based on that wealth, Ontario became a centre of manufacturing behind a tariff. Behind this tariff there came branch plant operations from other countries. The rest of the country was forced to buy the products from those branch plant operations because of the existence of the tariff. We could provide employment in these manufacturing industries, we could provide employment in the service sector and all this could be financed by people's dependency eventually on our natural resource wealth and the resource of our food industry.

Mr. Foulds: What was your solution in Sudbury? Ship out the matte, the unprocessed stuff. Don't you find that slightly inconsistent?

Mr. S. Smith: The fact of the matter is that that wonderful situation, where we could live on our resource wealth, has now come to an end. And if it was ever true that we could get by for the rest of this century, we now know the bitter reality is otherwise. We know now that it is difficult to sell our nickel in competition with other parts of the world. We know now that it is not so easy to sell our pulp and paper in competition with parts of the United States and other parts of the world.

Mr. Foulds: Our paper exports have been increasing.

Mr. S. Smith: We know now that it is not as simple for us to continue to produce wealth from our fisheries when we have polluted a good many of our inland fisheries.

Mr. Cassidy: So the Liberal Party wants to export jobs.

Mr. S. Smith: We know now that the truth, whether we like it or not, is that we need a competitive manufacturing sector in Ontario. And I think we should be plain about that. In devising a competitive manufacturing sector for Ontario, let's not make the same mistakes we have made in the past. Let's not rely on foreign capital to come here and put up branch plants with no other purpose than the selling of their own product; although I am quite happy to have them come and do just that, let us not rely on only that.

Let us recognize that we are going to have to have Canadian-owned industries that take advantage of natural advantages that we have in Ontario and in Canada and that the manufacturing sectors that we decide to enhance and to really go into in a competitive way with the rest of the world must be those sectors where there is a real future for the products, for the general direction of those industries and for us to be world competitive.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You've been reading the Treasurer's speeches. Astonishing!

Mr. S. Smith: Now, how do you normally pick an area in which to really put your resources to be world competitive? The first thing you have to do is create an atmosphere where you can be competitive; that means you have to keep under control the taxes, the interest rates, the level of government spending and the wages—all the expenses that are, in fact, required to make business work.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's what we are doing very well.

Mr. Cassidy: He sounds like the Treasurer.

Mr. S. Smith: If we do not keep those under control, if people are not prepared to keep those under control, then we can forget any idea of making manufacturing investment because we will invest it today and close the plant tomorrow. Let us recognize that we have to have that degree of restraint, control and, to some extent, belt tightening.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We are glad that you are now recognizing it.

Mr. S. Smith: But I tell you this—and I say this constructively, and I hope it will be taken in that sense—

Mr. Foulds: Is this the 1978 version of Moral Rearmament?

Mr. S. Smith: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, you give a message of that type of restraint to citizens, to working people, when you ask people to show that kind of self-control, it is no good just saying to people that you have to restrain yourselves or you have in some way to cut back, unless you show people at the same time how you're going to use that restraint to enhance their future and their children's future.

In other words, you do not just go and ask people to show restraint; you have to show them how that is going to turn out in the long run to be in their benefit. You have to show them the direction in which you intend to take the economy. You have to show them the way in which this restraint will be translated by competitive manufacturing industries into really meaningful jobs for them and for their children and their children's children. Unless you have that kind of plan to show people, unless you can show them a sense of direction where you would like to take them tomorrow, you can't ask them to make sacrifices today.

That is one of the great problems that seems to exist right now at various levels of government in this country.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We started three years ago. Tell that to the federal government.

Mr. Foulds: Show some restraint.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Your kissing cousins in Ottawa haven't got that message unfortunately. The fact you are mouthing ours is great.

Mr. S. Smith: What is the plan that we can put before people? After all, I remind members that no wind blows in favour of a ship that has no destination. You have to have a sense of where you're going if you want in some way to be able to handle the ups and downs of the world economy and take advantage of those vagaries as they occur. How do you chart a direction? How do you pick an area where we can become competitive in manufacturing?

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the United States has a great advantage over us in this regard because they can use the great effect of the marketplace and there is really no better chart than that provided by the marketplace. They are big enough that they can afford in fact to launch a thousand ships and presume that if even a few of them get to port eventually they will in fact do very well and prosper at their destination.

Mr. Foulds: You certainly have nautical metaphors today, don't you?

Mr. S. Smith: Our problem is we're too small for that. We cannot afford to rely totally on the marketplace to select those areas of manufacturing in which we should be specializing and taking on the rest of the world. We're not a big enough country to compete for gold medals in every item at the Olympics. We're got to pick the items where we think we have got a real chance to win and put a real effort into those areas.

Mr. Foulds: Who writes your metaphors for you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Sesame Street.

Mr. Foulds: Don't degrade Sesame Street.

Mr. S. Smith: How do you pick it? The fact remains that there are a number of suggestions. There are those who suggest that government has a responsibility to choose all by itself the areas in which we should try to be competitive. There are those who believe that we have to leave the whole thing to the marketplace. Personally, I believe we have to have a group in which government shows considerable leadership but is joined by industry, by businesses large and small, by labour and by academics and is basically a joint group to chart a direction and to pick specifically sector by sector—I speak now mostly of manufacturing, although the same is true in resources and the same is true in the service sector—within manufacturing those areas where we feel in this country we can be competitive with the rest of the world. That is how Ontario can prosper again.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You are three years late. That is what we are already doing.

Mrs. Campbell: You haven't even started buying Canadian.

Mr. S. Smith: I have some ideas. The fact of the matter is that we have some clues as to where we might be competitive with the rest of the world. We know from the present situation that some of our industries already have that capacity. I think of the steel industry, for instance.

Mr. Cassidy: You wouldn't call that typical.

Mr. S. Smith: We have certain clues that can guide us. First of all, we have the fact that we do have in this country an enormous investment in education. We have in terms of years of education probably the most highly educated work force in the world. We have put an enormous amount of money into the education of these people.

We can say it's enough that they enjoy life a little more because of education—that's certainly a value; I don't diminish that—but we will not recover our investment in this social capital which we call our educated population unless we find a way in which they can use that education to create real wealth for all of us.

[4:00]

Part of it, of course, can be in the selling of knowledge to other countries; part of it the provision of services, tourism for instance. Part of it can be, of course, in basically banking, finance, things of this kind where we can bring real wealth into the country. But most of it, in some way, has to be put to work in the productive sector, in what they call the "value added" sector of our economy. If we don't put these intelligent minds to work then we have not only performed a human tragedy but we have, in fact, wasted an enormous amount of money, pure billions of dollars, if we can't put these people to work in a way that uses their education and their knowledge.

So when we decide where we're going to compete with the rest of this world we must pick those areas that require knowledge, that require education, things that can't easily be duplicated tomorrow in some other country of the world, in some of the developing nations, or whatever. We should pick that type of industry, and that means to me an enormous commitment to research, to development, to design. These are things which we have neglected in our province and our country. I don't blame any individual person or government but I tell you we have the worst record in the whole western world in terms of research and development as a percentage of our gross national product.

The fact is that in Ontario, for our own future, whether the federal government has enough intelligence to do it or not, to make good on our own investment in our own people, we should become a world centre of research and development. We should be encouraging those industries which are high technology.

Look at the United States of America. Look at the enormous wealth which has accrued to that nation because of its stranglehold on the computer industry and on the high technology of modern day. No longer is resource wealth the only real wealth in the world. Technology is now wealth. Knowledge of that kind is wealth provided it's translated into real technology. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I plead with the government, we must make Ontario a world centre for research and development. We must pick those high technology areas here which, in fact, can be our salvation for the future.

What type of high technology area? Again, I wouldn't suggest that I have all the answers to that. It would be up to people far more expert than I to make these selections, but I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are the technologies of renewable energy. There are the technologies of all types of energy. There are the technologies related to mining, where we have expertise; to agriculture, where we have expertise; to metallurgy. There are the various technologies related to pollution control, to waste management, to the treatment of toxic chemicals, to the managing of our environment. These are technologies that will be demanded throughout the world in the coming years. These are the technologies that we have an opportunity to pioneer in in this province.

I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that merely by delaying a $2 billion investment in a nuclear power station for one year, you save close to $200 million in financing costs. If we took that money and invested it right now into research in the private sector, in the public sector, in the universities, if we now did that we could make Ontario a centre for development in the high technology areas, which could assure a real future for our children. Every year that we delay—and I tell this to the Minister of Energy—every year that we delay in doing that, we are further guaranteeing that our children will have to leave this country to get jobs that employ them at their level of education and expertise, and—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: With the lights out.

Mr. S. Smith: —furthermore, that we shall become ever more a client state of the United States. We will be a client state of Japan, of western Europe and all those countries that are at present going ahead and developing the very technologies of which I speak, but countries with whom we could compete.

Mr. Gaunt: So get busy, Reuben.

Mr. Stong: Smarten up.

An hon. member: That's buying Canadian, George.

Mr. S. Smith: Now, instead of that kind of leadership, instead of that kind of inspired view of where our future lies, instead we get something about "buy Canadian" and things of this kind; all of which is helpful, I am sure, but really it is not very inspiring.

Mr. Foulds: Neither is your speech.

Mr. S. Smith: We have some comments on the Throne Speech on other matters as well.

The GATT negotiations: it would appear that finally after a lot of comment from this side of the House and after an exchange of speeches which probably most of the public is not aware of—these occurred when the Treasurer and I went about the province for a few months speaking and including comments about each other in our speeches; it will be a pleasantry that some historian might look at some time just to pass the time.

Mr. Foulds: I would doubt it.

Mr. Cassidy: I would doubt it, too.

Mr. S. Smith: Frankly, I doubt it as well, as the member for Port Arthur says.

Mr. Foulds: If we are lucky, it will be lost to posterity.

Mr. S. Smith: It's of some interest that the Treasurer came out and called for a freer trade; and I started to make speeches saying that we should not go to freer trade, and that Ontario must raise its voice for more protection for its industries, for agriculture and for manufacturing until such time as we have in place those high technology industries in which we are prepared to compete, and that to actually lower our tariffs now, before we even know where we want to compete, is suicidal. But I note that after a series of speeches in which I was variously described by the Treasurer as a Neanderthal or a medieval thinker or heaven knows what else, the Treasurer has now decided that maybe we shouldn't go headlong into freer trade, that maybe we do need protection and that maybe we don't have the faintest clue where we are going in Ontario, given the lack of economic leadership that this government has provided.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Wilfrid Laurier would roll over in his grave.

An hon. member: He's pausing for applause, fellows.

Mr. Cassidy: They over-exerted themselves the two previous times.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The Leader of the Opposition sounds like R. B. Bennett.

Mr. S. Smith: I want to listen to the minister, the new Solicitor General—

Mr. Conway: On his way back to becoming the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. S. Smith: I suppose he is just Solicitor

General today. He hasn't gone back to Environment again, has he?

Mr. Reid: They are calling him Boomerang George.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Reid: Boomerang George.

Mr. S. Smith: There were comments, Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech about the auto pact and about the need for us to get our fair share of employment under that pact, and we are pleased to see that the comments which have been made by both opposition parties in this regard are finally being listened to. But I really wonder what the province has truly done to put forth its case at the federal level. I get the feeling that the province has this way of paying lip service to things but is giving the tacit message that we don't really expect a whole lot of action. In any event, perhaps they are negotiating, and more power to them.

As far as the construction sector goes, not a word. Nothing in the Throne Speech related to construction; yet innumerable bureaucratic delays are causing enormous slow-downs in that industry. Surely, the recognition that if we ever want to stimulate any part of the economy in this province where we have, after all, a furniture industry languishing in all the smaller towns and centres of Ontario, where we have carpet industries languishing, where we have people who make television sets practically at the point of having to leave the country; surely, it is in construction, which automatically not only provides money for those who are working and for the building products industries but also for all the furnishings industry that goes with it, surely—if you are going to spend a dollar at all—it's the construction industry that you want to stimulate. And the interesting thing is that we could stimulate part of that industry without an enormous expenditure, simply by getting rid of some of the bureaucratic delays and red tape which, unfortunately seem destined to continue.

Mr. Bradley: And by building a new courthouse in St. Catharines.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And Ottawa.

Mr. S. Smith: That comment from the member for St. Catharines reminds me of the sort of national advertising on which a local company can add a tag line at the end. I timed it at about 11 seconds, and I will send a bill to the member for St. Catharines, as far as this is concerned.

The other notable absence in the Throne Speech of any comment with regard to the economy has to do with the small business sector. Hon. members know that we in this party are committed to the support of small business in this province. Small business employs probably between 50 to 60 per cent of Canadians. We think it is a very important sector; we think it has been discriminated against. And we hope we will be able eventually to adopt, with some changes, the Act respecting small business which was introduced by my esteemed colleague from Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins).

I want to mention also this matter of restraint in the public sector. I enjoyed watching the first ministers' extravaganza, although I must say I didn't have that much time to spend in front of the television set. But when you think back—

Mr. Cassidy: I was helping to pay for it.

Mr. S. Smith:—you, Mr. Speaker, as much as any others will recall how we went around this province and we said that you have got to make sure that the share of every dollar in the economy that goes to government gets no larger, that you have to have a guideline—and at the time we spoke of the anti-inflation guideline—which says that the government share of each dollar, and I include all three levels of government, doesn't go up any more—

Mr. Cassidy: Including the Liberals in Ottawa? Did you read the paper this morning? They are going up by 10 per cent.

Mr. S. Smith:—than the wages of the people themselves. When we went around the province and we spoke of this need to restrain, to have some guidelines so the share that the government takes out of each dollar doesn't go up, we were greeted with derision from the government benches.

Mr. Cassidy: And from Ottawa.

Mr. S. Smith: We were told how impossible this was, how simplistic this was, how impossible it was to accomplish anything resembling that; that there would be hardship and squalor introduced into Ontario if we tried to accomplish that. Now all levels of government, at least as represented at the first ministers' conference, have agreed that you can't take any larger share of each dollar than it already is taking.

Mr. Foulds: There was one voice of integrity dissenting from that yahoo view.

Mr. S. Smith: But may I draw to your attention in this regard the fact that although the Treasurer of this province is proud of the fact that he is finally, belatedly, learning something about restraint, he conveniently forgets the municipal sector of government. In fact, the Treasurer has followed a policy specifically designed to increase the property tax burden in Ontario by his so-called rewording of the Edmonton commitment and including such matters as teachers' superannuation funds—

Mr. Cassidy: But you support that. You just said you supported that.

Mr. S. Smith:—the complete renegeing on the Edmonton commitment—he has in fact decided that the property taxes shall go up, even if other taxes might or might not.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Not necessarily.

Mr. S. Smith: The Solicitor General now says to me it's not necessary. You tell me, sir, how it is possible for school boards to live within a 4.7 per cent increase —

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Declining enrolment, laying off teachers.

Mr. S. Smith:—even with a slight decrease, a declining enrolment, when you think of the fact that their salaries have already been negotiated, with the approval of the government, at the anti-inflation level last year of eight per cent, plus the fact that teachers become more senior all the time, plus the fact that energy costs for heating these schools have gone up. You know perfectly well declining enrolment doesn't handle that.

He has followed a policy deliberately designed to increase the property taxes in Ontario, and he has said in this House that he believes the property taxes of Ontario have not gone up rapidly enough to keep pace with other taxes. He believes that. That is how he is the great apostle of restraint. He is able to stand and posture as the great restrainer and criticize and point fingers at other levels of government when he is the cause of increased municipal spending.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Come on, even you don't believe that.

Mr. S. Smith: Let me tell you, when it comes out of the taxpayer's pocket, it doesn't matter if it goes to the city, the province, the region or any of the other levels of government. It is money and it goes to government, and it is money not available then for the private sector of the economy.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Let the employer of the teacher deal with the teacher.

[4:15]

Mr. Eakins: George, we're going to have to make you Minister of Education.

Mr. Kerrio: Going to ask you to change your ministry.

Mr. Eakins: He's got the most to learn.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I put it to you, therefore, that with regard to the economy, with regard to the crisis in front of us right now with regard to jobs in Ontario, the Throne Speech is terribly disappointing. It shows no chart for the future of this province. It provides a pittance of $6.7 million at a time when we should be creating real jobs. I remind you at this time of the continuing program of the Liberal Party to pay 20 per cent of the salaries of new employees in the province of Ontario, knowing full well that the majority of that money will be recovered in terms of taxes paid by these employees and in possible arrangements to be made with the federal government regarding the diminished unemployment insurance benefits which would have to be paid as a consequence of the program's existence.

That program, which would have created thousands and thousands of jobs, remains available for the government to use. They use the principle of it for their little summer job program. Why will they not show the imagination necessary to create the jobs in the private sector that they're so fond of speaking about but that they do absolutely nothing to accomplish?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Did John Bulloch write that for you?

Mr. S. Smith: With regard to matters other than the economy itself, I want to speak for a while on the uranium contracts that we discussed at great length in the select committee of this Legislature, the committee which has been named by its chairman as the select committee on Hydro affairs.

Mr. Conway: Hear that, Reuben—Hydro affairs?

Mr. S. Smith: My colleague, the hon. member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed) submitted a comprehensive motion to the select committee—

Mr. Ashe: Which said nothing. Six pages of garbage.

Mr. Bolan: Who woke you up?

Mr. S. Smith:—which explained why we feel that the contracts are not in the public interest of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Was that ever a weak document.

Mr. S. Smith: We know already that the motion was not supported by the Conservatives and it was not supported by the New Democratic Party, and they all have their reasons for this and they will no doubt explain these to the voters in due course.

Mr. Cassidy: When you had the opportunity to get a majority report you backed down.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Because it was hypocrisy.

Mr. Cassidy: The Liberal Party backed down from a majority report.

Mr. S. Smith: The views of this party have been well explained.

Mr. Kerrio: You're being abrasive.

Mr. Cassidy: No question about that.

Mr. Kerrio: Aren't you going to speak tomorrow?

Mr. Cassidy: Just getting a few licks in in advance, that's all.

Mr. Kerrio: You're going to run out of gas.

Mr. Foulds: That it easy, Vince. Take it easy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. S. Smith: Nobody has greater sympathy than I for the trials and tribulations of a person newly elected to be leader of the third party in this House. I know the strains and I know the difficulties and I know the problems only too well, but I would hope—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mike, he's being condescending.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm doing a lot better than you did.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Get him on the couch.

Mr. S. Smith: —the member for Ottawa Centre would bear his bruises from his first two question periods with a little better grace and would in fact—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Give him a little psychiatric help.

Mr. S. Smith: —confine himself to interjections which demonstrate either wit or accuracy, but refrain from those that show signs of neither.

Mr. Reid: He's certainly going to be quiet.

Mr. Handleman: The battle of wits is on our side.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are on the couch now, Mike.

Mr. Cassidy: I think you've got to charge the Leader of the Opposition with some order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: He certainly was convoluted.

Mr. Bradley: Have you got all three supporters in the House with you?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes—one, two, three.

Mr. Reid: Where's Ziembra? Getting the inside goods?

Mr. McClellan: This is graveyard duty.

Mr. Mackenzie: Graveyard performance, too.

Mr. S. Smith: I want to comment briefly if I might on the appearance and the evidence of the Premier (Mr. Davis) at the conclusion of the select committee's hearings.

Mr. Foulds: Why don't you deal with the substance?

Mr. S. Smith: I invite all members of the House to read the record of that evidence on February 20 last and they'll find that what I'm about to say is a sad but fair and accurate summary of what the Premier told the select committee. Mind you, he was not provoked, he was not tripped up, he was not trapped into embarrassing answers. He was simply invited to say what part, if any, he played in negotiating the Denison contract which is now before the government and to say anything else he wanted to say about that contract.

What did the Premier say? He said he knew little or nothing about the matter. He said he had not been involved in the negotiations in any meaningful way. He said he was vaguely familiar with this or that aspect of the problem, but that he had full confidence in Hydro to negotiate contracts which were in the public interest of Ontario. But there had been one occasion—he wasn't quite sure when—he wasn't even sure where—

Mr. Martel: The Albany Club.

Mr. S. Smith: —when he had played apparently a small role. That was when Stephen Roman, the chairman of the board, and largest shareholder of Denison Mines—

Mr. Bradley: And former Tory candidate.

Mr. S. Smith: —had protested, or complained or suggested to him—he wasn't sure which—that Hydro was being very tough in the negotiations and was refusing to pay world price for the uranium it needed.

And what did the Premier of Ontario tell Mr. Roman? Did he say to Mr. Roman that he had full confidence in Hydro to negotiate a fair deal in the public interest of Ontario, and that he fully supported Hydro's position? Did he, in fact, tell them that he knew that Hydro was asking to buy that uranium only for the cost of production plus a fair profit and not more, and for no price related to world price?

No, what he told Mr. Roman was that he felt Mr. Roman and Denison Mines, in the public interest of Ontario and in the interests of the power consumers of Ontario, should be so kind as to accept "something other than world price, something less than world price."

Mr. Foulds: Oh be fair—less.

Mr. S. Smith: He said both those things: something other than, something less than. That was all he said. Although, of course, he added that being a politician he was happy to think that he had been influential with Mr. Roman and that he could in some small way take credit for the so-called compromise on price which is reflected in the contract now before the government.

As far as I am concerned, we are very happy that the Premier accepts that much responsibility for the contract. In our view the contract provides for unjustifiably high prices, and unconscionable profits to Mr. Roman and the shareholders of Denison Mines.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Spell it out. Prove it. Details—

Mr. Ashe: What is your alternative?

Mr. S. Smith: I have been asked by the Minister of Energy to spell it out and provide details. I trust Hansard has heard that particular interjection. I'll spell it out, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —monotonously often.

Mr. S. Smith: There is no reason why the public of Ontario should have to pay for uranium in the soil of Ontario any more than the cost of production of that uranium, plus a fair incentive level profit, and not one cent more. And I'll spell that out if you like.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: Would you tell the federal government to give the oil companies exactly the same thing?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You tell your Liberal colleagues in Ottawa that.

Mr. Foulds: Would you like to define fair profit for us?

Mr. S. Smith: There is not the slightest—

Mr. Martel: Tell your federal friends in Ottawa to stop ripping us off.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Campbell: Since the NDP doesn't agree, can we get on with it?

Mr. Cassidy: We are fed up, Stuart. You had the chance to block the contract.

Mr. Martel: You might tell Pierre that.

Mr. Eakins: It's nice to see you are feeling well, Elie. Back to your old self.

Mr. Martel: Don't you worry about it.

Mr. Cassidy: The fact is your members would have signed that contract if you hadn't—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: There is not the slightest reason why we in Ontario should not be insulated against the possibility of escalation in the world price. As even the Minister of Energy must know, for every $10 or $12 increase in the world price in the next several years—given that we're asking for 200 million pounds of uranium—and we had experts who said it might go up as high as $60—

Mr. Foulds: How much?

Mr. S. Smith: For every $10 or $12 that is an extra billion dollars in clear profit for the companies involved.

Mr. Cassidy: How much?

Mr. S. Smith: I don't know if I have to spell that out any more clearly for the Minister of Energy—that is b-i-l-l-i-o-n—billion, for every $10 or $12 increase that might occur in the world price for uranium.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Talk about after taxes.

Mr. S. Smith: I have not heard a single cogent argument as to why Ontario's people should have to be exposed to such a penalty because of the escalation which might occur—

Mr. Foulds: Watch the way you are waving that finger, will you?

Mr. S. Smith: —in something called the world price when the uranium is in our soil and it's to be used to produce electricity for our people and our companies in this province.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Talk about after taxes. Let's hear those figures.

Mr. Roy: Your taxes, as you know, are red herrings.

Mr. S. Smith: We hear from the Minister of Energy that we should talk about after taxes. Did you hear that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Cassidy: You were a six-day wonder when you made that promise.

Mr. S. Smith: He says we should talk about after taxes. He is not concerned that they are to get an extra billion dollars in extra profit for doing nothing other than sitting on their chairs and watching the escalation in the world price for whatever reason in South Africa or Korea or whatever. He is not concerned that they are going to receive a windfall of an extra billion dollars for doing that, according to the contract that his ministry has recommended and which the Premier will probably sign.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: How much after taxes?

Mr. S. Smith: He has not any worry about that. He is worried about after taxes. Mr. Speaker, you know who is going to get the lion's share of those taxes?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The people of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: The federal government is going to get the lion's share of those taxes because the corporation taxes will go largely to the federal government.

Mr. Martel: To the lion always goes the lion's share.

Mr. S. Smith: What good is that going to do the power consumers of Ontario?

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you talk to your friends in Ottawa?

Mr. Martel: No good at all. Look what they did with oil.

Mr. S. Smith: There is a comment made by a member that I respect from the NDP, the member for Sudbury East, who comments on the fact that—

Mr. Foulds: Now you are in trouble.

Mr. S. Smith: —there is a policy regarding oil. He draws some parallel, as the Premier did in front of the committee, regarding oil and uranium.

Mr. Nixon: There is a great similarity between the two policies.

Mr. Martel: You should check with Prime Minister Trudeau and demand less than the world price for oil, as has been requested for uranium.

Mr. S. Smith: Let me at this point make it clear for any who care to listen what I consider to be the very vital differences between the two. We recognize fully, of course, that in both instances you could if you so chose develop electrical power from those two substances. In that sense it is perfectly obvious that there is to that extent a similarity. Furthermore, they are both energy-related substances and consequently there is a very obvious similarity there. But there are such fundamental differences that it astonishes me that the member is unable to see them.

Mr. Martel: Where? Tell me where.

Mr. S. Smith: With regard to oil we are now net importers of oil. It is quite obvious that in the next few years we shall find ourselves with less and less in the way of domestic oil supply and more and more requirement to import oil. Consequently, no matter how much we would like to protect ourselves, when that time comes, against the world price we can hardly do so, because we will be buying oil on the world market. Therefore, we are headed in that sense at some point to having to deal with the price of world oil whether we like it or not.

Mr. Foulds: So you would rather do it sooner than later.

Mr. S. Smith: We have a choice. We can—and it's a legitimate policy and I respect the member—

Mr. Martel: The tar sands have not even been touched.

Mr. S. Smith: —if we wish, continue to have low prices for oil and wait for that day to come upon us when we have to pay world price for oil and, at that time, hope that our economy can somehow accept the lurching adjustment that will be required at that time, or we can accommodate ourselves gradually to that day. That's a possibility.

Mr. Martel: That's a long way down the road. That's a red herring.

Mr. S. Smith: In the case of uranium we are exporters of uranium. We have a large segment of the world supply of uranium. The very contracts we are speaking of are to supply 30 or 40 years' supply for all the reactors we presently have on the drawing board. Consequently we can hardly see any necessity to artificially expose ourselves to higher prices for uranium which is in our own soil when we have an assured supply of that uranium.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Tell Uncle Pierre and Alastair Gillespie that. They are the dummies.

Mr. S. Smith: We can see no reason in the world to draw a parallel between oil and uranium as far as that goes. It would be like saying we ought somehow or other to charge ourselves world price for somebody putting up a hydro-electric dam and pay the cost here—

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you argue to bring the uranium into the provincial resource base?

Mr. S. Smith: —at what it might cost to put the same thing up in Kenya. That's ridiculous. If we happen to have the water power here and it's cheaper to put it up here, we are obviously going to take advantage of an inherent resource. There is very little oil in the soil of Ontario. There's lots of uranium, and that's the difference.

Mr. Foulds: So?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Right, and we are going to use it wisely.

Mr. Martel: That was pretty weak stuff.

Mr. Foulds: What does that mean? What is the implication of it?

[4:30]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: The implication of it—no, they want a lesson, Mr. Speaker. It's not every day—

Mr. Speaker: I'd prefer you didn't give them one at this time.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Speak to me.

Mr. Martel: Teach me, Stuart.

Mr. S. Smith: You understand, Mr. Speaker, that when you have three such willing, open, and some might say very open minds—

Mr. Breithaupt: Vacant.

Mr. S. Smith:—vacant is another word—such as those three members have—

Mr. Martel: That's better than having none at all.

Mr. S. Smith:—it is too much to resist filling the minds with some knowledge.

Mr. Roy: A short lesson in economics.

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Port Arthur wants to know the implication of the fact that we have a lot of uranium, maybe 50 years' worth, here in Ontario, whereas we have virtually no oil and have to buy it either on the world market or at the very least from our friends in Alberta—

Mr. Cassidy: Do you want uranium to be under provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. S. Smith:—and he wants to know the difference. The difference is this, whereas Mr. Loughheed has only one way that Albertans can make money from his oil—

Mr. Foulds: Watch that finger.

Mr. S. Smith:—and that's to sell it at the highest possible price, we in Ontario have two choices as to what to do with our uranium. We can either sell it at the highest possible price, or we can use it to generate the cheapest possible electricity. We have two choices.

Mr. Foulds: I would have thought that's the same with oil.

Mr. S. Smith: I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we have that choice and should exercise the choice in order to generate the cheapest possible electricity.

Mr. Foulds: I would have thought that if the Liberal government in Ottawa had any leadership they would do the same with oil.

Mr. S. Smith: I trust the members of the New Democratic Party have now learned their lesson with regard to the difference between uranium and oil.

Some hon. members: Give us another one.

Mr. Kerrio: No, that's all you can soak up in one day.

Mr. Martel: I'm a slow learner. Can you repeat that?

Mr. Speaker: Thus endeth the lesson. Now back to the text.

Mr. Martel: I didn't catch the lesson. Will you repeat it?

Mr. S. Smith: I warn you, there's going to be a spot test shortly, so watch it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You'd better cross the floor.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe even a saliva one.

Mr. Martel: A saliva will be better.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we believe therefore that these contracts are not in the public interest, and I want to say something—

Mr. Cassidy: But you wouldn't vote that way when it came to the crunch.

Mr. Roy: We did.

Mr. Cassidy: No, you did not.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier has said that the committee has somehow not given him a message. I think that everybody who was present at that meeting is fully aware that the majority of the committee has, in fact, let it be known very clearly that we do not accept that those contracts are in the public interest and that we regard those contracts as not being in the public interest. A majority of the committee, namely the members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party, voted in that way and the message could not have been any clearer. There is no doubt about that.

The Premier complained that he was not given a message. That's the message. If he still doesn't understand it, I'll give it to him again. The contracts, according to a majority of the committee, are not in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You tell us what is.

Mr. S. Smith: The second thing the Premier has said is that we haven't given him any alternative. To begin with, the New Democratic Party gave him an alternative. The alternative suggested by that party—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is unrealistic.

Mr. S. Smith:—is to acquire shares of Denison Mines at this time.

Mr. Martel: That is called control.

Mr. Cassidy: Or to acquire the uranium assets.

Mr. S. Smith: Now it's just been changed. It's not the shares of Denison Mines; the leader of the party has just said "acquire the uranium assets."

All right. Let me make it clear that we have had legal opinion on these matters. Let me make it clear that it is absolutely impossible to expropriate the uranium assets of that company.

Mr. Cassidy: Who said that?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We told you that a long time ago.

Mr. S. Smith: The fact of the matter is that it is under federal jurisdiction and such expropriation cannot occur.

Mr. Martel: No one talked about expropriation.

Mr. S. Smith: If the hon. gentlemen in the New Democratic Party believe that instead of expropriation they can merely make a business transaction, then I would put it to them that although I personally believe that in 1974 that company should have been acquired without a moment's hesitation—

Mr. Germa: You can't; you just said you can't do it.

Mr. Cassidy: You can't sit on both sides of the fence like that.

Mr. S. Smith: In those days Mr. Roman was willing to sell, and would, in fact, have arrived at a reasonable price for that sale—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: How do you know?

Mr. S. Smith: Furthermore, the world price for uranium was a small fraction of that which it is now. But in point of fact he is not now talking about selling. In fact he would probably sell if the price were enormous, but I believe that the price would be so high that we have other use to make of the money that would be involved.

Mr. Cassidy: Do you know?

Mr. S. Smith: Furthermore, I believe that with the increase in the world price and with the impossibility of expropriation—

Mr. Foulds: The economics are essentially the same as in 1975.

Mr. S. Smith: —that, in fact, we would find ourselves at a huge price for these assets which would allow Mr. Roman to sell the company to us.

Mr. Foulds: The economics have not changed.

Mr. Roy: It is obvious you have never traded in the world market.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur does not have the floor. Stop mumbling, please.

Mr. S. Smith: My view, therefore, is that because, under federal control, we cannot expropriate and because the price has gone up enormously and because we are in a position where if we tried to make a market offer—in fact, Mr. Roman has control of a good proportion of those shares and we would not succeed with simply an open market offer to gain control of the company, and even if we did we would have to operate with them at arm's length at this point—I believe the chance to acquire that company has now passed. I believe, therefore, that the alternative suggested by the New Democratic members of the committee is not at this time a real alternative—although it was a real and, in my opinion, a very good alternative back in 1974 when the Hon. Mr. McKeough, at that time Minister of Energy, simply decided not to pursue it any further.

Mr. Cassidy: It was good four years ago, but it isn't good now, right?

An. hon. member: Well, sure—things were different.

Mr. Cassidy: There's no difference.

Mr. Foulds: The economics have not changed.

Mr. Roy: It is a difference in the price of shares.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa East is being provocative.

Mr. Roy: Oh, I am sorry. It is not my style, you know that.

Mr. Deans: No style. No content.

Mr. S. Smith: What is the alternative that the Liberal Party is recommending? I have to put before you some of my thinking process with regard to the task that was set before the committee in deciding whether or not these contracts were in the public interest.

Mr. Foulds: Do not betray the weakness of your position.

Mr. S. Smith: I had to ask myself two questions. What would I have done had I been Premier when all this started?

Mr. Deans: Collapsed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He did anyway.

Mr. S. Smith: What would I have done had I been elected Premier in 1977 and, of course, as maybe a corollary of that, what would I do right now; what am I suggesting the Premier do right now? But really what would I do if I were Premier today? Those are the questions really that we have to ask.

Mr. Deans: Get better advice than you are getting.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Call Harold Greer.

Mr. S. Smith: I will tell you that had I in fact been Premier in 1974, I would not have hesitated to acquire the assets of the Denison corporation. I believe Hydro was correct when it requested that course of action.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: With the advantage of hindsight, the Indians would not have sold Manhattan Island, either.

Mr. S. Smith: The Minister of Energy is now suggesting that this deal that the government is arranging on our behalf is equivalent good business to the Indians selling Manhattan Island. And you are right. You said it and you are right. That is exactly what it is. Truer words were never spoken by that new minister. This is a sellout. This is a sellout equivalent to the Indians selling Manhattan Island. I could not have found words more appropriate to express it than those the new minister has found. Out of the mouths of babes; out of the mouth of Baetz.

Mr. Sweeney: Open your mouth and put the other foot in it.

Mr. Deans: How many mouths do you have?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Let's hear your proposition. Let us hear the proposition. We are hanging here waiting. The better-idea man.

Mr. S. Smith: The next thing: Let us say that for some reason you decide, for doctrinaire political reasons, not to acquire the company. The next thing to do and the next thing I believe I would have done—I say this sincerely and I have given a lot of thought to this, Mr. Speaker—the next thing to do is to make a statement of public policy. The statement of public policy that I would have made was simply the statement that the uranium to be bought by Hydro should be bought for a price that represents the cost of production and a fair incentive profit but which is in no way related to the world price. That would have been public policy.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Tell that to Uncle Trudeau.

Mr. S. Smith: Then it would be a matter of making sure that that public policy was actually brought into practice. It would have required a Premier who was knowledgeable, of course, which this Premier admits he was not at that time. It would have required a Premier who was interested enough in the matter—

Mr. Martel: You said the same thing about oil.

Mr. S. Smith:—and who was, of course, informed by his cabinet. It would have required a campaign to make certain that Mr. Roman and that everyone else in Ontario understood that that was to be the public policy of this province. Sure, if that were done and carried through two elections in 1975 and 1977, it is possible that the federal government would still have done absolutely nothing to assist in this and might even have actively opposed that public policy.

Mr. Cassidy: I thought they were Liberals in Ottawa and friends of yours.

Mr. S. Smith: It is obvious that the federal government's policy is in no way in keeping with that kind of protection for the domestic consumer. It is obvious that the federal government's policy in this regard is about as short-sighted and as unprotective of the citizens of Ontario as it could possibly be.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's a typical Liberal position.

Mr. S. Smith: But it is also evident that the people who are supposed to be representing the best interests of Ontario, the people who are elected to protect the citizens of Ontario, the Progressive Conservative government of Ontario did absolutely nothing—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Wrong. The record proves otherwise.

Mr. S. Smith:—other than to send a few perfunctory and timid Telexes from time to time. Is there a citizen of Ontario who has ever heard the Premier stand up at a first ministers' conference or on television or during an election campaign or at any other public gathering to demand a change in the policy of this country—

Mr. Roy: Never.

Mr. S. Smith:—and to put forward as a basic policy of this province to protect the domestic consumers, to demand back the resources which should belong to us. Why has he not stood up and had a policy of Ontario uranium for Ontarians? Why have we never heard that from the Premier of this province?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Liberal government of Ottawa decentralizes.

Mr. Roy: The Ontario government was asleep at the switch and they know it.

Mr. Ruston: All the Premier talks about is oil.

Mr. Cassidy: What about the failure of the Liberal government to act in Ottawa?

Mr. S. Smith: Why is it that you never stood up and demanded control of that resource? It would be one thing if all the energy resources were under federal control but only our resource is under federal control. Water power isn't. Coal is not. Oil is not. Natural gas is not. Our uranium is. Nobody in Canada is making atomic bombs from this. Why should we leave it under federal control? Why has the Premier of this province never been heard publicly to be out there fighting for this resource when we're talking about billions and billions of dollars going to the corporations, the president of which is a good friend of the government of this province?

Mr. Cassidy: Where have you been for the last couple of years?

Mr. Samis: What else is new?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have some concern for other Canadians too.

Mr. Roy: You are irresponsible and you should be ashamed.

Mr. S. Smith: The question then comes, I would have done that. We would know by now whether there was any hope at all of getting protection for our consumer. However, that wasn't done.

Mr. McClellan: Protection from Trudeau.

Mr. S. Smith: We now find ourselves in the position where I have to ask myself honestly, what would I do on this issue if I were Premier tomorrow?

Mr. Martel: Sign the contract.

Mr. S. Smith: I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, what I am recommending as an alternative.

Mr. Roy: That is something the leader of the NDP doesn't have to worry about.

Mr. Cassidy: My chances are better than those of the Leader of the Opposition's.

Mr. S. Smith: First of all, I would absolutely refuse to sign this contract. I would never have my signature affixed to a contract which in my view is a sellout to Steve Roman and to Preston Mines. So I would not sign.

Mr. Eaton: You would never have the chance.

Mr. Cassidy: When it came to the crunch your party refused to get a majority report.

Mr. S. Smith: I would declare the public policy of Ontario to be one such as I have just pointed out, where we are insulated from world price and pay a fair incentive profit but not more than that. I would then move heaven and earth to bring about a situation where we could accomplish this. I recognize that Mr. Roman is threatening that on February 28, if the Premier's signature is not there he will turn around and sign a contract with Japan for our Ontario uranium.

Mr. Germa: He would sell his grandmother.

Mr. S. Smith: I suppose it is conceivable that the federal government might be stupid enough to let him do that—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You're right.

Mr. S. Smith: —but I don't believe it.

Mr. Lane: You are contradicting yourself.

Mr. S. Smith: I believe that if the Premier refuses to sign that contract and then carries on a genuine battle, if he believes, as I do in my gut, that it is wrong to do that and he carries the battle to the people of Ontario and to the government of Canada, then Mr. Roman wouldn't dare turn around and sell that uranium out from under our feet to Japan or any other country of this world when we need it for our own hydro-electric system. I don't believe that.

Mr. Philip: Don't underestimate him.

Mr. Germa: You don't know Stephen.

Mr. S. Smith: There are two problems and they are the reason the Premier is probably going to sign.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: One is in Ottawa.

Mr. S. Smith: One is that he doesn't agree with me that that should be the policy of Ontario. He's willing to tie this to world price and he's pretty well indicated that to us.

[4:45]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Wrong.

Mr. S. Smith: All he asked Steve Roman for was something less than world price, that's all. He did not support Hydro when Hydro was asking to have nothing more than a fair profit.

Secondly, not only doesn't he believe it, and won't, in fact, take such action, but I believe he's afraid of Mr. Roman. He told us what a tough negotiator he is, and I tell you, even if we don't sign and Steve Roman turns around and sells that stuff to Japan, the one thing we would have learned anyhow is who runs this province and who runs this country if he could get away with that kind of thing.

So if the Premier wants to have my alternative, the alternative is, don't sign. Declare that we will not sign anything that gives Mr. Roman anything other than a fair profit and then move heaven and earth to bring it about and dare Mr. Roman to sell our own uranium out from under our feet to the Japanese or to any other country in this world. That's what the Premier should do and that's our alternative.

Mr. Martel: And if he decides to sell, what do you do then?

Mr. S. Smith: We call you in, Elie.

Mr. Martel: It would be much easier if we bought him out.

Mr. Roy: Too expensive.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Talk about post taxes.

Mr. Roy: And you're talking about taxes, my God.

Mr. Martel: You move heaven and earth and he says no; what do you do then? Give me that economic lesson. When he says no, what do you do then?

Mr. S. Smith: We call you in, Elie.

Mr. Martel: If he says no what do you do then?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Is that what you said? Let's hear Ed Broadbent on leadership.

Mr. Speaker: Let's have some order please.

Mr. S. Smith: I can't believe that the member for Sudbury East is also afraid of Mr. Roman. He must be a very powerful man.

Mr. Speaker, I want to turn now to a matter which I consider a very, very serious one and one which I hope will not be taken in a partisan way. I say that very sincerely.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Wasn't the other one serious? You were kidding?

Mr. S. Smith: I want to turn now to the question of minority language rights. During the last two months there has been a lot of discussion concerning the role Ontario should play in expanding minority language rights in this province. Speaking before the Canadian Club in Toronto on February 6 and to the Sales and Marketing Executives of Montreal in that city on February 16, the Premier has most recently set out his approach and that of his government.

The general thrust remains that which he first set before the Legislature on May 3, 1971. The fundamental principle enunciated at that time, and, indeed, by the Premier's predecessor, John Robarts, in 1968, is that, and I quote: "The government of Ontario agrees to provide wherever feasible public services in French as well as in English so that the people of Ontario will be able to deal in either language with the various levels of government with which they come in contact." That is a quote from Mr. Robarts at the federal-provincial constitutional conference in February 1968.

I share with the Premier this commitment, and a belief that respect and opportunity for both major language groups is a basic principle of Canadian society. I share with him the concern he also expressed in his Canadian Club speech, that in implementing federal government policy on this question a number of serious errors were made in its development. These errors have affected negatively the way in which many people now understand the term "bilingualism" and the approach they take to minority language services.

I share with the Premier his belief that each province should develop a minority language program which meets its needs. Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick can all respect a common principle but develop minority language policies and programs which may be quite different one from the other in their implementation.

I share with the Premier his commitment made in the Throne Speech to the Franco-Ontarian community that French-language government services should be expanded in accordance with need and population distribution. Clearly, there is a requirement for common sense and practicality in the way in which Ontario's minority language program is elaborated.

Let me add, and let me make clear, that in no way is French being forced on anyone. It isn't now and it won't be in the future, no matter which party forms the government of Ontario. Simply put, I share with the Premier his desire to continue to expand French-language services in Ontario. The members of my party, and I believe those of the New Democratic Party, would share these views which the Premier has set out.

I have tried to outline areas of agreement because I believe all parties in the Legislature can find common ground on this issue and because I believe we can move farther and faster if all parties work together. The document which the Premier tabled before the Task Force on Canadian Unity sets out in summary form what has been accomplished in the field of minority language rights. One regret I have is that this story has not been told by the government as effectively as it might. I believe that more vigorous leadership is needed to convince Ontarians as to the need and worth of expanded minority language programs.

I also believe it is the duty and responsibility of all political leaders to speak to this issue and to provide leadership. This is one of the reasons I have asked my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), to take on the responsibility in our caucus for federal-provincial relations. He is able, in an extremely articulate and understanding way, to speak to all Ontarians, English- and French-speaking, about the need for expanded minority language programs and services.

Furthermore, it is my view that this issue and its solution is one which should be borne by all of us, not just the government. We all recognize that there are those in Ontario, including Conservatives, New Democrats and Liberals, who believe more attention should not be given to French-language services. Politically, this issue is not an easy one. As the Premier has stated, it can be divisive. It can generate fear, rancour and distrust. Nonetheless, it is an issue where we politicians, for the sake of our country, must resolve to seek fair and meaningful solution.

I therefore want to propose today that the three parties unite to make a major thrust to complete Ontario's minority language program. It has been my personal view, and one I have expressed frequently, that the most effective way to proceed in implementing Ontario's minority language program was to bring together in one statute all the legislation pertaining to French-language services. Such a statute would then clearly define in one place the official status of the French language in Ontario. This statute would serve as a kind of charter for minority language rights.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you backing down from French as an official language?

Mr. S. Smith: In his speech to the Canadian Club, the Premier suggested that his government was prepared to examine an approach which is, I believe, somewhat similar to mine. In that speech he made the following statement: "While we have set aside official proclamation of bilingualism"—

Mr. Cassidy: As have you.

Mr. S. Smith:—"we have not as a government set aside the possibility of a statutory framework to the French-language service commitment we already have and which we will be expanding. These exist already in the context of education."

Mr. Cassidy: You are backing down.

Mr. Roy: You wouldn't understand—

Mr. Cassidy: Do you support this approach?

Mr. Roy: Of course I support legislation—

Mr. S. Smith: In our view, the statutory or legislative route in developing minority language services is an excellent one. Coupled with progress which can be made through simple administrative changes, legislative status in such areas as health, justice, municipal and social services and others would be a real step forward. This would not be anything radically new as legislation now exists in the educational area. Indeed, the standing orders of this Legislature include the following resolution, which was passed unanimously on July 22, 1968:

"Resolved: That henceforth every member of this House may as a matter of right in this House address the House in either of the two official languages of Canada." That's the resolution which was passed here.

The Premier has already alluded to this legislative approach in the Throne Speech. He stated that his government will be introducing legislation to increase the availability of French-language court trials by amending the Judicature Act and the Juries Act. We welcome this initiative and this approach. By putting down in statutory form the rights of the French language, Franco-Ontarians can feel more assured about their future as French-speaking Canadians in their own province.

I therefore recommend that an all-party committee of the Legislature be created to do the following:

1. Review the state of minority language programs and services in Ontario and prepare in both English and French a comprehensive information document on what programs and services currently exist;

2. Set out what programs and services remain to be developed;

3. Recognizing current budgetary limitations, propose a timetable for the implementation of such a program.

I would propose that this committee be constituted as soon as possible and that it report to the Legislature at the beginning of the fall session. I would further suggest that we all ensure that senior members of our parties take part in this committee. I believe that consideration should be given to permit the inclusion of one or more ministers.

There is a wealth of goodwill and common sense in this Legislature; let us now use it to give Ontario a strong minority language rights program with all-party support. I say to the Premier that this proposal is made in a spirit of co-operation and in the recognition that this issue requires not only patience and understanding but also perseverance and progress. He will find us serious in our support of his stated objectives and firm in our resolve to help in meeting them.

I want to make it clear that I have stood in every public forum and on every media opportunity and I continue to stand, for the fact that we must have our French-language services provided as a matter of right and inscribed in the law in a way that they can clearly and easily be understood to exist in perpetuity and not as something to be given as a privilege from time to time, depending on the circumstances or the mood of the government of the day.

It is not right that Franco-Ontarians should feel that the services they do require, and which are being expanded by the government, are services that they should have constantly to request and practically ask for over and over again. They should be written down and brought together in one statute, which in that way would give official status to the French language in terms of all the services that are required.

I believe that in the province of Ontario, which after all has a sizable minority of French-speaking citizens, although only approximately six per cent of its population is in that language group, it would be patently ridiculous for the government to try to implement here a program of bilingualism in any way resembling that which was adopted at the federal level.

Bilingualism in that sense is not an appropriate word for Ontario. In fact, given the pejorative emotional connotation which it has taken on, probably because of some of the federal experience, it probably would be better not even used. I have tried to make a point of saying that it is impossible even to consider a bilingual Ontario, given that we are speaking of a six per cent minority, but that where numbers warrant and where need and demand exists for French-language services, we should have those services inscribed in the law as a matter of right rather than as something that has to be begged for.

No English-speaking person has to have French forced on him or her in any way. It is merely the same program which has already been accepted by the government, but brought together, brought to fruition and probably added to in some way so that you can have a trial in the French language; so that it will be possible to have reasonable health services in the French language, reasonable municipal services where numbers warrant and demand exists, and reasonable educational services.

[5:00]

It shouldn't be something that has to be fought for and begged for and struggled over in the local community. It should be written down as something which is a matter of right because we consider Franco-Ontarians not just to be the six per cent of the population, but to be a very important group in Ontario, representing something fundamental about the nature of our country.

After all, in sheer percentage terms there are probably more people of Italian origin. But there's something about our country, something special and something meaningful, and the French-speaking population outside Quebec is one of the main arguments against separatism. It's one of the main arguments against having to set up separate cultural walls around the province of Quebec, which in my opinion would be counterproductive for the French culture in Quebec.

So I say, therefore, let us stop referring to the question of shoving French down people's throats or official bilingualism à la Ottawa. Let us realize that what we really want are services. Let us define the services, and let us inscribe them in a law so that our Franco-Ontarians can see that it's inscribed there and they don't have to worry about whether it's something to be given or taken away at the whim of the government of the day or the whim of an individual minister.

That is really what we are asking. To define that, we are asking that an all-party committee of the Legislature be established to work on exactly that possibility. I think there's very little difference in what I've said from the intentions of the Premier. But I believe that the official status that the French language would gain simply by having that Act there would satisfy the people who, after all, want their rights looked after—the Franco-Ontarian minority who depend on us in this Legislature to protect them. It would be a genuine gesture taken very seriously by our friends in the sister province of Quebec at this crucial time for our country's future. I put it therefore to the government in the hope it will be considered very seriously so we can avoid any of the political divisiveness which might otherwise occur.

I'm sure you agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that this topic, being so poorly understood and the word bilingualism having so many emotional connotations, is potentially a far more divisive topic than even the separate school controversy was in 1971. It's not the kind of topic we want to have as a partisan wrangle right now. It's not good for Ontario. It's not good for Canada. It benefits no one. I hope therefore that that will be taken seriously.

I was disappointed in the words of the hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague), and perhaps there's some explanation—I trust that with my remarks today any misapprehension about my policies will now have been cleared up. I was disappointed that on February 22—that's last night—in front of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, he said, "Bob McKessock and Murray Gaunt are here tonight. I know that, as Liberals, they would not agree with their party leader's desire to make this a bilingual province. In this province we need only one language."

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Mr. Cunningham: Resign.

Mr. Reid: Did you really say that, George?

Mr. Cassidy: That kind of red-neck attitude does nothing for Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: Personally I believe that that was undoubtedly a personal comment—

Mr. McClellan: That's a real Canadian for you.

Mr. S. Smith: —and I trust that this is not part of an orchestrated—

Mr. Martel: Another red-neck over there. He and Red Horner.

Mr. S. Smith: —political strategy of any kind. I trust it was merely a personal comment, and it may well have developed from a misunderstanding on the hon. minister's part of what our policy has been.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are all confused now.

Mr. S. Smith: I have never been for a bilingual Ontario in that sense because it makes no sense, given the population figures. I am for bringing together services and guaranteeing them in law so that they no longer have to be a matter to be begged for but are actually written into the law in a way that gives the language an official status of that kind.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh, come on. He criticized the Premier.

Mr. Martel: No, no, he's changed his position again.

Mr. S. Smith: I am more disappointed, by the way—

Mr. Martel: Oh, that doesn't matter. That was last week. This is this week.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: —that the audience, following that remark which I quoted from the hon. minister, gave him a standing ovation immediately upon—

Mr. Gaunt: Not a standing ovation.

Mr. S. Smith: Not a standing ovation, I'm sorry, but some ovation—take that from the record, it is my error—but gave him an ovation following those remarks.

Mr. McClellan: Another big contribution to national unity.

Mr. S. Smith: My feeling is that that type of thing does no good whatsoever for any person in Ontario, and I trust that with the clarification that I presented today and with my genuine effort to work on this in a non-partisan way—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Clarification? Sounds like a different position to me.

Mr. Martel: The Premier should take him out of the cabinet.

Mr. S. Smith: —that we can put an end to the divisiveness that exists in great potential in that topic.

Mr. Speaker, I will draw my remarks—
(Applause).

Hon. B. Stephenson: Who is holding up the cue cards?

Mr. S. Smith: I will draw my remarks to a close, Mr. Speaker. I have tried on this occasion, at some greater length than I had originally intended, to point out why I feel that the Throne Speech has failed to give us a sense of direction. I have expressed my very sincere disappointment with the mere pittance which the government has offered in terms of job creation initiative. I have tried to outline a sense of the future direction for our manufacturing sector—especially in the high technological area—in this province and in this country. I have tried to put forward what I believe is a genuine statement and a genuinely held belief regarding the uranium contracts and regarding the alternatives we would present.

Mr. Foulds: Your speech was as vague and as wishy-washy as the Throne Speech itself.

Mr. S. Smith: And I have attempted as well to make a constructive contribution to the debate regarding the status of French language rights in Ontario, and made the suggestion of an all-party committee which, I think, could advance the cause of unity and the cause of a more united Ontario in a way that would be very desirable.

I thank the hon. members for their attention and I thank you for the opportunity to address the assembly.

On motion by Mr. Cassidy, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 5:10 p.m.

CONTENTS

Thursday, February 23, 1978

Re French lessons for pages, Mr. Speaker	49
Re Board of Internal Economy, Mr. Speaker	49
Death of Kim Anne Popen, statement by Mr. Norton	49
Fox investigation, statement by Mr. McMurtry	50
Reed Paper, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Gaunt, Ms. Bryden, Mr. Foulds	52
Gray Coach—Greyhound bus services, questions of Mr. Snow: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Philip	53
Hydro contracts, questions of Mr. Welch: Mr. Cassidy	55
Use of PCBs, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Deans, Mr. Martel.	56
Hydro corridors, questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. Reed	56
Canadian Johns-Manville plant, questions of Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Makarchuk	58
Hydro policy, questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. Peterson, Mr. Reed	58
Nuclear waste, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Foulds, Mr. Kerrio	59
OMB hearings, question of Mr. Welch: Mr. Epp	60
Darlington nuclear plant, questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. MacDonald	60
Child abuse, questions of Mr. Norton: Mr. Roy, Mr. Lewis	61
Bell Canada, questions of Mr. Snow: Mr. Swart	62
Tourist resort signs, questions of Mr. Snow: Mr. Eakins	63
Mine death inquiry, question of Mr. Kerr: Mr. Germa	63
Motion re sittings of the House, Mr. Welch, agreed to	64
Business of the House, Mr. Welch	64
Throne Speech debate, continued, Mr. S. Smith	64
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Cassidy, agreed to	84
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Welch, agreed to	84

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Ashe, G. (Durham West PC)
 Baetz, Hon. R. C.; Minister of Energy (Ottawa West PC)
 Bernier, Hon. L.; Minister of Northern Affairs (Kenora PC)
 Bolan, M. (Nipissing L)
 Bradley, J. (St. Catharines L)
 Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
 Bryden, M. (Beaches-Woodbine NDP)
 Campbell, M. (St. George L)
 Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
 Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
 Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
 Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
 Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
 Eaton, R. G. (Middlesex PC)
 Edighoffer, H.; Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
 Epp, H. (Waterloo North L)
 Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
 Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
 Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
 Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer & Commercial Relations (St. Andrew-St. Patrick PC)
 Haggerty, R. (Erie L)
 Handleman, S. B. (Carleton PC)
 Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General (Burlington South PC)
 Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
 Lane, J. (Algoma-Manitoulin PC)
 Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
 MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
 Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
 Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
 Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
 McCague, Hon. G.; Minister of the Environment (Dufferin Simcoe PC)
 McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
 McMurtry, Hon. R.; Attorney General (Eglinton PC)
 Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
 Nixon, R. F. (Brantford-Oxford-Norfolk L)
 Norton, Hon. K.; Minister of Community and Social Services (Kingston and the Islands PC)
 Peterson, D. (London Centre L)
 Philip, E. (Etobicoke NDP)
 Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
 Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
 Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
 Riddell, J. (Huron-Middlesex L)
 Rotenberg, D. (Wilson Heights PC)
 Roy, A. J. (Ottawa East L)
 Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
 Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)
 Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
 Snow, Hon. J. W.; Minister of Transportation and Communications (Oakville PC)
 Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
 Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
 Stong, A. (York Centre L)
 Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)
 Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)
 Timbrell, Hon. D. R.; Minister of Health (Don Mills PC)
 Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)
 Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)

Ontario

No. 4

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Friday, February 24, 1978

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1978

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY BARGAINING

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, members will recall that in October 1977 the Labour Relations Amendment Act, 1977, or Bill 22, came into force. That Act provides for single-trade, province-wide bargaining in the industrial, commercial and institutional sector of the construction industry and is effective April 30, 1978.

Prior to third reading, the Act was referred to the standing resources development committee of this Legislature for detailed consideration. During their deliberations, concern was expressed by committee members that provision should be made for inclusion of the electrical power systems sector in the province-wide bargaining regime. In response to that concern, I proposed that an industrial inquiry commission be established pursuant to section 34 of the Labour Relations Act to consider the extension of Bill 22 to the electrical power systems sector of the construction industry.

This proposal was accepted by the committee and was included as part of its report to the House made on October 25, 1977. Accordingly, on November 1, 1977, I appointed Mr. S. R. Ellis as an industrial inquiry commissioner on the following terms of reference:

To inquire into, report upon, and make recommendations to me concerning the extension or application of Bill 22, entitled The Labour Relations Amendment Act, 1977, passed at the first session of the 31st Legislature of Ontario, to the electrical power systems sector of the construction industry referred to in clause (e) of section 106 of the Labour Relations Act, including and without limiting the generality of the foregoing:

(a) The feasibility of the merger of the electrical power systems sector with the industrial, commercial and institutional sectors;

(b) The desirability of the retention of multi-trade bargaining, as opposed to single-trade bargaining, in the electrical power systems sector;

(c) The process of, and timing for, such extension, application or merger, if same be recommended; and

(d) Generally, any matter in relation to the foregoing which in the opinion of the commission is relevant to the foregoing.

Further, I requested that the commission report to me not later than January 31, 1978, and in accordance with that request Commissioner Ellis submitted his findings to me on that date. In fulfilment of the undertaking which I made to the committee, I am tabling the report at the appropriate time before the House.

Public notice of the inquiry was given and the interested parties were invited to meet informally with the commissioner and to make written submissions to him, if desirable. Throughout the months of December 1977, and January 1978, 20 such meetings were held in which some 50 individuals and 35 separate organizations took part, a limited number of whom also gave written submissions. In addition, the commissioner appointed two recognized experts in the field of construction industry labour relations, representative of management and labour, to act as technical advisers to the commission.

The report is an exhaustive study of the issue placed before the commissioner. The commissioner's major recommendation is that a parallel province-wide bargaining structure be established for a redefined public power sector. If adopted, the recommendation would require appropriate amendments to be made to the Labour Relations Act.

Although an initial assessment has been made of the implications of the report by officials within my ministry, further detailed analysis of it is continuing. Further, the report, which runs about 170 pages, has been reproduced and made available to all interested parties.

I hope to receive the recommendations of my officials regarding the report within the next several weeks.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether there is going to be a presence here later today by the Premier (Mr. Davis) or by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) or the Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch) or the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells)? May we have some indication from whoever is in charge over there?

Mr. Warner: Who is in charge?

An hon. member: They are in Montreal.

An hon. member: They are at the conference, are they not?

Mr. Warner: You are all in charge, that's the problem.

An hon. member: Lorne Henderson is in charge.

Mr. S. Smith: I will reserve my questions until a little later on in the question period, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question which I think should be directed to the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) in the absence of the Premier, the Deputy Premier and the Minister for Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier). In the absence of the Premier, the Deputy Premier and the Minister for Northern Affairs, can the minister provide the House with—

Hon. W. Newman: He is not here.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, sorry. He is not here either? Goodness me. Well, I'll try again, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ruston: Bombed out again.

Mr. Cassidy: What a bunch.

Mr. Warner: Too early for them.

Mr. Reid: Three up, three down.

CONDOMINIUM LEGISLATION

Mr. Cassidy: I'd like to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Can the minister explain why, with all of the promises of high priority that have been given on condominium legislation from the time of the creation of the Kealey task force two years ago until the publication of its report just before Christmas, there was no mention of condominium legislation in the Throne Speech? And can the minister say what the government's intentions now are?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The government's intentions have not changed one bit; we will be introducing condominium legislation in this session.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister gave condominium groups only a month—and that over Christmas—to reply to the Kealey commission study, can the minister say why that time limit cannot be extended in view of the very evident dragging of feet which is going on in the ministry at this time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was really quite interested to compare the remarks of members of the NDP who have been complaining about the delay in bringing forth condominium legislation, and the remarks that followed by one of the hon. member's competitors, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh)—

Mr. Renwick: A former competitor.

Mr. Blundy: Ed Broadbent's man.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—who tried to build his campaign in part around the delay in bringing in condominium legislation, piecemeal legislation, and all of those silly things, when in fact what we were doing was trying to implement the Kealey report as quickly as possible. In order to do that, I took the position that most people with interest in the condominium situation had had two advantages: firstly, as much hearing before the Kealey task force as they needed; and, secondly, obviously a great deal of time to reflect upon those submissions and their tactics prior to the time at which the study group reported.

With those two elements there, I thought quite properly that I owed it to the condominium unit owners in Ontario to proceed forthwith to move towards legislation upon receipt of the study report. I know that the hon. member and his party would have been up on their hind legs screaming if I then announced, "Well, now that I've got the study report, I'm going to have more public hearings or hold back legislation three or four months in order then to permit the public to once again comment at length and submit briefs." That's what they would have been saying. They would have been saying, "Haven't you heard enough? Isn't it time you guys got off your butts and started to bring forward legislation?" So I tell the hon. member that we are.

Mr. Warner: The report's a disaster, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I've got the report of the task force. I am now moving to legislation. We're going to have that legislation this spring. If he is making the suggestion that we should now delay it and permit more public hearings, I think the hon. member should level with me. Does he want us to hold off legislation while we have more public input? In that case he should say that he doesn't want the legislation this spring.

Mr. Cassidy: We had no evidence you are acting. It wasn't even in the Throne Speech.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The only thing I would add is that I indicated last December in this assembly, in the face of some questions from the hon. member's colleagues—

Mr. Kerrio: The minister would have made a good quarterback; he's running down the clock.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—that we would in fact be receiving public submissions to the end of January. There were no squawks coming at that time. In any case, those people who have written saying they cannot get their comments in by the end of January have been told by my ministry and myself that we will be happy to receive their comments, indeed at any time up until the passage of the legislation.

Mr. Breithaupt: Would the minister acknowledge at this time that such legislation would of course go to standing committee so that if there was a requirement for any additional public input at least it could be accommodated then?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I've always presumed, on a piece of legislation like this, that it would no doubt end up in committee where there would be more public hearings.

Mr. Philip: Can the minister inform the House how many submissions he has received from condominium groups over the month that he gave them to reply; and can he tell the House why he has not fulfilled the promise that he made to members of this House of Xeroxing in some form, at least in the same way that he Xeroxed the replies of coffee companies, and sending us the submissions of the condominium associations?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes; we have 29 so far, I think. That includes some from municipalities, so not all 29 are from condominium associations. We just thought we would try to organize it in some reasonable fashion for the hon. members before sending it to them.

Ms. Gigantes: What a disaster.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member would like me to send him the 29 that we've got, I'd be happy to.

Ms. Gigantes: You are going to have to bring in legislation each and every year.

Mr. Warner: You don't know what you're doing over there.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve my second question in the hope that one of the responsible ministers for the north actually shows up.

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'll ask my first question of the Minister of Health. Can the minister comment on the report on the CTV network last night which seemed to indicate that whole psychiatric files—not merely the demographic data that is in the possession of OHIP, but entire OHIP files—have found their way into the hands of the RCMP? Would he like to tell us what he knows about that and in some way explain how that fits, if it is accurate, with his previous statements in the House?

[10:15]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I was made aware of this a few days ago by my colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), and at this point it is not clear to what the RCMP are referring. Since being made aware of it, I've have asked my officials in the ministry and in OHIP to meet, along with the officials of the Attorney General's ministry, with representatives of the RCMP to clarify as much as is possible exactly what it is the inspector referred to in a recent letter to the Attorney General. The member can anticipate that once that has been clarified the Attorney General and/or I will be making a statement in this House.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, since the minister says it has been some days since he heard about this, may I ask why he doesn't already have the information that I would imagine he should be in possession of regarding exactly what it is that was in the possession of the RCMP and how they came to acquire it, whether there was a warrant exercised or not?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it is two days—in fact less than two days if you wanted to go by the hour—since I found this out; some meetings have already been held and further meetings are in progress or being arranged.

Mr. Deans: Go by the hour.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Do members want accurate information on it?

Mr. McClellan: That would be nice for a change.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The point is that we are investigating it thoroughly. The other thing that should be emphasized is that whatever information is turned up in this investigation, involving the officials of our two ministries and the RCMP, all of it will be turned over to the Krever commission. Obviously we are concerned in the Ministry of Health and the government as a whole that, given our determination to maintain as secure a system as is humanly possible, if this indicates something lacking in the system then we want that corrected and we would like Mr. Justice Krever's recommendations on it.

GLENDALE TRAINING CENTRE

Mr. Nixon: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Correctional Services. Since the inmates from Glendale, according to the minister's announced plans, will begin to be transferred Wednesday next week, would the minister give any consideration to delaying that decision until it can be reviewed, either by a group established by the ministry or, preferably, by one of the standing committees of the House? It could be the standing committee on justice or the standing committee on social development.

Does the minister agree that in the time since the evaluation study done by Dr. Coons, the people directly associated with Glendale have not, at least in their mind, had ample opportunity to put their alternatives? Would the minister not consider that such a review by a committee of the House, however the terms of reference might be constructed, would be in the best interests of justice and fair play, involving the ministers and the members of the House in improving the quality of the program under corrections?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, first of all, as of this morning there are about 62 inmates still in Glendale. Thirteen of them will complete their sentences within the next few weeks. The others will be transferred to adult training centres that have identical or equal programs, such as Burtch near Brantford, Brampton and so forth. One will be transferred to the Ontario Correctional Institute because he does require treatment, that would have occurred in any event. Secondly, I think if the member would talk today to the person that he is quoting about a very brief report he made last fall, he would find that he is completely in agreement with my decision.

Mr. Nixon: The Coons report, the minister has indicated, is simply a brief report.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is a letter, not a report.

Mr. Nixon: Well the letter or the opinion. What we want to do surely is in the best interests not only of the people that we want to assist—as well as, I presume, to some extent incarcerate during this period. We want to assist them—but surely the minister would agree that the members of this House, many of whom have received delegations and letters of concern from people working there and others in the community, should have a better opportunity than simply the question period in the Legislature to get a view of what is going on? What would be wrong with a brief delay in the transfer of the people concerned? Or if not that, at least a review by the standing committee so that the people concerned can be satisfied and maybe the minister would have the benefit of these additional sources of information?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, most of the inmates at Glendale are on relatively short sentences. We want to keep their program, be it education or social therapy, going. It can be duplicated in other institutions. It is a matter of record that when I met last Friday with the Glendale staff—and that's what it was, there was only one concerned citizen who was not of the Glendale staff—I offered them the opportunity that if they could show me that their program was not being duplicated or matched in any other institution we have under operation at the moment, then I would reconsider. After about five minutes of consultation they agreed that there was no point in pursuing that because the programs could be offered, or are being offered, elsewhere.

Mr. Nixon: There's not another institution with a similar record.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is not true. If you read the Ombudsman's report—and I would think somebody from Brant county should—you will find out that the Burtch Correctional Centre, which is in your county, comes out far ahead of Glendale.

Mr. Nixon: As far as recidivism?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Brantford with a supplementary.

Mr. Makarchuk: The minister has in effect partially answered my question in what he has said. He is transferring some people to an institution in Brantford that carries on a similar program. But my question is where in the world in and around Brantford is there an institution that carries on a similar program?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I did not say I was transferring them to an institution in Brantford. I specifically said that they would be transferred to the Burtch Correctional Centre near Brantford, to the Brampton Correctional Centre, and if they are bilingual, to the Rideau Correctional Centre near Ottawa. The member will find that in our correctional centres, particularly those devoted to the adult training program which is youth oriented, the programs are there.

Mr. Worton: Supplementary: In the last few days I have been in touch with the officials in regard to the complement of the Hillcrest Training School in the Guelph Correctional Centre. Could the minister tell me when that complement will be approved for that particular institution?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes. First of all, the initial complement will be for the transfer of the Hillcrest Training School to my ministry, and it will replace the old Guelph jail. The initial complement will be the staff of the Guelph jail. We have made a commitment that everybody qualified from the Hillcrest Training School will be brought on stream by this ministry. They may not be in the Hillcrest facility, they may very well be across the highway in the Guelph Correctional Centre.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have had enough supplementaries. The hon. member for High Park-Swansea.

Mr. Worton: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The previous question from the member for Wellington South really wasn't a supplementary to the original question. But go ahead.

Mr. Ziemba: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. I. Miller: If the minister—

Mr. Ziemba: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the member for High Park-Swansea's question a supplementary?

Mr. Ziemba: Yes it is, and if the last wasn't a supplementary I would like to get my supplementary in now.

Mr. Speaker: I thought yours was a new question.

Mr. Ziemba: No it was not.

Mr. Speaker: You may have a supplementary.

Mr. Ziemba: Thank you. Given that the Glendale facility has a rehabilitation success rate twice as good as any comparable facility elsewhere in this province, and given that there is a real team ethic there where the community trusts and works closely with the facility, and given that there are nowhere near the community resource centres to take care of the prisoners—the minister talks about 30 resource centres yet we will need 300—why doesn't he consider just delaying the closing of this very worthwhile facility until there is more consultation with the people in the community?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In response to the member for High Park-Swansea, the only research that was ever done about the recidivism rate at Glendale was one that the ministry has never accepted on the grounds of empirical data.

Mr. Ziemba: The minister didn't want to accept it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The reason we didn't accept the study was it showed they had exactly the same recidivism rate as Guelph Correctional Centre, which is almost absolutely without programs.

Mr. Ziemba: That's nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I find it highly inconsistent on the part of this member, who in December in my estimates told me to get into the CRCs, the community resource centres, right away as they were the only answer, not the institution. Then when I do it, he says to delay it for a couple of years.

Mr. Makarchuk: So why are you closing them?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In December he was telling me to move right ahead.

Mr. Cassidy: You pick on the best part of your system to close rather than the worst.

Mr. Ziemba: That was in December.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: If the minister is so sure that the program he is working towards is so good, what would be wrong with allowing a debate to clear the air for the citizens who has supported the program, particularly in the area of Simcoe and across the province?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have no quarrels with debates or anything, but I find when I write back to people in the area and tell them exactly what we're doing they turn around and write me a letter in support.

Mr. Nixon: There are some who certainly won't buy that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Table the letters.

Mr. Nixon: They didn't send copies of their agreement to me.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I say in response to the second part of that question the difficulty is that, were I to hold off much longer, my friend and colleague, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) would not have a training school on site on April 1 and that would cause that ministry a considerable amount of difficulty.

Above all, I have looked at the Glendale situation. I have the advice of my staff and of consultants, including the one named by the House leader of the opposition, that my decision to put youthful offenders as close to the community as possible is the correct one. On that basis, while I'm certainly open to suggestions at any time—

Mr. Nixon: Are you going to table the report?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I think a formal debate would only beg the question and lead to more delays in the implementation of a very positive policy by the ministry.

Mr. Cassidy: You are moving youthful offenders into jails.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre has a new question.

Mr. Cassidy: If the Leader of the Opposition has his second question, I'll take my second question later.

MULTICULTURAL TV STATION

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation, if I might just engage his attention for a moment.

Does the minister have his own policy or has the government established a policy which agrees with that expressed by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) regarding the multicultural television station that is proposed for the Toronto area? The minister is undoubtedly aware that the Minister of Transportation and Communications approached the federal minister to ask that assurances be given that this multicultural station not displace on the cable one of the Buffalo stations. Is that government policy and is that his ministry's policy?

Mr. Reid: Ask the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague).

Mr. Cassidy: He looks well informed and well briefed.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'm sure the position taken by the Minister of Transportation and Communications, who has the responsibility for making representations on our behalf, was clearly stated. I'm not so sure that it was quite as stated by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. McClellan: Unfortunately, it was.

Mr. Cassidy: It was a pretty offensive statement. Ask the member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) if he agrees with it?

Mr. McClellan: It was as stupid as that.

Mr. Conway: I'm sure he will.

[10:30]

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, can the minister tell us what his viewpoint is with regard to the multicultural television station which is proposed for Toronto, as to whether it should or should not supplant, if necessary, an American station; and will he be making a statement on behalf of the government or will the government be making a statement at some point?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think perhaps the simplest way to answer the question this morning is that we would make a statement clarifying the issue at the first of the week.

ONAKAWANA LIGNITE DEPOSITS

Mr. Cassidy: It is my understanding that the next question will go to a backbencher from my party. I think that's the way the order went.

I have a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs now that the north finally has a representative on the cabinet side. Who are the principals of Onakawana Development Limited? What has happened to Manalta, the company that was going to develop those deposits? When is the project expected to begin; and can the minister give some more understanding to this House about the guarantees that have been provided for employment of natives and of northerners from the region in the project?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In my earlier responsibilities as Minister of Natural Resources, naturally, I was directly involved with all these discussions. Since that particular minister is not here today and will be back, I believe on Monday, I think that question asking for all those details should be more appropriately directed to him.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I appreciate the redirection. It's a bit difficult when the minister isn't here and something important to that area is announced.

Hon. B. Stephenson: He will be here on Monday.

Mr. Cassidy: Has an environmental assessment been done on the project and what does this announcement mean in terms of the Hartt commission's responsibilities for assessing major projects of importance to the area north of the 50th parallel?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I can only repeat what I said in my early involvement. Certainly all the areas to which the member has referred were considered. I am sure when the minister comes back on Monday he will be able to acknowledge and respond to all those specific questions.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTS

Mr. Davison: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Would the minister tell the House what he has done to ensure that companies still involved in the practice of discounting income tax returns are abiding by the legislation he introduced and we passed in the House last session? Has the ministry investigated any cases in which the provisions of section 4 of that Act have been contravened by the application of unreasonable handling charges to the people involved? Specifically, has the ministry looked into the activities of two firms in Hamilton, Premium Tax Services of 175 James Street North, and Instant Tax of 290 Ottawa Street North?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wouldn't want to comment just now on which specific outlets my investigation staff has visited, either openly or not openly, but we have had a rather wide investigation of who is carrying on in spite of the legislation and who is not. I might comment at this time that if the member has any specific branches—and he has mentioned a couple—I will be pleased as a result of his question to go back and see if those happen to be two that have been checked.

I would also say that I wouldn't purport to acknowledge openly whether they have or haven't, because that would be unfair to the operators, I think. The other thing I would add is that we have found certain practices being carried on which may have succeeded in loopholing the Act a little bit. Perhaps next week I will be introducing in the Legislature a short amendment Act to close some loopholes, because I do want to get those people this year.

Mr. Davison: Supplementary: I trust, then, from the minister's remarks, that he will, if he hasn't, take a look at those two companies I have mentioned specifically. Would the minister confirm that the use of rather substantial handling charges is one of the methods that some of these companies are using to get around the Act?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say that in my short check of the practices we know are being carried on, we haven't found that one as one they have stuck to. Those two that the member may have mentioned may be, but as I say mostly they are using some other more clever means to get around section 4.

TOURISM ADVERTISING

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Is he aware of the impact that Bill C-48, as approved in the House of Commons, is having on tourist resort and attraction operators throughout the province as it relates to the advertising done in the United States not being an allowable deduction as a cost? Is the minister aware of the impact that that is going to have on the tourist attractions and operators across this province, particularly in view of the huge deficit that we are facing in the tourism industry right across the country?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I don't have specific numbers on what the impact will be. I am assuming that the provisions of Bill C-48 as passed by the federal government will certainly have some impact on persons who are attempting to advertise in American publications. The hon. member well knows the very public debate that was held on that particular bill; the bill itself was aimed at advertising in such magazines as Time and Reader's Digest. The spinoff from that may very well have an adverse effect on the smaller operators and the attractions that need to advertise in those American magazines.

What we can do about it would be, I suppose, to make some sort of submission to Industry, Trade and Commerce, and ask them to bring to the attention of their colleagues the effect it can have on tourist attractions and on costs to the operators in Ontario and Canada as a whole.

Mr. Ruston: The minister should set up a meeting with Horner.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister is aware of the fact that it is not only periodicals and weekly and monthly publications that I am talking about. I am also talking about radio and television advertising as it relates to some of the attractions we have across the province. It seems strange at this time that we would inhibit those people from advertising to get tourists to come to Ontario particularly.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am not sure whether or not the media the hon. member is referring to, and the advertisers of the type he and I are talking about, were in fact exempt from the taxation. If that were so then his comments are well taken. However, with respect—and not being facetious—I would suggest that this Legislature had absolutely nothing to do with the passing of Bill C-48 and as he has some colleagues who are gathering, I understand, in large numbers in Ottawa, he may want to talk to them over the weekend.

Mr. Breithaupt: They are large, very large.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Insignificant numbers.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: But not in the House of Commons.

Mr. Conway: A lot of your old friends, John.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, there won't be.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, the advice might be very well put by the minister. But the suggestion I am making is, would he in his office, as it relates to the protection of and interest in Ontario resorts and tourist operators, make known to the federal government his feelings that it is causing grave concern? I have very recently had from a man who does a great deal of television advertising in the States a submission that he will not be able to deduct this cost from his advertising. He brings thousands of people here. I wonder if the minister, through his good offices, would investigate further to see if he can have some impact on the government to change this bill.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: As a result of a phone call from the hon. member to my office yesterday, indicating his interest—and I think his genuine interest in this matter—we have already started that. Certainly, we will contact the federal agencies, particularly Industry, Trade and Commerce, and indicate our concern and pass it on to the others.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary to the minister: Would the minister clarify with the Ministry of Revenue that advertising done on a foreign station and directed to a foreign market is deductible? Would he get that information and get it out to the operators, and tell them exactly what it is?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I missed the first part of the question.

Mr. Makarchuk: The point is that if the advertising is done on a foreign station, directed to a foreign market—in fact to a United States' market—then that cost is deductible. If he would get this information and convey it to the people concerned, I am sure that would clarify the matter.

Mr. Reed: Is that a statement or a question?

Mr. Eakins: That's advice, just advice.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I will look into that. I wasn't aware that situation existed.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Will the minister tell us what priority he is giving to finding alternative sites or disposal methods for the liquid industrial wastes which are now being dumped in the Beare Road site in Metropolitan Toronto, and can he assure us that there will be no further requests for extension of the use of this site beyond April 30? There have been several extensions already and it is creating a very smelly atmosphere in the area and it is already overloaded.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I cannot give the hon. member the undertaking that we will not request an extension of the deadline that we have at present. We don't have other facilities at the present time. As the hon. member knows, we're working on others—St. Lawrence Cement, Nanticoke—and some more may be directed to Tricil. We are working on this project and looking for an early resolution but, as she knows, the various hearings are holding things up. We hope to be in a position to handle these in other areas by the end of the year.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: What progress is being made as far as recycling these wastes is concerned? Is there any progress in recycling this type of waste rather than dumping in lagoons and waste disposal sites?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The process that we're going through at St. Lawrence is one of destroying waste by burning, and there is a program at the Ottawa Street site in Hamilton.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Did I hear the minister correctly, that burning of waste is carried out at the St. Lawrence Cement plant in Mississauga at this time?

Hon. Mr. McCague: No, I didn't say that at all. I said in response to the member for Beaches-Woodbine that there was a hearing into that matter coming up later this year.

OHIP CLAIMS PROCEDURE

Mr. Conway: A question to the Minister of Health: Is the minister aware that under the present OHIP legislation it is possible for a doctor who has opted out of the direct payment scheme to refuse with impunity to submit to OHIP the bills his patients have paid, thereby preventing the patients from being reimbursed for the moneys they have paid to that doctor?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Refuse to do what? There were a couple of words there that I think were crucial to the member's question which I couldn't hear.

Mr. Conway: For the minister's edification I will re-read the question.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Enunciate clearly

Mr. Conway: Is the minister aware that under the present OHIP legislation it is possible for a doctor who has opted out of the direct payment scheme to refuse with impunity to submit to OHIP the bills his patients have paid, thereby preventing those patients from being reimbursed for the moneys paid by them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The patient submits his or her own bills to OHIP and is reimbursed directly for any services rendered by an opted-out physician which are in fact OHIP benefits.

Mr. Conway: Would the minister then care to comment upon a case brought by OHIP to the College of Physicians and Surgeons where this is the matter at hand and where in fact that very point is being disputed? Is the minister aware that there is a Metropolitan Toronto physician at present before the College of Physicians and Surgeons for refusing to submit bills or OHIP claims to OHIP, thereby allowing the reimbursement to take place for the patients involved? Is he aware of that case? What does he plan to do about it, particularly as regards reimbursement for the many elderly people in this instance? The minister might be interested to know that the challenge was made by an Ontario public servant working for the Ministry of the Environment.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Either something's missing from the question or—

Mr. Mancini: I think there's something missing from the answer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—perhaps having the details of the name and so forth would assist. I repeat that in the case of an opted-out physician it is the patient who submits the claim to OHIP and, assuming that it is a service for which there is a benefit under the Health Insurance Act, then the patient is reimbursed according to the OHIP schedule benefits.

If the hon. member would care to give me the name—there are many cases before the college at various stages—I will look into it and if there is anything further to be added I will do so.

[10:45]

Mr. Conway: Is the minister then denying that there is, under the present OHIP legislation, no obligation on behalf of the doctor involved to submit claims proving that the medical services have been provided? Is he saying that there is no obligation on opted-out doctors to supply those claim forms to OHIP? They have to, and the minister must be aware of that. Without that the patients cannot be reimbursed.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I said, something was missing from the question.

Mr. Reid: That was clear to most of us.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It seems to me that what the hon. member is talking about is providing proof of having performed a service. What he is talking about is submitting a claim which, with respect, is totally different from what he said in the beginning. The member should get his questions straight for once.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: Now that you understand it, what is the answer?

Mr. Conway: As a supplementary to that, I want to know if the minister intends to act in this particular case. It is clear to everyone, if not to the Minister of Health, that there must surely be an obligation to remove that loophole because there are several people in Metropolitan Toronto out several hundreds of dollars because of it. I am asking the minister to investigate and do something, with perhaps the help of the Minister of Labour, to plug that obvious loophole so that those people can be reimbursed for the moneys lost to them.

Mrs. Campbell: The Minister of Labour doesn't know either.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Sean, you are off your rocker.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the hon. member didn't know enough about it in the first instance to even properly phrase his question.

Mr. Nixon: First you didn't understand it. Now you won't answer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will be glad to investigate. If there is, in fact, a loophole we will consider that. But once again the members of the Liberal Party try to damn the whole medical profession because of what they think might be wrong.

Mr. Nixon: It was directed at you—an inefficient minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'd like to know your definition of a loophole, Sean.

Mr. Cunningham: Direct the question to the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

MINIMUM WAGE

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Minister of Labour.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can't hear the question.

Mr. Mackenzie: Would the minister enunciate clearly to the House, her thinking behind the possible elimination of the minimum wage in the province of Ontario as reported in one of the newspapers recently? Does she really intend to set up a committee to look into this matter? What would the committee really look into? Can we have assurance that if such a committee was set up it will not be used to delay further increases that are announced for the following year in the minimum wage in the province of Ontario?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very pleased to enunciate very clearly indeed that I did not say that I was looking forward to the elimination of the minimum wage. What I did say was that a number of eminent economists, a number of important social philosophers, sociologists and others have made statements and arguments within the last several months—

Mr. Cassidy: You are an apologist. Nothing but an apologist.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—stating that they believed—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Do the members want an answer to the question?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I don't really think they do. Do they wish an answer, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Swart: The real one.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am giving members the factual answer, which is my wont.

Mr. Lewis: You were misquoted again, eh? You are the most misquoted minister in the House. You are always changing—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh no, I am not. I don't get misquoted nearly as often as the member does. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to answer the question honestly and fully, as I always do.

Mr. Conway: Just the whole truth today. Just the whole truth.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There have been a number of thoughtful specialists and consultants in this area who have expressed publicly a concern that I think indeed we must examine. They say that the minimum wage is not the most valid tool for the provision of a rational economic base for those people who are unskilled and must be employed.

Mr. McClellan: Who are those people?

Mr. Samis: Name one.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There are other mechanisms which have been suggested. I believe that when these suggestions are made by knowledgeable individuals—

Mr. Deans: If you are unskilled, do you get lower food prices, lower rent?

Hon. B. Stephenson:—it is indeed our responsibility to examine that philosophy and to look at the validity of the minimum wage as a social tool at this stage of the development of our economy and our society.

Mr. Samis: Philosophy is back in the 19th century there.

Mr. Lewis: What a lot of blather.

Mr. Renwick: That's Milton Friedman.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is the purpose of the study. There are no biases within the study. It is completely open and will be open to submissions from any and all groups who are interested.

Mr. Samis: A dollar an hour.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We hope to have some solid information about this which will be of guidance, not only to the government, but also to all members of the Legislature.

Interjections.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. First, would the minister please give us the names of maybe two or three of the experts she is talking about. And would she answer the last part of my question—that is, if such a committee is set up, can she assure us it will not be used as a mechanism to stall the further increases in the minimum wage that have been announced?

Mr. Warner: One of the experts is Colin Brown.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the increases proposed have been announced. They will take place on the dates on which they have been announced.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Since the minister uses them fairly widely, could she not share with us some of the names? Not 10 or a dozen—I'm sure she has that at her fingertips—but just three or four.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I shall be most pleased to provide the bibliography which has been established within the research department of the ministry.

Mr. Lewis: You don't have any of them?

Mr. McClellan: Not a single name?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I do not have them off the top of my head.

Mr. Eakins: Ask George McCague.

REGISTRATION OF NURSES

Mr. Gaunt: A question of the Minister of Health: Is the minister planning a meeting with the College of Nurses of Ontario to express concern over the college's proposal to decertify nurses who haven't worked at least 50 days in a year in the last five years; a proposal that in my view is unrealistic and certainly unreasonable in view of the high unemployment, particularly among nurses in rural areas?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, to repeat the discussion which the hon. member and I had by telephone yesterday morning, this is in fact a proposal from the College of Nurses to the membership. Of course, I am sure the hon. member, like members on this side, would want to ensure that the rights of the nursing profession through the college to regulate its own profession should be maintained. Since it is a proposal from the college to the membership, one which the nurses are discussing at a number of meetings in various localities around the province, we are leaving it in their hands to work this matter out.

If the membership of the nursing profession makes it clear to the college that it wants this proposal to be amended or repealed as a proposal then that is clearly a matter for the College of Nurses. At this point it is not in the domain of anyone in the provincial government.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Then I take it that the College of Nurses has not made a proposal to the Minister of Health with respect to asking for a change in the regulation in this regard. If that proposal were advanced to the minister, what would be the minister's disposition at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: At this point, Mr. Speaker, I think what they might put before us is purely hypothetical. I have already indicated the college's intentions. I did meet with Mrs. Evans and Miss Macdonald from the college about two or three weeks ago in one of our regular quarterly meetings with that particular college, at which time they reviewed with me the progress of the proposal and indicated which meetings have been held and that further meetings are going to be held, and that it is their intention, once they have the responses of the various local groups of nurses, to evaluate those responses and perhaps change, either in total or in some respects, their suggestion to their profession. So at this point I would not want to abridge in any way the right of the College of Nurses to deal with its own membership to develop proposals in the interests of nursing.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Given that one of the proposals is that nurses re-entering the profession would need to be upgraded, would the minister be prepared to give a commitment that if that proposal went through, he would assure those nurses that courses would be available for them to upgrade themselves? That seems to be one of their concerns.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think, Mr. Speaker, what we would have to do, if in fact that is the final proposal of the College of Nurses—and I know my colleague in the Ministry of Colleges and Universities is already aware of the proposal and some of the implications of it—is that we would have to sit down with MCU to look at the ramifications of such a proposal for the college system to ensure that courses were in fact available, if that were to be the final resolution of this matter.

Mr. Gaunt: If this proposal is designed to limit the number of nurses in the province of Ontario would it not be better, and has the minister had any discussion with the college from the point of view of extending the two-year course to perhaps three or four years as another method to accomplish the same purpose?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I've neither heard nor read anything emanating from the college to suggest that it is a means of limiting the numbers.

Mr. Gaunt: I think that's what it would do in practical terms.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think that's perhaps one of the concerns. All I'm saying is that I've had no such indication from the college in personal meetings with them or in written representations. My understanding of their intent is to attempt to recognize, as in many professions, that there have been significant advances in the methodology of their profession, and they want to assist their members to keep up to date.

The second part of the question had to do with the enrolment, I think.

Mr. Gaunt: Has the minister had any discussions with the college from the point of view of extending the courses to three or perhaps four years instead of the current two?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That is basically a matter for my colleague, the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott), but I can perhaps remind the member that that ministry does have under way a review of the two-year nursing program. There have been representations made, I believe, to that review under the Minister of Colleges and Universities by the College of Nursing. Certainly the Ontario Hospital Association has made certain representations as, I'm sure, have other interested bodies and individuals. That matter is already under review.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of the Environment. He will be aware, I am sure, that the Ontario Municipal Board has rejected the sludge site in the Niagara region, a sludge site which was on agricultural land, and that the region is appealing to the cabinet. Will the minister be making a recommendation? Has he done an examination of this and does he not think, as a matter of principle, that a site should be located on the vast amount of land which is already zoned for heavy industrial purposes rather than on good farm land?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I'm not aware of the particular item that the member mentioned. I will take the question as notice and report to him next week.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, may I inform the minister—

Mr. Reed: Question?

Mr. Swart:—that there has been a site designated by the region as most satisfactory next to Welland Chemicals, and the region did not pursue it because the land was owned by a major landholding company.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's a question?

Mr. Swart: Will the minister examine this and perhaps recommend to the cabinet that that's where the region should go?

Hon. W. Newman: You will have a chance to make a speech sometime later.

Mr. Speaker: That supplementary might have been acceptable if you had said, "Is the minister aware?"

Hon. Mr. McCague: I didn't hear most of what the hon. member had to say.

Mr. Swart: It was his colleagues who prevented that.

Hon. Mr. McCague: If he'd like to call me later today or on Monday, I'd be glad to discuss it with him.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: Is the minister aware of the fact that when those hearings are taking place, there's very much pressure and influence brought to bear by the expertise on the one side? Would he be prepared to do something that would encourage and help those people who have to make their submissions in order to equalize the sort of submissions that might come in? It seems a very David-and-Goliath type of confrontation with the region on one hand with all their expertise and the people on the other hand in the area trying to defend themselves. Would the minister investigate the possibility that those people that are to defend themselves in such an action would get help from his ministry?

Mr. Swart: The hearing has been over for a month.

Hon. Mr. McCague: As I understand the question, it was "Would I investigate?" Yes.

NANTICOKE PLANT

Mr. Reed: I have a question for the Minister of Energy. Could he tell this House how the Nanticoke generating plant has been performing since the much-publicized announcement that it had reached a capacity of 6,000 megawatts, and could he tell us if there are any plans for a further shutdown coming on top of the shutdown that occurred last year for further repairs to this new installation?

[11:00]

Mr. Haggerty: Does he know where Nanticoke is, first of all?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, during 1977 a repair program was begun to correct problems with the boiler suspension system and the generator rotors used at the coal-fired generating stations, and I can give some details if the member wishes. In 1977, hanger rods, which are used to suspend each unit's boiler from the station roof, were replaced in units one to six after repairs made to cracks and breaks in 1976 proved unsuitable.

Following the discovery of cracks in similar generator rotors installed in England, C. A. Parsons, the manufacturer, advised Hydro to inspect the generator rotor for each unit at Nanticoke. It was necessary to modify rotors on two units to remove potentially dangerous cracks caused by fretting. The Leader of the Opposition will be interested to know that steel, as well as human beings, frets. It was the result of steel rubbing against steel at the rotor shaft.

In working towards a solution to the rotor problem, Hydro and C. A. Parsons have agreed that the existing steel rotor wedges should be replaced with aluminum wedges. A rotor with new aluminum wedges was installed in unit number seven in 1977. The aluminum rotor wedges will be placed in units one to six over the next two years. The first unit is currently being modified and two other units will be shut down in March and April. The last three units will be modified in 1979.

Mr. Reed: What is Nanticoke capable of producing now? Is it capable of producing what it was built to produce or is it incapable of producing what it was built to produce?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I will give the precise answer to that either directly to the hon. member or to this House.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary. Could I ask the minister what loss of horsepower we are going to suffer as a result of going to aluminum wedges?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Again, Mr. Speaker, that is a very technical question and I will supply the answer in the very near future.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. McClellan: A question to the Minister of Labour: May I ask the minister whether she intends to introduce an amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act in this session to raise the rates?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I was informed at the beginning of this week that the report of The Wyatt Company, which has been examining the financial structure of the Workmen's Compensation Board, will be available to me at the end of March. When that report is available to me we shall be seriously considering what modification should be made as a result of the recommendations of the joint consultative committee and I shall be happy to inform the House as soon as possible.

Mr. McClellan: May I ask the minister just how much longer the injured workers of this province are going to have to suffer because of the financial incompetence of the Workmen's Compensation Board?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no evidence in the interim report of The Wyatt Company, which was submitted at the end of November, that there is any financial incompetence at the Workmen's Compensation Board, but I must tell this House that the reason for the delay in the final report of The Wyatt Company is, in fact, due to the large numbers of representations which were made to the investigators by both employers and employees, and as a result of the hearings which they held with those deputations they have been delayed in the production of the final report. As soon as it is available, we shall be considering it.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Granting that the status of the fund itself and its possible ability to pay additional compensation is in question and is presently being studied, and is a logical thing to study, why is the government forcing the injured work-people of this province to have to suffer through this winter and this inflationary period with no increase at all while the minister is waiting for this particular bureaucratic study to be done? Why can the government not itself supplement, according to the cost of living, the compensation of these people at the very bottom of the economic ladder and not force them to wait for the valuable study to be finished?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition has first said it was entirely logical to do the study and then says it is illogical to wait for the results before making modifications. Supplemental funds are available—

Mr. S. Smith: You can supplement from general revenue.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —to families of injured workmen through provincial programs at this time. The members very well know that amendments to those benefits cannot be made without introduction of legislation into this House. That must be done on the basis of all the valid responsible information which is available to us. We cannot do it without considering the total impact of whatever modifications may be suggested.

Mr. Makarchuk: You just don't want to do it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But I would suggest to the hon. members that if indeed there are problems there are sources available through provincial funding and federal funding which are available to the families of those workmen.

An hon. member: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: We have had enough supplementaries. We have time for one more question. The hon. member for London North.

Mr. Lewis: Other than being objectionable, it is entirely unclear. What is the minister talking about? That injured workers should go on welfare because she won't give them the increase? What's wrong with the hon. minister?

TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION FUND

Mr. Van Horne: A question of the Minister of Education: How does he explain the expenditure of over $100 million for the teachers' superannuation fund, as revealed in the third quarter report of Ontario Finances, when he told the Legislature last session that the government was all paid up for the current fiscal year and that he was meeting his responsibilities in that regard?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would suspect, Mr. Speaker, that the figure my friend is talking about is the same one we were discussing previously in supplementary estimates. I would have to take a look at that and find out, but I suspect that is probably so.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

PETITIONS

MINIMUM DRINKING AGE

Mr. Van Horne: I have a petition, Mr. Speaker. It is regrettable that we can't spend a little more time dealing with $100 million but I will pursue that on Monday.

I beg to present a petition from some members of the congregation of Riverside United Church, bearing 136 names, requesting that the Legislature raise the age of the consumption of alcoholic beverages to 20 years of age and that the government curtail the advertising of alcoholic beverages. This petition is directed to the attention of the Lieutenant Governor and members of the assembly.

REPORTS

ELECTRICAL POWER
SYSTEMS INQUIRY

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would like to report the submission of the inquiry into the electrical power system sector by Mr. Ellis.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(continued)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion of an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

(Applause)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can begin by saying thank you to members from all parties, and I will ask you to save a bit of that applause for a few months hence when I hope you will have some more of that kind of support for me.

I want to begin, Mr. Speaker, by paying my respects to you in my new role as leader of the Ontario New Democratic Party, I look forward to serving in this Legislature under your firm hand because we have been party colleagues, because we are friends and because of a special affinity between the two of us—you, Mr. Speaker, as the first Speaker of this Legislature from northern Ontario, and me, as the first Leader of the New Democratic Party to come from outside Toronto. I think it is significant that even the Conservative government acknowledged that when it came to minding the legislative store the best person for the job was a New Democrat. And the people of Ontario are rapidly coming to understand that when it comes to minding the provincial store and making the economy of Ontario work, the best people for the job are the New Democrats.

Mr. Havrot: You should try running a store.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Before turning to the Throne Speech, I want to say a few words about how I intend to approach the work of the Legislature in my new role as leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Kerrio: Get the hook.

Mr. Cassidy: First, my party and I will do everything in our power to confront the government on the level of issues and not of personalities—

Mr. Lewis: With one exception.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You may have issues but you sure don't have any personality. I'll buy that one.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Minister of Industry and Tourism doesn't know the difference between a waffle and a cucumber.

Mr. Cassidy:—and to treat the Premier (Mr. Davis), his party and all of the members on a basis of respect. We have always treated this Legislature with respect and we will continue to do so.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cassidy: I trust that the public also understands, as we do, that the MPPs in this chamber are here overwhelmingly out of a sense of public service and not of personal gain.

Mr. Hodgson: You did pretty well.

Mr. Cassidy: I do want to caution, however, that the obligation to treat the Legislature with respect rests not just on the two opposition parties but also on the government.

Ontario is a big, complex province and this Legislature has difficult and important tasks to perform. If we just think back to the work of this winter, we have had select committees studying such complex issues as family law reform, the whole question of health and safety in the workplace, the difficult problem of how to protect jobs when a multi-national corporation like Inco pulls the plug on a community like Sudbury, and the equally difficult problems of our energy future and of how to secure Ontario Hydro's uranium supplies.

That's a far cry from the days in 1970 when the member for Scarborough West assumed the duties of leader of the New Democratic Party's program.

Mr. Lewis: That's progress.

Mr. Cassidy: The Ontario budget has tripled between then and now and government has grown enormously under the guiding hand of the party which now says that Ontario is over-regulated and that there is too much government. These are the fellows who created that.

Mr. McClellan: Too much Tory government.

Mr. Cassidy: On top of all this, the current minority situation has enormously increased the importance of the ordinary MPPs in this Legislature as well as their workload.

Some new support has been provided since I came to the Legislature, but the ability of the opposition parties to participate meaningfully in the work of this House is still incredibly handicapped, because we work with such limited resources. Without going into detail, I would say to the Premier, and ask him to understand, that if this Legislature is really to perform the job for which the members are elected, adequate resources along the lines proposed by the Camp Commission and the select committee of the Legislature must be provided. That's essential.

Mr. MacDonald: The government House leader agrees.

Mr. Cassidy: Respect for the Legislature and for the people of this province must go beyond providing adequate resources for this Legislature alone. The cobwebs that encrust Ontario's government have got to be swept away. I want to put on the record here my commitment, and my party's commitment, to open the door on government operations by bringing in a genuine freedom of information law for Ontario to ensure that the people's right to know how their business is being conducted, is no longer the sham that it is under the Conservatives.

Mr. Foulds: Like the Liberals in Ottawa.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: An enormous response.

Mr. Cassidy: At this point I had planned to turn to the substance of the Throne Speech. Having found none, however, I want to turn to the flim-flam that is there as a replacement.

The Throne Speech is an abdication of responsibility for the many serious economic problems that are facing Ontario in 1978 and as we move into the 1980s. The government acknowledges that jobs in the economy are the most important problems facing Ontario this year. But instead of taking action itself and providing the leadership that Ontario so desperately needs, it has decided to stand aside and pass the buck to the federal government and to the private sector.

[11:15]

In short, this Throne Speech is a copout and nothing more. A strategy for economic recovery must begin with job creation; yet the government's only specific proposals are to modestly expand the program of temporary jobs for young people, and to give yet another promise of investment incentives which have proven so ineffective in the past. That's just not good enough for the 316,000 people who cannot today find work in this province because of the policies of this government.

There are some things that one can welcome in the Throne Speech even when it's as limp of content as this particular one. The government's decision to improve manpower training programs, an area for which it has had complete responsibility for years, is welcome. New Democrats have pressed for years for action on special education, and we hope that adequate funding will now be provided to back up the government's promises. We also hope this will not simply be an added burden on the back of the property taxpayers at the local level, but will be backed with provincial funding.

I, personally, have shared too much anguish with parents who have been involved, not to welcome the government's proposal to do something to try to stop the kidnapping of children by parents who are engaged in family disputes.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Wait for it, wait for it.

Mr. Cassidy: We will wait for it, Mr. Speaker, with interest and concern. It's a serious area and action was long overdue; and on the administration front, this government could have been acting years ago without even the need for legislative change.

The government is preparing to make automobile insurance compulsory in this province. It must now face the need also to make the insurance universally available and affordable, lest the policy benefits the private insurance industry in Ontario at the expense of Ontario drivers.

I want to draw the government's attention to the study conducted by a private consulting firm for a committee of this Legislature, which estimated that there would be savings of more than $50 million a year from a fully public automobile insurance program. Half measures are not enough. We will press in this Legislature for a public auto insurance plan that deals fairly with every driver in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What are you going to do with Lawlor and Renwick? Come on.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, there is a sort of Alice in Wonderland air, though, to some of the other proposals in the Throne Speech and I have the feeling that the people of Ontario would do very well to read between the lines. I am sorry the minister has left now, the new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague). If the government did not intend to undercut environmental standards in this province, then I have to ask why it bothered to include the ambiguous and misleading references to the environment and resource development which are contained in the Throne Speech.

None of us in this party can fathom exactly what the government's reference to making the public assume more personal responsibility for the health system really means, but I want to serve notice that we will resist any effort by the government to shift the costs of our health insurance system on to the shoulders of those citizens who need health care most, yet can afford it least.

We welcome the news that the Conservative government is prepared to defend the family against its adversaries in the province of Ontario. But it is hard to take these assurances seriously when the government's disregard for the unemployed is, in itself, a major source of stress for hundreds of thousands of families in this province. If I can add a personal note, I will begin to accept that the government's concern about the family is real and not just a sham if it brings in legislation to put the needs of families with children ahead of the desire for profits by developers who are running adult-only buildings with the approval of the government of Ontario.

Then there's that fascinating gimmickry which governments resort to when they have nothing meaningful to offer to the citizens of the province. A government that was really capable of governing would not need a sunset law in order to eliminate obsolete or useless boards or commissions. It's ironic that this government feels it has to mount a crusade against counter-productive red tape when the people who wrote and approved all of those regulations are Conservative cabinet ministers. And wasn't it this government in Ottawa last week which spoke of protecting monopolies and of encouraging foreign takeovers at the expense—my goodness, at the expense of Canadian free enterprise? Bill Davis and Darcy McKeough are opposed to free enterprise in Ontario. The gospel of deregulation has got some very curious twists indeed.

On a more serious note, Mr. Speaker, everyone in this province should be concerned with the doctrinaire way in which this government has reacted to Ontario's economic problems by resolving to do nothing. What we need in this province is leadership by the government, and not abdication. That applies to our economy, that applies to the proposed sellout of our uranium resources, and that applies in the area of national unity.

The Conservatives' lack of leadership, the Conservatives' lack of imagination, their lack of direction are evident now not just in this Legislature but all across Ontario. People are no longer just questioning one or two specific policies that are advanced by the government; they are questioning the basic competence of the Conservatives to govern this province.

Just how far this government has abdicated its responsibility for jobs and the economy was evident throughout last week's federal-provincial conference up in Ottawa. As we understand it, the government really began to compile its list of 10 job actions only about two weeks before that conference began. Half of those 10 proposals lack so much as a word on how they might be implemented. But when it came to two of the most pressing economic problems affecting Ontario, the Premier abandoned his role of coach and retired to the stands and acted as a spectator.

If the premiers and the federal government were really intent on showing Canadians that they meant business about creating jobs in this province, they had a golden opportunity one week ago. They had a golden opportunity, with the legislation that was before Parliament last week and this week, to ensure that Canadians will supply the pipe for the Alcan pipeline, rather than leaving that open to the rest of the world. That's what Premier Blakeney called for. But the Premier of Ontario preferred to talk in generalities about accelerating investment in energy areas, without even hinting anything specific on the pipe supply issue, despite the jobs that are at stake in Hamilton, in Welland and in Sault Ste. Marie.

The failure by Ontario and by Canada to intervene could result in some of the biggest steel contracts in Canada's history slipping between our fingers. Canada is saying that one of our major objectives from the pipeline is to maximize economic benefits from the construction of the line. But the only way to ensure this objective is to legislate a guarantee that the Canadian portion of the pipeline will be built with Canadian-made material.

Even though more than $1 billion worth of pipe and jobs is involved, this government and their Liberal counterpart up in Ottawa are so doctrinaire in their belief that there must be no interference in market forces, that both Premier Davis and Prime Minister Trudeau ignored the issue entirely.

Mr. S. Smith: That would give Stelco a licence to steal, you know. No competition.

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Hamilton West says Stelco is not a competitive firm and has suggested that Canadian steelworkers and Canadian steel management are not capable of providing steel at a competitive price.

Mr. S. Smith: What nonsense. I said that if you guarantee Canadian, then they have no competitor; consequently, they could name their price.

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Hamilton West thinks that Stelco is so irresponsible that it would rip off the Canadian taxpayer, in the case of being given an assurance of having the job.

Mr. Lewis: No faith in the private sector, for God's sake.

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Hamilton West has no faith in the managers who live in the boskier ends of his riding, nor in the steelworkers who live in part of his riding as well. We believe it is possible to negotiate a price that is a competitive price and ensure that those jobs remain in Canada. That is what Ontario should have been saying at the first ministers' conference.

Likewise, that conference began on the very day the layoffs at Inco in Sudbury took effect. Yet the Premier of this province couldn't even bring himself to mention the crisis that is affecting the Sudbury basin. I suspect it is because he had nothing to say to his fellow premiers, or to the 1,200 men whose jobs he refused to protect and who were thrown out of work a week ago Monday.

This government knew a full year ago, they were told a full year ago, that nickel was piling up and that massive layoffs were inevitable if world markets did not improve. Yet the government did nothing. They didn't prepare a contingency plan; they didn't bother to consult the unions or the companies, but just sat on the information. They even patted Inco on the back when it said it was going to mine the deepsea nickel nodule market at the expense of jobs here in Canada. Should the Premier really have been so shocked and surprised when the layoffs were announced last fall? No, he should not, because the government knew all along that that was going to happen, and they failed to lift a finger in order to protect those jobs.

Doing nothing has become a habit with this government. Of course, there was some pretence of action. A select committee was established to come up with some ideas, on the assumption, I suppose, that it would not come up with any ideas. But when the committee did just that and made a proposal with a majority report to cushion the effects on the workers concerned, the government of Ontario not only ignored the recommendations, but deliberately undermined the effort to get federal co-operation to keep the men on the job and ensure that those layoffs did not occur.

Ms. Gigantes: Shame.

Mr. Cassidy: I say to the Premier that the people of Sudbury were looking for leadership. They got nothing but silence. That's an indictment of the way this government has proceeded.

According to the Throne Speech the health of the provincial economy and the security and generation of workers' jobs and incomes will be the primary targets for government action during the session. But so little is offered in this speech in that area that one shudders to think what might have happened had the government decided to give second priority to the economy and not primary priority. Both my party and I are determined to focus on the rebuilding of Ontario's economy and that will be our priority in this session of the Legislature.

I promise you, Mr. Speaker, that we will not be content with rhetoric and that we will have tough and specific measures. We will not abdicate our responsibility because we believe that Ontario can lead in creating jobs and in restructuring our economy for the needs of the 1980s. We reject the government's approach because it is both irresponsible and incompetent.

In a few weeks' time I'll have the opportunity to respond to the Treasurer's (Mr. McKeough) budget, since I have insisted on having my swan song as Treasury critic for my party. I would, however, like to focus just on one area. I'd like to focus on the buy-Canadian proposals in the Throne Speech because they are put forward as such a fundamental precept of the government's strategy for economic recovery and because these proposals are so obviously lifted from the plan that the Conservative government failed to embrace when my party put it forward one year ago.

Last year we proposed tough provincial action so that Ontario could start winning back our most important foreign market—the market for foreign products in this province itself. All we are promised this week, however, is a federal-provincial exercise in public relations and one that is directed only at consumers. We agree that Ontario should press for a country-wide scheme to identify Canadian products on their labels, at the point of sale and in advertising, and to encourage people to buy these Canadian goods. But if the federal government drags its heels, as it has so often in the past, there is no earthly reason why Ontario should not sit down with the private sector in this province and work out a practical scheme for the Ontario retail market.

We New Democrats see a lot of sense in this kind of straightforward co-operation with the business community and we're fed up with the lack of action from the government. Not only that, but Ontario should do more than encourage action by consumers because it has an obvious responsibility to ensure that government contribute as much as it expects from the private consumers and the private sector.

In Ontario alone, billions of dollars of goods are bought by the Ontario government, by municipalities, by school boards and other agencies that use provincial tax dollars. We need now a buy-Canadian policy to govern these massive purchases. This is an area where Ontario can and should move immediately, if it really means business about creating jobs in Canada and relieving the current state of unemployment.

That's the way you could start now, Mr. Speaker, and that is a lot more than coming up with 10 job actions which apply to the feds, which apply to the private sector but which entail no meaningful commitment from Ontario alone. Nothing is more encouraging than a good example. We in the New Democratic Party believe the people of Ontario would respond to this kind of leadership from the public sector. When it comes to creating jobs in this province they look to this government for leadership, but all they are getting is public relations.

The Premier's behaviour on uranium was just as unbelievable as it was on the question of Inco and on the question of the pipeline. The federal government's uranium policy has done enormous harm to Ontario's interests in the exploitation of the uranium reserves at Elliot Lake. But when it came the Premier's turn to say something at the first ministers' conference, there was not even a whimper. The whole affair reveals a pattern of ideological rigidity that is without parallel even for this government and which will cost the people of Ontario billions of dollars. On this government's head be that cost.

I find the company unusual, but even such well known left-wingers as George Gathercole, the former chairman of Ontario Hydro, were urging back in 1973 that Hydro buy the uranium assets of Denison Mines in order to secure the fuel for Ontario's nuclear future. This was a view that was concurred in by the people from Consolidated Edison of New York, a privately owned utility, when they appeared before the select committee.

[11:30]

Even Sinclair Stevens, of all people, the federal Conservative MP—and there is none more Tory than he—said that if he had been on the board of a utility locking up a multi-billion-dollar uranium contract, he would have taken the acquisition route and therefore he supported Ontario Hydro's taking over Denison Mines.

Let me read some of the comments. George Gathercole wrote to the Minister of Energy in December 1973 and said: "We believe that either Ontario Hydro or some other agency of government should effectively own or control a substantial proportion of the uranium resources which are required to meet our need for at least the next 30 to 50 years. The conclusions reached both by Task Force Hydro and the advisory committee on energy support this. In our view we should proceed with the purchase of the uranium assets of Denison Mines, which are understood to have the largest low-cost reserves available, as quickly as possible." But the government failed to act.

Mr. Lawlor: The government deliberately missed the boat.

Mr. Cassidy: Half a year later, on June 4, 1974, Mr. J. G. Matthew, the manager of fuel and supply resources development of Hydro, wrote and made a presentation to the then Minister of Energy, who now is the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough). He said, on behalf of Hydro, that it is probable that with world shortages, price increases will greatly exceed changes in the cost of production from Elliot Lake reserves. "Payment of such prices by Ontario Hydro for an Ontario resource could mean unreasonable profits for the mining companies at the expense of electricity consumers in the province. In the case of Denison there are outside indications of a willingness to sell out. If this is a fact, Ontario Hydro could obtain one of the largest known uranium reserves, which would then be available on a cost-related basis with no market influence."

He concluded: "Acquisition of the Denison reserves is the key to Ontario Hydro's bargaining position now and in the future."

I suspect that on this matter alone, the ideology of the present Treasurer of Ontario may well have cost Ontario's taxpayers well over $2 billion.

Mr. Foulds: Shameful.

Mr. Cassidy: As the Minister of Energy, he told Hydro: "There has to be a better way than simply buying a mine." And the die inexorably was cast.

So uninterested was the government in the alternative of acquiring Denison's assets that the Project Wellesley report, which also urged Hydro to expropriate Denison or buy its shares, was put on the shelf for 16 months before its contents were even communicated to the then Minister of Energy, the present Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell); and the document itself wasn't examined by the next Minister of Energy (Mr. J. A. Taylor) until it had been called for by the select committee of this Legislature in January of this year.

Why did the government ignore the weight of evidence which suggested acquisition of the Elliot Lake uranium reserves to be the best course? The Minister of Energy from Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor)—there's quite a cast of characters there, and he was another in that disastrous succession of those who have held this office—explained that "the acquisition of shares of a uranium company was rejected as not being compatible with this government's political philosophy."

If that is the case, one wonders whether even the ownership of Ontario Hydro is compatible with this government's political philosophy.

Adam Beck must be thrashing around in his grave right now, for his great motto of "power at cost" has been translated into "power at cost-plus" under the Conservative government of the member for Brampton (Mr. Davis).

The contracts with Denison Mines and Preston Mines are a decided second best that have been imposed upon Hydro by government policy, and not at Hydro's wishes.

Mr. MacDonald: They are destroying Ontario's tradition of power at cost.

Mr. Cassidy: The New Democratic Party is absolutely persuaded that these contracts are not in the public interest of Ontario. Unlike the Liberal Party, we intend to set this issue before the people of Ontario in terms of an alternative to signing the contracts, namely the purchase of Denison Mines or the acquisition of its uranium assets.

What is at stake, Mr. Speaker, is a windfall profit of $1.6 billion minimum, and probably far more.

Mr. Breithaupt: Tell us how it can be done.

Mr. Cassidy: I am not even sure one should call it a profit. Certainly the fathers of liberal capitalist economics would not have recognized it as such.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Like Saskatchewan.

Mr. Cassidy: I took the pains yesterday to consult the great British economist, John Stuart Mill, looking at his seminal work, Principles of Political Economy. I happen to have it here and I recommend it for everybody's consideration.

Mr. Lewis: Absolutely.

Mr. Cassidy: He said on page 406 of this edition, which I got from the Legislative Library and which I might say was last consulted in 1955—

Mr. Breithaupt: By whom? Probably the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. Lewis: By a Liberal, and they haven't moved in the intervening 23 years.

Mr. McClellan: Probably Wintermeyer.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Some of us have our own copies.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: "Profits," he said, "must afford a sufficient equivalent for abstinence, indemnity for risk and remuneration for the labour and skill of superintendence." If I could translate that into more modern language, by abstinence Mill simply meant the return on invested capital. But under this contract Hydro will be putting up the capital, more than $176 million, for the development of the Denison mine and, as the capital is interest free, no return on capital is warranted. By superintendence Mill meant management skills. But these management skills are handsomely rewarded already because all management expenses in connection with this particular deal are built into the base price of uranium for the cost-plus contract before any profit is even allowed. As for indemnity for risk, I have to ask what conceivable risk is left in this contract if it is signed next Tuesday between the government and Denison Mines.

Denison is using publicly-owned uranium which is not going to go away. It is selling to a Crown corporation whose credit and whose word are as good as that of the province of Ontario. Denison has locked up its capital advances from Hydro so that it doesn't need the risk, the insecurity of having to go to the bank, and the deal will last until the mine's resources are completely exhausted.

There is absolutely no risk entailed. There are no costs entailed for superintendence or management; and no return on capital is needed because the capital for this particular capitalist enterprise is being provided for free. In other words, this is a pure windfall, which is utterly without justification in terms of the classical doctrine of risk, uncertainty and management to which the Treasurer and his colleagues so readily and so frequently appeal in their ritual hymns of praise for private business and for free enterprise.

Mr. S. Smith: There is also some capital which Denison has there now.

Mr. Cassidy: And free enterprise this is not.

Ms. Gigantes: That's right.

Mr. Breithaupt: Call it rewarding their friends.

Mr. Cassidy: They are rewarding friends. As the Premier talks about his good friend Stephen Roman, it makes it very difficult for us to understand what is happening over there. We in the New Democratic Party will ensure that the people of Ontario know who is to blame for the staggering price which this contract will impose upon all users of electricity and how it will damage an economy already reeling from successive cost hikes imposed by federal oil policies.

If I could elaborate on that for a bit; in dollar terms this deal means at least an extra dollar a week on a Hydro bill for every family in Ontario over the 35 years in which these two contracts are going to take place.

Ms. Gigantes: Shame.

Mr. Cassidy: In economic terms, it means that we lose the opportunity of having cheap electricity which could give a major and significant cost advantage to our industry in competing for the markets, both within Ontario and around the world, over the course of the next 30 years. We've given up that advantage because of the Treasurer's decision and the Premier's decision to reward their friends in the private sector.

Ms. Gigantes: Change your minds; there is still time.

Mr. Cassidy: There is still time. Just let me add a couple of notes to show how handsomely the Davis-McKeough kind of private enterprise is rewarded in Ontario. That $5 a pound guaranteed profit in the Denison contract has already escalated to $5.83 a pound, and this year it will go up by more than the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines, because it is keyed to the cost of living and not to the AIB limits. At a modest five per cent rate of inflation that guaranteed profit will have risen to more than $27.50 a pound by the end of the contract, no matter what happens to the world price. That is apart from any additional escalations that may be coming as a result of higher world prices.

As a sweetener, Denison will be given 50 cents a pound to cover the cost of future explorations, even though there is no guarantee that this money will be invested in Canada. That happens to add a cool $63 million to its returns from the contract.

Even if this were a good contract, and we don't think it is, it beggars belief that after a decade in which International Nickel has quite obviously and deliberately funnelled $1.5 billion in profit from Sudbury and Thompson, Manitoba, into foreign manufacturing subsidiaries and foreign mines, Ontario has not even attempted to set conditions on where the minimum of $1.6 billion worth of profit that Denison stands to earn will be reinvested. Denison will be just as free to take those profits and those jobs abroad as International Nickel has been over the past decade, and we should not be allowing history to repeat itself as the government is allowing under the terms of this particular contract.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but I ask members of the House to listen to this figure carefully. It boggles the mind that the mineral lands which are generating these staggering profits return to the people of Ontario in rentals and mining fees the princely annual sum of $7,961.51. That is the total return. I'm glad for the 51 cents. It would have seemed rather inadequate if that hadn't been included. That is really quite incredible — $1.6 billion profit minimum on the one hand; $7,000 and change on the other; not even enough to pay the gasoline bill on the Premier's limousine. What is there left to say?

Hydro concluded in Project Wellesley that it was economically feasible in 1975 to acquire Denison Mines, and that was a high-level and very competent report. The research staff of the select committee has concluded that that acquisition is just as economically feasible today, in 1978, as it was three years ago. In other words, what the New Democratic Party proposes makes sound business sense, because it is actually cheaper to buy Denison now than it is to sign the contracts, and the profits from the contracts are at least twice as much as the price of acquiring Denison.

I want to reflect real concern at this point about what the Premier is so obviously planning to do. The Premier knows the positions of the two opposition parties, but he is using the technicality that the Liberal Party refused to join with the New Democrats and say that the contracts are not in the public interest. The Premier is using that technicality in order to evade—

Mr. Reid: Come on, that's not what happened.

Mr. Nixon: That is another little technicality. Our motion saying they were not in the public interest was rejected by you.

Mr. Cassidy: The Liberal Party refused to join with the New Democrats and say that the contract was not in the public interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, you are provoked.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Your point?

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, considering the importance that the Premier not miscalculate and not in any way misunderstand what the opinion of that committee is, let me set the record straight. The committee had a number of motions put before it, the first motion being from a Liberal member—as I recall, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed)—saying clearly that these contracts were not in the public interest and declaring a series of reasons.

Mr. Foulds: Fatuous and inadequate.

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) then—

Mr. MacDonald: That's incorrect, Stuart. The first motion was from the government side.

Mr. Nixon: Saying that they were.

Mr. S. Smith: Saying that they were in the public interest. That motion was defeated with the seven opposition members voting against the six government representatives. Then there came a motion from the Liberal Party which said clearly that these contracts were not in the public interest and stated a series of reasons for that belief. There then came an amendment from the hon. member for Port Arthur—

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, that's right.

Mr. S. Smith: —accepting the part of the motion which said it was not in the public interest—

Ms. Gigantes: The substance of the motion.

Mr. S. Smith: —but striking out the reasons—

Mr. Davison: Is this a point of privilege or a speech?

Mr. S. Smith: —as the reasons were objectionable to that member. The amendment was defeated. However, the motion itself then was also defeated.

Ms. Gigantes: No, it wasn't.

Mr. S. Smith: Then another motion was presented by the New Democratic member which again said the contracts were not in the public interest and asked for the resource to be nationalized now. That was also defeated.

It is absolutely clear, as the letter from the Chairman makes clear to the Premier, that both parties believe that these contracts are not in the public interest, and therefore it is not only dangerous for the Premier to assume, as he might by listening to the speech by the member for Ottawa Centre, that there is one party that doesn't believe that—it is very dangerous—it would be wrong, and I feel that my privileges as a member have been breached in this way because of the fact that the member for Ottawa Centre has implied—

Ms. Gigantes: Blame the federal government. It's all you are capable of.

[11:45]

Mr. S. Smith: —that the Liberal Party has in any way refused to declare that these contracts are not in the public interest. We declared it clearly in our motion and we declared it again yesterday in my remarks before this House.

Mr. Mackenzie: Say whether you are going to act or just talk.

Mr. Foulds: I thought you had a point of order, not a speech.

Mr. Cassidy: It is interesting how much time the Leader of the Opposition is prepared to spend on this. He spent yesterday clarifying his position on the official languages and today his is clarifying his position on the question of uranium.

Mr. S. Smith: If you are irresponsible enough to misrepresent it, then we have to clarify it.

Mr. Cassidy: It seems that the Leader of the Opposition is provoked. The best way to describe him is all puff and no stuff. I just want to point out for the record that there was an opportunity for a majority report from the committee to go before the government to say that this contract was not in the public interest. There was one opportunity when we offered an amendment that allowed the two opposition parties to say together that the contract was not in the public interest. There was second opportunity when the Liberal Party could have offered an amendment to the NDP motion that would have stripped it down to say that this contract was not in the public interest. Both opportunities were not taken up by the Liberal Party because they were not prepared to carry through.

Mr. Nixon: You scuttled it.

Mr. Cassidy: If it had not been for the political pressure—

Mr. S. Smith: Now you are mind reading.

Mr. Cassidy:—if it had not been the political desire of the Leader of the Opposition to have something different to say from the Conservatives, if it had not been for that the members of his party who were on that committee would have gone along and endorsed those contracts.

Mr. S. Smith: That is a total fabrication.

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to ask the member for Hamilton West to withdraw that last remark. It is unparliamentary.

Mr. S. Smith: Speaking to the point of order, if the member for Ottawa Centre can prove that any member of that committee had the intention, which he ascribes to them by his marvellous ability to read their minds, that they were preparing to vote for those contracts, if he can prove in any way that that was the case, then I will withdraw my remarks and leave the chamber.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is no point of order. I would ask the member for Ottawa Centre to continue.

Mr. Cassidy: I just have one final question to raise, Mr. Speaker. If the Leader of the Opposition had had confidence in his members on that committee then he would not have constantly been in that committee in order to ensure that they were toeing the line. I want to continue my speech.

Mr. Foulds: A serious allegation has been made in this House, Mr. Speaker. The member for Hamilton West has used the words "total fabrication" with regard to the remarks of the leader of this party.

Mr. Nixon: Which is correct.

Mr. Foulds: I put to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is unparliamentary and that a member of this House has been ejected for that. The Speaker of this House has ejected three members of the New Democratic Party when such accusations were made and were not withdrawn.

Mr. Reid: And properly so.

Mr. Foulds: I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of the Liberal Party withdraws his remarks or be asked to leave the House.

Mr. Mackenzie: He has not got the guts to stay and face it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ruled earlier that the member for Port Arthur had no point of order. I would ask the member for Ottawa Centre to continue.

Mr. Cassidy: I regret that decision, Mr. Speaker, but will abide by it. It is clear that the Premier is prepared to go ahead and sign these contracts. I say through you to the Premier, that on the Premier's head be that decision—because we will not give up this fight on February 28. We will go across the province and say how the Conservatives have indulged in the biggest sellout of natural resources in Ontario's history.

Mr. Sweeney: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Cassidy: I've already said that.

The third major issue which will concern us in this session is the one of national unity. No one would disagree when the Throne Speech says that it is well "within the capacity of this Legislature to exert a positive influence throughout Ontario and the nation as a whole to build and strengthen our future." What dismays me is that this government has increasingly failed to provide the leadership that Canada should expect from Ontario, to the point where I am not even sure that it is any longer within their capacity to give that kind of leadership.

Last November I heard the Premier deliver Ontario's brief to the Task Force on Canadian Unity. It was a bitter disappointment. What disturbed me was the cold, uninterested attitude which the Premier seemed to display on a question which is so essential to our future.

I looked for passion and for courage, for a sense of understanding, for sympathy and warmth, for what is happening among French Canadians in Quebec and in Canada. Instead I heard nothing but the dry words about constitutional realignment and economic restructuring which are echoed in this week's Throne Speech.

The Premier should have spoken for us all in Ontario, but he was not capable of rising to the occasion. The New Democrats in Ontario are prepared to be flexible on the constitutional question, and our commitment to use the powers of government as well as the private sector in rebuilding the economy of all parts of this country as well as this province are well known. The question we have to confront goes far deeper, and it is a question of attitude which doesn't just touch alienated residents of the province of Quebec. We face a cultural and economic dilemma in this country which also affects angry Westerners, deprived Maritimers, forgotten Franco-Ontarians, and immigrants who feel they are caught in the middle.

The election of René Lévesque 15 months ago simply brought our concerns about the future of Canada to a head.

Les néo-démocrates croient fermement que les aspirations du Canada français en général et du Québec en particulier peuvent et doivent être réalisées à l'intérieur de la Confédération canadienne. En effet, il est clair que l'épanouissement culturel du Canada français et du Canada anglais ne peut être assuré que si les deux peuples fondateurs font face ensemble à l'influence américaine.

Nous croyons que le Parti Québécois fait fausse-route en tâchant d'abord de séparer le Québec du Canada pour ensuite tenter de négocier une nouvelle association économique.

We New Democrats believe that the aspirations of French Canada and of Quebec in particular must be recognized and can be realized within Confederation. In fact with American influences crowding across our border, the chances of cultural survival, both for French and English Canada, are much greater if we stand together than if we drift apart. That is why we believe that the Parti Québécois is on the wrong track when they seek to separate from Canada and then set up some sort of economic association.

However we must also seek to understand what has gone wrong in the relationship between our two great founding peoples. French culture in Quebec may seem strong to us, but there is still an enormous insecurity in Quebec that flows from English economic domination. French-Canadian language and culture have survived in our history, but they have survived against enormous odds.

Mr. Cunningham: Parlez anglais tout le temps.

Mr. Cassidy: Franco-Ontarians and Franco-Manitobans remember with bitterness the way that insensitive governments denied them their language rights in education and in other fields. What is at stake is how we can somehow break the pattern of linguistic and of economic domination which has marked our history, and how we can move into a true partnership between the two great founding groups in this nation. And it is in that context, the context of national unity, that the status of French is different from the status of all the other languages that have been brought to Canada by peoples from almost every country in the world.

Canada is a country with two official languages and no official culture, and the recognition of French which we in the New Democratic Party are calling for must be seen as complementing the multicultural complexity and diversity which has developed in this province in the last 30 years. I say that because I understand that people from ethnic communities find it difficult to accept the preoccupation of so many Canadians with Quebec and with French.

Some simple truths need to be recognized when we come to deal with the future of this country. One is that the gulf between our province and Quebec is so much one of comprehension and of contact. My riding borders on the province of Quebec, yet even in Ottawa the two solitudes of our nations are embarrassingly present.

No one questions that the majority language and culture in this province is English, yet the same cannot be said for French in Quebec. That uncertainty helps to explain why Quebeckers, who are as far apart as Robert Bourassa and René Lévesque, could bring in language legislation which so many anglophones find repugnant. If there is to be a future for Confederation, we in Ontario must accept, and must be seen to accept, the fact that the majority language and culture in Quebec is French just as they accept that Ontario will be English.

The current pressures on the anglophone community in Quebec must not obscure the fact that Franco-Ontarians still have a long way to go ever to approach the rights that have been traditional for Anglo-Quebeckers. Our record in serving Franco-Ontarians and providing services for Franco-Ontarians in this province is not as bad as it is sometimes painted in Quebec. But we are not getting that message across, and a great deal of the blame must go on the Premier, on this government and on the constantly grudging attitude with which they have moved on the question of Franco-Ontarian rights.

Even though it was supposedly not an issue, the Premier came out of the last election in Ontario with enormous credibility on the issue of national unity. He had posed as the saviour of Confederation and people were prepared to see him in that role. That opportunity has been frittered away.

If Ontario wants to be understood in Quebec, our voice has to be heard—and the Premier has been almost mute. The Premier of Ontario can get public attention whenever and wherever he wants, but he has contented himself with visits to the winter carnival while his Minister of Industry and Tourism encouraged Sun Life to pull up its roots without even waiting to see how the new language legislation in Quebec will work. That's the kind of dealings that they've had, and it's simply not good enough.

That brings me to the question of French-language rights in this province on which the debate in Ontario this year inevitably is going to centre. The Throne Speech was remarkably defensive, as was the Leader of the Opposition, when it came to the question of French-language services. The reason was the Premier's adamant refusal to take the important formal step of making French an official language in this province. No other single act has done more to undermine Ontario's credibility in its effort to help keep Canada together.

Already there are destructive consequences from the Premier's position—not just angry editorials in Quebec and front-page headlines, but clear signs that the Liberal leader in this province is running for cover. The Premier has started to propound myths that are totally untrue in an effort to defend an indefensible position.

Making French an official language in this province does not require anything like the federal bilingualism program. To suggest that, as the Premier has done and as the Minister of the Environment has done as well, is to feed the forces of division which are already threatening to tear our country apart.

The New Democratic Party of Ontario adopted the policy of making French an official language in the province back in 1969. We didn't make a great song and dance about it because it seemed the natural thing to do, and it still does so today. As members of this House know, I have consistently fought for Franco-Ontarian rights and services which are only now being promised in the Throne Speech.

We welcome the promises of the government and we will do our best to support their initiatives. We welcome the change of heart by which, after rejecting some $500,000 in federal funds that was offered for the translation of our statutes over the past few years, Ontario now has decided to publish our laws in French.

As a party, however, we are still looking for legislative and not administrative protection for the right of Franco-Ontarians to services in health, in education, in the courts and in all government services so that they can have service in their own language wherever their numbers specify it. To make French an official language is quite simply a part of that approach. It is enormously important as a guarantee of survival to Franco-Ontarians as well as a sign of good faith to the rest of Canada and of our good faith and our commitment in keeping this country together.

And given the commitment to services in French which is contained in the Throne Speech, to make French an official language is a step whose additional costs are insignificant.

[12:00]

Last year, I made some modest suggestions in the Throne Speech debate and which I want to repeat here. One is that we must find every way possible for the citizens of this province to make contact and to reach out to their counterparts in French Canada. I would like to see school classes along the Ottawa River getting together in French and in English. I think that trade unionists and hardware merchants and ministers and priests and housewives and people like that—every individual and group who have things in common should be encouraged by every means possible to visit and make contact between our two provinces.

I think the suggestion that I made last year to take some of our Wintario funds to provide high school students in this province with the chance to go on exchange visits to Quebec and to welcome a Quebec student in return some time during their high school years is an excellent proposal and should be pursued.

I also submitted last year, and I want to repeat again, that it is not enough in this Legislature that only the party leaders are involved in the question of national unity. The future of our country is at stake and all of us in this House should be involved in some way.

Isn't it strange that this House has not had a single debate on Confederation since the election of the Parti Quebecois some 15 months ago? We have had some speeches of course. There was even the suggestion that a debate be held, but no debate has been held, no meaningful focus has been found for this Legislature to talk about the question of national unity.

I think this summer we should seek that focus. We should take one of our standing committees or we should appoint a select committee on Confederation and give it the task of travelling through Ontario and Quebec, of finding out what's happening and of working out the approaches that this province ought to take.

Both my caucus and I personally are committed to doing what we can to increase our understanding and make a contribution to the national unity discussion in this province. We do so in part because of the failure of this government to provide the leadership that Ontario so obviously needs. I am glad that the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), the former leader of my party, has agreed to join with the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) so that these two senior members of my caucus can act as spokesmen as well as ambassadors on questions of national unity and federal-provincial relations.

We are also undertaking a series of visits to Quebec by caucus members, beginning the week of the school break in March, when we will seek to make contact with a wide variety of organizations and trade unions in Quebec, with individual citizens and associations, with people from the press as well as political figures from the major parties. I don't pretend that we will come back with answers from our first visit, but I intend to see that this contact continues on a regular basis and I think that will bring us increased understanding over time and that's sure what we need in this province right now.

There's a great deal that an opposition party can do in building bridges to Quebec and helping the cause of national unity, but there is so much more that Ontario could do if we had a government and a Premier that were prepared to provide leadership and to be heard on the questions of Canada's future.

Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that we in the New Democratic Party are approaching this session in good heart and eager for the task which lies before us—the task of unseating the Conservative government and providing a better alternative for the people of Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: We intend to focus in this session on the issues of the economy, the sell-out of our uranium resources and the government's failure to make a meaningful contribution to national unity. We deplore the government's failure to provide leadership in these areas, and in our opinion the Conservatives are no longer competent to govern Ontario.

This Throne Speech clearly demonstrates just how incapable the government is. Its proposals on the economy are so vague and so meaningless that even Jonathan Manthorpe is offended. The people of this province want leadership and are entitled to receive it in the battle to create jobs and rebuild the economy. I should say even Claire Hoy was offended, let alone Jonathan Manthorpe. The government's answer is to stand aside and pass the buck and that is not good enough for Ontario.

The people of Ontario are entitled to the assurance that the great principle of power at cost, which was the foundation of Ontario Hydro when it was created by Conservatives 70 years ago, should be adhered to now that Ontario is in the nuclear age. We condemn the government for putting the financial interests of their friends in the mining industry ahead of the interests of the people of this province.

This province has a vital role to play in Canada as one of the cornerstones of Confederation and we condemn the government for failing to provide leadership on the national scene and for failing to settle, once and for all, the legitimate grievances of our 600,000 Franco-Ontarians.

Consecutive governments have seemed adept at running this province when times seemed good, but when times are bad and the country is in crisis, the Conservative government of William Davis and Darcy McKeough is no longer up to the job.

Mr. Lewis: And Bob Welch.

Mr. Cassidy: And Bob Welch—I was going to say that.

Mr. Lewis: Especially Bob Welch. That precious little fellow must be included.

Mr. Cassidy: For all these reasons, I wish to move an amendment to the motion.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Mr. Cassidy moves that the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session be amended by the addition of the following words:

"That this House regrets the failure of the government to provide leadership in rebuilding Ontario's economy and finding jobs for the province's 316,000 unemployed, its failure to bring Ontario's uranium resources into public ownership and therefore needlessly forcing the people of Ontario to pay billions of dollars in windfall profits to the mining industry, and its failure to provide leadership on the question of national unity and Franco-Ontarian rights, and therefore no longer has confidence in this government."

Is there a seconder to this motion?

Mr. Lewis: I second the motion.

Mr. Sweeney: Where are Deans and Breaugh?

On motion by Mr. Kennedy, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 12:08 p.m.

CONTENTS

Friday, February 24, 1978

Construction industry bargaining, statement by B. Stephenson	89
Condominium legislation, questions of Mr. Grossman: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Breithaupt, Mr. Philip	90
Health records, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. S. Smith	91
Glendale training centre, questions of Mr. Drea: Mr. Nixon, Mr. Makarchuk, Mr. Worton, Mr. Ziembra, Mr. G. I. Miller	92
Multicultural TV station, questions of Mr. Welch: Mr. Smith	94
Onakawana lignite deposits, questions of Mr. Bernier: Mr. Cassidy	94
Income tax discounts, questions of Mr. Grossman: Mr. Davison	94
Tourism advertising, questions of Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Kerrio, Mr. Makarchuk	95
Waste disposal, questions of Mr. McCague: Ms. Bryden, Mr. G. I. Miller, Mr. Makarchuk	96
OHIP claims procedure, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Conway	96
Minimum wage, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Lewis	97
Registration of nurses, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Gaunt, Mr. Sweeney	98
Waste disposal, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Swart, Mr. Kerrio	99
Nanticoke plant, questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. Reed, Mr. Germa	100
Workmen's compensation, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. McClellan, Mr. S. Smith	101
Teachers' superannuation fund, question of Mr. Wells: Mr. Van Horne	101
Presenting petition by church congregation members re minimum drinking age, Mr. Van Horne	102
Report, electrical power systems inquiry, B. Stephenson	102
Throne Speech debate, continued, Mr. Cassidy	102
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Kennedy, agreed to	113
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Welch, agreed to	113

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Baetz, Hon. R. C.; Minister of Energy (Ottawa West PC)
 Bernier, Hon. L.; Minister of Northern Affairs (Kenora PC)
 Blundy, P. (Sarnia L)
 Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
 Bryden, M. (Beaches-Woodbine NDP)
 Campbell, M. (St. George L)
 Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
 Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
 Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
 Davison, M. (Hamilton Centre NDP)
 Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
 Drea, Hon. F.; Minister of Correctional Services (Scarborough Centre PC)
 Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
 Edighoffer, H.; Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
 Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
 Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
 Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
 Gigantes, E. (Carleton East NDP)
 Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations
 (St. Andrew-St. Patrick PC)
 Haggerty, R. (Erie L)
 Havrot, E. (Timiskaming PC)
 Hodgson, W. (York North PC)
 Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General (Burlington South PC)
 Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
 Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
 MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
 Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
 Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
 Mancini, R. (Essex South L)
 McCague, Hon. G.; Minister of the Environment (Dufferin Simcoe PC)
 McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
 McMurtry, Hon. R.; Attorney General (Eglinton PC)
 Miller, G. I. (Haldimand-Norfolk L)
 Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
 Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
 Norton, Hon. K.; Minister of Community and Social Services (Kingston and the Islands PC)
 Philip, E. (Etobicoke NDP)
 Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
 Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
 Renwick, J. A. (Riverdale NDP)
 Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
 Rotenberg D.; Acting Speaker (Wilson Heights PC)
 Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
 Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)
 Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
 Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
 Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
 Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)
 Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)
 Timbrell, Hon. D. R.; Minister of Health (Don Mills PC)
 Van Horne, R. (London North L)
 Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)
 Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)
 Wells, Hon. T. L.; Minister of Education (Scarborough North PC)
 Worton, H. (Wellington South L)
 Ziemba, E. (High Park-Swansea NDP)

No. 5

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament
Monday, February 27, 1978

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the statement which I issued on the occasion of the premiers' conference in Montreal on minority language rights last week, as well as the final communique of that conference. This conference was held to follow up on the discussion on minority language rights which took place at the annual conference of provincial premiers at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea in New Brunswick last August.

Last week we reviewed a report on the state of minority language education in the 10 provinces of Canada which the premiers had commissioned from the Council of Ministers of Education. I am also tabling a copy of that report. The report shows clearly the progress that has taken place in recent years in the provision of schooling facilities in official language minorities, particularly in Ontario and New Brunswick.

At our meeting last week the premiers took one step beyond the agreement of St. Andrews. There was complete agreement on the principle that each child of a French-speaking or English-speaking minority is entitled to an education in his or her language in the primary or the secondary schools in each province wherever numbers warrant. We were unable to agree on specific criteria that would apply equally across the country regarding the numbers required to make the establishment of minority classes mandatory, and so this definition was left up to individual provinces.

Nevertheless, I am convinced that the meeting of last week has resulted in all of the premiers being much more aware of what has been happening in other provinces and will provide the spark for additional measures to be taken this coming year. Members of this House should take the results of this meeting as yet a further indication that the government of Ontario will continue to work towards the improvement of minority language facilities in our own province.

OECA AWARDS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to inform the hon. members that the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, an agency of my ministry, has been officially notified by the Ohio State awards committee that they are the recipients of two prestigious Ohio State awards.

Mr. Cunningham: You mean like transportation man of the year?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Really outstanding awards. Very prestigious.

The first award is for a TV Ontario commissioned program entitled "Symphony" concerning the Thunder Bay Symphony Orchestra. It just shows you how objective they are—in Ohio.

The second award is for the OECA-CBC school radio program entitled "The Naturalist Notebook" with Arthur Black. This program won in the category of formal instruction for children and youth.

As the hon. members will be aware, the Ohio State awards have long been synonymous with educational broadcasting excellence and these awards will formally be presented to the OECA tonight at the banquet in Washington. If any of the hon. members would like to view the award-winning "Symphony" program, my ministry has made it available to the legislative library on quarter-inch video tape and I invite everyone to see first-hand the level of excellence which Ontario has now reached in the educational broadcasting field.

Mr. S. Smith: We can see it on the Buffalo channel.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Only if they pay.

An hon. member: That's not policy, is it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, that's not policy.

Mr. Foulds: Arthur Black is a resident of Thunder Bay.

SCIENCE AWARD

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I'm anxious that the hon. members would also share in the excitement which is ours in view of some news that has just come to my attention. The director-general of the Ontario Science Centre in Toronto, J. Tuzo Wilson, the Canadian geophysicist who has spent a lifetime piecing together the earth's jigsaw puzzle of shifting continents, has won Columbia University's 1978 Vetlesen prize, the premier award in the earth sciences, and that's just been announced. I'm sure we share in that particular thought as well.

VISITOR

Mr. S. Smith: Before I address a question, Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to a prominent visitor in your gallery? He is Mr. Freeman White, a member of the House of Assembly of Newfoundland and Labrador, if he might rise.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. S. Smith: I had hoped to address a question to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), but I'll address it to the Premier. It has to do with this matter of confidential information from the health system which apparently has found its way into the hands of the RCMP. I was wondering if the Premier has by now familiarized himself with whatever information is available and whether he is in a position to explain to the House how it is that such information apparently did get to the RCMP, despite the statement made in the House by the Attorney General that all information was simply bare-bones biographical information, including only address, date of birth and employer. That statement was given to the House on November 25. Would the Premier care to comment on where the matter stands?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to discuss it with the Attorney General. I believe he will be here later on. If he is not, I will make sure that he knows of the question so that tomorrow afternoon he or I can give the Leader of the Opposition an answer.

BARRIE ANNEXATION PROPOSAL

Mr. S. Smith: A question again to the Premier in the absence of the Treasurer: Can the Premier tell us what the position of the government is on the matter of the Barrie annexation proposals? I ask this question in view of the recent Ontario divisional court ruling that nullified the OMB decision based on the fact that the minister—the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in this instance—had given an opinion of so-called government policy and, according to the court, had in this way exerted an influence beyond what the court thought to be the case.

Can the Premier tell us two things: first, what will the policy be about the Treasurer's interventions in the future, and secondly and most importantly, exactly what population target, for that area, represents government policy at this time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, without disagreeing, because I was not involved in the discussions before the divisional court, I think it is fair to state that ministers of the Crown do have a responsibility to make policy statements and I think that the decision of the divisional court was an important decision. We—or maybe the municipality—are presently contemplating the question of the decision of the court itself—not as it relates to Barrie because that is one part of it only—but whether this is something that should be clarified with an appeal to a higher court as it relates to a matter of principle; not, as I say, as it relates directly to Barrie.

With respect to the second part of the question, I shall ask the Treasurer if we have a specific population figure. I think it is obvious that in the planning stages certain figures are suggested. I think it is also obvious that with the apparent slowdown in growth generally, throughout this province and throughout the country, that some population figures suggested four or five years ago may not be as accurate as they were at that time. So while, I guess, we could debate in the House whether that figure should be 100,000 or 75,000, I think it is still obvious that the government policy is that Barrie is to be, or should be, a growth area. The specific size is important, I think, but not as relevant as the acceptance of the fact that Barrie, in our view, should be a growth community.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, accepting what the Premier has said without any difference of opinion at all and not limiting in any way any possible appeal that the government or others may wish to launch, would the Premier agree with me that since one of the major matters in question at these hearings was the degree to which the Simcoe-Georgian task force report has been accepted, so as to constitute in whole or in part government policy, and as that is a very important consideration, would the Premier—if he does agree with me on that—be willing at some point to issue a statement or have the Treasurer issue a statement as to what parts of that task force report are still presently government policy and what amendments or changes from the report the government views as policy, so that we can eventually have a resolution of this matter without people constantly arguing back and forth about the different population figures and so on?

[2:15]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be possible to have some redefinition of the report. I think the Leader of the Opposition is somewhat optimistic that this will necessarily diminish in total any debates that may take place within those local communities. I just recall for his own memory the TCR where government policy was enunciated I think in 1969 or 1970—the exact date escapes me—where in some communities, some that I know very well, there is still some debate as to the population densities and the rate of growth. This applies as well to Mississauga and a number of other communities.

I think that one must keep in mind that these planning documents are published in advance, which I think is important. Potential growth that takes place and the possibility of these figures being altered, either upwards or downwards as the case may be, is something the government must always be open to consider.

If the Leader of the Opposition is asking for some updating of the way we see the Georgian Bay area—the figures that might be involved—I think that that would be possible for the government to do. I will discuss it with the Treasurer.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary to the Premier: Since it is the responsibility of the OMB as a quasi-judicial body not to make policy but rather to interpret and apply policy, while it may be appropriate for the provincial Treasurer to intervene to clarify what the stated policy happened to be, even though it is mistaken, is it not the responsibility of the OMB to reconcile one government with another—namely, whether or not you should gobble up 20,000 acres of prime agricultural land when there is another stated policy that agricultural land should be protected?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think—and I am not familiar with each acre that was under consideration—that a good part of the agricultural area in that very important part of the province was in fact protected and would be protected under the policies of the government. I think really it would be difficult for the Ontario Municipal Board in terms of its responsibilities to make some of the judgements that the member is suggesting. I am not saying that that should not be part of their considerations, but I think that really their function is primarily—and I say primarily; I don't say the other is not part of it—but primarily, is to determine the extent of the acquisition in this particular case.

I don't think there is anything to preclude the Ontario Municipal Board from saying, as they have done on a number of occasions, rather than this particular 500 acres it should be some other 500 acres, as long as it was meeting the request made by the annexing municipality. I think, Mr. Speaker, that nothing in government policy has ever precluded the Ontario Municipal Board from that type of judgement.

Mr. MacDonald: A brief supplementary if I might, Mr. Speaker: In keeping with the Leader of the Opposition, would the Premier give a commitment that somebody on behalf of the government would give an up-to-date statement of what government policy is in connection with that proposed annexation and provide an opportunity in the House to debate it, so that we can all be aware of it in its full scope, rather than have all these uncertainties?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think that would depend on the course of action taken by the government. If—and I think it is a possibility and, as I say, not just related to Barrie because I think the divisional court had some general statement about policy as it relates to the functioning of the board—if that matter is under appeal, I think a debate in this House would be probably premature until such an appeal were determined.

Mr. MacDonald: I was talking about the policy, not the procedure.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the member would like to debate on whether or not this House feels that Barrie should be “a growth centre,” I think that is something to which the member might wish to address his remarks on the Throne Speech or on some other appropriate occasion. To get into a detailed debate on Barrie or the whole Georgian Bay area prior to the determination, if there is to be one, by the courts—and I expect the government may decide to go that route, as a matter of fact—I think would be premature.

Certainly if the hon. member has some views on that particular annexation, the Throne Speech debate might be an excellent opportunity for the rest of the House to learn what his views are, although I think I know already.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. Cassidy: A question to the Premier: In view of the fact that the proposed contract with Denison Mines would extract a windfall profit of a bare minimum of $1.6 billion from the taxpayers and hydro consumers of this province, and in view of the fact that the Premier has now received a letter from the chairman of the select committee on Hydro stating that the majority of the committee felt that they were unable to confirm that approving the contracts is in the best public interest, can the Premier say whether the government intends to heed the view taken by this majority of the select committee and reject the proposed contracts?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, I can't.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier elaborate on that very terse reply and, in particular, say whether the government is also prepared to heed the advice of such well-known people on its side in the past as George Gathercole, people from Consolidated Edison and the Hydro management generally, that it is in the public interest that the uranium assets of Denison Mines or Denison Mines itself be brought into public ownership in order to protect the interests of the people of this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the one part of that question I can answer is the government has and will continue always to do its best to protect the public interest.

Mr. Laughren: Show us how.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact there was a decided difference between that side of the House and between the other parties in this House as to what the public interest entails, and in view of the fact the cabinet is apparently meeting to discuss this question this afternoon, and in view of the fact there is a deadline of tomorrow on the signing of the contract, is there any extension of the proposed deadline in view and can the Premier give a commitment that the contract will not be signed until the opportunity for an emergency debate on this contract is afforded to this House tomorrow afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course, Mr. Speaker, this could all have been solved if the new leader of the New Democratic Party had been up before noon today and had given notice.

Mr. Cassidy: That was a cheap shot and you know it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Just as cheap as some of yours.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recognize that he has a lot of responsibilities and 12 o'clock does come early, so I won't comment any further. I would only say to the member opposite—

Mr. Conway: You were up watching your wife on television. She said some nice things about you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I didn't have a chance to watch it. How was it? Was it all right? She was very nervous about it.

Mr. Conway: She was talking about retirement.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell the hon. member there is no possibility of an extension beyond midnight tomorrow night. Cabinet is meeting today. In case the leader of the New Democratic Party is getting nervous, the cabinet meeting was not called for this particular purpose at all. It happens that we sat last Wednesday afternoon, I had to leave to go to Montreal and, as a result, we didn't get our full agenda covered. So I don't expect there will be time, in the limited period this afternoon, to make a final decision on that matter. What the leader proposes to do tomorrow afternoon is totally within his control. As I say, he could have done it this afternoon.

I just want to make it very clear that the whole intent of this government was to have this contract well discussed publicly by members of the select committee, and everything that was available made known to members of the House and members of the public. While I know the leader of the New Democratic Party would like an opportunity to restate once again what some of his members felt, even though they were stated many times in the committee itself, and that he himself would like to have one further opportunity, that's a decision that he will have to make by noon tomorrow, I guess.

Mr. Cassidy: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the Premier give a clear answer as to whether he is at least prepared, on behalf of his government, to listen to what may be said in an emergency debate tomorrow afternoon from the Legislature as a whole and not just the members of the select committee, before the cabinet goes ahead and gives its authorization to signing or not signing this particular contract? Has he that much respect for this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm always prepared to have any constructive advice from all members of this House. If the leader of the New Democratic Party is saying he has some new and enlightened views—

Mr. Warner: The Premier wants to check with Stephen Roman.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—that he would wish to present to us that already have not been expressed, I feel very badly that he hasn't done so. I would assume he has said just about everything that can be said on this particular issue. In fact, I would say he has said everything that can be said on just about every issue, but if he is saying he has some new views, send them to me right away. Take a few minutes and scratch me some notes. I assume the members of his caucus, very able members, were expressing the views of his party. One thing I did learn from the select committee report is that while it was totally objective it did appear to break down on somewhat partisan lines, which perhaps should not have surprised me.

Mr. Martel: Not your members, Bill; not yours, though.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no—totally objective, totally objective.

Mr. Martel: That's right. Have you got a shovel?

Mr. Deans: I think the word is "objectionable," not "objective."

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I would suggest—I am quite serious in this—if the leader of the New Democratic Party has some ideas that were not part of the discussions, or weren't part of the chairman's lengthy report to me, if he would get them to me this afternoon, I certainly won't ignore them.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: Has there been any negotiation, shall we say, between the government and Mr. Roman as to an extension of time for the actual signing of the contract or is tomorrow it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would say, to use the member's own words, that tomorrow is it. There has been no extension, no negotiation for an extension.

Some hon. members: What are you going to do?

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, do I understand the Premier to say that, despite the committee's rejection of a motion to approve the contracts as being in the public interest, the government is intending to go ahead without even giving the opportunity which does still exist for this Legislature as a whole to debate the issue, and the cabinet is simply disregarding this Parliament in its intention to proceed with the contracts?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Nonsense.

Mr. Warner: Roman rules the roost.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this House sat last Wednesday. It sat Thursday. It sat Friday. The hon. member had until noon today and he neglected to bring any notice to the attention of the Speaker.

Mr. Deans: We were waiting to see what you were going to do.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Why?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is totally within the hon. member's responsibility that he has not got this motion this afternoon—

(Applause)

Mr. Warner: You sell out the province and they applaud it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought I had indicated to the leader of the New Democratic Party that cabinet was not called this afternoon to deal with this issue. I said that. Any suggestion on his part that we were going ahead and signing the contract without an opportunity for a debate is just totally erroneous. It doesn't surprise me but it's totally erroneous.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order. Mr. Speaker—

An hon. member: You bombed again, Mike.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing out of order.

Some hon. members: Sit down. Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing out of order. I have listened very patiently to the initial question and the four supplementaries that the member for Ottawa Centre has put to the Premier. You can ask your question in any way that's in keeping with the provisional orders or the standing orders. The Premier can answer it in any way he chooses within the rules of the House. There is nothing out of order. I will now hear your second question.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, if I may—

Mr. Speaker: What is it?

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you. The point of privilege is simply to draw to the Premier's attention that the matter was raised on Thursday—

Mr. Speaker: That's not a point of privilege.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Nor a point of rule.

ONAKAWANA LIGNITE DEPOSITS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources, who is now in the House and who was absent on Friday. Can the minister state who are the principals of Onakawana Development Limited, a company which has recently popped into public view as intending to develop the lignite deposits near James Bay; when it intends to begin its process of extracting the coal from that deposit and what guarantees there are about providing jobs for people in the region, in particular for native peoples, in that proposed project?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it's true I wasn't here on Friday.

Mr. Warner: Most of your colleagues were away too.

Mr. Reid: Ignore the cheap shots, Frank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I seldom am away but I happened to be looking at lignite operations on Friday; so I have learned more about this Onakawana project.

An hon. member: After you gave them a licence to mine.

Mr. Martel: It sounds like Wanapitei all over again. You might learn something about that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The principals of Onakawana Development Limited are Manalta Coal Company, and Manalta Coal Company is a Canadian-owned company. I believe it's wholly owned in turn by a company called Loram. Loram is owned by, I think, the Mannix family, principally in Alberta. They have been involved in the development work. I believe the hon. member has heard the name Manalta throughout the piece. This company was simply formed to be an Ontario company able to carry out that work here.

There are several phases through which the project is going. These phases will be, first, the work that progressed until about February 1 of this year, which basically I think was hydrological studies to tell them whether the soil was of a type that would allow easy extraction of the lignite. These I believe were quite positive. The second was to determine the qualities of the material. These, I understand, are good.

[2:30]

There are still a number of problems to determine whether the economics are good or not and whether in fact the lignite should be burned on site and made into electricity or sent out in some other form. The company is proceeding along those lines at the present time, and has certain dates by which it hopes to achieve each study's completion. I think everybody is pretty optimistic right now.

We have discussed the question of local employment, I would say, rather than native employment, because I hope there are opportunities not just for native peoples but for people in the general area of Cochrane and Moosonee. These, the company has assured us, will be given every priority in the hiring process. It is not one of the conditions of the lease, but it is one of the understandings of our agreement that there should be a priority given both to native peoples and local people in the hiring process.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister say whether an environmental assessment has been carried out on the Onakawana site, and if not, how does this particular granting of a lease fit in with the government's commitment to have projects north of 50 degrees reviewed by the Hartt commission?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I issued a statement some months ago on that, you may recall, when I stated that the exploratory licence was being granted. The lease was signed I think sometime in January. I can only say that the company agreed, and we announced, that a full environmental assessment would take place on that project. I understand the company and the Ministry of the Environment are working on the details of that. It appears that the exploration and the environmental assessment can probably proceed at the same time.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: I would like to ask the hon. minister if the agreement that has been signed would in any way preclude the development of the fire clay deposits which are immediate to that site, which if developed would provide another 25 jobs?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fire clays were of real interest to us in the whole operation. We certainly hope they can be developed and that they in fact will be used for various purposes in that area and create employment. The real issue is, would you have two people extracting in one pit? I think you will find that the lease requires that one operator extract both the overburdens and the coal for the simple practical purpose that it can only be done that way. But the clays would be made available to people who would like to use them.

PUSLINCH TOWNSHIP

Mr. Sweeney: A question to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Mr. Speaker: What action does the minister intend to take on the report submitted to him by Mr. T. W. McEachern with respect to the irregularities in Puslinch township?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I would like to refresh my memory on that, but I don't think any action on our part is required. I think the council has dealt with the matter.

Mr. Sweeney: Is the minister aware of the fact that the latest reported irregularity is that a building put up by the Ministry of Government Services, an agricultural building for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, was overcharged by $4,000 with respect to a building permit? What would the minister intend to do about that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would suspect that this has nothing to do particularly with irregularities by the staff: It would seem to me that question might be directed to the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) rather than to myself. But the answer to the question is, no, I am not aware of it.

Mr. Sweeney: A further supplementary: Is the minister aware that this particular irregularity was caused by a member of the staff completely contravening a bylaw of the township? That's part of the whole problem.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have already explained that I am not aware of the situation.

BOARDING HOUSE FIRE

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. In view of the death of six senior citizens in a boarding house fire in Chelmsford on the weekend, and in view of the fact that the boarding house had little or no fire or smoke or heat detection system, would the minister assure us that such boarding houses that accommodate senior citizens, many of whom are not particularly mobile, will be brought under the Homes for the Aged and Rest Homes Act in this province?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will be discussing that particular incident with the Ministry of Health and hopefully checking into why such a home was allowed to operate without a licence.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Does the minister have any idea at all how many senior citizens are housed in such accommodations across this province, and who is responsible for their safety? Would she stress very strongly to the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) or to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) that these people need to be protected, and that it requires provincial legislation that could be passed and supervised by the municipality in which the homes are located?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I can certainly assure the member that it will be investigated. We do appreciate the responsibility of ensuring that senior citizens have that kind of protection. As I'm sure the member knows, there are a great many programs for senior citizens in this province and it's rather difficult to ensure that every private home where senior citizens are housed is protected by this kind of fire protection. But we certainly will be looking into it.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: When the minister is looking at this would she also look into reports, which may or may not be factual, that there were a great number of beds available at a nearby home for senior citizens—in fact 20 or 30 beds were available—and that these citizens were living in this particular boarding arrangement for reasons unknown, but possibly related to financial criteria and difficulty in obtaining access to these empty beds? These reports may or may not be accurate, but would she be good enough to look into them and report to the House?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Yes, I will.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Did the minister understand that part of my question when I asked her if she had any idea how many people live in such accommodations in the province?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I thought I made that very clear. No, I don't have.

ONTARIO NORTHLAND RAIL SERVICE

Mr. G. E. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs. Since the decision to withdraw rail passenger service between Toronto and North Bay by the Ontario Northland Railway was taken before the Canadian Transport Commission agreed to underwrite the 80 per cent subsidy on operating deficits, will the Ontario Northland now reconsider restoring this service?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not aware that the CTC and the CNR have come to some agreement with regard to the subsidy. I think there was some passing of the ball in the backfield. There were some overtures that they would assist, but when it came down to the nitty-gritty, as many of the members of this House will know, as to getting any actual commitment the commitment was never forthcoming.

I indicated to the CNR that if they wanted to reinstate and use the Northlander service for the weekends—because they're using their conventional systems now—we would be willing to undertake that particular suggestion. But, at this point in time, I have not heard officially from the CTC that they are willing to accept that 80 per cent subsidy and at what price and what figure.

Mr. G. E. Smith: Supplementary: Assuming that they do accept and the Ontario Northland would then receive the same funding from the Transport Commission as the other two major carriers, will the minister consider re-assessing regular stops between Toronto and North Bay not only by the Northlander but the regular Ontario Northland rail service, keeping in mind that the public purse is subsidizing the operation and that Ontario Northland should be assessing where the maximum passenger usage is coming from? Would the minister assure me of that?

Mr. Foulds: Is the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) listening to this? He is exercising remarkable control.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I might say, further to this, we're looking at the overall transportation system in the northeastern Ontario corridor as it relates to rail passenger service, bus service and the excellent norOntario service that operates in the northeast Ontario corridor. The desire and the goal of the ONTC are to provide the service that the people of northern Ontario really want, need and should have. We're prepared to look at the suggestion that the hon. member has made with regard to additional stops on that route between here and North Bay.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Speaking of service on the Ontario Northland Railway and in line with the Premier's announcement of buying Canadian, I wonder could the minister tell us is he now serving Ontario wine on the Ontario Northland Railway or is he offering only French wine?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm not sure of that. I think I indicated publicly that we would make sure that Ontario wines would be served.

Mr. Eakins: Buy Canadian.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that was a supplementary, although one would have to stretch the imagination a good deal.

TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister aware of the fact that in December 1975 I raised a question with the Premier—and I think I have waited a reasonable length of time for the answer—as to the release of chlorine gas in Niagara Falls, New York, which killed some four people and hospitalized 80 people? In view of the fact that there have been three very serious accidents within the last week in which many people were killed when a tank car ruptured in the southern United States, I again raise the question—a very serious question—is the minister aware of the kinds of substances being transported over the Penn Central railway between Niagara Falls, Ontario, and Detroit, from that huge chemical centre to very densely populated areas in my riding? Is he aware of that kind of transportation of these chemicals?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I don't recall the question asked of the Premier in December 1975—

Mr. Kerrio: Would the minister like to look it up?

Hon. Mr. McCague:—but I am aware that there are chemicals being transported in that area. I presume the member would like them transported by some other route.

An hon. member: What have you got against the railroad?

Mr. Kerrio: Yes. My supplementary question would be: Is the minister aware of the types of substances and dangerous chemicals that are being railed over that route, and would he as an alternative see if he can re-route those kind of chemicals that could cause a disaster—particularly in the summer months when there are literally thousands of people involved in that area where the tracks go through?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it would be very difficult to find a route that suits everyone. I will be glad to look into the matter to see if there is anything that can be done.

Mr. Martel: By an Overlander.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Can the minister indicate at this time what emergency procedures or personnel he has available to take care of some accident that could happen on that railway?

Mr. Laughren: Send Lorne out.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, as the member probably knows, we are at every accident site very quickly. There is an emergency plan.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: Would the minister take action that would cause him to be on the scene before the accident occurs? That is my question.

Mr. Havrot: Great thinking over there.

Mr. Deans: I can't wait to hear the answer.

Mr. Kennedy: We need a clairvoyant minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Vince, you aren't even smiling.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can't hear the answer.

Mr. Deans: Speak loudly. I want to hear.

Hon. Mr. McCague: In the past two and a half years, I can think of a couple of very bad accidents that happened in Niagara.

Interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: Actually, one was in 1975.

Mr. Warner: The one that is here is the good one.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I mean in chemical terms.

Mr. Martel: Are you saying that in French or English?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, we will take this under consideration. They must be transported by some means or banned. It is very difficult to say that they won't be moved in those ways. I think we can probably do better than we have in the past, by warning all kinds of people of the hazards of various materials, and we are working towards an education program in those matters.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: As the railroad tracks that are generally used are the CPR tracks, because of the international railway tunnel, will the minister use his office to see that under no circumstance the tracks use the area that is referred to as the "Powell siding" in the city of Windsor because it happens to be a fairly well developed, fairly heavily populated area, and under no circumstance do the people in the city of Windsor want toxic and dangerous chemicals within 50 yards of their homes?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I will make a commitment to look into the matter. [2:45]

PCB HAZARD

Mr. Mackenzie: A question of the Minister of the Environment: Can the minister inform the House if employees of the Ferranti-Packard plant in St. Catharines are still repairing transformers containing a coolant containing PCBs? Would the minister inquire into the medical and WCB records of the employees present and past—including some who have since died—and report back to the House as to whether or not there were any effects from working with the PCB coolant?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I feel that question is more appropriately directed to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Deans: No. She doesn't know the answer either.

Mr. Martel: She is fuming though.

Mr. Mackenzie: I really thought it would be the Minister of the Environment, but I will redirect it to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Lewis: Good luck.

Mr. Mackenzie: Would she state as to whether or not the employees at Ferranti-Packard are working with this coolant in repairing the transformers?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that there were no transformers either being repaired or built in which PCBs were used. But I shall most certainly investigate to determine whether the workers in those plants are being exposed to PCBs, and will also investigate the medical records of those who have been in those plants and report.

MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. I listened with interest to his report on the premiers' conference last week, particularly discussing the rights of English minorities in French Canada and French minorities in English Canada. But I'm wondering if the premiers' conference discussed the rights of the one-third of Canadians who are neither English nor French—particularly the rights of those minorities whose mother tongues are neither English nor French—and the rights of their children to be educated in the official language of their choice.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the discussions both in St. Andrews and most recently in Montreal were all based on the language of instruction in the two official languages of Canada, that is, French and English. I think it is fair to state that some observed the interesting and important make-up of the population of this country. It was pointed out in casual conversation the wide differences that exist in terms of population and young people in our school system—in some of our western provinces for example and, as has been pointed out in this House, even here in our own province. But the subject matter that preoccupied the attention of the premiers in matters of education related to instruction in English or French.

Mr. Rotenberg: Supplementary: I am particularly concerned about the right to have instruction in English by minority groups whose parents' mother tongue is not English or French, in another province.

Mr. Kerrio: What are you asking this Premier for?

Mr. Rotenberg: At the present time, citizens of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Rotenberg: I am asking the Premier if they considered citizens of Canada whose children are denied the right to have education in the English language in parts of this country.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I guess on two or three occasions I reminded the Premier of Quebec of my concern with respect to the position of minority language education. While one can look back historically in terms of the English-speaking people in our sister province of Quebec, there is no question that in terms of an educational program it has been well established. I have raised with the Premier of that province my concern that a Canadian is a Canadian, and that when a Canadian, particularly in these days of mobility, moves from one province to another, he or she should have the right, irrespective of what the mother tongue may be, to an educational program in whatever province one chooses to locate.

At St. Andrews I pointed out to the Premier of Quebec the very difficult situation for a youngster who, say, is in an Ontario grade 11 or 12 class, a student who perhaps has had some difficulty with English, being a new Canadian. He might be a very excellent scholar in math or science yet perhaps he is forced—and I say “perhaps” because of the sections in the Quebec bill that could relieve some of these situations if implemented—into the very difficult academic program apart from anything else that a youngster would have who might be forced into a French-speaking course of instruction with no knowledge of that language at a senior grade level. It's very different when a youngster starts at kindergarten, but by the time he gets to the senior grades it is very awkward indeed.

I have made this view known to the Premier of the province of Quebec. It's a view I have held very strongly. In spite of the fact that at the conference—and I want to make this clear—the question of a constitutional amendment was not formally up for discussion there because the Premier of Quebec has made it very clear he would not participate in any such discussion, I still feel that, while some other premiers do not yet share this point of view, one of the best solutions which Ontario will continue to support—and I emphasize this very strongly, in my view, knowing that the constitution provides the educational jurisdiction for the provinces—could be an amendment entrenched in the constitution providing for minority languages in the two official languages of Canada.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: Apart from the fact that the teaching of other languages was not the subject of the conference of the premiers in Montreal last week, does the Premier think that the province of Ontario, on its own, can implement the teaching of other languages through the heritage language program which was introduced last year, removing the difficulties that now make it difficult for boards of education to adopt that program because of the funding formula?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think that would be a question more properly put to the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), who has just arrived, and who could take 10 or 15 minutes in a very important answer to that important question.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary.

Mr. Warner: He shuffled it off. That's a copout.

Ms. Gigantes: He never answered.

Mr. Speaker: I think we've had enough supplementaries.

FINANCIAL PROTECTION FOR FARMERS

Mr. Riddell: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. At a mass meeting of farmers from right across Canada, arranged by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and held in Ottawa last week—a meeting which, I might say, two members of this Legislature attended, my colleague from Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) and myself—there was very great concern expressed about declining farm income. In view of the fact that there was very little mention made in the Throne Speech pertaining to agriculture in this province, is the minister planning any new programs to deal with the serious situation that the agricultural industry is faced with today in Ontario?

Hon. W. Newman: I am fully aware of the meeting that the hon. member was at last Wednesday night in Ottawa. I commend him for going. I commend the Ontario Federation of Agriculture for the four points they made to the National Food Strategy Conference. Some of the most meaningful points made were made by the federation in their brief the next day. I commend them for their action.

As the hon. member knows, as far as declining farm income is concerned, we have a corn stabilization program in place for the 1977 crop. It looks as if there will be a pay-out on it. We've just finished working out a three-year program for the corn stabilization program. We've had many other requests for stabilization programs for various commodities which we are now looking at through the commission for stabilization.

We have the cow-calf stabilization program, by the way. The member might not have noticed the news release that came out from Ottawa where, with their great generous heart, they gave our farmers $5 a cow, whereas we paid $38 a cow in the provincial program. I point out to him that we are doing things for the farmers. We are concerned about their declining income. That's why we've brought in many of the programs we have. The stabilization program is a very important program, which is now just nicely getting into position, to help the farmers when they get into low-price situations.

We have the crop insurance program. We have other programs. We had a serious storm recently. I anticipate I'll be making an announcement on that, as soon as I hear word from Ottawa, because that's a shared-cost program. We are concerned about declining income and we do have programs in place to try to help the farmers with these programs.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: The minister mentioned a lot of old programs. My question was what new programs is he going to introduce? As far as some of the ministry's newer programs are concerned, I am wondering just how effective they are—and I am talking now about the Foodland Ontario promotion program—when I read and hear that at the agricultural conventions being held in Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Riddell: —imported foods are being used. What is the minister's response to that?

Some hon. members: Shame.

Mr. Riddell: And how does the minister account for the fact that imported meat is being served in the correctional institutions?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex does not keep up with what is going on today, because if he had been following some of my comments recently in speeches I have made—I will just quote a couple of figures so that I won't take too much of the House's time.

Mr. Martel: They are hard to follow.

Mr. Reid: There's no shortage of corn there.

Mr. Martel: Don't be bashful, Bill.

Hon. W. Newman: There were three million pounds more turkeys sold last Christmas than a year ago. That program was working.

Mr. Nixon: Put yourself on the list.

Mr. Foulds: You're the biggest turkey of them all.

Hon. W. Newman: If the hon. member would like to join me this Thursday in London, I will be telling how the present promotional program is working. One chain of stores has told us it has already sold four times what it sold last year of Ontario winter vegetables because of our promotional program.

Mr. Foulds: How much more bull have they sold?

Hon. Mr. Davis: And the member thought he knew a lot about turkeys!

Mr. Gaunt: I am certainly delighted to hear we are eating more turkey, but I am wondering what effect the Foodland program is having, particularly in view of the fact that in January, at the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association annual meeting at the Royal York Hotel, the delegates were served orange juice for breakfast and imported wine for dinner.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You want imported wine for breakfast?

Mr. Gaunt: Has the minister reviewed his program with all of the major hotels in the city of Toronto, to alert them to his program and to tell them that he would really appreciate it if they would serve Ontario produce?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite as acquainted with the hotel business as the hon. member probably is—

Mr. Reid: Just one end of it.

Hon. W. Newman: —but I can assure him that we are working continually to move Ontario produce into the food chains and in other areas and we will be making a major contribution to the restaurant people during the coming year. About marketing boards, the hon. member will be pleased to know that many of the marketing boards are now setting levies or raising funds to join in our promotional program themselves; they realize that we can grow it but we have got to sell it, so they are joining with us in this program to promote Ontario produce.

Mr. Martel: You have to get out of the bar, Bill, to know what is going on in the other rooms.

COMMUNITY LAW CLINICS

Mr. Lawlor: Would the Attorney General be at all inclined to think that the arbitrary decision cutting off Legal Aid funds to People And Law without reason is precisely that, an arbitrary and irresponsible position? Secondly, would he do anything to amend the regulation governing this situation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Lakeshore knows, the regulation that provided for the funding of Legal Aid clinics was brought in at a time during which the future of many of these community clinics was threatened by the decision of the federal government to get out of this LIP type of program that had resulted in the formation of a number of these community Legal Aid clinics.

Because of my support for the community law concept, I persuaded the Law Society to agree to a regulation which would provide a better guarantee of ongoing funding for community law clinics. This probably was done in somewhat of a hurry, in view of the fact that there was some urgency involved in relation to establishing this regulation in order to ensure the future of these clinics, which I might say since the introduction of the regulation have increased in number—probably they have doubled—and the funding for community law clinics I think has at least tripled during my tenure as the Attorney General.

[3:00]

I say this because I recognize that the regulation in its present form may not be entirely satisfactory and probably should be refined in order to provide better criteria for both the guidance of the clinics that are in operation and for those that are seeking to be funded.

Now in relation to the matter of People And Law I recognize the fact that it would appear that no formal reasons have been given. I have indicated to the Legal Aid funding committee that it would be helpful if formal reasons could be prepared.

Mr. Warner: You should give them the money instead.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: And certainly from what I know of it to date, I am not sure at all that I can agree at this moment that the decision was in any way an arbitrary one. There were many weeks of warning, and it would appear from what I have been able to learn of the matter to date and my information is not complete—

Mr. Warner: It is the law society of upper-crust Canada.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —that the People And Law clinic had decided themselves to change their own direction from that of assisting people with legal problems to the assisting and training of clinical workers for community law clinics; they decided on their own, unilaterally, to change this emphasis in direction to matters of law and social reform.

Ms. Gigantes: They should have gone to the Law Society.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: And while it is perhaps a desirable goal in itself, it certainly was not the basis on which Legal Aid community clinics were established, and that is to assist in the delivery of legal services to people who have a need, a specific need, as opposed to the reform of society in general, notwithstanding the fact that some members might decide that this is a desirable goal but it seems to me that there are other forums.

Mr. O'Neil: You must read the Sunday Sun. Who wrote that article in the Sun?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That, in brief, is the information that I have at this point.

Mr. Lawlor: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Could you possibly find a supplementary to that?

Mr. Lawlor: Would the Attorney General be prepared to meet with this group as they have requested?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would like to have more complete information before I decide whether such a meeting would be worthwhile, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Makarchuk: He is asking are you prepared or not?

Mrs. Campbell: In view of the fact that this type of clinic is serving a large proportion of the people in downtown Toronto who feel otherwise no access to the law, be it social or otherwise, would the minister not consider meeting without first being briefed by the Law Society, but rather meet with the people themselves at this point in time?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't think there is anything that I could add to what I have already said.

Mr. Warner: Listen to the law society of upper-crust Canada.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Labour: Does the minister agree with me that in order to fund for six months, on a temporary basis, until her famous Workmen's Compensation report comes in—in order to fund a 10 per cent increase in pensions—that the cost would be approximately $4.5 million and that that money would go directly into the economy since it would undoubtedly be spent for the very basic necessities of life? Is that the approximate figure and cost that she believes to be involved in, for instance, a 10 per cent increase on a six-month basis until the report is completed?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I don't have my pocket computer with me and I cannot verify that figure, I would think it is probably within the ball park.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary—and again imploring the minister to bring forward exactly that remedy to the present situation—can she advise the House whether one of the problems with the Workmen's Compensation fund has not been investments that have paid poorly over the years, such as 25-year mortgages at five or six per cent, some of these investments having been liquidated at a loss of approximately $5 million in 1976 and $4.5 million in 1975? If this investment problem is a real problem for the board, can she justify why people at the very lowest end of the income scale should have to now pay for the unwise investment policy of the Workmen's Compensation Board?

Mr. Laughren: Blatant discrimination.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the argument placed by the hon. Leader of the Opposition that this is the reason for any kind of situation. Nor am I aware that, indeed, the Workmen's Compensation Board investments fared any worse than any other investment made by any single individual or any group of individuals—

Mr. Laughren: Anything the board touches has done badly.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —in the years 1975 and 1976. But I would remind the hon. member that, indeed, the Workmen's Compensation Act precludes the possibility of any adjustment to the figures which have been established within that Act, without an amendment to the Act.

Interjections.

Mr. Lewis: So bring it in.

Hon. B. Stephenson: And it is not possible, Mr. Speaker, for the Workmen's Compensation Board to be responsible for increases in benefits without amendments to the Act.

Mr. Martel: I'll introduce it if she wants.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister agree that her comment suggesting that workmen's compensation recipients who find their income is inadequate should seek welfare is not only gratuitous but it is also inaccurate, in view of the fact that welfare exists to provide income for people who have no income and not for people whose income is inadequate?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I have never made that statement. That was a statement made by the hon. members of the third party and not by myself and I do not see any point at all in responding to that question.

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I do not see any point at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. I don't have Hansard directly in front of me but I remember very clearly that the full import and implication of the minister's reply was that workmen's compensation recipients could seek additional moneys through the traditional remedy of social welfare allowances even if she didn't use the words. She said it clearly and she is misleading the House now.

Mr. Havrot: You phoney bleeding heart.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I did not say it.

Mr. Lewis: I'm tired of the way you toy with that in this House.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm not like that, gentlemen.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. W. Newman: Come on, Stephen, watch your language.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

It has always been held in this House that no member will accuse another member of misleading the House and I will ask the hon. member for Scarborough West to withdraw.

Mr. Lewis: I withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. Smith: May I just have another supplementary if I might? Since both opposition parties clearly would be willing to support an amendment brought through for the purpose of helping these people get some relief with their pensions, which have not increased for several years now despite inflation, what is stopping the minister from bringing that forward? It would not break the government and it would surely be the proper thing to do at this time.

Mr. Foulds: Just give them what is due to them.

Mr. Martel: It doesn't cost the government a cent.

Mr. Warner: Try being the Minister of Labour.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. Leader of the Opposition is requesting that we amend the Workmen's Compensation Act at this time or that we amend some other Act in order to provide for a supplement. That has not been made clear, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: You do toy with words, don't you?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would remind the hon. member that he supported in this House, not longer ago than last Friday, the validity and the necessity for the study which is being carried out. It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would be entirely irresponsible to suggest amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act at this time until—

Mr. Laughren: Nonsense. You're being irresponsible.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—we have the full report of that study, which the hon. Leader of the Opposition feels is a reasonable study to carry out.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

POINT OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Lewis: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In Hansard of last Friday, February 24, it is recorded after an exchange between the Leader of the Opposition and Mrs. Stephenson—

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm not Mrs. Stephenson.

Mr. Lewis: I'm quoting the Hon. Mrs. Stephenson as named in the draft of Hansard. I wouldn't impute things to the minister that didn't appear in print.

Mr. Deans: Who are you?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I know who I am—just because you don't—

An hon. member: Take off your mask, Ian.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Wash your face, Ian, you might find out.

Mr. Deans: Are you not Mrs. Stephenson?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I am not Mrs. Stephenson.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I'd like to hear the point of privilege if there is one.

Mr. Lewis: In Hansard, Mr. Speaker, it is recorded the minister said: "We cannot do it without considering the total impact of whatever modifications may be suggested"—meaning increasing the workmen's compensation allowance—"but I would suggest to the hon. member that if indeed there are problems, there are sources available through provincial funding and federal funding which are available to the families of those workmen."

What did the minister mean if not social welfare allowances?

Mr. Martel: Come on, tell us.

Mr. Lewis: What else did she mean? I withdrew the word "misleading," Mr. Speaker, but I did it with regret.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a point I would like to draw to your attention and for your consideration.

Mr. Speaker: A point of what?

Mr. MacDonald: A point of order.

Mr. Laughren: It's time the minister resigned.

Mr. Speaker: I don't know that anything is out of order. You may speak to the point of privilege if you wish.

Mr. MacDonald: I will speak to a point of privilege then. Many times in this House, Mr. Speaker, you have quite rightly insisted that when a person says a statement is misleading they must withdraw it, and then when you have documentary proof that they were misleading there is no compunction on the person who was misleading to do anything about it. Would you consider that to see what revision in our rules should be considered?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I never ever mentioned the words "social welfare." There are programs which—

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Well, if that's your definition, there are programs of income supplement which are available.

Mr. Lewis: Tell us where they go for help.

Mr. Laughren: Explain yourself.

Mr. Lewis: Where do they go then?

Mr. Speaker: Order, I want to remind all hon. members of the House that the provisional and the standing orders we operate under in this House are not mine. They are the collective property of the House. The rules are quite specific with regard to the use of the word "misleading." It is my responsibility to ask hon. members to withdraw. With regard to any deficiencies in the standing orders, that's the problem, collectively, of the House, not the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: On the point, if I may, Mr. Speaker. I regret having used the word. I did genuinely and do genuinely believe that there is no other and was no other possible interpretation to the minister's remarks last Friday. We said so and, in fact, she understood exactly what she meant.

Mr. Speaker: There are many instances where there are differences of opinion as to what was said or what was intended, and it's not the prerogative of the Chair to interpret what was said.

Mr. Martel: There are no other programs and the minister knows it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is no such thing as a supplementary question on a discussion of this nature. The time for oral questions expired four minutes ago.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: When did you start getting unemployment insurance when you are on compensation?

Hon. B. Stephenson: You don't know what you're talking about.

ORDERS OF THE DAY
THRONE SPEECH DEBATE
(continued)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Speech from the Throne. May I go through the considered amenities of wishing you well in your latest term, hoping that the distinguished service that you have provided to this Legislature in the previous session will serve merely as a launching pad for the expectations we have both of you and from you in this session.

There is a line concerning my ministry in the Speech from the Throne which notes that several new pilot projects will be introduced in the community work program of the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Before getting into the actual projects, could I take a few moments to outline the tremendous progress that has been made, not merely in this province but throughout Canada, in terms of having the community in its entirety take more and more responsibility for the behaviour problems, for the particular difficulties of the offender against the Criminal Code who, until the past few years, faced only incarceration, either on a constantly rotating basis or on an ever-increasing basis, as his accountability for his particular deed.

[3:15]

It is interesting to note that at the present time the community in this province accepts six and a half times as much responsibility for the offender as does the jail system. I think it is sometimes lost that where there are today in the vicinity of 4,000 sentenced inmates in the province of Ontario, there are more than 24,000 convicted criminals under probation. The reason I use the term "convicted criminals" is the fact that quite often the public loses sight of the fact that the only way a person can get on probation, including the supervision that is part and parcel of the order, is by being convicted of a criminal offence.

In the last few years, therefore, we have more and more turned to the community—to the facilities both in terms of the relatively loose supervision that probation does provide, in terms of the resources available throughout the entire community in meeting the particular problems of the offender, be they concerned with emotional, psychological, drug or other behavioural difficulties.

At the same time, it is very interesting that we are now moving into yet another area. The federal Minister of Justice, the Hon. Ron Basford, is moving towards significant amendments to the Criminal Code that will provide the community with an even greater chance to provide the opportunity for the successful readmission of the offender into society. First of all will be the formal legalization, if you want to call it that, or the formal insertion of the community service order, as a valid sentence, in the Criminal Code.

Secondly, there will be a better definition of the fine option in terms of certain offences, in the light of extending more time before a person is incarcerated for failure to meet the particular fine that was imposed upon conviction. The fine option will certainly be brought out later this spring when the Attorney General of this province (Mr. McMurry) introduces the Provincial Courts Act. But notwithstanding the desire in all jurisdictions to remove the jail option in lieu of fine from the sentencing procedure, the bench must still be provided with some form of deterrent for the offender who violates or simply refuses to pay the fine.

We are suggesting to the federal Minister of Justice that an addition to the present fine option sentence might very well be a community work order, in lieu of the failure to pay a fine that has been imposed. I don't think there is anyone in this country, or in this province, who does not agree with the general observation that in Canada we are sending far too many people to jail for far too many offences. That isn't being soft on crime. That isn't calling for an easier approach to the offender. It is recognizing the significance of the fact that in a great many cases jail or incarceration no longer is any form of real accountability for the offence, quite often works to the detriment of the victim, is an increasingly costly exercise, not just economically but in terms of the confinement of human resources, and that there are new approaches and new alternatives which can provide a more realistic accountability, both for the offender and for the victim.

Hopefully, the amendments to the Criminal Code will provide for direct restitution sentences; that is, direct from the court. As you know, Mr. Speaker, restitution orders under probation are now being appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, because there is the argument that they may very well be invalid under the federal statutes because property and civil rights are properly the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Notwithstanding the ultimate disposition of that appeal, it would seem far more logical if an offender in a property or a money or in a non-violent or non-injury matter were sentenced directly to restitution rather than being incarcerated, even with the result that in our system at the moment we are prepared to assign the incarcerated offender to a restitution centre. That would be purely for the purposes of going to work and paying back the victim directly. It would make the introduction of the restitution centre much easier, much more practical and much more widespread if there was a movement to direct restitution as part of the court sentence.

I don't think there is any objection to the concept that restitution in lieu of incarceration is the coming factor in the correctional field. More and more crimes are white collar offences. The victim under our present practices seldom, if ever, can recover the actual amount of the monetary loss. In a great many cases, because of the way protective industries such as insurance work, he indeed pays an additional penalty by virtue of the fact that his premiums quite often go up as a result of the offence being committed against him.

At the same time, in the white collar field we have moved in a great many areas in the past few years to enable the offender to re-enter society and to carry on with his or her occupation. In the past, bonding or the lack of it really was an extreme deterrent against virtually any type of white collar offender ever expecting to return to his previous occupation. That, of course, by and large has been removed as a deterrent, and quite often now the white collar offender can rightfully do so.

We want a correction system that is based upon making the re-entry point into society as easy as possible. Then we are going to have to do something for the victim. The community work order or the community service order in terms of victimless crime is working.

Since the introduction of the pilot projects by my ministry, and by the Attorney General in October, there are now more than 310 offenders on such work orders.

Even on a conservative estimate, at least half of them would probably have been incarcerated in the past. One hundred and fifty offenders are working in the community in their spare time, as well as supporting themselves and staying in the community throughout the period of accountability, and that is the equivalent of a fair-sized new penal institution in this province.

The type of community work order that we are looking at now is only the beginning in this field. Restitution is, obviously, the second and the more sophisticated phase, and, hopefully, the amendments to the Criminal Code, as well as the disposition of the appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada, will expedite the massive introduction of such restitution centres in the communities of this province.

Finally, as you know we are a captive ministry. We must operate under the auspices of the Penitentiaries Act. The federal government in Bill C-51 has changed enormously the scope that will be allowed provinces in the field of correction. We will be assuming responsibility for parole of inmates within the Ontario system; that means two years less a day. We will be negotiating the exchange of inmates between the federal system and ourselves—most particularly the female offenders from the Kingston Penitentiary for women. Hopefully, by the summer of this year, the Kingston Penitentiary for women will no longer be. I understand the federal government has some other plans for it, but certainly not as an institution for females. We are prepared in this province to take Ontario inmates from that penitentiary and to house them on a fee-for-service basis—because they are under federal jurisdiction—within our own female institutions.

I would be remiss if I didn't compliment the new federal Solicitor General, the Hon. Jean-Jacques Blais who, despite the many pressures of his office and the manner in which he had to assume it, is carrying on relatively fast negotiations with the province of Ontario and with myself to facilitate the takeover of parole, the exchange of inmates agreements, and other commonsense approaches to the matter of how best we can rationalize the use of incarceration facilities within the province of Ontario regardless of whose jurisdiction they come under.

The emphasis upon the community, as the integral part of coming to grips with the problems of the offender—and not just the youth-oriented offender, as has been the practice in the past, but of the total offender-population wherever possible—will return the jail or the incarceration system back to its original function; and its original function was the protection of society from the violent.

[3:30]

For far too long we have used jail and the system for other purposes. We have gone far beyond the original intent of containing the violent for the sake of public safety. The community work order, the restitution order, the efforts by the federal government and by ourselves for a more effective and rational use of the correctional system—and by that I mean primarily in the community and using the jail only as the last and final resort—will pay enormous dividends in this province in the future, not just in terms of money and new approaches to the problems of the offender, but in the ability of a community to marshal its own resources to return back to it human resources that otherwise would have been consigned elsewhere and virtually wasted because of the inability of the much more inflexible incarceration system to deal with all the vagaries of the human condition.

Mr. Conway: It's a particular pleasure to follow my fellow Celt from Scarborough Centre in this Throne Speech debate—Hibernian perhaps.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I thought you called me something else.

Mr. Conway: I read that front page speech in the Catholic Register and I haven't got over it yet. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by once again congratulating you on your very appropriate and distinguished re-elevation to the position of Deputy Speaker. I want also to take this opportunity to congratulate a fellow eastern Ontarian, namely the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who has been most recently brought to public attention as a surprising, I think, but nonetheless convincing winner in the recent Ontario New Democratic Party's convention.

Interjections.

Mr. Conway: I note that some of the loudest applause from this packed House this afternoon emanated from the chair of the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes). I can see that those regional differences that preceded the convention have been ameliorated and now the applause is a complete and happy one.

Indeed, I was thinking with respect to that very famous convention of a situation that paralleled the Pearson years in Ottawa in the mid-1960s. When a certain difficulty and hardship afflicted the Liberal Party, Pearson's answer was three wise men from the province of Quebec, Pelletier, Trudeau and Marchand.

As I looked at that very surprising convention in Toronto a few weeks ago that produced my colleague from Ottawa Centre as the final victor, I looked and I saw that he had but a corporal's guard of caucus support. I thought again of three wise men. Two of those wise men are with us today, the members for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra) and Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor). I wonder sometimes whether three wise men is not an appropriate place from which to start with leadership and aspirations.

I was away for the convention, but I came back to Toronto to read with great interest an article that appeared in the Fanfare section of the Globe and Mail on February 8. It was written by a certain Norm Snider and I think deserves the attention of all members of the House because it is a particularly witty comment on a very interesting convention.

The Throne Speech that was read here by Her Honour last week is the cause for this week's debate. I want to highlight in my remarks some of the things I thought were positive and some of those things which I thought were clearly negative. As one member of the Legislature, I appreciated the frank admission by the government in the statement that government intervention will in future be less in general and more selective where it takes place. I want to applaud the government for some very positive initiatives which it has outlined in the Throne Speech as they relate particularly to the areas of job creation, however limited and restricted those initiatives are.

I want also, in the presence of my friend the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) who I see has just left, to applaud the government for a renewed commitment to the very special requirements of the education of seriously disabled young people in this province. I want to commend the government for its commitment to take seriously the problems of child abuse within our society generally and within our legal system specifically. Those, I think, are very positive things that members of the Liberal Party, and I know members of the New Democratic Party, have long called for. This was the case particularly in the debate we had here not so very long ago insofar as the special education of disabled children in this province is concerned. I would strongly urge the government of the day to very quickly and very thoroughly implement what it outlined in that respect.

But there are some clear indications that, like so many other Throne Speeches from this tired and worn-out government, it is more interested in recycling programs which we have seen before than it is in designing a bold new approach to the problems of our economy and of our society. I, as a Liberal, was particularly pleased to see that the government, once again, has found Liberal policy to be highly recommendable. Specifically with regard to the sunset recommendations which were spoken of in the private members' hour by my leader some weeks ago, the government has, I know, seen the wisdom of his ways and is promising an initiative in that regard.

As a member from eastern Ontario, I was particularly impressed with the specific commitments entered into in two very selected areas. The first of these promises is to provide "a series of studies relating to a commuter air service for eastern Ontario, linking key agricultural and urban areas to other parts of the province," and that this "will be undertaken by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications to pursue both private and public options for air travel in that area."

I want to commend the government for its attention in this respect. As one member of this party from that region, I will be most persistent and positive in my urging that this kind of a regional air program be undertaken for eastern Ontario. I have long wondered why it is that northern Ontario, which has unique regional problems that many members of this assembly have drawn to our collective attention, has been able to qualify for some years now for the special norOntair program while eastern Ontario, with some of the same transportation problems growing out of the regional nature of the community, has not been similarly blessed.

I want, while commending the government, to draw attention to one incident that relates to this specific area. Last spring, the federal government announced that it would be proceeding with a major reconstruction of the Pembroke and area airport, which is in the great county of Renfrew. Operating out of that airport—and I see the member for Leeds (Mr. Auld) paying due attention—is probably the largest, or at least one of the largest, regional carriers in the region, namely PemAir.

That airline was seriously and financially jeopardized by the dislocation that was to result by the temporary closing down of that airport to regional air traffic. The people of the community, the people of PemAir and others, had gone to the federal authorities to seek assistance and to some degree they were successful. But recognizing that the Ontario government has a responsibility to the people and the transportation problems in eastern Ontario, some of us made strong representation to both the political and bureaucratic levels of the provincial administration. It was very clear that the government at that time was unwilling and totally unprepared to address a very serious problem that threatened the viability of one of the region's largest and most useful air carriers.

I wanted to put that on the record because at that time I felt that the government of Ontario had real responsibilities. I saw that those responsibilities were appreciated by the community, by the local municipal authorities, but they were abdicated clearly and without, I thought, proper attention by the Ontario Conservative government.

I applaud this new initiative. I fully expect that my regional carrier, our regional airport, and most importantly, the people of Renfrew county and of eastern Ontario, can expect in the very near future concrete and decisive transportation policies vis-à-vis air travel that will alleviate the distance problem and the other problems that are endemic to eastern Ontario that seem to have missed the attention of the government of Ontario for many years. I wanted to highlight the problems that PemAir experienced not five years ago, not two years ago, but six months ago.

I was interested to see that the Throne Speech offered to all who would listen the usual amount of motherhood. Quite frankly, motherhood is the phrase for what's being talked of in pages 16 and 17, where the government reinforces its commitment to the family.

I wondered what was in the Throne Speech to keep some of the backbench unhappies, like our friend the member for Orillia (Mr. Williams), content to the degree that he would stay with a party that he must surely be growingly unhappy with and about. But I see it in page 16, where it is affirmed for all and sundry to appreciate that the Conservative government under William Davis believes strongly in the family; right to the point of declaring May as family unity month. I read that and it makes me think of my Catholic upbringing and certain family overtones that in that religion relate to the month of May.

Mr. Speaker, it is with some interest then that the Throne Speech, having made those desk-thumping assertions about motherhood and family, that it goes on in a few pages to talk about the great achievements in Bill 59 which, whatever you think about it, has some rather interesting observations and new legislative requirements that I think impinge very clearly and very directly upon the status of the family.

I presume the speech writer for pages 17 and 18 did not know about what the speech-writer was saying on pages 19 and 20; either that or the Premier has his writers and the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) has his as well.

It was interesting to note—yes?

Ms. Gigantes: What do you have in mind?

Mr. Conway: Well, I just wanted to draw to the attention of my good and hon. colleague from Carleton East what I saw as a logical inconsistency, in on the one hand a desk-thumping assertion for the great verities of family, and on the other the clear statement of support, as I think it should be, for Bill 59, which I think has about it some clear implications and long-term plans for the future of the family in the conventional sense as we all know it.

Mr. Warner: You have driven all the Tories out of the House except one.

Mr. Conway: I see the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere is here and I am delighted to have his quiet presence with us.

Mr. Speaker, I thought the Throne Speech ended on its most sad and sorry note, and that was the limp-wristed commentary on what this government and what this government party is prepared not to do to address the serious cultural and linguistic problems that beset the Franco-Ontarian of this the central province of Canada and about which I would like to make some commentary a little later on.

I was drawn to the remarks in the Throne Speech as they relate to eastern Ontario for a number of reasons. It has been a time since I have seen a Throne Speech, and I have been here, of course as you know sir, but for three years or three Throne Speeches.

Mr. Warner: That is too many.

Mr. Conway: I do plan, together with the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, to spend I hope a few more days listening to future Throne Speeches, although I know this, Mr. Speaker, that none of the future Throne Speeches will be authored by that collection on my left.

Mr. Warner: I would not bet on it, Sean.

Mr. Conway: That it will be perhaps a frosty—I promised not to read Snider and I won't; but in the case of the NDP I am afraid I have seen the future and it's failed.

Mr. Warner: If you promise not to read.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, the eastern Ontario region has finally, I think as a result of two very critical elections, visited itself and its real problems upon this government.

I found some relationship—as I am sure you did from the prosperity of southwestern Ontario—a relationship between an article which appeared in our most national paper, the Globe and Mail, on Saturday, February

4, 1978, entitled: "Tory Fortress"—namely eastern Ontario—"Feels Taken for Granted"; and some of the direct, if platitudinous, remarks directed to those of us from eastern Ontario in the Throne Speech.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Did you write that?

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I recommend to my friend the Attorney General, who I hear in the vague, dark corners of Tory power might just have some aspirations, that he might look at Mr. Williamson's article, where among other things the first paragraph says, and I quote,

"After three decades of drawing on eastern Ontario"—and I want to say that drawing on eastern Ontario is a very polite way of putting it—"as the wellspring of a succession of Conservative governments at Queen's Park, there are clear signs of trouble for the Tories in eastern Ontario."

Now I want to just recommend that to the future leadership candidates who are with us this afternoon from the government caucus, and to tell them that the initiatives that they entertained in this year's Throne Speech, limited, as I said earlier, that they are, I think are going to be required to a much greater degree if they expect to survive in any way, shape or form as a viable party in eastern Ontario.

[3:45]

For those of us who come from that area, who don't know the luxuries of Eglinton or the suburban prosperity of Burlington South, those of us in eastern Ontario under the tyranny of distance and the poverty given to us by 35 years of Tory dynasties here in this building, it is interesting to see what has happened politically in the last few years. We have the political cabinet from eastern Ontario where, as the article points out, they have drawn a veritable well-spring of support. What has happened politically there in the last two or three years, in this region that realizes that with the Conservative Party there can be no effective clout?

We have my good friend from Carleton (Mr. Handleman) resigning in disgust about the directions of the government. We have my equally good friend from Carleton East Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence, a former member of the executive council, resigning in frustration and disgust. We have my equally good friend from Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett) being demoted.

Mr. Warner: I don't agree with your choice of friends.

Mr. Conway: Worst of all perhaps, we have the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr.

J. A. Taylor), lately Minister of Energy, being fired—or resigning, as the more generous interpretation would have it. I suppose added to that we have the showpiece of their industrial and economic program, namely the Edwardsburgh land assembly, allowed to slide into an unhappy death, being promised instead to us yet another forest experimental station.

I just want to say to that for the edification of, among others, my friend from Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes), that we do agree with the former cabinet minister from Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Irvine) when we say that we have got enough forest in eastern Ontario, what we need are not more trees but more industry.

It is clear that the region from which I come and from which I am proud to say I come, is growing unhappy about the diet of neglect being fed to it by successive generations of Tory bureaucrats and Tory politicians here in this assembly. It was with some interest that I read two studies from the Treasurer's (Mr. McKeough) ministry in the last two or three months. The first of these was the study in the Ontario Tax Series entitled, "Reassessing the Scope for Fiscal Policy in Canada." In a not unsurprising fashion, the study allowed as to how the main beneficiaries of Ontario provincial spending are northwest and eastern Ontario, and it goes on to point out that in the area east of Trenton the Ontario government spends more than $1,525 per man, woman and child, a full $143 less than in the northwest region, but significantly higher than in the rest of the province.

Just so that those of us who might from time to time draw to the attention of the government the regional disparities of eastern Ontario, the Treasurer and his ministry happily, if quietly, provide the people in the assembly with a study which highlights the good fortune in which we find ourselves as a result of his economic and fiscal planning. I just want to read what I think is a very appropriate commentary on that from the Renfrew Mercury's editorial page of February 22, 1978, and it says and I quote, in conclusion of the editorial—certainly not my speech, lest the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) smile too unhappily—I quote:

"We have known for many years that our population is sparse compared to the Oshawa-Windsor corridor. We know too how scattered our population is and how much harder and more expensive it is to provide a comparable level of services to people scattered over a large area. The study"—meaning this particular study, the Ontario government's taxation study—"ignores this fact.

"Not only do we have fewer people, but those living in eastern Ontario make less money than the provincial average. This is why we pay $19 less than average in income tax. But it may be reassuring at Queen's Park to know that eastern Ontario is a main beneficiary of government spending. The people in this area have only to look around them to fully understand just how misleading figures can be." Concluding, the editorial says, "We may be poor and few in number, but we are certainly not stupid."

I think that editorial speaks to some of the very serious grievances, both economically and otherwise, the people in that region are ever more prepared to express fully both in a public and private way.

The second study that I think deserves some attention is the demographic bulletin of the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, published in November 1977. It's a rather quiet document but it draws attention to the population and migration patterns of the period from 1971 to 1976.

I found it very interesting, as one of the two provincial representatives from the county of Renfrew to find that in eastern Ontario the population change in the region was, in absolute terms, an increase of some 78,000 people between 1971 and 1976, meaning there were 78,000 more people residing in the region in 1976 than there were in 1971.

In percentage terms, this reflects a population increase of some 7.3 per cent for the region. But when you get specific and look at the fact that there are only two areas in conventional southern Ontario which have had a negative increase—in other words, they had fewer people in 1976 than they had in 1971—both of those areas are in eastern Ontario. One of them is the county of Stormont, which had a net decline of 0.2 per cent and which is considerably instructive when you consider that the population growth for the region had been 7.3 per cent.

I think it's useful to use the population growth figure as an indication—granted, not a perfect or total one, but as an available research and statistical tool—by means of which to determine the economic viability, progress and prosperity of the region.

The county of Stormont had one of the two net declines in population increase, and its decline was just 0.2 per cent. But most interesting, in terms of southern Ontario, is the fact that the county of Renfrew had fully a two per cent population decline.

It is clear from the government's own figures that more and more people, given today's relative migration patterns, are moving out of my particular county. It is clear that more people have moved out of the county of Renfrew than in any other region in southern Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr. Conway: I think, despite the interjections of my good friend from Fergus, that should give this government a particular encouragement to do something special, to do something specific, to take a fresh look at the regional priorities budget, which the Treasurer to his great credit, has directed in some measure to Renfrew county but where at the present time it is bogged down and there is, by at least one recent press account, the possibility that much of the moneys that might be made available will be lost for whatever intergovernmental problems.

I just want to say, as a member from Renfrew county, I am shocked and appalled to know that Renfrew county has the major population decline in all of southern Ontario. It is, I think, a very serious problem—all the more serious for the young people, myself included perhaps, who have grown up in that area, who want to stay in that area, who want to work in that area, who want to contribute to the general community by working and living in that particular county.

If the government of Ontario needs any encouragement, or evidence that Renfrew county, over and above all others, needs special attention, I simply direct to the future leader's attention, to the Premier's attention, to the government's general attention the demographic bulletin which leaves that very stinging indictment as far as the population and economic health of eastern Ontario is concerned.

Mr. Riddell: There are only three Tories in the House and they're only remotely interested in eastern Ontario.

An hon. member: And none from eastern Ontario.

Mr. Conway: Given those unique and special problems—and before I launch into the second part of this—I want to draw attention to the fact that in the Parry Sound region, which has something to do with the next part of this little discourse, the population change was a positive 8.0 per cent—significantly different from Renfrew county, which had a negative two per cent. Surely that should be considered when we get into something that becomes very current—I know it is today and certainly will be on Wednesday—and that's the government's election plan to offer to the people of the Parry Sound region a preferential treatment insofar as the registration fees for automobiles and the like in this province.

You will all remember the trip that was made to Parry Sound in early May 1977 by the Treasurer, among others, with the election barely a week old, where he offered the largess of the Progressive Conservative Party to the particular region and the sitting member who, we were told, properly or otherwise, was facing a very serious political challenge; and those people were drawn into the special consideration being given northern Ontario. I simply want to say to the government that for whatever reasons, political or otherwise, that kind of concession was made to the people of Parry Sound and Muskoka, people in my area—some of whom live in the district of Nipissing and many who work for the Ontario government who see other people living in the district of Nipissing as beneficiary of this special treatment—are very unhappy.

They are unhappy not only because of Wednesday, or today or yesterday whenever; they have, unlike their local member, gone and paid the extra dollars. They are unhappy because of the financial burden but they are in many cases more unhappy about the symbolic nature of that decision. They see only a political imperative, governing party or government policy—and the member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr) squints in his inimitable fashion.

Interjection.

Mr. Conway: That's the perception. That's the trouble with this government in eastern Ontario. You have got figures. You have got facts. You have got all kinds of evidence which directs specifically to the unique problems of Renfrew county. And then we have got to tell those people: "No, you don't qualify for these special attentions given to your friends across the Algonquin park border, for among other things the population growth figures indicate a help which is not endemic to my region, to my country. You are going to have to pay the $60 or the $80, while they can pay the $10."

That's just not good enough. If you are prepared for election purposes to give special attention to Parry Sound, Muskoka, then I am here today to demand equal attention for the only county in all of southern Ontario which is undergoing very serious economic and social difficulties, among which numbers the family court situation in which I know the Attorney General has a particular and special concern.

As I said earlier, the diet of neglect which has been fed to us for 35 years, which is evident by an absolute dearth of political leadership in this cabinet, is simply not acceptable. Mr. Williamson, in his article of February 4, drew special attention to it. The elections of 1975 and 1977 reinforced more clearly than ever before that we are not prepared to accept it. I have got a petition, I have got letters—which really indicate the growing indignation of people—and nothing in recent memory has been so obnoxious to the people of the district of Nipissing, and it is my pleasure to represent them—or the people in the county of Renfrew who make up that portion of the constituency that I represent—nothing in recent memory has been so absolutely irritating as this very ad hoc decision to draw the line for the preferential licence plates right through the heartland of the district of Nipissing and right through the electoral district of Renfrew North.

You had better take a second look. I am here today to ask sincerely, non-partisanly, that you re-examine that particular commitment. I well realize the financial constraints that are placed on the Treasurer but I am here on behalf of those 28 people in the district of Nipissing, most of whom work for the Ministry of Natural Resources at the Algonquin Park centre in Whitney. They have written to me—and I may just beg your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to read what their petition says. It is dated January 27, 1978:

“Whereas the area of the district of Nipissing, south of Algonquin Park is one of the most isolated areas in southern Ontario,”—and hear, hear, to that—“90 miles from Pembroke, 120 miles from Peterborough and 65 miles from Huntsville, and whereas there is no public transit”—repeat, no public transit—“within 30 miles, the nearest hospital and drug store are 30 miles away and a motor vehicle is a virtual necessity for everyday life”—and I would almost be prepared to replace virtual with absolute necessity—“and whereas we already pay northern rates for insurance, hydro, consumer goods and gasoline, we the undersigned petition you and your colleagues, both in the government and in the opposition, to extend the $10-flat rate licence fee for private vehicles to the southern boundary of the district of Nipissing.”

An absolutely more reasonable request I cannot imagine. It is to the government's goodwill that I refer it this afternoon on behalf of those people.

[4:00]

Ms. Gigantes: Eastern Ontario is dying and you want to give them cheap licence plates. All you have to offer is cheap licences.

Mr. Conway: I can understand what the member for Carleton East says. Certainly there has to be more done. But in the practical world of politics she must surely understand, as I know her esteemed and distinguished former leader understood more keenly than the rest of the lot put together over there, that these policy responses, however short-term, are extremely important. I suggest to the member for Carleton East that she reconsider her rather—

Ms. Gigantes: That's all you are offering? Good grief! Just cheap licence plates.

Mr. Conway: For the consumption of the people of my riding, let it be understood that the NDP representatives from Carleton East and elsewhere oppose the flat rate extension to that portion of the district of Nipissing.

Ms. Gigantes: Is that all?

Mr. Conway: So be it. I well realize they have ceased to be a real political threat in our community, but I really appreciate the final nails being hammered into their coffin by their eastern delegation.

Mr. Warner: That's wishful thinking.

Mr. Conway: I want to go briefly to a matter I think is of very serious general application to this province. It is something about which my leader, my very good colleague from Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed) and this entire caucus, not only since yesterday but for many months, has expressed a great deal of concern, and that is about the operations, political and otherwise, of Ontario Hydro. I'm not going, least of all in the presence of that wunderkind from Carleton East, so illustrious a member of the select committee, to entertain a dialogue that—

Mr. McClellan: What is the German for dropout?

Mr. Conway: —speaks to the specifics of the uranium contracts with Denison and Preston. I just want to register as one independent-thinking eastern Ontario member that I am very unhappy about those contracts.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I thought you wanted the transmission line out in your riding.

Mr. Conway: I am particularly displeased about, among other things, the recent intervention from my colleague the minister of whatever-he-is today.

Mr. Cunningham: Maybe he had better check his watch.

Mr. Conway: I am displeased to think that the net effect of that deal, entered into I am sure some months ago and signed some weeks ago, is to allow the people of this province, both in the short- and long-term, to be held to ransom—and a fantastically expensive ransom at that—by a private concern which is using as its main weapon the resources which fall exclusively within the public domain. I have to think that is about as serious a problem as this Legislature is going to face. I have to express the opposition of this one member to that deal. I almost, in my fancy, agree with the NDP and agree with the Throne Speech. Inasmuch as the Throne Speech enjoins me to buy Canadian and the NDP enjoins me to buy Denison, I am tempted to unite the two in my response to those contracts.

But I was more interested in the role of Hydro in all of this because my grandfather, when he was here back in the twenties, thirties and forties, used to tell me—not in the thirties, forties and fifties, but in the sixties and seventies—about the great difficulty their Legislature and their government had controlling the Hydro commission and the Hydro authority of their day. I know the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) with his family past understands those difficulties. I am sure on daddy's knee those stories were told in a particularly intimate way. It was in that context that I sat on Monday of last week and watched, among others, the Premier (Mr. Davis), joined with his good wife and no one else, and I thought that was an interesting comment on the man's particular successful political acumen. The Attorney General should take a good look. He may need that some day. The Premier sat there and you could just see a whole generation—indeed, a whole century—of Ontario politics crystallize, not only in the comments but in the confrontation. He assured us then, he has assured us today and numerous times in between, that Hydro is certainly under control, that this government and that executive council over which he has complete control—

Mr. Warner: Under the control of Steve Roman.

Mr. Conway: —knows where Hydro's at. Then it was with some interest I read the Toronto Star Friday of last week, where my good friend the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor)—God bless that happy warrior—

Mr. Reed: He found out the truth.

Mr. Conway: He found out the truth. How many of his predecessors in that ministry or related ministries have gone that unhappy way! What does he tell us? I can only take his evidence on the basis of roughly one year's experience as the Minister of Energy largely responsible for the operation and control of Ontario Hydro. Front page, Toronto Star, Friday, February 24, 1978; James Taylor says, "The public utility has grown so huge it's all but impossible for anyone to control."

He goes on to compare it, in his inimitable style and his incomparable mental process, to the Bermuda triangle. It makes me think that those cabinet ministers over there have exotic after-hour reading taste—the Attorney General and his moral crusade notwithstanding. He talks: "If you present a reasonable thought or directive it gets sucked into the Hydro system and never comes out." I'd like to see the road map that allowed the minister—recently demoted or deposed—I don't know what road map he used because he clearly got sucked in, but somehow he came out.

"If you asked Hydro," he says, "to put a battery in your flashlight, it would cost you $100 for the house call."

"Taylor says Hydro's internal bureaucracy is so tangled that often the chairman of the board doesn't have the decision-making potential you might think he has." Isn't that comforting?

Ms. Gigantes: I don't agree.

Mr. Conway: While the member for Carleton East says she doesn't agree I can only imagine what information she might have that the former minister did not have access to.

Ms. Gigantes: We didn't have access to any of the information.

Mr. Conway: I expect that in the corridors later I will be apprised of those pipelines. I noticed the former minister, in the Picton papers last week, talking about a pipeline that he didn't seem to have that ran straight to my good leader's office. So indeed there may be another pipeline into Carleton East about which, among others, my caucus colleagues on that committee would like to know about.

Interesting that the very day the Premier is standing up saying that among other things there is absolutely no question about the integrity of the government's control over Hydro, we've got a situation in which the former Minister of Energy says there is no controlling Hydro, that there is absolutely a bureaucracy so tangled as to confuse any elected official and certainly to befuddle anyone else.

Ms. Gigantes: Do you believe that, Sean?

Mr. Conway: The member for Carleton East asks me do I believe it. You know what I was thinking, and I'm going to—

Mr. McClellan: Sounds like somebody who is talking to himself.

Mr. Conway: I don't know whether I believed it at the time, but I remember reading a book which I brought for the Speaker's interest and information. I know the Attorney General and I know the member for Carleton East have read it. It's a book about Hydro. It's a book called The Politics of Development.

The member for Carleton East says do I believe it. I wanted to, with your permission Mr. Speaker, very selectively quote from that most impressive, most powerful, study done by one of Ontario's finest academics. Not the least of the praises came from the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) whose special privilege it was to review it in that very liberal document known as the Canadian Forum, which I read with great regularity and even greater delight.

Ms. Gigantes: Small "I" liberal.

Mr. Conway: I wanted to simply read from the conclusion of that book, and it will be a quotation of some length. He concludes his study of Ontario Hydro and the resource community generally with the following observations:

"No organization had more influence over the provincial government than the publicly-owned Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission. Unlike the mining community, it did not have to rely upon a tenuous bond of friendship with members of the executive for that influence; nor did its patronage depend upon contractual relationships with the government, as was the case with the pulp and paper industry. Hydro was itself a branch of the executive, with delegated responsibility in all fields pertaining to the generation and distribution of hydro-electric power within the province. Since electricity affected almost every aspect of life, that was a frame of reference capable of indefinite expansion. Therefore, on account of its importance and proximity to the political executive, its only shareholders, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission exercised a preponderant influence over the Ontario government, particularly in the definition of the Ontario interest within the Canadian federation.

"The requirements of expert technical and business knowledge that justified and then established the autonomy of the commission also increased the dependence of the political executive upon the integrity and good judgement of the Hydro commission as its operations grew in magnitude and expense for, as we have already seen, the practical independence of the Hydro commission had its limits.

"In the final analysis, the executive branch of the Ontario government had to accept responsibility for its actions." And how true that is today. "The more complex the recommendations of the Hydro commission, the more the executive council's approval became an act of faith." Isn't that interesting? I think that the member for Carleton East has a pensive stare justified by the very significant comments of Professor Nelles's remarks.

Ms. Gigantes: Would you dissolve it? That's what I would like to know.

Mr. Conway: "The more complex the recommendations of the Hydro commission, the more the [government's] approval became an act of faith." And one has to wonder about the Denison contract and the act of faith being entered into there.

"The very size and scientific mystery of the organization inhibited constructive independent criticism of its decisions. Yet even public corporations are subject to the follies of error, misjudgement and deceit which usually complicate human affairs."

Ms. Gigantes: Would you dissolve Hydro? Is that what you are recommending?

Mr. Conway: "As a result of its tempestuous history, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission had also developed a heightened instinct for self-preservation and a tradition of forceful political activism. The vigour with which Hydro attacked its detractors tended to silence all but the brave"—none braver than my colleague from Carleton East.

And finally: "Since the Hydro commission was engaged in business pursuits, it asked for and received a veil of privacy that masked its internal affairs from public scrutiny. Thus insulated against criticism, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission possessed a degree of discretionary power unequalled by any other public agency. The judgement of the Hydro commissioners ought to have been questioned constantly, but the legislative facilities for that purpose did not exist."

Mr. Warner: Nationalize Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Conway: I think that is an indictment which is as justified today as it was when it was written but three years ago.

Ms. Gigantes: Would you dissolve Hydro?

Mr. Conway: In conclusion, I want to draw attention to a project that was entered into in a similar way by the Hydro commissioners some years ago; it had to do with the availability of excess power and Adam Beck's desire to use it for a wholesale program of radial railways, and he just happened not to take into confidence the government which was paying for it.

In 1919 a Premier could write this to a colleague—in fact, to the chairman of Hydro. I won't read much of it but I know my friend from Carleton East will be interested.

Ms. Gigantes: I am much more interested in 1978.

Mr. Conway: The Premier of the day—a Tory at that—said:

"I might add further, if further explanation is necessary, that you"—meaning Adam Beck—"have never taken me into your confidence in connection with this undertaking. I know nothing of the facts or arguments in favour of the scheme except what I have read in the newspaper. I do not even know the names or qualifications of the experts who have reported on the scheme"—

Ms. Gigantes: Dig up their graves and ask them.

Mr. Conway: "Nor have I been furnished with the report of these experts as to the cost of the railway, the probable earnings of the road and the other data that would be necessary for a Prime Minister or a cabinet minister to have before undertaking to speak on the subject and to give advice to ratepayers who are assuming heavy financial obligations in the matter.

"Surely"—again to Mr. Beck—"you would not expect a member of the government to take part, unasked for by anyone to do so, lacking full and complete information relating to the subject." That was in 1919; it was the Premier of Ontario speaking then and it was the minister speaking but last week. The point is, if my thick-headed friends from the left do not understand, that this great experiment in public ownership, which is socialism at its best—

[4:15]

Ms. Gigantes: Down with Hydro.

Mr. Conway: —and socialism at its worst in this province presents the problems of human folly, of socialist bureaucracy—

Ms. Gigantes: Hand it all over to Denison, eh?

Mr. Conway: —of political interference to such a degree—

Ms. Gigantes: Hand it over to Denison?

Mr. Conway: —that I cannot imagine a better reason for denouncing the socialist nonsense espoused in the speech of Friday in the continuous clap-trapping—

Mr. McClellan: Do you want to sell Hydro? Say so!

Ms. Gigantes: Sell it to Steve Roman.

Mr. Conway: —of the left in this province. Hydro is at best a necessary enemy for this Legislature—

Mr. McClellan: Sell it to Steve Roman.

Mr. Conway: It has been for 60 years out of control. It must surely visit itself upon my good friends on the left as the best available reason and all the evidence—

Ms. Gigantes: Do you think it is impossible to control it?

Mr. Conway: —they could want if they are sufficiently interested to caution us in any future endeavours in the public sector as far as economic activity is concerned.

With those quiet remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that as an eastern Ontarian I want to see in the very near future some regional policies that specifically refer to Renfrew county. I can't think of one better, however much it is denounced by my friend from Carleton East, than removing the penalty of the recent increases for automobile licence plates—a small unheroic beginning, yes, I well realize, but I think if nothing else a possible immediate response to the regional disparities that we have suffered. We have suffered long enough.

I want to conclude my remarks with those suggestions and I know that among others the Attorney General will recommend those eminently positive and suggestive policies to his colleagues in the executive council. Thank you very much.

Mr. Ziembra: As stated in the Throne Speech and underlined by the Minister of Correctional Services this afternoon the government is considering alternatives to imprisonment. I take this opportunity to call for a moratorium on prison construction. As the minister has indicated, discussions and actions are being taken to reassess our whole prison system right across the country. Now is the time to talk about a moratorium and constructive alternatives to imprisonment. Federal and provincial initiatives in this direction are under way.

The thrust towards alternatives to imprisonment is 200 years overdue, and why is this so? Because prisons are like a sacred cow; prisons are where you stop crime. We have always believed that prisons will rehabilitate the offender, protect society and act to deter future crimes. All these assumptions are a massive deception. In fact, prisons breed a climate of hostility and rage. They provide the illusion but not the reality, because about 80 per cent of ex-prisoners wind up back in these same "correctional" institutions.

Who is in jail? Of 90,955 people in jail last year, only 4,784 were charged with violent crimes—crimes against the person, assault, robbery and rape. This is a little over five per cent of the prison population; 23,066 were charged with crimes against property; 29,774 were charged for traffic offences and 22,721 for liquor offences. These inmates, who make up 96 per cent of the prison population, could be released to a support structure in the community today. Keeping these people out of jail would save the taxpayers a lot of money as well as keep them out of our schools for crime.

Ombudsman Arthur Maloney's report on Ontario's prisons makes it obvious that we are sending far too many people to jail. We hear so much about our "soft bail laws," but Mr. Maloney points out that almost 60,000 prisoners were denied bail and were kept in custody prior to their trial. He quotes the Law Reform Commission that Canada is one of the harshest western countries when it comes to prison sentences.

The sentences are far too long and half the prisoners shouldn't be there.

This harshness and these long sentences are inflicted on those on the bottom of the social and economic scale. Prisons are used to warehouse native Canadians and other poor and powerless people. Native Canadians have always been overrepresented in our prison system. Alcohol combined with alienation makes them prime candidates for jailing. Seldom do the courts refer native people to any alternatives that may exist.

There are more unemployed young people aged 16 to 24 today than at any other period in Canada's history. This same age group makes up the largest portion of our prison population. There is a direct relationship between jobs and jails.

We imprison drunks, speeders, minor property offenders, but what about the real criminals in our society? What about the monopolies, the price-fixers, and the false advertisers? What of the tax-evaders? What of the employers whose negligence of safe working conditions results in workers' disabilities and deaths? And finally, what of the industrial polluters who poison our air, land and waterways? How many of these criminals ever wind up in jail?

The Ombudsman offers us two alternatives. Either we spend $88 million on new jails or solve the problem another way by not jailing as many people. In Mr. Maloney's words, and I quote, "to decrease the public's reliance on the highly symbolic but discouraging failure-ridden and costly resort to incarceration either before or after the trial of an accused."

The Ombudsman further states: "I feel that all aspects of community corrections merit the closest attention from the public."

What I take this to mean is the involvement of concerned citizens in the community, not the continuing reliance on legal and correctional experts. I am not talking simply about sloughing off the offender into a group home in the community with inadequate support services, as we presently see in the field of mental health.

What are community alternatives? That is not up to me as an individual to determine; it is up to the community to determine its own needs and priorities. They would probably be different applications of the ideas of community service orders, restitution and reconciliation programs, as the minister spoke of this afternoon, day-fine systems, decarceration and decriminalization, community parole systems, alcohol and drug treatment centres, and community-controlled resource centres. For instance, the Simcoe community is opposed to the closing of the Glendale adult training centre, because in practice it operates much more like a community resource centre than an ATC. Any system that attempts to reintegrate the offender back into his community in a humane way is what we want to see.

People who wind up in the criminal justice system come from the communities and almost all will wind up back in their community, so why should their stay in the prison system be in isolation from their community? Why must a community surrender its responsibility to, again, "correctional experts"? We must not continue the out of sight, out of mind policies of the past. We must move away from the present dependency-creating prison system and foster a community system that builds self-help and social responsibility.

The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) is getting almost daily headlines by boasting about the nickels and dimes saved on coffee and orange juice while millions of dollars are being spent on new and unnecessary jails. The Etobicoke, Scarborough and London detention centres cost $60,000 per cell, for a total of $36 million and this is just the start.

Prison construction is big business. The minister admitted in the December 7 estimates debate, and I am going to quote his words, that "right now it costs you three times as much to build a local jail per inmate as it does a fully-equipped hospital per bed". In fact, he concludes by further admitting that "this is an appalling cost." I wholeheartedly agree with the minister. Therefore I would suggest that he pursue the logic of his position and declare a moratorium on any more prison construction and immediately redirect the savings to alternatives to imprisonment. We can save money on detention costs, we can save money on welfare costs, we can save money on subsequent imprisonment, because we believe there will be fewer repeaters.

The Commons subcommittee on penitentiaries agrees with this by stating, and I am going to quote from their report, "Many witnesses testified that if Canada builds more prisons, those prisons will be immediately filled. Conversely, if alternatives for prisons can be found for the majority who are not dangerous, some of the existing buildings will be empty. Thus, before entering into a multi-million dollar construction program, less costly and most productive alternatives should be introduced."

In spite of this report, the feds are quietly moving on a $460 million construction program to build 26 new institutions, increasing the cell capacity by 4,712 over the next five years. Because the federal government is turning its back on its own subcommittee's report, and because of a commitment to a moratorium, a number of groups met in Ottawa recently and formed the Moratorium Committee on Prison Construction. They include the Prisoners' Rights Committee in Toronto, the Civil Liberties Associations in Ottawa and Kingston, L'Office des Droits des Détenus in Montreal, the Law Union of Ontario, Groupe de Défense des Droits des Détenus de Quebec, the social action committee of the First Unitarian Church in Toronto, and the Quaker Committee on Jails and Justice, Toronto.

I urge the members from all sides of this House to go back to their constituents and tell them of the true costs of imprisonment, both in dollar terms and in terms of human suffering, and oppose any new prison construction in their riding.

There is absolutely no need to build even one more new jail in this province and perhaps we could begin dismantling more of the present ones.

The time has come for a moratorium on prison construction. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the Throne Speech debate at the commencement of this session and speak on behalf of the people of Mississauga South and of the province of Ontario. From my soundings of the riding, they are impressed with the government's policy package as it is being unfolded both through the first ministers' conference and in the Throne Speech. They come to me to convey their pleasure as to what the government has done and what is has announced in the Throne Speech. They are very encouraged and they are happy to know that the socialists are held at bay.

Mr. McClellan: You must talk to the wrong people.

Mr. Kennedy: Following the Throne Speech debate, on March 7 I believe, the budget will be brought down as part of this package.

Mr. McClellan: You should talk to the real people.

Mr. Lawlor: You will be brought down.

Mr. Kennedy: Ross, you will be out. You might get a little insight into the free enterprise system and how it works.

Mr. Lawlor: How great do you think the debt is going to be this year?

Mr. McClellan: Talk to the real people in Mississauga some time.

[4:30]

Mr. Kennedy: Members should surely understand that the direction this government will pursue in the months ahead, as I have just mentioned, is not restricted only to those intentions contained in Her Honour's Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Warner: There are some hidden ones.

Mr. Kennedy: Direction is also to be found in our strong and decisive presentation to the conference of first ministers in Ottawa. The blue booklet, entitled An Economic Development Policy for Canada, became the basis for discussion by all provincial leaders as they looked for medium- and long-term ways to improve the economy.

Without burdening this House with a full account of their success, consensus was achieved in the final communique of the first ministers' conference. This was in holding down public spending, setting up a buy-Canadian campaign, stepping up major energy developments to provide more jobs and trying to gain a bigger share of the tourist industry and the expanding automobile industry for Canada.

Obviously, the Throne Speech was not designed to duplicate the blue book nor was it designed to replace the provincial budget, the third major component, as I have mentioned, in a matter of just a few weeks, to be presented by the government next week. However, I want to refer for a few minutes to an item from the Throne Speech that is of interest to me, and that is air travel. There is reference in the Throne Speech to a study to be undertaken for eastern Ontario. I would like to discuss for a few minutes two areas that are not really closely related to the Throne Speech reference. In many respects, we know, air travel is a federal responsibility, but the impact of air travel in Ontario is major and so I believe appropriate for discussion in this forum.

The two items I do want to discuss for a few minutes are the high-fare structure established by the Canadian airlines, particularly Air Canada and CP Air; along with the proposed takeover of the Ontario Transair routes by Air Canada with applications, I understand, also by Great Lakes and Nordair, and the proposed takeover of Nordair by Air Canada. Air Canada has after several years turned a profit, which is commendable; but they have had more or less the lion's share of the market, along with CP Air, and this perhaps accounts for it.

However they have achieved it, it is to be commended, but I think there is a better way of doing this. I am certainly not going to knock good management, but I think they could have achieved the same results by reducing fares and by increasing ridership. In my view, these airlines are charging higher fares than are warranted. They are operating under quite a cozy arrangement with the Canadian Transport Committee, which seems to rubber-stamp their applications for increases.

Despite this, it is very interesting because of public concern and the fact that the heat was on the federal cabinet on that Saturday night I was jolted out of a reverie watching the CBC news to hear the brief, curt announcement that Air Canada was reducing rates. No further details followed and I did not see anything in the daily papers today, so there seems to be a lot of behind-the-scenes activity.

Another interesting feature was that Wardair applied for an increase of tour charters—ITCs as they are called in the trade—a little while ago. I am not sure of the details, but I know it was turned down by the transport committee. But then the turndown was reversed by the federal government and they were granted this. This seems to support my view as to where CTC sympathies lie.

I want to take a few minutes to compare some regular travel rates one way, both here and in the United States, to develop this comparison.

There was an article in the travel section of the Toronto Star on December 17, 1977. This had the eye-catching headline: "The Air Fare Ripoff." This is my source for these figures. There are variations, and we need to take them in their proper context depending on the travel days.

Ottawa to Toronto is listed as $45 regular fare for 226 miles. One of the members from Ottawa told me that about six years ago, I believe, the fare was in the order of $25, so this shows how swiftly the fares have increased.

Toronto to Montreal is an interesting one. For 315 miles it is $54 plus eight per cent departure tax, which totals $58.30. Toronto to Windsor is 195 miles—I presume that this is as the crow flies in each instance—and, it is no less than $41. To compare these with a couple of routes in the States, the rates are about half those I have quoted for the same distances. They're both shown in Canadian dollars to match as closely as can be.

Los Angeles to San Francisco is 337 miles and the fare is $31. This is roughly the same as Toronto-Montreal at $58.30. Houston to Dallas is 212 miles with a regular fare of $27. They have the lowest fare—in this article, it gives the lowest fare—of only $16. This is only nine miles less than the Toronto-Ottawa distance with its regular fare of about $45 and the lowest of $34. So it is more than twice the rate of Houston-Dallas for about the same distance.

Mr. McClellan: You should run for federal office.

Mr. Deans: You should run for the States.

Mr. McClellan: Or in the States.

Mr. Kennedy: I know these aren't totally equitable comparisons because we have higher operating costs.

Mr. Deans: That's true.

Mr. Kennedy: I don't think anyone questions that. There's snow removal, higher fuel costs, airport taxes—

Mr. McClellan: You should take this to Ottawa. Trudeau needs to hear this.

Mr. Kennedy: He will. I'm sure he's waiting for these words. To continue, Mr. Speaker:—and the highest departure tax of anywhere I know of in the western world. That's the eight per cent tax. In the US it's $3, and even in European countries—

Mr. Deans: It costs $60 for a car licence in southern Ontario. Speak to that.

Mr. Kennedy: I don't know about you drivers but we don't fly our cars. We're talking about airlines.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the member for Wentworth to wait his turn to ask questions?

Mr. Kennedy: But nevertheless, these factors that I've mentioned should not mean double the air fare. Also, at the same time—and it's hard to understand just exactly what's going on—Air Canada and CP Air, in a couple of articles I saw, have tried for a further four per cent increase in their fares. They cite the reason as higher airport landing fees, airport fees and fuel costs. Not to criticize CP Air or Air Canada, because the airlines have no control over taxation. We understand that the excessive departure tax and so on is a federal tax measure and you can't blame the airlines for that.

So I don't know how this four per cent application for an increase in fares will fit in with the Saturday announcement of reduced Air Canada fares. Maybe they're selective, I don't know.

But I believe the people of Ontario would respond to reduced fares, and that through increased numbers of travellers the profits would look after themselves. This was demonstrated by Southwest Airline when it tripled the ridership between Dallas and San Antonio by a substantial reduction in fares.

Incidentally, a couple of weeks ago I was in Florida where the weather was somewhat similar to here and I heard an announcement on the radio that a Florida-based airline—at least an airline flying out of Florida—was reducing fares by something like $244 to $140. Imagine the significant drop there by an airline flying somewhere up into the mid-west.

This is what they are doing down there. The CAB looks on these things very sympathetically and seems to have a different approach to it than the CTC.

In addition the likelihood of increased ridership has been demonstrated right here by Wardair, Nordair—and of course Laker, we know about Laker Airways' substantially reduced fares. I think the CTC should favour more competition, not less, and this is what will occur if there's an approval of the takeover of Nordair by Air Canada, and also if they are granted landing rights in the part of the Transair route in northwest Ontario from Toronto to the Manitoba border, if indeed this goes through.

I don't think the CTC has demonstrated that it is consumer-oriented at all. Rather it's protective of existing air routes. I think what we need are a couple of Max Wards in Ontario.

This leads me to the second point that I mentioned: Air Canada's proposal to take over Transair's Ontario route and the takeover of Nordair.

Mr. McClellan: Why doesn't the government intervene in Ottawa?

Mr. Kennedy: Pacific Western was to take over Transair if they could drop the Ontario route—Dryden, Thunder Bay and the Sault, I presume; wherever they land. Air Canada applied to take these over, as subsequently I understand have Great Lakes and Nordair. When Air Canada put forward their proposal they wanted to replace the Ontario part of Transair's service, but the schedule they laid out for replacement was deemed to be totally inadequate and so the province of Ontario intervened. Then Great Lakes and Nordair got into the act; they also want these routes. These hearings, I understand, are now going on.

Ontario intervened with the CTC at the time Pacific Western was to take Transair over and drop the Ontario routes, which Air Canada would take up. They weren't very pleased with the service that Air Canada had offered and so they were making their presentation on that. But what this government failed to do, in my opinion, was to intervene—at least to date—with the proposed takeover of Nordair.

Mr. McClellan: You mean your government.

Mr. Kennedy: The whole situation is pretty difficult. I wish the government had done this. Even at this late date I wish they would, because I don't think it's in the public interest that Air Canada tighten down its existing monopoly. They haven't demonstrated that we are better off for the firm position they have in the industry. I think the application should be rejected. I don't think we should be so protective of the existing airlines which would work out to the detriment of the public. That I think would be the end result.

I fear for the consumers if these applications are approved—not only on the rates but particularly for the smaller communities where air service perhaps might be curtailed or eliminated. We want to be assured that these services are expanded, not reduced.

I haven't heard that any consumer organization has raised their voice against this. Perhaps they have. The PWA-Transair hearings I understand are in Winnipeg. It may be they have come forward there, but if they have I don't know. I think that if this were going on in the private sector we would have the combines people taking a look at it.

[4:45]

I think air travel in Ontario and Canada has a tremendous potential. There is a great untapped market of travellers out there ready for both Air Canada or other national airlines, and for regional airlines. That is why I was pleased the budget had provided at least for another step in the direction of development of air service, although it is a small step, and that is the study announced for eastern Ontario. I know MTC has done some work in this area of air travel; and we of course have a relationship, the Ontario government has, with norOntair and a couple of other smaller lines. We are very interested.

But I think the study that was mentioned in the Throne Speech on this very complex subject should encompass the entire province rather than just that portion of eastern Ontario. That's good, but I think it should go further, for the reasons I have cited. Ontario must become interested in what is going on. I think we should make strong representations to CTC to ensure not only that our interests are protected, but also to recognize that there is room for Ontario to move forward in this field, to take air travel within Ontario to its full potential. I think any terms of reference for a study should include the whole subject.

I say too, as I mentioned, we need a couple of Max Wards. I think the private sector can do it best.

Mr. Warner: Got a great record. A million out of work; a great track record.

Mr. Kennedy: If we can develop this and bring it along to have a viable, strong, active air industry here, it will mean reduced deficits in our tourism and foreign trade, aid the economy and business activity, and it will result in a measure of job creation. We do it by removing this near monopolistic control of our air routes and by encouraging entrepreneurship.

Mr. Deans: It used to be that way.

Mr. Kennedy: I want to move on and comment on a few other Throne Speech items. I digress to say that at a later time, perhaps with ministries or in the House or in estimates, I want to take up some local issues that I think some of the members are aware of here—PCB's, Tricil, GO-train service. I have a lot of flak over the quality of the GO station at Clarkson; and traffic metering which I think in all equity should be extended further west. I will be taking this sort of thing up individually as time permits.

Mr. Deans: Given that they are provincial responsibilities, don't you think you might have dealt with them instead of the other?

Mr. Kennedy: I didn't hear you.

Mr. Deans: Given that they are provincial responsibilities, don't you think that you might have dealt with them first?

Mr. Kennedy: Just for clarification, there is ongoing dealing with them almost day by day, hour by hour.

Mr. Deans: It doesn't say much for your capacity to deal with them, they are still a big problem.

Mr. Kennedy: They are a big problem and we are working on them, and I will tell the hon. member we are going to solve them, I am committed to that.

Mr. Deans: When, in your lifetime?

Mr. Kennedy: I'll keep you posted.

Mr. Deans: We've been here about the same length of time. They were problems when I came into the House and they are still problems.

Mr. Kennedy: No, they were not. We've moved forward so far with environmental programs that you're left far behind. You're still back in 1967, we're way ahead of that.

Mr. Deans: No, no. The same problems exist, they still exist.

Mr. Kennedy: One major direction in which this government will continue to move relates to the employment and placement of young people in productive occupations. Members will recall that last year this government decided to help create new jobs for the young workers by offering incentives to the private sector. Employers were encouraged to provide on-the-job work experience through the Ontario Career Action Program. They will continue to receive increased encouragement from the government this current year. Last year it was a very successful program. The Ontario Youth Employment Program, designed to help provide summer employment for students, provided a wage subsidy of $1 an hour by direct payment to the employer.

Mr. Warner: Cheap labour; forced, cheap labour.

Mr. Kennedy: All of us, I'm sure, understand the importance of the government's intention to enrich these two programs by providing for the creation of 36,000 jobs in 1978 at a total cost of $26 million, as is stated in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Grande: I thought the government didn't create jobs.

Mr. Kennedy: For those who are already employed it has been announced that the Ministry of Labour will continue efforts to improve employees' working conditions throughout Ontario through the help of the quality of working life advisory committee. The pilot projects in industry that will emerge as the result of this initiative should not only increase job satisfaction but might improve productivity as well. Such carefully considered programs are appreciated by the citizens of Ontario and give them reason for optimism about the course we have embarked on.

Mr. Young: That isn't private enterprise; that is private enterprise dipping into the public purse.

Mr. Grande: You're the only one who's optimistic.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Warner: Public subsidy—cheap labour.

Mr. Kennedy: We'll get around to a lesson in basic economics and socialism a little later.

Mr. Conway: Life is too short to embrace that kind of thinking.

Mr. Kennedy: For small business—here's the part you want to hear, Mr. Speaker—for small business, the government's determination to remove unnecessary red tape is certainly welcome. This deregulation, which will involve the participation of all ministries, is a healthy exercise for government periodically to undertake.

Mr. Deans: Given that they created all the red tape in the first place.

Mr. Kennedy: It should also be of benefit to individual members of the public who deal with the government. Every time we can get out of the way of an honest businessman and let him get the job done without unnecessary hindrance, I believe we are helping concurrently to improve our economic performance and to create jobs.

Mr. Warner: Does Stephen Roman fall in that category?

Mr. Kennedy: I have had occasion to write various ministries on behalf of small business who have pleaded, "Will you get out of our area and leave us alone?" I couldn't be more supportive of those positions.

Mr. Warner: They know what a mess you made of your constituency.

Mr. McClellan: They want you out of there.

Mr. Kennedy: Our area is impressed with the direction the government has given with respect to education; people there speak specifically of the emphasis on special education, which was discussed here last fall. This, in elementary and secondary schools, will enable children with learning disabilities to be identified earlier than before and will ensure that our school boards help all students to their capacity, regardless of their disabilities and handicaps.

As I say, we debated this last fall. We have an association in our area that will be very supportive of this. On television last night there was a very good program explaining some of the problems of children with learning disabilities. I was delighted to see this reference in the Throne Speech.

Mr. McClellan: We'll believe it when we see it.

Mr. Kennedy: I know that it has 100 per cent support and I look forward to supporting it as the session goes on.

Mr. McClellan: Let's wait and see before we cheer it.

Mr. Kennedy: It's got my support.

Mr. McClellan: Let's wait and see what it is.

Mr. Kennedy: Sure. We're going to have a demonstration school—the hon. member should read the Throne Speech then re-read it; it will get through to him—for limited numbers of children with severe learning disabilities who require services which can only be provided in a residential facility.

Mr. Warner: Who sold you that?

Mr. Kennedy: The future of health care looks promising too, if it involves a move away from institutions and into the community. I have always believed that community and residential forms of care brought out the best in people and they tended to increase the role and scope with volunteer work, which all too often has not received the attention and support it deserved.

Again, in our area a volunteer service was established which has a large number of women involved; they go out and assist on an organized basis with agencies which can use such assistance. It's working very well. They work hard at it and they have had three or four successful years. They recognize the community is ultimately a group of neighbours, and this volunteer work enables them to show their tangible concerns for the welfare of one another. It is just very pleasing that those who started this volunteer service have been supported, as the record shows, and they have done a really good job. If I am stressing the community it is because that is precisely what we are here to foster—the values which those who pay our salaries want to have preserved.

Some newspapers, have made some cynical remarks about some of the Minister of Correctional Services' (Mr. Drea's) initiatives. He was out in our riding and received a standing ovation. Through that applause they showed him what a good job they thought he was doing—

Mr. Warner: Tell us about Etobicoke.

Mr. Kennedy: —and I congratulate him on the intention to introduce some of these pilot projects in the community work program—

Mr. Warner: And put people out of work.

Mr. Kennedy: —and we are planning to share in one of those.

There is always room for new ideas. I wish we could get some from across the way.

Mr. Warner: They loved him in Etobicoke.

Mr. Lawlor: What specific one are you going to share in?

Mr. Warner: Putting people out of work.

Mr. Kennedy: Oh, put forward some ideas; not harebrained ones, good ones.

Mr. Lawlor: You are just too vague. What is it you are going to do?

Mr. Kennedy: Another member I want to commend is my colleague and neighbour, the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones).

Mr. Lawlor: Accusing others of being vague.

Mr. Kennedy: His efforts over the past year or two to shed some light on the interrelationship of alcohol and youth provided much of the background needed to proceed with a series of initiatives against alcohol abuse at all levels of society.

Mr. Conway: How much drinking is there out in Mississauga, Doug?

Mr. Kennedy: It is a problem that my community like others is concerned with, particularly as it affects the future of our children.

Mr. Lawlor: I am in a dry area.

Mr. Kennedy: And on the subject of children I would direct the House's attention to the significant legislation which will be introduced to deal with child abuse, improvements in the licensing of group homes for children, and additional protection of the rights of children in residential care facilities.

I understand that legislation will also be introduced to protect children caught up in family disputes.

Mr. McClellan: That's what it says.

Mr. Kennedy: It would be far better if this kind of firm but compassionate legislation were never needed. But since it is, it is essential that we protect the rights and, as has been demonstrated, the lives of children.

The children, of course, are the centre-piece, the strength, of family units and in these times of rapidly changing cultural values, our affluent society and so on, the government has sought to reaffirm its support of families as the cornerstone of society. Some pretty cheap shots have been taken at this stance, but let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, we are not preaching rhetoric as far as I am concerned.

Anyone with a grain of insight will recognize that some of the illnesses that have gained high profile in our courts and our society might have been avoided with more demonstrated support by all of us to the responsible social groupings in our communities.

I understand legislation will be introduced for interim improvements to the Mental Health Act to ensure the highest standards of design and operation in the province's mental health facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I didn't know it was coming but the concept of compulsory automobile insurance is one that I know will find the support of my constituents.

Mr. Conway: Despite Sidney Handleman.

Mr. Kennedy: I notice the member for Lakeshore hasn't made any comment or interjection. Because I presume, Mr. Speaker, this will be instituted by the private sector.

Mr. Lawlor: It would be unmannerly to interject every time I disagreed with you.

Mr. Conway: That's never stopped you in the past.

Mr. Kennedy: No, but you could once in a while when you agree with me.

Mr. Lawlor: I am listening to you, Kennedy, and you are very fortunate.

Mr. Kennedy: So this insurance is to be developed and brought in by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Warner: It will cost all of us a lot more—millions.

[5:00]

Mr. Kennedy: We've got a base of support, I know, for it from the member for Lakeshore and the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick). We'll build around that and away we go.

Mr. Warner: You tread on thin ice. Take a look at the report.

Mr. Conway: Tory socialism.

Mr. Kennedy: We have created in Ontario one of the finest health care delivery systems in the world.

Mr. Warner: And the most expensive.

Mr. Kennedy: Its very success has engendered difficulties which this government is swiftly attempting to bring under control.

Mr. Warner: You've been in charge for over 30 years.

Mr. McClellan: Schizophrenia.

Mr. Kennedy: In this area, we are oriented to corrective medical service. I am no health faddist nor do I go on diet kicks or anything like this, but I really believe if the medical profession would take some time and give some advice on good diet, that would be preventive medicine which would pay off. We hear about the junk foods in the schools and various other—

Mr. Lawlor: Have you talked to the Minister of Labour on this?

Mr. Warner: In fact, you should just stop eating.

Mr. Kennedy: —commodities and foods of low nutritional value. I think there is a big educational job to be done on diet. I mean this sincerely.

Mr. Reed: Are you looking at me when you say that?

Mr. Kennedy: I think we could make some real steps forward with the knowledge of the value of diet, which has changed so much over the years that it seems as if one is fighting the other with all the modern foods that are brought out. Someone said a million dollars is spent on our programs explaining good diet but there is some $90 million spent by the producers of these junk foods to promote their products. I would call that a bit of an imbalance.

Mr. Riddell: Go fight it out with George Weston.

Mr. Kennedy: I think there is work that can be done in that area and we'd be healthier for it if we looked a little closer at our diet.

Mr. Lawlor: What do you think of Kentucky fried chicken?

Mr. Kennedy: We are active on so many fronts in restraining the growth of government while improving the delivery of services—

Mr. McClellan: You are attacking yourself from the rear.

Mr. Warner: This is much better than a serious speech.

Mr. Kennedy: —that I found it difficult to believe my ears when the Leader of the Opposition got up last week and claimed the Throne Speech offered no direction. There's direction on every page of it. Not only have we offered provincial direction but we have also offered suggestions for the direction the entire country should take if we are to resolve our difficulties—

Mr. Warner: Down the pipe.

Mr. Kennedy: —particularly the major ones, our economic concerns.

Mr. Grande: What did you do about that?

Mr. Kennedy: Opposition speakers in both parties like to give the impression that if they were in control of the government—

Mr. Riddell: Which we will be after the next election.

Mr. Kennedy: —we'd have full employment next week, straight away. It's bad enough for citizens to be confronted with genuine economic problems but to compound our difficulties by trying to sell the silly idea that there is a simple answer to everything—

Mr. Conway: Get rid of the Tories.

Mr. McClellan: That's the best simple answer we've seen.

Mr. Kennedy: —if only the government would legislate away our problems is distressing and intellectually dishonest.

Mr. Conway: Who wrote that one?

Mr. Warner: Did the Treasurer give you these lines?

Mr. Kennedy: Her Honour and I wrote it together.

I want to put this point another way. Even if all of us in this House—in fact, if all of the parliaments in Canada found agreement for a common course of action and even if that direction were supported by the media as well as business and labour, we would still only be at the beginning of a very large task indeed.

Mr. Conway: You don't believe the charter? What happened to the charter?

Mr. Kennedy: There would still be many aspects of the problem beyond our capacity to control. The opposition can't fool the people of Ontario into thinking that this government, as they have claimed, was responsible for the soft international market, that this government was responsible for drastically altered energy costs—

Mr. Warner: We don't try to fool the people.

Mr. Kennedy: —that this government was responsible for the baby boom—we are even blamed for that—

Mr. Conway: The member for Renfrew South is just behind you.

Mr. Kennedy: —and the attendant diversion of government funds or any of the other host of difficulties with which we have had to contend.

Mr. Warner: You're going to tell us you're not responsible for anything?

Mr. Kennedy: There was a time when government was responsible—

Mr. Bradley: Does that mean you're irresponsible?

Mr. Warner: Do you call that irresponsible?

Mr. Kennedy: Will you listen for a while? There was a time when government was responsible for doing a few specific things. It was great. Does the hon. member remember when—it was before he was born perhaps—all the Ministry of Health did was ensure there was a nurse in the schools? That's about all they did.

Mr. Warner: You're proud of that?

Mr. Kennedy: Think about what the ministry is now. It is the biggest spending one—it even surpasses education spending.

Mr. Warner: You're proud of that, no public health insurance?

Mr. Kennedy: That just illustrates the change of government involvement in working for the people.

Mr. Warner: You should be ashamed of yourself, but you are proud of that.

Mr. Kennedy: We're now the court of last resort to all groups in society, it seems to me, who have any complaints, regardless of whether it represents a legitimate concern of government or whether it doesn't. I'm confident the people of Ontario, while supportive of our government's compassion for those who need our help—

Mr. Davidson: They haven't been in the last two elections.

Mr. Kennedy: —are equally supportive of the need for a new level of personal resourcefulness in our society. Where this government can help that resourcefulness, as with incentives to the private sector, it will continue to do so.

Mr. Warner: It's called abdicating your responsibilities.

Mr. Davidson: Tell that to the 316,000 unemployed.

Mr. Kennedy: Where legislative injustices exist or rights are not protected, changes will be made. But attitudes must change as well, particularly among the opposition, whose apparent plan that we should be all things to all people is a dangerous misrepresentation of our proper function in society. It's time those fellows understood it.

Mr. Bradley: That happened in the last election—all things to all people.

Mr. Kennedy: The people of Ontario do not seek representation by a government that thinks of them as wards of the state, as the NDP would say.

Mr. Conway: Are you paying Kealey 30 grand for that?

Mr. Kennedy: The hon. members opposite can't seem to get that into their heads, and it's time they did.

Mr. Lawlor: There's a roof falling in on you.

Mr. Kennedy: My community and my province is composed of individuals who can make their own way in this world very nicely. They only ask of the government that it treat them with maturity.

Mr. Davidson: If you provide the opportunity, which you're not doing.

Mr. Kennedy: We are doing it. We're doing just that.

Mr. Riddell: Where did you find Segal after he was let go from the Premier's office?

Mr. Kennedy: Our approach at the conference of first ministers was mature. Our budget of March 7 will also reflect a realistic, mature economic position and our Speech from the Throne is a part of that tradition.

Mr. Warner: Three hundred thousand out of work and you have no answer—nothing.

Mr. Lawlor: One of the weakest speeches ever given.

Mr. Riddell: Now for some words of wisdom.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to rise in reply to the speech of Her Honour. Before I get into the body of the few words that I was intending to exchange, I have to respond to some of the words of the member for Mississauga South. First of all—

Mr. Riddell: Don't waste your time.

Mr. Reed: Well, he said some things that must not go unchallenged this afternoon.

Mr. Kennedy: It was a good speech.

Mr. Reed: I'll let him off easy on the first, because it was a reference to diet. I hope he wasn't looking across the House straight at me when he was making those references.

Mr. Lawlor: You're too self-conscious.

Mr. Reed: He and I will concur on the advisability of good dietary practices, I'm sure.

He made another reference, though, which is probably the greatest single demonstration of the hypocrisy of that party on the other side. Sooner or later each member gets up and makes his little pitch for the free enterprise system—

Mr. Kennedy: Are you against it?

Mr. Reed: —and how it's time we had more free enterprise and we left people alone.

I couldn't agree more. The Tory party does not have any exclusive jurisdiction over the free enterprise system or the free enterprise idea. I would just like to point out a couple of things to him about his espousal of free enterprise that he might be interested in knowing. The first involves a report that I read and was very disturbed by this afternoon—the preliminary proposals of the Niagara Escarpment Commission. You've heard of the Niagara Escarpment Commission, I am sure.

Mr. Kennedy: Good program.

Mr. Reed: One of the very interesting approaches of the Niagara Escarpment Commission is to pull one of the greatest reversals of the free enterprise system that we have ever seen. It imposes control; it designates. And the greatest pain of all was something I read on these preliminary proposals on page 49, regarding the Bruce Trail.

The Bruce Trail, as you know, runs for a good many miles and originally came about through the generosity and good will of farmers and landowners along the escarpment. It does not exist in legislation but it was the result of handshake agreements and good will. And as a result of the subsequent abuses of the privileges that were extended by those handshake agreements, some farmers and landowners have seen fit to cancel those privileges extended not through any coercion but out of the goodness of their heart. To me, that is an example of free enterprise.

But what do I see recommended on page 49 of this preliminary proposal? It says, and I quote, "The provincial government may resort to expropriation only in cases when all reasonable efforts to acquire railway lands or interests therein by negotiations have failed."

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, come off it. The subdividers have cut them out and they have to get back.

Mr. Reed: It just goes to show that, here they are, carrying the great flag for free enterprise—

Mr. Lawlor: They would take their bloody houses to the lip of the escarpment. Cut them out.

Mr. Reed: —but at the same time, introducing socialism just about as fast as they jolly well can.

Mr. Lawlor: Balderdash.

Mr. Bounsall: Resign.

Mr. Reed: You know, I would like to talk about another little area of free enterprise, and it is in connection with the Ministry of Energy. The Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz), through the Throne Speech, announced that the moneys available for renewable resource development would be upgraded this year.

We are not too sure where they will be upgraded from or to because his predecessor, the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) announced in the House last December that the new budget would contain an amount of $4.4 million for renewable resource development, and I think that included $2.5 million for solar projects and the balance for other forms of renewable resources.

It came to me from various knowledgeable people that that amount of money might be cut back. We might not get the $4.4 million. So I would be very interested in asking the government whether this so-called upgrading which is so highly touted in the Throne Speech is an upgrade from $4.4 million to something greater than that, which is what we recommended to the government two years ago, or if it is an increase over the $350,000 which was the amount made available for renewable resource development last year?

And in that respect, I should point out that of all that money, not one copper is available to the free enterprise system. Not one plugged nickel is available as seed money to private development, to private companies, to private investment.

So think about free enterprise and when you are carrying this great torch for the free enterprise system, just remember some of the things that your own government is doing in that regard.

An hon. member: Are you against it?

Mr. Conway: They are all McMurry socialists over there. You can tell.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, we are about to have a decision from the Premier as to whether or not he will sign two uranium contracts which amount in total over the next 30 to 35 years to over $7 billion. These are the largest contracts of their kind in the history of uranium business; the largest in the world, so far as we know.

Mr. Conway: A real sellout.

An hon. member: Are you helping them?

Mr. Reed: They are negotiated for the purpose of supplying fuel to five committed nuclear engine complexes which are either constructed now or will be constructed by the middle of the next decade.

[5:15]

The select committee, of which I was privileged to be a member, spent an agonizing five weeks trying to learn about these contracts, study them and draw some intelligent conclusions. I realize that may be difficult for me to do, but I think as a large body we do have that capability. It is unfortunate that the debate that ensued from the testimony seemed to disperse along party lines. Rather than having the kind of objective conclusions that we would hope to have when we are studying something of this magnitude, it seemed that the NDP opted for nationalization and the Tories opted for signing of the contracts.

Interjections.

Mr. Reed: The only party that could try to present a constructive position was the Liberal Party.

Mr. Conway: As always.

Mr. Samis: You offered no alternatives. In other words, you were speaking from both sides of your mouth.

Mr. Reed: I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if these contracts are signed, and I say this with the gravest of concern, they stand to commit the people of Ontario to $2 billion of excess, unnecessary profit over and above what could be considered a reasonable profit over cost.

Mr. Warner: That's called free enterprise.

Mr. Riddell: They get some of that back in the Tory coffers.

Mr. Reed: Do you know what they are saying on Bay Street about these contracts? Steve Roman really put it over on Bill Davis. I admit that the Premier has not signed these contracts as yet.

Mr. Lawlor: He will.

Mr. Reed: But it would appear that he is going to go ahead and do it. The argument on the other side is that security of supply is more vital than the price being paid because, even if these exorbitant profits are paid, the monthly rate will only amount to 75 cents or $1 a month per household for the next 30 years. That is the way our Hydro rates have been going up for the last six or seven years. It has been 75 cents a month, a couple of dollars a month and a dollar a month here. We say it's time that was stopped.

We cannot afford the kind of extravagance that these contracts represent. When one considers the price as opposed to security of supply, one sees obviously that during the most important years of the contracts—the first 15 years—there will not be enough uranium delivered in those contracts to satisfy the requirements of the machinery. There is even a shortfall. The contracts don't even provide the basic direction which the federal government lays down, that is, that 15 years' supply of fuel should be secured for every committed nuclear reactor. They do not even do that. Yet here we are prepared to give away the store out of fear.

In 1973, George Gathercole, who was then the chairman of Ontario Hydro, said that acquisition of an ore body or acquisition of a mine was the route to go.

Mr. Warner: It is called public ownership.

Mr. Davidson: Public ownership from George Gathercole?

Mr. Reed: We have got one of the largest utilities in the world now under public ownership and I must admit it is subject to some concern on my part with the contracts about to be signed.

Mr. Bounsall: We may have to sell it, is that what you want?

Mr. Warner: To the lowest bidder.

Mr. Reed: Hydro went in in fear, with all of the armament that they could have used taken away from them by the Treasurer, then the Minister of Energy, and they came out with what they considered to be the best deal under the circumstances. I agree that it probably was the best under the circumstances but there is one hole you could drive a truck through in that argument. That is that there is no reason why the circumstances should not have been changed.

The government has done virtually nothing in this regard. I've seen chapter and verse of the letters, Telexes and so on that were exchanged between the federal and provincial governments in order to try and change the federal policy which is an outdated, antiquated policy formulated in the time when nuclear fissile material was used for the construction of bombs.

Mr. Grande: 2000 BC.

Mr. Reed: It was 1948, I believe, which was the basis for that federal policy. We looked at the chapter and verse and even looked at the last Telex that was sent by the new Minister of Energy to the federal Minister of Energy to get a confirmation of the federal position on this whole thing. This was one of the appeals that the provincial government was making to the federal government to change the policy and it read something like the vacuum cleaner salesman going into the lady's house and saying: "You don't want to buy a vacuum cleaner, do you?" That's the kind of effort that the government made.

The Premier, through two elections, has never made a public policy statement on uranium. Yet here we have Ontario Hydro committed to a nuclear-or-bust program between now and the end of the century. We've gone through two elections and no statement of provincial public policy has been made. I wonder what kind of leadership we are experiencing.

Mr. Grande: None.

Mr. Conway: Absolutely none.

Mr. Reed: In terms of our energy future—and I am privileged to be the energy critic for my party—I would like to say a few words about the situation we are faced with now and, I think, in the future.

The first is that the evolution we have experienced in the past, since the advent of the industrial revolution, and the use of the kind of energy that we've discovered in the ground, the petroleum and the coal, has speeded up as the years have gone on. It seems that we are moving towards a point where we are going to pass through one phase and into another very, very quickly.

It's very difficult for the human mind to comprehend that kind of change because our evolution as people, as human beings, or our social evolution, has really not kept up. Just as an example, one would have to point out that we still look to philosophers who lived 3,000 years ago—and rightly so I suppose—for the philosophical base. Yet, if we look back on our technological base we go back to the invention of the internal combustion engine. It's that kind of relative speed with which our technology has evolved that is cause for many of us to wonder how much more quickly it's going to go and where it can go.

One of our responses as human beings has been to continue to try and expand the institutions that we come to know, because those are the concepts that we understand most easily. An example is that we project expansion for our nuclear capacity in Ontario because we say the growth is going to be and continue to be exponential—that is it's going up on a gradually increasing scale. If you look at Hydro's long-range forecasts, what you find is that a new nuclear plant in the 1990s will be coming into existence every nine months.

You know and I know that the province can't afford it. But we also know that our standard of living has, up until this time, depended on consumption. It has been the norm upon which we based our economy.

We have been prepared to pay for that kind of approach by accepting escalating pollution and in spite of the halting attempts of the government. They really do nothing about the pollution in our environment whatsoever. The new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) went on record, two days after he was sworn in, as saying that pollution standards would have to be relaxed in the coming months in order to facilitate employment. I had the experience of being with one of the NDP members, speaking to the Environmental Law Association, who also espoused the same kind of philosophy. It was interesting to see the NDP and the Tories in bed together.

Mr. Warner: You had better clarify that.

Mr. Reed: Well, the hon. member should ask the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) exactly what he said. He should also ask his friends from the Ontario Federation of Labour; the treasurer, who was there, talked proudly about marching with the demonstrators at the Darlington site.

Mr. Warner: That has nothing to do with pollution standards, and you know it.

Mr. Reed: The truth is, we have to take a new look at our consumption—

Mr. Bounsall: The march was by those wanting pollution standards and environmental assessment.

Mr. Reed: I wish I had heard that.

Mr. Lawlor: He is saying it's just the reverse of what you are saying.

Mr. Reed: We have to take a new look at the way we approach consumption and at the way our society approaches consumption. We know that the opportunities to conserve our resources are enormous; we are just beginning to learn what they are and where we can apply them most easily and quickly.

One of the frustrations is in watching probably the largest bureaucracy in North America or the world, Ontario Hydro, not being able to come to terms with the obvious necessity of moving into a conserver society in the next decade. The approach that Ontario Hydro takes is that it is not within its mandate to do anything tangible in terms of conservation measures. The select committee on Ontario Hydro directed that utility to take some steps in that regard. But when you get down to the nitty-gritty, the president of Ontario Hydro will tell you, as he has told me in Energy estimates, that it is not within their jurisdiction to do certain fundamental things and therefore they simply ignore them. They consider their mandate simply to build to meet what is considered to be projected demand.

What is the result of that? The result is, now that we are out of the hydraulic generating base—since less than half of our electric power is generated hydraulically—we are into primarily a thermal configuration. If anybody knows a little bit about the conversion of energy to produce electricity in a thermal system, he knows that a nuclear plant converts it at about 27 per cent efficiency, that a coal plant converts it at roughly 35 per cent efficiency and that a natural gas consuming generating plant burns it at about 40 per cent efficiency. That means roughly two-thirds of the energy that is put into those thermal generating plants is ejected directly into the biosphere. For the 3,000 megawatts at Bruce operating on the base load every day, 6,000 megawatt-hours are being ejected in the form of cooling water into the Great Lakes.

[5:30]

Hydro says it really doesn't have a mandate to look after the total picture. Its mandate is only to generate electric power. It is our belief that all future thermal plants should be considered only in combination with the end use of the by-product heat. This is a technique that's old hat to all of the jurisdictions in Europe that have been into thermal generation of electric power for many years, because they simply were not blessed with the kind of wonderful falling water that we have been blessed with here in the province of Ontario.

As we go along, over the next 30 or 40 years, if we are going to use—as Hydro tells us—200 million pounds of uranium, it means that the energy potential of 140 million pounds of that uranium will simply be shot. It will be wasted in the Great Lakes. And, you know, there are environmental consequences. I don't suppose that the new Minister of the Environment would be really concerned that there are environmental consequences, because he has as much as said so. Ontario Hydro is the biggest waster of its own energy.

There are two kinds of conservation that should go on record. One, of course, is the conservation of quantity; conservation where we use a little less. We know that we can go from one point to another with half the Btu consumption that we use at the present time. We know that we can design our homes to use half of the heating requirements at the present time and with little or no extra cost. There are so many things that we understand that we can do.

But there is another form of conservation that probably has the potential of having far more impact than the quantitative conservation. That is the selection of energy sources for their highest end use. For instance, we know that we convert natural gas in an electric generating plant at about 40 per cent of thermal efficiency. If we put that same natural gas through a water heater in a domestic residence, we convert it at about 78 to 80 per cent of thermal efficiency.

To this date there has been virtually no attention paid to this form of energy conservation. All we have heard about is the advertisements on television—which are grossly inaccurate, incidentally, or at least they are misleading—that project backwards a growth rate of seven per cent per annum for Ontario Hydro. Since 1970, Ontario Hydro has really not had a growth rate of that magnitude. Last year the overall growth rate was 2.2 per cent.

The renewable resource budget of the minister's has another very interesting aspect, and that is its potential for the future of this province in terms of its commerce and industry. If we accept the fact that we are gradually phasing down our use of non-renewable energies and that we are gradually phasing up our use of renewable resources—when we are learning to live from our energy incomes, rather than our energy capital as we have been doing for so long—then we have to consider the potential for industry, for employment, for invention and for patent that can keep Ontario's share of the industrial potential in this change-over era.

Two years ago we proposed to the then Minister of Energy, the member for Don Mills (Mr. Timbrell), that an amount of money roughly equal to the amount of money per capita spent by ERDA—that's the American Energy Research and Development Association—be spent in Ontario for precisely the same thing, where we could develop our own patents, our own hardware and where we could take our place in this change-over process. I expressed the fear to him at that time that if we did not we would end up doing exactly the same as we have done so many times before, and that is wait for our neighbours to the south to develop the technology and then we would simply buy theirs. What happens is that the brains trusts, the creative abilities, all migrate away and we continue to be hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Last week in the House my leader asked a question about the Darlington nuclear plant. We have a new load forecast about to be presented publicly, which according to reports will reduce the increase in electric power consumption up until 1986 a total of 3,000 megawatts annually. In our opinion, this would allow us to reassess the Darlington plant in terms of the Environmental Assessment Act. We understand, as the Minister of Energy pointed out on a radio station last night, that in order to apply the Environmental Assessment Act one has to go back to the beginning and do the considerations right from the very beginning. But I would submit that because of this new load forecast we indeed do have the time. We have the time to give it the most earnest consideration. If the Environmental Assessment Act is to mean anything at all, it's got to apply to government projects just as much as it has to apply to private projects. We can't have it both ways.

The government so far has made such a mockery of the Environmental Assessment Act that, first of all, it has been rendered virtually meaningless; and secondly, it's been nothing but a hollow public relations tool that's been used by the government.

Mr. Conway: A hollow reed.

Mr. Havrot: Apt description.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, where are we going? We are passing the Environmental Assessment Act, but we are not applying it because of the urgency of time. We're continuing to expand our energy systems because those are the things we know, and we think that if we simply apply what we know now we can satisfy our needs and requirements. But I would submit to this House that the time is long overdue when we have to move into these new areas and we have to move into them very quickly. The conserver society, the elements of conservation, will be part of the means by which we can move from the kind of consumption society that we're involved in now to a new society based on new technologies.

It was interesting to note the other day when the Premier came to the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs that he was in the company of his good wife. It was appropriate, of course, that she should be there. It was even more significant to me though that he was not in the company of his children. Because I would submit to the Premier that the way he's taking this province, especially with these contracts, if he signs them tomorrow, it's his children who are going to have to pay for that decision.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, do you wish me to begin now or should I wait another couple of minutes until all the members have had a chance to get in and sit down?

An hon. member: Let me say it for you—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would suggest to the member that he commence immediately.

Mr. Sterling: Resign now.

Mr. Lewis: Julian, you could stop those contracts if you wanted to.

Mr. Riddell: I have heard of Tory arrogance, but that beats it.

Mr. Lewis: You could stop those contracts if you wanted to. Is it worth a non-confidence motion to you, Julian, for the future of the children?

An hon. member: What do you say, fellows?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Don't give us that children stuff when you are not prepared to go down the line.

Mr. Reed: At what price?

Mr. Lewis: Aha! So that's what it is? Your political seats but not the contracts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, this is the culmination of the argument that went on between the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed) and the member for Mississauga South in trying to determine who was more Tory and who was more capitalist than the other.

Mr. Lewis: I vote for the member for Halton-Burlington.

Mr. McClellan: He has five children.

Mr. Reed: If you say "more capitalist," I will accept it. Don't say "more Tory."

Mr. Warner: This is much like the two officers trying to decide which one of them should be the captain of the Titanic. And it won't make any difference which one of them is selected, because that boat is going down.

An hon. member: You guys would know all about that. That is something you could comment on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Renfrew North is not in his seat.

Mr. Warner: I didn't want to mention that, but if he wants to make comments perhaps he could take his seat. And I could suggest where he could take it.

I am assuming too that we are going to have a full and proper debate on the subject of that contract. What is so disturbing about the comments of the member for Halton-Burlington—and I realize he has spent a great deal of time and is quite learned on these matters—is that while he fully recognizes it was of necessity that we established a public corporation in the province to administer the affairs of Hydro, because that is very properly a service to the good people of Ontario, he is not prepared to say that the ingredients needed to make that system work—for example, the uranium—should not also come under the public ownership of the people of Ontario. Without that ingredient, we are left at the mercy of Steve Roman. It's very simple. It's very clear.

Interjection.

Mr. Warner: The people of this province will pay a handsome price for many years, for decades, because the member for Halton-Burlington and others in the Liberal Party are fully prepared to give Steve Roman a windfall profit of millions of dollars, all at the expense of the public of Ontario. It is unfortunate, because the Liberal Party obviously has a chance to stand up and act on behalf of the people of Ontario and not in the interests of Steve Roman and others of his ilk who would pillage this country.

Mr. Reed: How much a share are you willing to pay now?

Mr. Warner: In terms of the Throne Speech, I wish to enter a quote—probably a well-known quote at this juncture but nonetheless important: “After eight spectacularly dull years of unimaginative yet expensive government, Davis has reached a redundant low in boredom and banal generalities.”

Mr. Gregory: Did you write that?

[5:45]

Mr. Warner: No. That came from a defender of the democratic socialists, Mr. Claire Hoy, that eminent reporter from the Toronto Sun who recognized the Throne Speech for what it was. It is more than simply dull and banal; it is more dangerous than that, quite frankly, because it didn't address the single most pressing problem that faces our nation and faces the people in Ontario: jobs. Aside from the one comment on providing jobs for youth in the coming summer, there is no other specific recognition of this single most pressing issue. And so somewhere in the neighbourhood of 300,000 people in Ontario are faced with the prospect of continued unemployment, and perhaps a worsening situation.

Now we add to that a couple of ingredients. One is that if the people of Ontario are upset about the unemployment problem, one way out of it is to relax our pollution standards; that will create jobs. And so we enter into a debate of trying to trade off pollution standards versus jobs. What a ridiculous argument to get into.

Surely there should be protection for the people, not only the people who are in the community but the people who are working there. If, for example, you relax the standards so as to provide jobs, then what of those people who are taking these new-found jobs in areas not protected by pollution standards? Are they to more easily contract industrial diseases? It's a ridiculous kind of argument to get into but the government wishes to enter into that kind of argument.

Secondly—and this is in keeping with the so-called “buy Canadian” theme—what the government means to say isn't “buy Canadian” at all but “buy Canada,” because they've been offering to sell it for quite a few years. Along with the federal Liberals, the Ontario Conservatives have now decided to more actively pursue the business of selling out Ontario, probably not even to the highest bidder but to the lowest.

The new Minister of Industry and Tourism, (Mr. Rhodes) last Thursday evening at the Royal York Hotel addressed a group of businessmen from Japan, the Japanese Trade Mission. In part he said that we in Ontario make it possible for investors to realize a more than ample return on investment capital. And I go to the rest of the speech—there's no point in reading all of it—“We want you in Japan to come and invest more and more and more in Ontario.” And the corollary to that is pretty obvious, as you realize Mr. Speaker, that the profits from that investment go back to Japan; they don't reside in Ontario.

And even within the context of the so-called free enterprise system—and I have never believed for a moment that it was free—but the enterprise system to which the government adheres and to which the Liberals adhere in a more right-wing fashion, even in that context am I to assume that it is a free enterprise system for everyone outside of Ontario but not for the people in Ontario; that this government isn't interested in encouraging investment of its own people here within the province but has to go out to try to round up investors from the United States and Japan and so sell out some more of our resources? That is in fact what is happening. And that is in fact what they seem to be encouraging from the Throne Speech.

[The direction is pretty obvious. And it bothers me greatly, because instead of developing a good solid industrial base in this province with other than simply the extraction of the natural resources, we are still willing to sell off those natural resources. And so we will never have our own independent economy—never, so long as the Tories are in business.

There is something else that disturbs me from the Throne Speech and that is that we have in Ontario an extremely serious housing problem. We have, for example, in Metro Toronto, over 10,000 people on the waiting list for Ontario Housing. We have a growing number of families who are seeking accommodation, and yet the government didn't see fit to address that problem in the Throne Speech. I submit that in addressing it, it could also have talked in terms of jobs. Surely for the government to be involved directly with funds in either encouraging industry to actually build units or to do some of it themselves or to promote the growth of non-profit co-operative housing would not only have met some of the crises in the housing field, but would have provided jobs—thousands and thousands of jobs. And that's what we need.

There are close to 100,000 people in the city of Metro Toronto without work, and many of those people living in my area in Scarborough are desperately seeking work and they can't find it. At the same time, they know there's a desperate shortage of housing, which they can't find either. What they're looking for is some government leadership which says, "We know there's a problem and we're going to meet it. We're going to provide housing. We're going to make sure that the job gets done. We're not going to let greedy developers gobble up all the land and sell it for whatever highest price they can get, but we're going to make sure that those land prices remain constant."

Mr. Reed: Freeze it until you can buy it back cheap.

Mr. Warner: "We're going to make sure that the mortgage interest rates are pegged at a proper level," as they have done in many jurisdictions. The federal government of the United States, for example, guarantees 7.75 per cent mortgage interest. But not over here. We'll gouge the public for whatever we can get. So goes the government philosophy.

That leadership is needed in the field of housing and, I submit, by so doing you would also be meeting that very serious problem we have of unemployment. We're not getting that. In fact, we're getting the opposite reaction.

At some point, I think we need a direct confrontation over the Workmen's Compensation Board. We have to find out once and for all whether it's government policy that there shall not be any increases to those injured workers—and that every one of us as members should advise those people who come into our office that if you're starving, go onto welfare. If you're an injured worker and you have given a portion of your life to the workplace and you've been injured, this government coldly and callously says to you, "You don't get any more money than that pittance that we're giving you now. Go onto welfare."

I cannot but interpret otherwise the statements that were made by the Minister of Labour on Friday last. I sat here and heard those words in utter disbelief, that a Minister of Labour, someone who presumably is concerned about the workers of this province, should make such a statement.

Perhaps the minister should consult with her colleague who sits just beside her—the new Minister of Industry and Tourism. He says that we have one of the finest work forces in the whole world, and I assume that means they should be treated with some dignity. He claims, and rightly so, that Canada's productivity is equal to that of the United States. I quote: "Plant floor productivity is equal to that of the Americans for equivalent technology . . . Provincial statistics clearly show that 95 per cent of management-union disputes in industry are settled without labour resorting to strike action . . . We have an enlightened and much-admired labour-management relationship."

That can be challenged. But he pays tribute to the workers of this province, and rightly so. That tribute's long overdue. If he believes that, perhaps he should have a little chat with the Minister of Labour. She should either understand something about the workers of this province, or quit the job and give it to someone else who can. But I, for one, as a member of this assembly, am horrified when I hear the statements that were made as they were on Friday. Surely that kind of attitude cannot be tolerated and surely it has to be changed.

Mr. Lewis: Made on Friday and denied Monday.

Mr. Warner: I am deviating from what I had set out to say because there were a couple of things I wanted to talk about as they were related to the Throne Speech. But I could not help but to make comments upon the activities and the actions of the Minister of Labour both on Friday and again today, because it disturbs me very deeply that workers especially those who have been injured in the workplace, who have given of themselves physically, should be abused in such a cold way.

Mr. Lewis: We are establishing a bureau of accuracy for the Ministry of Labour over here. The Minister of Revenue might convey that to the cabinet.

Mr. Laughren: There needs to be a bureau of honesty.

Mr. Lewis: We prefer to call it a bureau of accuracy in the first phase. I approach these things in an evolutionary way.

Mr. Warner: There was one interesting point from the Throne Speech. As a member of the select committee on company law studying the auto insurance industry, I found it very interesting that the government should commit itself to compulsory auto insurance. What I also understand is that there is only one reason which holds the government back from fully endorsing and embracing a public insurance scheme. That is their rigid dogma—the rigidity that they cannot be flexible even in the face of facts.

The last time I made these comments or comments to this effect, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, was just before the House rose in December. There were a couple of members on the other side who took some exception—a couple of members indeed who were awakened by my remarks. What they did not realize was that the consultants' reports, those good defenders of socialism called Woods, Gordon, underscore heavily that a public auto insurance scheme is more effective, more efficient and cheaper than a private one.

We are not just talking about a few dollars but in the millions of dollars. In fact, the consultants' report draws the conclusion that in the province of Ontario, if we were to have a public car insurance system, the people of Ontario would save tens of millions of dollars annually because of the more efficient car insurance scheme. Those remarks were upheld in Manitoba under that new Conservative government and in British Columbia under that new Social Credit government; which also said, by the way, that private enterprise could not possibly run the thing as well. They were the exact words of Mr.

DeGeer, the honourable minister in charge of the program.

Mr. Conway: It's McGeer.

Mr. Warner: Sorry McGeer. The other chap is in London. It is only their rigidity and their inflexibility which hold them back from adopting that which is reasonable, that which the people of Ontario want and that which, it seems now, they will only get when we form the government in this province. I make the promise that this party has always done, that when we form this government in Ontario the people will be treated to a good public car insurance system.

Hopefully, in conclusion, the next time when a Throne Speech is made, and I assume that will be under a different direction—

Mr. Conway: Yes.

Mr. Kennedy: We won't hold our breath.

Mr. Warner: —the final line will not apply, the final line being the wonder that Lieutenant Governor Pauline McGibbon managed to stay awake when she read it. Our Throne Speech will be exciting. It will promise leadership and it will show direction so that people are again working in this province and the economy rolls along the way it should despite the 35 years of Tory mismanagement. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riddell: It is always nice to end up on a humorous note.

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved the adjournment of the debate.

On motion by the Hon. Mr. Maeck, the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

CONTENTS

Monday, February 27, 1978

Minority language rights, statement by Mr. Davis	119
OECA awards, statement by Mr. Welch	119
Science award, statement by Mr. Welch	119
Health records, question of Mr. McMurtry: Mr. S. Smith	120
Barrie annexation proposal, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. MacDonald	120
Hydro contracts, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Reid	121
Onakawana lignite deposits, questions of Mr. F. S. Miller: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Cunningham	123
Puslinch township, questions of Mr. McKeough: Mr. Sweeney	124
Boarding house fire, questions of Mrs. Birch: Mr. Laughren, Mr. S. Smith	125
Ontario Northland rail service, questions of Mr. Bernier: Mr. G. E. Smith, Mr. Eakins	125
Transportation of hazardous substances, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Kerrio, Mr. Makarchuk, Mr. B. Newman	126
PCB hazard, question of B. Stephenson: Mr. Mackenzie	127
Minority language rights, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Rotenberg, Mr. di Santo	127
Financial protection for farmers, questions of Mr. W. Newman: Mr. Riddell, Mr. Gaunt	128
Community law clinics, questions of Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Lawlor, Mrs. Campbell	129
Workmen's compensation, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Cassidy	130
Point of privilege re workmen's compensation allowance, Mr. Lewis	132
Throne Speech debate, continued, Mr. Drea, Mr. Conway, Mr. Ziemba, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Reed, Mr. Warner	133
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Maeck, agreed to	160
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Maeck, agreed to	160

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

- Bernier, Hon. L.; Minister of Northern Affairs (Kenora PC)
 Birch, Hon. M.; Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Scarborough East PC)
 Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
 Bradley, J. (St. Catharines L)
 Campbell, M. (St. George L)
 Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
 Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
 Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
 Davidson, M. (Cambridge NDP)
 Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
 Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
 di Santo, O. (Downsview NDP)
 Drea, Hon. F.; Minister of Correctional Services (Scarborough Centre PC)
 Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
 Edighoffer, H.; Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
 Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
 Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
 Gigantes, E. (Carleton East NDP)
 Grande, A. (Oakwood NDP)
 Gregory, M. E. C. (Mississauga East PC)
 Havrot, E. (Timiskaming PC)
 Kennedy, R. D. (Mississauga South PC)
 Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General (Burlington South PC)
 Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
 Laughren, F. (Nickel Belt NDP)
 Lawlor, P. D. (Lakeshore NDP)
 Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
 MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
 Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
 Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
 Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
 McCague, Hon. G.; Minister of the Environment (Dufferin Simcoe PC)
 McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
 McKeough, Hon. W. D.; Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs
 (Chatham-Kent PC)
 McMurtry, Hon. R.; Attorney General (Eglinton PC)
 Miller, Hon. F. S.; Minister of Natural Resources (Muskoka PC)
 Newman, B. (Windsor-Walkerville L)
 Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
 Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
 O'Neil, H. (Quinte L)
 Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
 Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
 Riddell, J. (Huron-Middlesex L)
 Rotenberg D.; Acting Speaker (Wilson Heights PC)
 Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)
 Smith, G. E. (Simcoe East PC)
 Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
 Stephenson, Hon. B. Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
 Sterling, N. W. (Carleton-Grenville PC)
 Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
 Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)
 Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)
 Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)
 Young, F. (Yorkview NDP)
 Ziemba, E. (High Park-Swansea NDP)

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Tuesday, February 28, 1978

Afternoon Sitting

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

DARLINGTON NUCLEAR PLANT

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege: Yesterday afternoon in this chamber, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed) stated the following:

"The new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) went on record, two days after he was sworn in, as saying that pollution standards would have to be relaxed in the coming months in order to facilitate employment. I had the experience of being with one of the NDP members, speaking to the Environmental Law Association, who also espoused the same kind of philosophy. It was interesting to see the NDP and the Tories in bed together."

There was an interjection and the hon. member followed up by saying:

"Well, the hon. member should ask the member for Nickel Belt exactly what he said. He should also ask his friends from the Ontario Federation of Labour; the treasurer, who was there, talked proudly about marching with the demonstrators at the Darlington site."

In the interest of the truth, I would like to clarify what was said at the annual meeting of the Canadian Environmental Law Association. What I did say was that I understood the dilemma of workers when they were faced with the cruel choice of either unemployment or participating in a job that contributed to the destruction of our environment.

Ms. Gigantes: A false choice.

Mr. Laughren: I also know, given the economic policies of this government and of the federal government, that workers will increasingly have to make that rather cruel choice.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of correcting the record.

Mr. Martel: Some people are careless with the truth.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

BOARDING HOUSE FIRE

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, several questions were asked yesterday about a fire at an unlicensed boarding home in Chelmsford. Five elderly residents died at that time and a sixth person died Saturday night in a Sudbury Hospital.

An inquest has been set for Monday, April 10, and it is to be conducted by Dr. Donald McGowan of Capreol. I share the concerns of my colleagues regarding the circumstances under which this tragedy took place and I will pursue this with my colleagues, the ministers of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton).

I can confirm for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) that space was available at the Pioneer Home for the Aged in Sudbury, about seven miles away. I am sure he would agree that the role of government is to protect those who are not competent. It is not the role of government to tell people where they should live.

SECURITIES LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today, bills that would revise the Securities Act, enact a new Commodity Futures Act and make corollary amendments to the Business Corporations Act.

Last fall, I announced we would not proceed with this package of bills until the spring session in order to provide both the new chairman of the Ontario Securities Commission and myself with an opportunity to review the legislation. This is now done.

Additional review and consultation with interested organizations has resulted in a number of changes in each of the major bills. The principles of these changes have been discussed with most of the provincial securities commissions and I am optimistic that the bills I am tabling today will establish the precedent for uniform securities and commodity futures legislation across Canada.

A number of areas of the new Securities Act are revised to enhance effective investor protection. The most significant changes include: detailed provisions requiring timely disclosure of material events in the affairs of reporting issuers; more detailed rules concerning takeover bids; a new pattern of exemptions from prospectus filing requirements; more detailed rules establishing civil liability for inadequate documents—including, for the first time, specific statutory liability of underwriters.

In addition, there are a number of changes of a technical nature that will improve the practical application of the Act and its efficient administration. Past versions of this bill have been described to this Legislature, but I should refer to the significant changes that have resulted from the consultation of the past couple of months.

Most important is the area of takeover bids. The Securities Act defines "takeover bid" in wide terms, but includes an exemption for bids carried out by private agreement. A number of problems have arisen as a result of this exemption, the most important among them being that holders of a control block have disposed of it at a premium price unavailable to minority shareholders.

Past versions of this bill would simply have deleted the private agreement exemption, but it has become apparent that this approach would be unduly restrictive, would increase the administrative workload of the commission and would force businessmen to apply to the commission for its approval of many transactions, even though they would have no element of a control block premium. As a result, flexibility of trading would be decreased and costs of administration and compliance would be increased.

Accordingly, the proposed bill would re-instate the private agreement exemption, although in a narrower form than in the present Act. Where this exemption is relied upon to purchase control at a premium, the vendor would be obligated to offer the same or an equivalent price to minority shareholders within 180 days after the acquisition of control.

Concern with costs of compliance and of administration has also influenced the second significant change. Under earlier proposals, mutual funds, their management companies and their contractual sales plan service companies would have been required to register with the commission and would have been made subject to additional substantive rules.

These proposals had their genesis in a 1969 report that was written when certain abuses or potential abuses were detected. Major changes have occurred since then; the mutual fund industry is now much smaller and less able to withstand unnecessary administrative costs. Further, the securities commission has established effective control over the industry through the prospectus filing and other requirements contained in the present Act and in the bill now before you. In these circumstances, the proposal is that the new registration requirements and certain of the substantive rules be deleted.

The third significant change is of a more technical nature. As I have already mentioned, the bill contains statutory filing disclosure requirements applicable to reporting issuers. It also contains a new set of exemptions from the prospectus filing requirements, based on the assumption that the new timely disclosure requirements will make it appropriate to distribute certain securities to the public without the benefit of a prospectus.

I agree with this approach; again, it will reduce costs of compliance and of administration but on a basis consistent with investor protection. However, there should be an opportunity for practical experience with the new timely disclosure rules, and the proposal is that the new exemptions come into force 18 months after the rest of the Act becomes law. The amendments to the Business Corporations Act are to move all elements of investor disclosure into the Securities Act where they belong.

Turning to the Commodity Futures Act, the broad structure of the Act, again, remains unchanged. It contains registration requirements and related rules for the protection of investors in commodity futures. Since the protections of the Act are not needed for persons whose business requires them to trade in futures, an appropriate exemption is provided.

In the prior version of the bill, this exemption took the form of an elaborate and detailed definition of "bona fide hedging transaction." In the bill now being introduced, that definition is deleted and a much simpler definition of "hedger" is substituted.

You will note that we have not tabled any compendia to this legislation. The compendia were made available last spring and any changes to the legislation which have evolved since then were covered in this statement.

I commend each of these bills through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members. They will significantly improve the pattern of investor protection in this province and will enable Ontario to keep its lead in this area within Canada.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just 12 weeks ago this House enacted a bill to combat the tax discounts. These people charged some citizens about 50 per cent of the value of the tax refund due back to them. We have learned a tremendous amount in the ensuing three months. We know they are operating in open defiance of the law. We have discovered that the existing statute is simply not enough to deal with this problem.

With the concurrence of this House we expect to tighten up the offence sections of the bill. In our effort to be constitutionally respectful, we drafted a section which made a transaction where the consumer got less than a 95 per cent refund invalid. We now want to go further. We want to make it a clear offence to pay less than 95 per cent. We want to make this section read, "No discounters shall pay less than 95 per cent." We still wish to be constitutionally correct, but we are not going to be easy with these firms. An offence clearly it should be and an offence it will be, and charges will be laid.

We have learned that one enterprising firm has taken to giving the taxpayer 50 per cent in cash and a note for the remaining 45 per cent. They tell the customer he can have the remaining 45 per cent if they lose in court. We propose to deal with this problem in the forthcoming amendment.

I have further been advised that a firm in Ottawa with a branch in Hull does the first portion of the paperwork in Ottawa, and then sends its clients to the Hull office to pick up the cheque. The discounter receives the power of attorney to claim the refund in Quebec. This manoeuvre effectively takes jurisdiction over the transaction out of the province and therefore beyond the reach of prosecution and civil action in Ontario. I frankly do not know what I can do here but clearly this illustrates the need for federal involvement.

I recall clearly my predecessor pushing the federal government on the Borrowers and Depositors Protection Act. We pressed for a long time the idea that the federal government should move swiftly against those buying government cheques at a discount. Instead they are including this thrust in a bill which deals with a much broader package of measures covering the lending field. The whole effect of this has been to slow down action in these areas where action is sorely needed.

These usurious border games would not be taking place if the federal government had simply moved ahead and tackled these specialized deals with specific legislation. In the face of this non-action, five of our sister provinces have moved one way or another on tax discounters. Everyone got fed up waiting for something to happen, but let me say this. We are in now and we are going to deal with these situations. We are going to lay charges everywhere these people operate, if we must. We are really looking forward to the confrontation up to and including any constitutional arguments, though, as I have just finished saying, if the federal government had moved when they should have, we would not be fighting that issue at all.

[2:15]

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge the hon. members of all parties to co-operate in pushing this amendment through without delay. We are just entering the peak of the tax return season and we must act now.

Mr. Speaker: I would urge the hon. members to keep their private conversations down, including the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel).

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is missing a lot of good stuff.

VITAL STATISTICS LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Today I'm introducing for first reading the Vital Statistics Amendment Act, 1978. The purpose of this bill is twofold: To permit the names of children to be registered with any combination of the parents' hyphenated surnames and to allow the designation of sex to be changed on a transsexual's birth certificate.

At the present time, the Vital Statistics Act permits hyphenated or combined names provided the surname of the father precedes that of the mother. In other words, the issue of John Jones and Sally Smith must be named Jones-Smith, if a compound surname is desired. The amendment would permit, at the discretion of the parents, either Jones-Smith or Smith-Jones.

Subsequent children of the union must bear the identical combination of surnames, and there are provisions in the bill to change the birth certificates of children born prior to the amendment.

Mr. Deans: Now the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) can use both her names.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It gets better.

Mr. Nixon: I hope so.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's worth waiting for. When the Vital Statistics Act was amended in 1976 to permit hyphenated names, there was some editorial outcry over the possibility of Betty Brown-White marrying Bobby Black-Green and naming their children Black-Green-White-Brown. This possibility still exists, of course, although the deputy registrar general assures me there have been no line-ups to register even hyphenated names.

In any event, the government cannot be put in the position of legislating against silliness, and Lord knows we should sometimes.

We hope the Major Major Major syndrome remains confined to Joseph Heller's fiction.

The government feels this amendment is very much in keeping with the contemporary social mores, and we can see no reason to deny parents this option. The recommendation is contained in the Ombudsman's report of 1976-77 but, even prior to that my predecessor (Mr. Handleman) said that when the amendment to permit hyphenated names was originally brought in, he would have been prepared then to make the order of surnames optional. But, at that time, the issue was never even raised.

The second part of the amendment provides a method for individuals who have undergone transsexual surgery to have the sex designation on a birth certificate changed to reflect the results of the surgery performed. This change may be made when the operation is complete and in conjunction with the presentation of a certificate signed by a licensed medical practitioner. Until now, sex designations have been amended only if there was a mistake made at the time of issue.

We feel the inability of an individual who has undergone a transsexual operation to obtain a birth certificate showing the new sex could be very disturbing to someone engaged in the difficult task of establishing a new lifestyle. Since Ontario recognizes the medical necessity in proper circumstances for this type of surgery—

Mr. Roy: He's got more guts than his predecessor had.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —it should be prepared to facilitate the transsexual's transition to his or her changed circumstances.

Mr. Handleman: Does the member for Ottawa East want to apply?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I should add that we are not stating that the legal status of the transsexual has been changed. This is a matter for the courts and there is no Canadian precedent for it, although according to British and United States decisions, the status of the individual is not changed. Again, I should point out that this matter was raised in the Ombudsman's report for 1975-76. As I pointed out during the meeting of the select committee on the Ombudsman in February 1977, six months before I assumed this portfolio, the ministry had already agreed to amend its legislation to coincide with that of other Canadian jurisdictions.

Both parts of this amendment are desirable in that they reflect contemporary social standards and conditions. I commend this bill to the hon. members and urge its speedy passage.

VISITOR

Mr. S. Smith: May I have the attention of the House for a moment, because the hon. gentleman has to leave shortly, to introduce in your gallery, sir, the Leader of the Opposition of the province of Newfoundland, Mr. William Rowe.

Mr. Peterson: And the next Premier.

Mr. Nixon: And to wish him well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What party is that?

JUDGE WILLIAMS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry. Mr. Speaker, in a few moments I will be tabling a report of the commission of inquiry into Provincial Judge Harry J. Williams, together with a copy of the order in council removing the provincial court judge from office pursuant to section 4 of the Provincial Courts Act. Very briefly, the conclusions of the Hon. Mr. Justice Sydney L. Robins, the commissioner, are as follows:

"Now, regrettable as it is in view of his past service on the bench, it is inescapable that his position as a judge is untenable. Plainly stated, he has destroyed his effectiveness and usefulness as a judge. In all the circumstances it must be concluded that Judge Williams' misbehaviour has been such that it does not serve the best interests of the administration of justice in Ontario that he continue as a provincial judge of the provincial court, criminal division."

HEALTH RECORDS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I also have a further statement in relation to additional information for members of the Legislature in relation to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

Members will recall that last fall I provided a statement and a memorandum on dealings between the federal police force and OHIP. At that time, I had been given certain information by the RCMP to the effect that the force had obtained non-medical biographical data from OHIP files. The RCMP reported that after searching their files and canvassing their staff they had found one exception to this practice. In this case, the force had verified information of a medical nature with OHIP on a highly sensitive counter-espionage investigation involving a communist-bloc intelligence service operating in Canada.

My office has now received additional information from the RCMP in this regard and I want to share it with the members. I have been informed by the RCMP that further information from their members revealed they had obtained information of a medical nature from OHIP in two cases involving security screening of federal employees. I would now like to quote from a letter to me, dated February 17, 1978, from R. R. Schramm, chief superintendent and acting commanding officer of the RCMP's "O" Division in Ontario. There is also a follow-up letter from Chief Superintendent Schramm, dated February 24, which I will also be referring to. Dealing with the February 17 letter, I quote:

"These cases deal with two investigations conducted by the RCMP security service in connection with our security screening responsibilities in which we are required to undertake field investigations requested by federal government departments which wish to give selected employees access to sensitive information. The results of these investigations then become part of the overall departmental decision to grant or deny such access.

"Among other things, one of the requirements laid down by government policy in security screening matters is that we are to investigate and report on any indication of mental instability. In both these cases, information was received through investigation that indicated the employees had undergone previous psychiatric treatment. OHIP was subsequently contacted and confirmed such treatment and provided details of what treatment was received."

This is the end of the relevant quotation from that particular letter. In the letter, Chief Superintendent Schramm informed me that the RCMP's earlier information to me was incorrect but said he had only learned of the two cases I have mentioned on February 14, 1978. After receiving this letter and discussing its contents with the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) as well as senior officials in my ministry, I sought a clarification of several points in it. I now have a letter dated February 24, 1978, from Chief Superintendent Schramm. This letter indicates in more detail the type of information obtained by the RCMP, and I will quote to members this information in its entirety.

In relation to the first case, the letter states, and I quote:

"Our member learned through investigation that the federal civil servant being considered for a position where he or she would have access to sensitive information had received previous psychiatric treatment. He then contacted OHIP for confirmation. He was told that OHIP had been billed by the physician under two code numbers, namely 300 and 303. He was further told what categories of illnesses were included under these two codes. He was told that code 300 covers 16 primary illnesses, which were detailed to him, with some sub-categories, while code 303 covers two primary illnesses, which were also given to him with some sub-categories. He was not told specifically which illness or illnesses the person had been treated for. Additionally, he was provided with the dates on which the treatment had been received."

In relation to the second case, the letter states as follows, and I quote it in its entirety:

"Our member learned through investigation that the federal civil servant being considered for a position where he or she would have access to sensitive information had received previous psychiatric treatment. He contacted OHIP for confirmation. He was told that OHIP had been billed by the physician under code 300 which contains the primary and secondary categories as indicated previously. He was not told specifically which illness or illnesses the person had been treated for. He was also told that this person had been treated under code 780 which denotes 'signs and symptoms not yet diagnosed' and code 799 which denotes 'no diagnosis.' At this time, our investigator was also told that the spouse of the person being security cleared had received similar treatment. Additionally, our investigator was provided with the dates on which treatment had been received."

That is the end of the quotation from this latest letter.

I am advised that these incidents happened before the Ministry of Health considerably tightened its procedures in this regard last fall.

Mr. Lewis: Incredible.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I bring this information to the attention of the members to set the record straight, as I am aware of it as of this date, and to keep the members fully briefed on this matter which is, of course, of great concern to us all.

The commission appointed by this government to investigate the confidentiality of OHIP records and headed by Mr. Justice Horace Krever of the Ontario Supreme Court has been advised of these cases by Arthur Pennington of the federal Justice department, who is representing the RCMP before the Krever commission.

Mr. Lewis: You should have told them what you thought of them for seeking that kind of information.

HEALTH RECORDS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my comments to clarify the extent of medical information received by the RCMP. I also want to emphasize that the access gained by the RCMP occurred before matters of confidentiality of medical records were brought to the attention of the House last fall and before my ministry tightened up provision of information to police agencies.

In the two incidents referred to, the RCMP, apparently during the course of investigations, received information that two individuals received psychiatric treatment. The RCMP then approached OHIP for confirmation and OHIP confirmed it had been billed by physicians under certain code numbers. The RCMP were informed of the categories of illnesses included under these two codes. There was no access to psychiatric files. In fact, OHIP does not maintain psychiatric files.

Mr. Lewis: That's just ridiculous; you've given the illnesses.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On December 1, I announced in the House that we had further tightened our procedures for access to information in medical records. Since early December, our policy has been that we will not supply any information from OHIP records to police forces without a court order.

Mr. Roy: You should have done that before.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I believe that as far as is humanly possible, the safeguards now in place should maintain confidentiality of records.

Ms. Gigantes: Court orders for job applications.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am determined to ensure, to the best of my ability, that the principle of confidentiality of medical records is not violated.

Details of the two incidents clarified by the RCMP have been passed to Mr. Justice Krever, and we are looking forward to any further improvements that he can recommend to maintain the confidentiality of medical records, whether they relate to a specific part of my ministry, a branch, a particular office or hospital, or to the system itself.

[2:30]

PUBLIC OFFICERS' SECURITIES

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the Public Officers Act requires that within the first 15 days of every session I advise the assembly of all securities furnished on behalf of public officers and of any changes made to such securities since my last statement, which was on June 30, 1977. There have been no changes in either category.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct my question to the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. If I understand his statement correctly regarding the RCMP and the OHIP information, and I read the third paragraph of his statement, he says at that time he had been given certain information by the RCMP to the effect that the force had obtained non-medical biographical data. He goes on to say that the RCMP reported, after searching their files and canvassing their staff, that they found one exception to this practice, a case of a highly sensitive counter-espionage investigation et cetera.

I may be incorrect, but I do not recall the Attorney General ever telling us of the existence of this exception. I have in front of me the Hansard record of November 25, in which he assures us that "at no time has the force in Ontario sought or obtained medical files from OHIP" and so on; I recall that quite well. Can the Attorney General tell us whether in fact he had this information of the one exception at the time that he spoke to us in the House and chose, for security reasons, not to divulge it? Or is this something which has just recently come to his attention? If so, when?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I do not have copies of statements that I made last fall, Mr. Speaker, so I am relying entirely on my memory. My recollection, first of all, is that I have had that information for some period of time. My recollection is further that I advised the House of this information, probably not in great detail.

I certainly will be pleased to check on the statements I made to the Legislature last fall in this respect, but I would like to repeat that it is my recollection that I had mentioned this matter to the Legislature.

Mr. S. Smith: I guess we will have to wait for the Attorney General to look back in his records. I do not recall it, but I could be wrong.

As a supplementary, may I ask the Attorney General what action he has taken with regard to the original information that he received from the RCMP, which apparently left out this obviously vital and very shocking matter, that merely being treated in a psychiatric facility apparently is considered to be of some importance by the RCMP and that such information has been given out by OHIP?

Since that is directly in contradiction with the information which the RCMP gave to the minister and which he gave to this House, what action has he taken to express the displeasure, the anger and, in my opinion, the outrage of the province of Ontario at the way in which this has happened and, furthermore, at the way in which the Attorney General has been misled by the RCMP originally?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I made it abundantly clear in all my discussions with the RCMP that as far as I was concerned they were to conduct their activities within the law in the province of Ontario. I could not have made my position more strongly in that respect.

I further indicated at all times to the RCMP that in the event any information came to their attention which would indicate that some member of the force had acted illegally, I expected to be so advised. After the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) and I learned of this information, I think the Minister of Health has made it abundantly clear that he has instructed officials in his ministry, particularly those in relation to OHIP records, of course, that in no circumstances are any records of any kind to be delivered to any police officer without a court order, without a subpoena. I think we have made our positions as strong as is humanly possible in that regard.

Ms. Gigantes: Lay charges.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Has the minister sought and received assurances from the RCMP that no other such breaches of confidentiality, beyond the three cases that are now documented, have taken place; or does the minister intend to come back with further incidents over the course of the coming months where the RCMP sends further letters telling what it has been doing in the past?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, again I am simply repeating what I have said before: I have requested the RCMP to advise me of any such cases and the RCMP have indicated they will advise me of any such cases at such time as they come to light. As Chief Superintendent Schramm stated in his initial letter of February 17, it was only on February 14 that these two cases first came to his attention as the acting commanding officer.

I am confident that when Chief Superintendent Schramm gives me his personal undertaking that he will bring any such matters to my attention that he intends to honour that commitment.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the Attorney General will recall that the reason the charges were not laid with regard to the giving out of this OHIP information was because there was a procedural manual within the Ministry of Health which advised certain employees to give out these bare-bones biographical or demographic data, now that he has discovered that more than such data has been given out—in fact information concerning diagnosis and place of treatment has been given out—will he consider pressing charges against those employees, or those responsible for those employees, who permitted this information to be given out in contravention of the law?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just want to correct the Leader of the Opposition in one respect; it is my information that dates of treatment were given out, not places of treatment.

Mr. S. Smith: Diagnosis.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In my view the appropriate course to follow at this time, in view of the commission headed by Mr. Justice Krever, is for Mr. Justice Krever to review these cases. He has indicated to me, and I have also advised Mr. Justice Krever directly, that I intend, of course, to bring any such cases to his attention. In my respectful view, Mr. Speaker, the appropriate forum to investigate these matters at this point in time will be the Krever commission; and any decision as to whether any charges should be laid, in my view, should await the deliberations of the Krever commission, rather than suggest some parallel investigation be carried out.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question: First of all, when did these two latest incidents in fact occur; and secondly, what assurance, if any, has this minister sought, or his colleague the Minister of Health sought, that as a result of these investigations the persons who were being investigated did not suffer adverse reports because of this information?

Mr. Lewis: It is witch-hunting in psychiatric records, that's what is going on.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, I think I can only repeat what I said a moment ago. In my view Mr. Justice Krever has a mandate to investigate these matters. He is in a better position to investigate them than any individual police officer or police officers, because he has the power to subpoena witnesses and to require them to testify. In my view this is the most effective forum to bring this additional information to light; and as he Minister of Health stated, to make recommendations to avoid any such recurrence in the future.

Mr. Roy: May I ask the Attorney General, isn't it a fact that no authorization was obtained to obtain this information—no authorization at least from the individuals themselves; and there was no court order? In view of the fact that the law prohibited this—the present law existing now—why does the minister have to wait to transfer the matter for investigation to the Krever commission, when in fact it would appear from his discussions with his colleague the Minister of Health that somebody in the Ministry of Health has breached an Ontario statute? Why do we have to wait for someone else to look into this? Isn't the minister's responsibility to do that now?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, it is my judgement, at this point in time, again I repeat, that the most effective way to deal with this is through the Krever commission.

Mr. Lewis: I ask the Attorney General, has he inquired of the RCMP whether the information extracted from OHIP records in Ontario prejudiced the employment of those applicants whose psychiatric background was under investigation? What effect did this have on the jobs for which they were applying and what happened in the final analysis?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, I have not inquired, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Would the minister do so?

Mr. S. Smith: Well, we won't find out whether he intends to, so I'll ask a question of the Premier.

SPADINA EXPRESSWAY

Mr. S. Smith: According to an article in the Sunday Star, it is alleged that there has been some arrangement made whereby Metro Toronto will in one way or another reobtain ownership of land that would have been used for the Spadina expressway had it been extended past Eglinton. Can the Premier tell us whether that article has come to his attention? In any event, can he tell us whether some arrangement has been reached regarding the Spadina expressway corridor south of Eglinton and in particular how that relates to the three promises that he made to the city of Toronto at the time that he spoke on this matter some years ago dealing with the paving of the portion as an arterial road, the portion that went down to Eglinton?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think there were several parts to the question. I am really not sure of the origin of the story in the Star. My best recollection is that there were three areas where the government was involved in terms of the "Spadina Expressway".

One was the three-foot reserve. There has been some difficulty, I gather from the legal people, in terms of where that three-foot reserve is geographically located. I think it was felt initially that it would go right along the southern limits of Eglinton Avenue with—and I'm going strictly from memory—a part of it, perhaps, in York; and so there was some consideration of altering that three-foot reserve to some other geographic location.

Another part of the consideration, as I recall, was the proposal made for the construction of some parking facility. There has been very extensive discussion with the city of Toronto, with Metropolitan Toronto, firstly on the question of having a parking facility, which a study in the Ministry of Transportation and Communication indicated was viable, I think. Then, of course, the discussion moved to where that parking facility might be geographically located. The province is still interested in pursuing that. I can't tell the Leader of the Opposition just where it stands in terms of timing at this moment.

On the question of Metropolitan Toronto in some way gaining title and having—I guess the story was suggesting this—perhaps the legal ability to move ahead with the expressway—if that is what the Leader of the Opposition is concerned about—I can assure him that I have no such indication; and from my limited knowledge of the subject, I don't really see how it would be possible with the impediments that are there.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, can the Premier explain why he would now consider—as, frankly, he did mention in his original statement—giving this land back to Metro when in fact it was originally taken from the city of Toronto? Why not cede it back to the city of Toronto from which it was taken in the first place? What possible logic can there be to returning it—albeit allegedly for housing purposes and so on—to Metro?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am going strictly by memory, but I think at the time—and the hon. member can correct me if I am wrong—that it was the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Corporation that had jurisdiction. I have a feeling that is still the case and I think that is the rationale for having it go to the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority, because they were the ones who had this responsibility. I don't think there was a city of Toronto Housing Authority per se; I think it was Metro, and this was the rationale for it. I see the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) is nodding her head in an affirmative fashion, so I assume that my recollection is fundamentally, reasonably correct.

[2:45]

Mr. S. Smith: The land is Toronto's, not Metro's.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: Could it be that that three-foot strip of land which needs to be deeded over to the city of Toronto is not being so deeded because there are forces putting pressure on the government not to do it so that the Spadina expressway can be extended further south of Eglinton?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really don't know where the hon. member gets his information or rumour, et cetera.

Mr. Warner: Sam Cass.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have had no pressures exerted on me on this particular issue for some time and I know of no plot afoot in terms of extending the expressway south of Eglinton Avenue.

Mr. Grande: You're right, you don't know what's going on.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary: Did I understand the Premier to say that he had not, or the government had not reneged on its commitment in regard to the parking garages, that the 75 per cent funding for those garages was still in the works and that he was going to go ahead with that when he could find a place to put them that would satisfy everyone? I understand that the Premier or the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) had told Mayor Crombie in a meeting that he was not going to go ahead with that commitment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't recall saying we would not go ahead with that commitment.

Mr. Cunningham: You're going to slow it down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The discussion has been as to the geographic location of the proposed parking facility. I think that's where it rests at the moment.

Mr. S. Smith: Final supplementary: Given that the city of Toronto would like to have this parking garage at Glencairn and that there seem to be reasonable arguments in favour of that, why does the Premier continue to deal with Metro? Why not put the garage at Glencairn to fulfil the promise he made? Since the land that the housing south of Eglinton is on belongs to the city of Toronto—albeit that the housing was under Metro administration the land was the city's—why not give the land back to the city and settle the matter that way?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know the Leader of the Opposition is sometimes a little contradictory, I guess we all are. The attempt of the government has been to reconcile the sometimes conflicting points of view of Metropolitan Toronto and the city of Toronto. The Leader of the Opposition is wont to say these days: "If I were in charge of running things"—

Mr. Mancini: It won't be long either.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—"I would impose my will on these local autonomous municipalities."

Mr. Nixon: The Premier never did that, did he? He was very careful about the Spadina expressway.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He has travelled all around the province in the last several months saying just how much power he'd give them and how sympathetic he is to the local municipalities. He says all of these great things to them when he's with them. But then he comes into the House and says: "Mr. Premier, why don't you lay down the law to Metropolitan Toronto and build the garage at Glencairn?" He can't have it both ways.

Mr. S. Smith: You took away the land.

Mr. Roy: The Premier tries to have it both ways all the time.

CROWN LAND SALES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Can the minister explain his advocacy for selling our Crown land for cottage lots to foreigners when this is so obviously at odds with his colleague, the Minister for Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier); and when it was the sale of Crown land to foreigners which led to the freeze on Crown land sales seven years ago?

Mr. Laughren: Shameful.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm sure it will come as a real shock to some of the hon. members, but once in a while before cabinet has had the opportunity to consider a matter some of us aren't of the same opinion.

Mr. Warner: Aren't informed.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That very seldom happens but once in a while individuals do have different opinions.

Mr. Wildman: Misinformed.

Mr. Warner: Shocking.

Hon. F. S. Miller: This matter has not been resolved by cabinet. Yesterday I happened to be asked straightforwardly what my opinion was and I offered it. It was not shared by other colleagues, it may well not be shared by cabinet; but I gave an honest answer as to the way I felt at that time. It was as simple as that.

Mr. Laughren: It better not be. It's a sell-out.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the overwhelming opinion in this province that Crown land should be reserved for Canadians, will the minister say how the rift in cabinet is going to be healed; and will he resign when the decision goes against him?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh hold it. You were on CBC this morning. When you say "overwhelming opinion," in whose opinion?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Solidarity all the way.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sure everybody wants to hear the answer to that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In reply, I'll probably have to deal with the "riff-raff".

An hon. member: It's not very often the Minister for Northern Affairs is right.

Mr. Warner: The rift would be healed if the minister resigned.

Mr. Wildman: Which ones over there are riff-raff?

Mr. Makarchuk: Which are the "riff" and which are the "raff" over there?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, our party has a great ability to approach a problem with differing points of view and to come up with a solution that we can all enjoy. We are doing that right now. My ministry has been charged with the job of coming up with a series of alternatives. It is doing so. They will be explored by the policy field. They will be either changed or accepted by them and then examined by cabinet. When all of that is done we will have a policy which I will support and make public.

Mr. Reid: I find it difficult to understand how these policies are arrived at when the minister does not know the ramifications of it.

Has the minister or cabinet, or whoever wrote the Speech from the Throne, considered the aspect of taking away the land's 20 per cent land transfer tax that now applies to non-residents? Is this part of a package that we are looking at or are we merely talking about selling Crown land to non-residents of Canada, with which I do not agree.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I do not think the two things are connected at all. The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has had a 20 per cent tax on the purchase of land by foreign, non-resident Canadians, and I do not feel that this is in conflict at all.

Really, the basic decision was to sell Crown lots, particularly to improve the economy of that part of the province which the member represents.

Mr. Martel: Which you support?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. We believe—and I hope the member's party can believe—that people who have ownership of land will feel more secure in their tenure, will be more likely to put up better homes; they will, we think, be contributing more to the economy of the area and, therefore, will create a demand for supply of goods and services to stimulate the economy, particularly of north-western Ontario.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's the only honourable thing you can do.

Mr. Cassidy: He is selling the store; the store and then the mortgage.

Mr. Martel: A supplementary question to the minister: I am wondering if the riff-raff he is talking about are his six colleagues who signed the select committee report of four years ago, when in fact a land study was done pertaining to recreation land. Is it the minister's intention to follow the recommendations of the select committee of four years which said the committee recommends that Crown lands for cottage lots be leased only to Canadian citizens and landed residents resident in Canada. That was signed by the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) and five more of the minister's colleagues.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Once the alternatives have been considered we will have a policy.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the hon. member for Algoma.

Mr. Wildman: Could the minister indicate to us whether or not his ministry has any figures on how much recreational land is presently owned in Ontario by non-Canadians, and will this be part of his study in determining what his policy might be—when it comes to deciding what it might be?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am not aware of the figures. As they are available I am sure they will be given to me during this next two weeks.

Mr. Breithaupt: If the minister is unsure as to whether there is policy in this area, could he explain how the original comment got into the Speech from the Throne at all?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can explain that quite easily. Two ministries were very concerned about different aspects of land management and the economy of this province. The Ministry of Northern Affairs, charged with the responsibility for seeing that the north has a better economy, was concerned that it neded ways and means of stimulating employment.

Mr. Reid: It doesn't want to sell.

Mr. Warner: It's a "buy Canada" program.

Hon. F. S. Miller: On the other hand, my ministry, charged with the administration of the land of the province, felt that leasing of land, as pursued for the last few years, did not have all the advantages originally foreseen for it. Between those two, we concluded that the sale of certain lots, for a period of time at least, should be followed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre with his second question.

Mr. Cassidy: Scarborough Centre? Not him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: You have combined the best features of the member from Scarborough West and myself, but that would not have yielded a member from Scarborough Centre.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. Given that the Ontario Economic Council's projection of employment for the next 10 years falls 50,000 jobs short of the Premier's promise in the Bramalea "charter" of last summer, given that Ontario has not reached its target rate of job creation in the past year, and given that the government has made no significant proposals for job creation in the Throne Speech, does the Premier now share with me and my party the feeling that this government will never reach its own target for job creation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, not only do we not share his party's view on this—we don't share it on most important issues—

Mr. Martel: Thank God.

Mr. Renwick: Thank goodness.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —we are still committed to 100,000; we have come very close, and that remains our target and our objective.

Mr. Martel: If you had two trees for one, you might reach it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of fact that the Treasurer's own document indicates a creation 27,000 jobs below the Premier's target in 1977, given the continuing weakness of our manufacturing sector, and given the projections by the Economic Council that the share of employment in manufacturing will continue to drop precipitately over the course of the next 10 years, does this government intend to bring any policies to strengthen the resource sector and the manufacturing sector in this economy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have already brought proposals to this House, proposals which the hon. member's party has consistently opposed; and anyway his party would be on the other side of any proposals we had to inhibit the economic growth of this province. He knows that; we know it.

An hon. member: Why don't you answer the question?

An hon. member: Bring out something worthwhile.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We will be discussing the resource industry later on this afternoon. His party's panacea for the resource industry is: "If it's making a dollar, let's nationalize it." Soon they will be saying it about McDonald's Restaurants.

Mr. Renwick: It's no panacea; it's a solution to a real problem.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who knows where they will end up in their approach to economic growth. They don't have the answers; we do. We are going to make it work.

Mr. Martel: What are your answers? Why are these 300,000 kids unemployed?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North.

OHIP CLAIMS PROCEDURE

Mr. Conway: A question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister share with this House any results of a ministry investigation which he may or may not have commissioned into the particulars of the billing procedures of a Dr. Takahashi, which was raised in this House on Friday and reported to some degree in the papers of this week?

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I understood the member for Renfrew North was getting up on a supplementary. It took some time to fathom what he was talking about—

Mr. Reid: You were finished and did not know it.

An hon. member: You were sleeping again, Michael.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North was the only one who stood.

Mr. Cassidy: You must agree, Mr. Speaker, it is an obscure question.

Mr. Roy: He's going to tell you how to run your job now, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In fact, Mr. Speaker, I do have an answer for the hon. member; I had intended to give it later in the question period.

On February 24 the member for Renfrew North asked if I was aware that—and I quote from Hansard of that day—“under the present OHIP legislation it is possible for a doctor who has opted out of the direct payment scheme to refuse with impunity to submit to OHIP the bills his patients have paid, thereby preventing the patients from being reimbursed for the moneys they have paid to that doctor?”

Under the Health Insurance Act 1972, section 21, the physician prepares, on a claim card provided by the plan, the necessary information to have the claim processed and paid.

Ms. Gigantes: We can't hear you.

Mr. Makarchuk: Stop mumbling.

Mr. Roy: Tomorrow, “instant” Hansard will show your whole answer was inaudible.

Mr. S. Smith: Speak distinctly.

Mr. Samis: The minister is as bad as Conway.

Mr. Roy: Can we revert back to statements? I've got a feeling that's what is coming.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The hon. member's feelings are usually misguided, but we will see.

Mr. Roy: Don't worry about my misguided feelings—just run your ministry.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In April 1977 OHIP became aware, through numerous complaints from subscribers, of a particular physician who refused to provide claims to the patient or to forward the claims directly to the plan on their behalf in order that the patients could be reimbursed by the plan.

In April the Toronto district OHIP office contacted the doctor by telephone and asked that the claims cards be forwarded. The doctor said he would comply. OHIP obviously cannot make any payment if it has nothing on which to base a claim. We cannot spend public money without proof of provision of service.

In July 1977, when the claims cards were not forthcoming, the director of our insurance claims branch wrote to the doctor—and I quote from that letter to Dr. Takahashi: “Under section 21(1) of the Health Insurance Act, you are required to submit a claim for these services to the plan on a claim card as supplied to you or, alternatively, give your patient a completed card for submission to the plan.”

OHIP approaches to the physician were to no avail and in September 1977 the case was referred by the director of the insurance claims branch of OHIP to the secretary of the medical review committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons for disciplinary action.

[3:00]

In addition, the colleges see the large number of complaints from subscribers and each was referred to the complaints committee of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and in turn the complaints were referred to the discipline committee. The discipline committee arranged for a hearing on February 6, 1978, but due to a procedural problem the hearing was deferred until March 13, 1978, two weeks hence.

The legislation does not, as the member for Renfrew North indicated, grant impunity. I want to assure hon. members that as soon as the doctor in question submits his claim cards, the patients will be reimbursed accordingly.

This is the first case of its kind that the plan has ever experienced since its inception. As a result of this matter being brought to our attention, the current proposals to amend the Health Insurance Act will oblige opt-out physicians and practitioners to submit the required claims documentation to the patients or directly to the plan within six months of the date of service and provide for a penalty for failure to comply.

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to put a question to the Minister of Health, to revert to the statement made originally by the Attorney General.

Since the information given was clearly given illegally, since it was partial, incomplete and loaded with nasty, prejudicial possibilities, does the minister not think he should intercede with the federal government to find out what happened to those two applicants and to attempt to have the matter reopened if the OHIP material had a specific disqualifying effect on their job applications?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will take that suggestion under advisement.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister think he and the Attorney General could respond with a little less passivity to the illegal gathering of information from Ontario records for the purpose of an explicit invasion of privacy in a way to which this whole Legislature obviously objects? Has he no passion at all about this thing, no feeling about what they've done to these two people?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think I've made clear on more than one occasion in this House, and outside of the chamber, how much I detest the abuses of the system which are coming to light. I think I've made equally clear my intention, in the declaration of policy, to keep the OHIP system, as much as is humanly possible, and all aspects of the health care system, secure on the question of confidentiality of medical records.

I may not go around frothing at the mouth or ranting and raving, but that doesn't mean that my outrage, my personal outrage, is any less than that of any other member.

Mr. Roy: No, you are certainly not doing that.

Mr. Lewis: No, you are not.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: On a point of order or a matter of personal privilege, whatever is appropriate: I'd like to have the opportunity to respond to the allegation that I have been passive about this. I want to make it very clear that I feel deeply shocked—

Mr. Warner: You didn't answer the question.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —about the nature of this interference with the rights of individual citizens; and I think it is shocking—

Mr. Laughren: So what are you going to do?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —both on behalf of the RCMP, but perhaps even more so on behalf of the federal government that would instruct the RCMP to interfere in this manner. While the OHIP employees must share some responsibility too, the role of the federal government and the RCMP, obviously—

Ms. Gigantes: Come on now; they've exercised a bit of leeway, haven't they?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —is one that would outrage, I think, any reasonable citizen.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you going to lay charges?

Mr. Lewis: If I may, speaking to the point; that's exactly what some of us hoped some of you would say occasionally, and then follow it up to find out what happened to these people.

MINIMUM WAGE

Hon. B. Stephenson: On Friday morning I was asked to give the names of some of those eminent economists who have written articles related to the minimum wage. I have to apologize, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McClellan: Wonderful.

Mr. Lewis: They are not so eminent.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —for my faulty memory and my incapability to remember the names of a list of economists.

Mr. McClellan: It took you four days to find it.

Mr. Cassidy: Your research staff must have been working all weekend.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short list at the moment which I will be glad to present to this House. There is Mr. Kenneth Boulding of the University of Colorado; Professor Jacob Mincer of Columbia University; Mr. E. G. West of Carleton University; and Dr. Edward Gramlich of the University of Michigan. The journals in which they have written and the articles which they have written are in this list as well, for the benefit of those who wish it.

Mr. Laughren: They're a pretty selective group; boy you selected them carefully, didn't you?

Mr. Lewis: And we are checking the records of them all.

TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION FUND

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. member for London North asked me a question concerning contributions to the teachers' superannuation fund. I would like to answer that question.

As the hon. members will recall, an amount of $102.8 million was approved in supplementary estimates that were passed earlier this fiscal year and this amount represented the remaining portion of the amount that was identified in the 1975 actuarial evaluation as owing to the teachers' superannuation fund in respect of calendar year 1976.

The original intention was to follow a procedure of slip-year financing, which involves making payments one year in arrears, and included in it was the provision that interest be paid on the amount. Subsequent to the supplementary estimates it was deemed to be more prudent fiscally to proceed with payments in this year of the amount that was due in respect of calendar year 1977, plus, at this time, to pay the interest in respect of the 1976 payment which was due December 31, 1976, and was paid December 31, 1977.

Therefore, this means there will be a double payment this fiscal year, which will now put us on schedule as far as the payments required under the actuarial report, and that means there will be another supplementary estimate of $107.2 million to go into the teachers' superannuation fund in this year.

Mr. Van Horne: I appreciate the minister's answer, but I am concerned that from time to time when we deal with these large amounts of money we get replies—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Van Horne:—suggesting that we are, in fact, over our heads, and I think I am quoting exactly the words of the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We see it all the time.

Mr. Van Horne: The obvious question, in the light of the report of the actuaries, which was, in fact, available in July 1977 when we dealt with the estimates, is why was this amount not included with the supplementary estimates when we reviewed them in December? The minister knew that information. In my opinion it makes the whole estimate process a mockery and I would like to be satisfied now to hear the minister tell me why this was not discussed on December 12, 1977?

Hon. Mr. Wells: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid my friend must have been drafting his question rather than listening to my answer, because I explained in my answer why it was not included in the supplementary estimates that we brought forward in September. We were adopting a program of slip-year financing.

Mr. Wildman: Slippery financing.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We were going to pay the 1976 payments that were due and we were then going to pay 1977's in the next fiscal year along with the interest on the amount. We have now decided that it would be more prudent fiscally to pay on the current year and so therefore we are putting in the amount required plus the interest on the 1976 amount, which will bring us completely up to date, and the amounts that will be in the next fiscal year's estimates will be the amount that will be required.

Let me also say to my friend that he knows, and I have told him many times, the actuarial statement was not publicly available for us to consider when we considered our original estimates in committee in July. It was not available and had not been completely considered by the fiscal authorities and the people who had to consider it here in this government when we considered those estimates, and he knows that.

Mr. Van Horne: I also know, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted a supplementary, it was available on December 12, the date to which I referred a few moments ago.

Mr. Speaker: That's not a question.

Mr. Van Horne: Having said that, I would like, Mr. Speaker, to ask one final question of the minister—

Hon. Mr. Wells: As I recall, Mr. Speaker, I made a copy available.

Mr. Van Horne: There will be a new chairman appointed, hopefully within the next few days, to the social development policy committee—

Mr. Speaker: I still don't hear a question.

Mr. Van Horne: You will hear it if you listen, Mr. Speaker and that is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I have given you two opportunities and I still don't hear a question. I will hear the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister tell us where the additional $100-odd million will be coming from? Will it increase the net cash requirement, or the deficit, depending on which of the languages one wishes to use? If not, if he is able to find that money and other expenses at the end of the year, can he explain to this House how he can so easily come up with $100 million from his very tight budget?

An hon. member: It's called fiscal bilingualism.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might refer the hon. Leader of the Opposition to the December 31, 1977, Ontario Finances, which indicates where the money was being paid and where it was being found. Essentially, it has been found along with, as I recall, another $92 million in savings which have been accomplished by Management Board and others during the course of the year.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, if I may, to the two-headed respondent to this particular question. Is it the government's intention to take this $100 million as a further credit to municipalities and thereby as a further means of undermining the Edmonton commitment about municipal finance?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Obviously, anything which goes into the Teachers' Superannuation Fund will reflect as part of the commitment.

Mr. Cassidy: Does this mean that the municipal taxpayers of the province will now be required to come up with a further $100 million in increased property taxes this year, because of the government's misinterpretation of its commitment under the Edmonton statement?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The answer to that question, of course, is no. The answer is that this is something that is going on during this current year, during the year ending for the municipalities, really, December 31 last. Obviously it will not affect in any way what the transfers are to them during their year beginning January 1 last, our year beginning April 1 next. There is a table which shows all this in the budget which will be tabled in the House, as I understand it, a week from today. It will be fully set out. I would hope then that those people over there could get through their heads the efficacy of slip-year financing.

Mr. Ruston: Slippery financing.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You just don't understand slip-year financing.

Mr. Stong: We understand you. Keep 'em in the dark as long as you can. Having emptied the store you might as well turn out the lights.

Mr. S. Smith: Yet another $100 million, in fact, in your budget.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Time's a-wasting.

RAPE

Mr. Stong: I have a question of the Solicitor General. Now that it has been three weeks since the Justice secretariat sponsored a seminar on rape, could the minister indicate what policy or programs he intends to implement to reduce the incidence of this crime and decrease the trauma in victims in reporting and following through and preparing evidence for trials arising out of this crime?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, to answer the second part of the hon. member's question, of course the answer is basically law enforcement. As to the first part and to the conference, there will be a report in respect to that conference. As the hon. member knows, it was a consultation, rather than a conference. It wasn't an open meeting. We hope to have a report from that meeting which will be given to the participants. Then as a result of that we will make certain recommendations, after which we will have, hopefully before the summer, another meeting.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the original questioner has a supplementary, he should get the first opportunity.

Mr. Stong: I do have a supplementary. In the interim, would the Solicitor General confer with his colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), with respect to proper reimbursement of doctors who are required to conduct medical examinations, and who at the best of time are reluctant to give evidence and get involved? Would he reconsider reimbursing them properly under OHIP so that they will conduct these examinations more thoroughly and give proper evidence in court?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I realize one of the findings of that particular conference was the reluctance of doctors to get involved in examinations of that kind—even the reluctance of some hospitals to admit that type of patient. I would think that would be involved in the whole OHIP fee structure, rather than any specific fee for a specific examination.

[3:15]

Mr. Stong: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister think it's more important or important enough that he can—

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Carleton East have a supplementary?

Mr. Germa: That's why she's standing.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: I wonder if the Solicitor General, instead of consulting with the Minister of Health about payments for doctors, might consult with the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) about funding for the real victims of violence against women—the women—

Mr. McClellan: For rape crisis centres.

Ms. Gigantes: —the funding that we don't have now in Ontario that we should have, for rape crisis centres.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Again, that was one of the issues that was raised at the consultation. There were a number of people there who are with the crisis centres, not only in Metro but in different parts of the country. They are concerned about continuing their operations, the lack of funds.

Ms. Gigantes: What are you going to do in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Again, that, as the hon. member knows, is separate and apart from what the hon. member for York Centre was talking about.

Ms. Gigantes: I know.

Mr. Stong: That was my next question—the real question.

Ms. Gigantes: That should be the first question.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would be happy to talk to the hon. minister who would be involved in that type of remuneration.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: In view of the fact that it was abundantly clear from the statements of the police officers at that workshop that there were difficulties with the medical profession due to the difficulties in the whole machinery of administration of justice, has the Solicitor General discussed the matter at all with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) to see what can be done to reduce those cases which are concluded to be unfounded by reason of the failure of medical evidence?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Speaker, our justice policy committee has discussed the results of the rape consultations. We've had a report from the deputy provincial secretary. There has been a general discussion as to where we should go from here in respect to the findings and to the submissions that were made, particularly by the police officers. As the hon. member knows, there have been some changes in the Criminal Code that certainly are a marked improvement as far as the whole trial procedure in respect of rape is concerned, and there are still further improvements or further amendments that we feel are necessary. That will be the subject of ongoing discussion and our final report.

BRAMPTON TIMES DISPUTE

Mr. Mackenzie: I have a question to the Premier. Is the Premier aware of the nasty situation that's developing at the Brampton Daily Times in his own riding where the news editorial staff have been recently certified and are attempting to achieve a first contract, and where the newly appointed publisher and general manager brought in from another province, Mr. Clarence Wiseman, has come to the negotiating table in a most antagonistic manner, delivering ultimatums and rejecting proposals as basic as the Rand formula?

Would the Premier intervene in the dispute on behalf of the employees to see that management does bargain in good faith or use his good offices with the Minister of Labour to see that it does bargain in good faith with the employees of the Brampton Times?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am aware that there are some difficulties at that particular excellent newspaper.

Ms. Gigantes: Yes? Yes?

Mr. Martel: What about the second half?

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Is the Premier willing to use his good offices to try to achieve some bargaining in good faith in this particular situation?

Mr. Roy: What good offices?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think that while I have always endeavoured to solve problems within my constituency, as do all members in this House, there are appropriate times.

Mr. Laughren: Give us a straight answer for once.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The timing itself of interventions of this nature is fairly important.

Mr. Laughren: Just say "no" and be done with it.

Mr. McClellan: Just say you couldn't care less.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really can't give any undertaking to the hon. member except to assure him that I am aware of the difficulty.

TRUCKING LEGISLATION

Mr. Cunningham: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Would the minister clarify what was meant by "selective deregulation" as outlined in the Speech from the Throne, and would he be inclined to assure this House that any changes would not be implemented by regulation but rather through legislation in this House?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the selective deregulation that was referred to in the Speech from the Throne I think will be quite obvious when the amendments to the Public Commercial Vehicles Act are introduced. I can assure the hon. member it will be by legislation, not regulation.

Mr. Cunningham: Supplementary: I would like to ask, is the minister aware that changes to the definitions respecting fruits and vegetables currently contemplated will jeopardize a large number of Canadian trucking companies currently operating in the Niagara Peninsula?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would suggest that we wait until we see what is being contemplated before we make any rash decisions.

Mr. Haggerty: A supplementary to the minister: Can he indicate whether any study has been done in this particular area of transport—

Mr. Wildman: The select committee.

Mr. Haggerty:—reciprocal agreements with the different states and the province of Ontario? Has any study been done at all in this area as to what effect it will have on employment; whether it will increase or decrease employment in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I presume the hon. member is referring to the reciprocity agreements being entered into with a number of states of the United States.

I believe we have signed agreements with six or eight states and we have negotiations going on with a considerable number more. It was recommended in the select committee report that we establish a reciprocity office within the ministry and that we negotiate such agreements—and I might say we have been quite successful in doing so. We have done this, I believe, with the support of certainly the majority of the trucking industry.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister indicate clearly to this House exactly what sources of provincial or federal funding she had in mind Friday last "which would be available to the families of injured workers in receipt of low-level WCB pensions," inasmuch as the final WCB pension determination occurs long after the worker would be eligible for any UIC benefits, and even to qualify for a federal CPP pension benefit? The degree of disability would have to be so high as to have already qualified those workers for a high WCB rating and pension with, of course, neither of these pensions—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Bounsall: —having a family size or family need component involved in them.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the hon. member's editorial comment about those funds which are available—

Mr. Cassidy: Answer the question.

Hon. B. Stephenson: —but indeed those funds are available.

Mr. Deans: They are not.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The disability portion of the Canada Pension Plan and UIC have been used in many instances for supplemental support. DVA allowances are also available—

Mr. McClellan: What has that got to do with it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: —for those injured workmen who are veterans. And, indeed, there are family benefit programs available as income supplement from the provincial government.

Mr. Cassidy: You are the slipperiest Minister of Labour we have seen.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But I was speaking specifically of those which are available through the federal government and as a supplemental income program through the provincial government.

Mr. Laughren: What a disgrace you are as the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Deans: Family benefits and welfare. Absolutely clears up what we didn't understand yesterday.

GOLD COIN PURCHASES

Mr. Epp: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue.

An hon. member: The minister has to answer his first question.

Mr. Reed: He was afraid of that.

Mr. Epp: Given that the Numismatic Association has expressed concern about the imposition of provincial sales tax on the purchases of gold coin classified as legal tender by the Canadian Mint, is he aware of any petitions that have been submitted to his ministry? If so, did he obtain a legal opinion on these petitions, and what is his opinion about the matter?

Mr. Gaunt: Your big chance, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Do you want me to bow?

Mr. Speaker, this is a problem that has been brought to my attention on quite a few occasions—not necessarily in the form of petitions but through form letters and other letters from people who collect coins. We have looked into this in some detail but we can't really see where there is anything wrong with us charging sales tax. It's quite legal to charge it. We feel that if we are going to charge sales tax on antiques and paintings and so on there should be no difference between that and coins that are collected. I have adopted the position that sales tax will remain on the coins.

Mr. Sweeney: How about new dollar bills? Do you tax them too?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, does he not agree that gold coin is legal tender and therefore it is not legal to tax currency?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The legal branch in my ministry advises me that it is quite legal to collect sales tax on these coins. It has been looked into.

Mr. Martel: When are you going to learn to go round about? You should learn from Bill Davis—he knows how to say nothing.

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT OF HYDRO PROJECTS

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. In view of the meetings that his officials have had with the officials of Ontario Hydro, the royal commission on electric power planning and the Ministry of the Environment, regarding Hydro's request that the terms of reference of the Porter commission be changed to remove consideration of the needs for Hydro's priority projects and that these projects be turned over to the Environmental Assessment Board, can the minister indicate what the status is of these discussions and what his position and that of his ministry is on Hydro's request?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions. There have been no changes and no changes are planned to be made, as far as the terms of reference of the Porter commission on this particular aspect are concerned.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Does that mean that there will not be any changes or there just haven't been any changes up to this point? Is the minister saying that it is his policy that the Porter commission terms of reference will not be changed in relation to the priority projects?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am saying that certainly at this stage in time no changes are being actively considered.

BEARE ROAD LANDFILL SITE

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker: a question of the Minister of the Environment: Could the minister indicate when his officials intend to meet with the ratepayers' association with respect to the Beare Road landfill site?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, it's about time too.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, no, I am not aware of a date being set. There was a meeting about February 15. I thought maybe somebody from our ministry was there but I wouldn't be certain of that.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Is it fair to assume that ministry officials are prepared to meet with the ratepayers' association at their earliest convenience to resolve this rather thorny problem?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Oh, most certainly.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary that he can respond to in the same manner if he wishes.

Mr. Roy: He is so co-operative you should give him another try at it.

Mr. Gaunt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate what procedure the ministry has in mind to resolve the problems of odour in that particular area?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think it would be a matter of advice to the municipality as to what should be done. I think the problem is that there is a high water level there because of heavy rains last summer and fall. The water is escaping and allowing gases to escape also. There probably can be some vents put in and as the water levels go down we think the problem will be less. But it's really a municipal responsibility.

[3:30]

DRIVING INSTRUCTION

Mr. Young: I have a question for the Minister of Education in respect to the report that the courses for driving instructors are to be cancelled over the coming summer. I'd like to ask the minister if these reports are accurate and, if so, are they related to the concern expressed by the select committee on highway safety that the results of the present system of driver training are not what they ought to be? Is this a preliminary to the upgrading of not only the syllabus for the driving instructors, but of the quality of the whole system of driver instruction in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is correct that there will not be any driver education summer courses given this summer. The reason is not exactly as the member has stated. The reason basically is that it's one of the economy measures that we have decided to undertake in order to keep the budget of this ministry—

Mr. Lewis: That's a good economy measure. That is smart stuff.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —within the very real restraint measures that all of us in this government are following.

Mr. Swart: That means more people out of work.

Mr. Warner: You guys are going to have to drive now.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The reason that this was done is that this is one of the higher-cost summer courses and it was our feeling it could be given every other year. I think the additional benefit will be that the kind of things the hon. member mentioned will be able to be taken into account before the course in 1979 is given. It will be given in the summer of 1979. I understand my colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) has a white paper on driver education that will be coming out shortly that may also be helpful in this area. The member is quite correct: there will be no courses given this summer.

PETITIONS

Mr. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition addressed to the Lieutenant Governor and members of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario. The petition reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, are in favour of a change in the Coroners Act of Ontario to allow removal and use of the pituitary gland where mandatory autopsies are required by law. This will improve the supply of growth hormone serum in Ontario."

Attached to it are 5,164 signatures.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS
CITY OF TIMMINS-PORCUPINE
AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McKeough moved first reading of Bill 5, An Act to amend The City of Timmins-Porcupine Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: These amendments would enable the Ontario Municipal Board, upon the application of the council of the city of Timmins or a formal petition of the electors, to redivide the city wards, alter or dissolve the wards and vary the composition of the council. Until the Ontario Municipal Board makes any such alteration, the minister's order which determined ward boundaries and council size will remain in effect.

SHORELINE PROPERTY
ASSISTANCE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McKeough moved first reading of Bill 6, An Act to amend The Shoreline Property Assistance Act, 1973.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This amendment clarifies the repayment terms of debentures. Members will recall that the Shoreline Property Assistance Act came into being in the wake of fierce spring flooding in 1973. The Act enabled shore property owners to borrow from their area municipalities to repair buildings damaged by high water and build breakwaters to prevent further damage or erosion. To finance these loans, the municipalities issued debentures to the province. Both the loans and the debentures have 20-year terms.

In all, approximately 465 loans have been made, averaging $3,000 to $5,000 each. Since 1973, many of these small loans have been repaid to the municipalities and their accrual has presented a problem in that the municipality cannot reinvest such small sums in any reasonable manner and our consolidation provisions for the debentures prevent the municipality from prepaying its liability before the 20-year time designated. This amendment will permit partial as well as full prepayment.

SECURITIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 7, An Act to revise The Securities Act.

Motion agreed to.

COMMODITY FUTURES ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 8, An Act to regulate trading in Commodity Futures Contracts.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS
AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 9, An Act to amend The Business Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS
AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 10, An Act to amend The Discounting of Income Tax Refunds Act, 1977.

Motion agreed to.

VITAL STATISTICS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 11, An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

Motion agreed to.

FOODLANDS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Swart moved first reading of Bill 12, An Act to provide for the Designation and Retention of Foodlands.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: How many more?

Mr. Foulds: About a dozen. This one should not be postponed.

Mr. Martel: We are trying to save your seat for you.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the classification of Ontario agricultural foodlands in the classifications one to four of the Agricultural and Rural Development Act (Canada); and for the surveying, designation and preservation of such foodlands.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you just accept it?

Hon. W. Newman: Listen, you are the one who wants to cut up the best fruitland.

Mr. Deans: Me? On a point of privilege. The minister is interjecting—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. There is no point of privilege.

Mr. Havrot: Put pavement on it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I can show it to you in writing.

Interjections.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. Cassidy: I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the member for Sudbury East, that the orders of the day be set aside in order to debate a matter of urgent public importance, namely the government's decision whether or not to permit Ontario Hydro to proceed with the contract with Denison Mines Limited for the supply of uranium valued at a minimum of $4.2 billion by the deadline at midnight tonight.

Mr. Martel: Don't give it away, Reuben.

Mr. Speaker: Proper notice has been given under standing order No. 30 and I will listen to the mover for up to five minutes.

Mr. Cassidy: This matter is a matter of urgent public importance. It is urgent because this is the first opportunity that the Legislature will have to debate the contract which has been under negotiation in secret by the government for a matter of five years and was referred before a select committee of this House less than two months ago.

It is urgent because the deadline that has been placed on the contract by agreement between the government and Denison Mines is midnight tonight, and therefore if the House does not comment on the proposed contract now it will not have a chance to comment before the deal is either consummated by the government or has been rejected.

It is a matter of enormous public importance because the government and Ontario Hydro are involved and because of the magnitude of the contract of $4.2 billion.

It is a matter of public importance because of the stake that we all have in the future of Ontario's nuclear power industry, which depends on the security of supply.

It is a matter of importance to this Legislature because of the clear indications that the government intends to ignore both the advice of its own advisers within Hydro and the recommendations of this Legislature as expressed by the select committee.

It is a matter of importance because such varied authorities as the former chairman of Hydro, George Gathercole, the Hydro staff, and the people on the Hydro Project Wellesley all recommended an alternative route, namely the acquisition of these uranium assets by the people of the province of Ontario in order to benefit everyone in this province in terms of a lower price, in addition to ensuring security of supply.

There have been flimsy promises to tax excess profits by the government, but in fact Ontario stands to get less than $7,000 in licence fees and land taxes from the land on which it is proposed, through this contract, that $1.6 billion minimum in windfall profits be given to a private mining corporation.

Those are the reasons, Mr. Speaker, for which we say that this contract is not in the public interest and that it is a matter of urgent public importance that the opinion of the Legislature be expressed now before the government proceeds.

Mr. Deans: It is also a sellout.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Brock, if he so wishes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the government certainly has no objections to this debate and, indeed, I think it is in keeping with the spirit of the way this matter has been handled up to now. The widest possible discussion has been sought by the Premier (Mr. Davis), as indicated by his letter to the chairman of the select committee on Hydro, dated December 19. I think it is important to have this debate, if it is your wish.

Certainly the government has no objection to the debate. It is really in keeping with and an extension of what the Premier himself put in motion when he wrote to the chairman of the select committee a couple of months ago. In that letter of December 19 the committee has had very full discussion. I've never heard anyone suggest that the committee felt in any way handicapped, as far as time was concerned, to go into all the issues; but that matter may be discussed during the course of the debate.

[3:45]

On December 19, not long after the committee had been established, the Premier of this province wrote to the chairman, the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), and this is the letter:

"Since 1974, Ontario Hydro has been negotiating with Rio-Algom-Preston Mines Limited and Denison Mines Limited for longer term uranium supplies from Elliot Lake to meet its requirements and its obligations under federal government policy guidelines. Negotiations with Denison have been finalized and a contract has been signed by Ontario Hydro subject to approval by order in council.

"Prior to seeking the approval"—and I think this is important—"of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, however, the Ministry of Energy undertook a detailed review of the Denison contract with the assistance of independent consultants and has concluded that the overall terms and conditions are favourable to Ontario Hydro and are in the general public interest. Accordingly, the Minister of Energy is prepared to recommend that an order in council be issued under the authority of section 24 of the Power Corporation Act, authorizing Ontario Hydro to acquire the supply of uranium.

"While all the terms of the contract with Rio-Algom-Preston have not been finalized, it is expected that they will be settled in time for the ministry's consultants to complete their review early in January. When the ministry's review is complete and the second contract signed by Ontario Hydro, subject again to approval by order in council, the government proposes to send the documents related to both contracts to you for consideration by the select committee which you chair. Given the need to supply nuclear fuel to existing and committed reactors in Ontario, and because of the size of these contracts and their implications for the people of Ontario, I should like the select committee to consider the findings of the consultants retained by the Ministry of Energy in order to confirm that entering into the above agreements is in the public interest of Ontario."

Mr. Wildman: They said it wasn't.

Hon. Mr. Welch: "Those findings were based on a consideration of the world's uranium outlook, the federal government's uranium policy guidelines, and a comparison with other uranium supply contracts. It would be my hope that this review could be undertaken as quickly as possible and be completed before the end of February 1978.

"The prime responsibility for providing details of the contracts to the select committee would rest with Ontario Hydro, and I can assure the select committee of the full and complete co-operation of both Ontario Hydro and the Ministry of Energy." That was signed by the Premier.

So, in keeping with the spirit of that particular letter and the assignment of this matter for the consideration of the select committee, the government certainly at this date would have no objection to having the matter further debated this afternoon.

Ms. Gigantes: How long did it take you to set up the committee?

Mr. Reid: The contract hasn't been signed.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, my Liberal colleagues believe that it is quite appropriate to set aside the ordinary business of the day in order that these contracts be debated. We have expressed our views, as members of the committee, that the contracts are not in the best interests of the public and we will be putting those views forward further this afternoon, with your permission.

Mr. Speaker: As this matter is of urgent public importance, and due to the time factor involved, I deem the motion to be in order. The question before the House now is shall the debate proceed?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind you that the debate will conclude at 6 o'clock or prior to that if all members wishing to speak have spoken, and each speaker will be restricted to 10 minutes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: One point before the clock starts: I wonder if we might have the general agreement in concurrence with the House that in keeping with the spirit of provisional order 25, which is the one providing for the minimum number of days for the Throne Speech debate, that notwithstanding the fact that this afternoon is not available for Throne Speech debate—and we will get back to the Throne Speech debate this evening—that, in fact, the House concurs that rule 25 has been complied with, notwithstanding, as I say, the fact that this time is taken out of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Agreed.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. Speaker: Do we have a speaker? The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: The basic reason for having this debate is that the hands of Ontario Hydro were tied when it came to negotiating for the security of supplies for uranium for the nuclear power program which is now under way. Hydro was not permitted to seek the best deal that was available or to act on sound business principles in ensuring the security of supply because the option of acquiring uranium assets or acquiring Denison Mines was closed off by government action and Hydro was not allowed to proceed down that particular route. Hydro's hands were tied because of the determination—in fact, the obsession—of this government with giving handouts to its friends in the monopoly sector of the mining industry rather than ensuring that the best interests of the people of Ontario were served in the uranium deal.

Mr. Martel: The Duke of Kent.

Mr. Laughren: Stephen Roman and his friends.

Mr. Cassidy: They interrupted my train of speech.

There is a pattern here which I find very, very dangerous and distressing. Just today we had the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) say that he intended to recommend to cabinet that it ignore recommendations of the select committee on economic and cultural nationalism related to the sale of cottage lots and Crown land to Americans. We have had just recently the government deliberately undermine recommendations of the select committee on Inco in relation to protecting the jobs of miners up in Sudbury. Now we have a situation where the government is clearly preparing to ignore the vote of the select committee on Hydro as to whether or not this particular uranium deal was in the public interest.

The Premier's letter to the select committee, which was just quoted, indicated the government's position. The indications we have are now that the government intends to hold a hasty cabinet meeting at the conclusion of this debate and then to proceed with the ratification of the contracts, despite the clear opinion of the Legislature as a whole that this is not in the public interest.

That action by the government makes a mockery of minority government when they have a pretence of consultation after five years of secret dealing and then refuse to listen both to the advice of the committee and to the advice of the majority of members of this Legislature representing a majority of the electorate who voted in the last provincial election.

While the committee has been able to discuss this particular deal at some length over the course of the last six weeks, its proceedings have inevitably had to be carried out under great haste and great duress. I would contend that there has not been adequate time for the people of the province of Ontario to grasp the enormity of this enormous deal. It is the largest single sale of uranium in Ontario's history—in fact, in world history. It is the longest contract for uranium in the world's history and it is the biggest sellout of Ontario's natural resources that has ever been carried out whether by this government or any government before it.

Mr. Foulds: Positively shameful.

Mr. Cassidy: We in the New Democratic Party are convinced that this uranium supply contract between Hydro and Denison Mines is absolutely not in the public interest of Ontario. It is a sellout. It is a contract of $4.2 billion that will yield to Denison Mines a windfall profit of a bare minimum of $1.6 billion.

The result will be to inflate the cost of generating electricity for all hydro-electric consumers for a lifetime. The contract will inevitably raise the cost of electrical energy that is used by industry as well as by individuals and it will, therefore, have an adverse impact of an economy which is already damaged by successive oil price increases prescribed by federal policy and which has already been undermined by the failure of any sensible industrial strategy or policy of the Davis government.

To sign this contract tonight will amount to an abandonment of the long-standing policy, an honourable and a fine policy, of power at cost which was introduced to this province 70 years ago when a Conservative government created Ontario Hydro in order to bring the hydro-electric resources of this province into the public sector.

I want to point out several specific arguments that we have about this particular deal. First, the profit that is being accorded to Denison Mines is utterly without justification. There is no risk for the corporation because it is committing this entire mine on a contract which is as good as the word of the province of Ontario. There is no risk on capital because the capital is being advanced interest-free. The costs of management in this particular case are entirely guaranteed because it is a cost plus contract.

The only cost to which Denison Mines is committed is $7,000 a year in mining fees and land leases. It is highway robbery to get $7,000 back and give $1.6 billion in windfall profits.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are minding the store.

Mr. Cassidy: We also believe that this deal is completely unnecessary because there is an economically feasible alternative to the contracts, namely, for Ontario Hydro or for the Ontario Energy Corporation to acquire Denison or to acquire Denison's uranium assets.

This is as good a deal for the taxpayers of Ontario today as it was three or four years ago. According to both the staff of the select committee and to such unimpeachable Conservative sources as the former chairman of Hydro and the former president of Consolidated Edison of New York, the uranium can and should still be exploited for purely public benefit. I didn't mention Sinclair Stevens, the Conservative finance critic in Ottawa, who also believes it should be brought into the public sector.

We will be setting out that case in more detail over the course of this afternoon, but it is worth noting that if Denison were to be acquired and brought under the public sector now the profits from its committed sales to Japan would be enough to pay for the takeover, and it would not be in any way a charge on the people of Ontario.

Third, we believe that Ontario has many levers at its disposal to secure Denison's compliance with this course, despite the arrogant refusal of the federal government to acknowledge that uranium should now be in the provincial sector as our only remaining domestic energy resource. We have the power under section 113 of the Ontario Mining Act to refuse to grant export permits for unrefined uranium, and we should be prepared to use those powers.

We have the power to raise the annual acreage fee on those particular uranium leases to a level that would wipe out Denison's windfall profits. We have the power to raise provincial mining taxes to a level that would wipe out the windfall profits. But a promise from a Minister of Energy who has been in office for less than two weeks is not enough to guarantee to the people of this province that we will get that back if the Conservatives are in power five or 10 years down the line. And I for one, Mr. Speaker, intend to ensure that they are not.

Finally, we have the power to terminate Denison's mining leases, most of which come up for renewal between now and 1986, and a government which was determined to protect the people's interests in the uranium natural resources of this province would use that particular lever in order to ensure that it is the public, and not a private mining corporation, which would get those benefits.

I want to conclude by talking for a moment about the urgency of signing the Denison contract right now. It is urgent to debate that contract today, but in fact the first deliveries under that contract will not take place until 1980. By 1984 only four million pounds, or about three per cent of the entire contract, is slated to be delivered, and by 1990, 12 years from now, only 16 million pounds are to be delivered. There will in fact be, during the entire period of the 1980s, a shortfall on Ontario Hydro's uranium needs of 10 million pounds of uranium under these particular contracts.

In other words, if the government argues that the short-term security of supply of uranium is at stake the figures clearly prove that the government is wrong, because we will be out on the open market, or with the federal government, trying to borrow uranium during the 1980s. This contract is not dedicated to short- and medium-term security of supply, and that is why we should use the time that is available in order to ensure that that uranium is brought into the public sector.

We conclude that the acquisition of Denison's uranium resources would provide Ontario Hydro with the assured supply of fuel that is necessary to meet its $14 billion investment in nuclear-power generating facilities over the long term; that that acquisition of those uranium resources would provide that security of supply at prices which are considerably below those that are provided for in this particular contract; and that in doing so Ontario's hydro users would have their needs met and would be relieved of the onerous burden of a completely unwarranted $1.6 billion tie to the Conservative government's friends in the mining industry.

To do anything else but bring these assets into the public sector—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: I am just concluding—would be an unforgivable betrayal of the people and of the industries of the province of Ontario.
[4:00]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This is a day of decision, Mr. Speaker, and I am pleased to open this debate for the government on these historical contracts for Ontario Hydro and the people of this province.

Let me make it very clear from the outset that I do believe the Hydro contracts with Denison Mines and Preston Mines to be in the public interest of Ontario.

Mr. Wildman: What about the select committee?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I have therefore signed the formal recommendations and conveyed them to the executive council, asking that the necessary orders in council be issued. I have done so because, firstly, they do provide long-term assurance of uranium to fuel Hydro's nuclear reactors which are already in operation or committed to be built—an investment of more than $14 billion. They will assure Ontario Hydro of its required electrical power for the foreseeable future.

Secondly, they contain pricing and other terms which are favourable to Hydro and its consultants, yet provide reasonable incentives to the producers.

Mr. Makarchuk: Reasonable? It's a ripoff.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Thirdly, they will generate many new jobs in Elliot Lake—don't forget this—and in supporting industries, thereby providing the economy of Ontario a badly needed boost.

Mr. Foulds: So would the public sector. Elliot Lake is going full blast; you couldn't get another worker in the community.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wildman: There are lots of jobs in Elliot Lake already.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Fourthly, it would provide a significant measure of provincial control over a federally dominated resource industry.

I have been impressed by the thoroughness of the review which has been carried out in recent months by the Ontario Hydro staff and their consultants, by my ministry and its consultants and, as an ultimate measure, by the select committee and its consultants' reports.

Mr. Warner: Were you impressed by Stephen Roman?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I have examined these voluminous data and can find no compelling evidence which would change my mind that the contracts are appropriate and should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. Cassidy: You're pretty blind. They all recommend against the contracts.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I have also considered the alternatives to the contracts that were reviewed by Ontario Hydro and rejected by the Hydro board on solid business grounds. It did not surprise me, therefore, that the select committee staff reached the same overall conclusion. The evidence was there, and it is there and it is clear.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, that it is a sellout.

Mr. Cassidy: What about the select committee members? Aren't they important?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: What was surprising, and in my mind irresponsible, was the dog-in-the-manger attitude of the opposition. They could not and would not agree on what was in the public interest, but refused to support what the government believed to be the only sensible course of action. In my view, government and the public at least could have expected a credible alternative from the opposition, and we did not get it.

Mr. Cassidy: We provided one.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have listened to the Leader of the Opposition fantasize as he has created his dream-world scenarios in which he would have controlled all the actors and written the perfect contracts. But surely he must know that the real world is not totally a controlled, clinical environment.

Ms. Gigantes: The real world is a rip-off.

Mr. Warner: It's full of corporate creeps.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Circumstances over which we have little or no control must be faced squarely and the best possible decisions reached.

Mr. Wildman: It's vicious out there.

Mr. Swart: The real world of Steve Roman.

Mr. Foulds: You contaminated the real world.

Mr. Warner: Greedy corporate creeps.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Leader of the Opposition's make-believe dream world also has no taxes.

Mr. McClellan: What about windfall profits? Are they part of the real world?

Mr. Warner: Steve Roman and other octopuses.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It's a dream world that has no taxes; at least that is the only conclusion we can draw from the extravagant and alarming claims he has made from the beginning of the select committee hearings about the excessive or bonanza profits which would be made, and we heard it again this moment from across the House.

Mr. Peterson: You talk about taxing them?

Mr. Breithaupt: Of course they are, profits. What do you think?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It was suggested that my statement to the select committee on the taxing powers of the government was a gimmick—an afterthought made, as we have just heard, by a rookie.

Mr. Makarchuk: Absolutely.

Mr. Cassidy: It certainly was.

Mr. Martel: Like afterbirth.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'll tell you why I made the statement, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Makarchuk: Your record speaks for itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It was in response to the wild speculation about the excessive profitability of these contracts to the producers. I felt it necessary to remind the committee and the general public of Ontario of the reality that the government has the power to tax.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's a profound statement.

Mr. Foulds: Darcy and Frank Miller have forgotten that.

Mr. McClellan: This was news, was it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I stated the obvious truth, which was blurred by the opposition, that if, as and when circumstances dictated, it would be up to the government of the day to change the system of taxation to redress any unforeseeable imbalance in the distribution of revenue from this source.

Ms. Gigantes: Who pays the taxes?

Mr. Makarchuk: So far the system has been putting it on the property owner.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I did not start the speculation, but I had to respond simply to maintain some reasonable perspective on the subject.

Mr. Peterson: You are weasling out.

Mr. Foulds: Bring back Jim Taylor.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Leader of the Opposition charges that we haven't tried hard enough to change the federal government's position.

Mr. Makarchuk: The system has been putting it on the property owner.

Mr. Kerrio: Right on.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: He fails to recognize the intransigence of his federal counterparts, and naively says we should have done more.

Mr. Nixon: You didn't do anything.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Another case, Mr. Speaker, of a make-believe world. Where was the support of this Legislature to the government's stand against the federal energy pricing policy of moving crude oil and natural gas to world prices?

Mr. Peterson: Who wrote this junk?

Ms. Gigantes: Where are the world prices, for heaven's sake?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The consistent demand by the leader of the NDP to expropriate the mines—

Mr. Martel: You didn't have a policy in those days, for heaven's sake. It was a sellout. The Premier negotiated and didn't know what he was negotiating. Nobody told him the difference between well-head price and pump price.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —is, for reasons which have been fully documented, so ludicrous and so unrealistic as to warrant no further comment from this side of the House. The policy of the Ministry of Energy is to ensure an adequate supply of energy to Ontario at prices that people can afford—

Mr. Warner: You have abandoned the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —and with a minimum effect on the environment.

Mr. Cassidy: And with a maximum sellout to private companies.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the mass of information available—

Mr. Warner: Did Steve Roman write this?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —I believe these uranium contracts satisfy all three objectives.

Mr. Warner: Particularly Steve Roman's.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It also makes good sense for Hydro and the companies. It stimulates jobs and investment, especially in northern Ontario. It is, in short, in the public interest of Ontario to press ahead.

Mr. Warner: You don't even know where northern Ontario is.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: While the opposition may wish to continue ad nauseam their partisan political posturing, this government, being responsive and responsible, must act and must act today.

Mr. Warner: Progressive Neanderthal.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That is why as Minister of Energy I have signed the formal recommendations to ask cabinet to approve the issuance of the order in council. Thank you.

Mr. Cassidy: Being a minister has gone to your head.

Mr. Makarchuk: Shame. You are giving the country away.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, the arguments that are being put forward here this afternoon, of course, have been developed and put forward in the select committee, and I choose this afternoon, if I might be permitted, to try and shed whatever new light could be shed on the position which my party has taken—

Mr. Laughren: Some hope.

Mr. Reed: —and with which I concur most wholeheartedly. I would like to, first of all, inform the Minister of Energy that the way the contracts are constructed at the present time, and the way I understand them, and the way I am sure he does too, the taxation that the province of Ontario is empowered to impose in case of excess profits is written into the cost of uranium. Because it is written into the cost of the uranium the people who buy the electric power in Ontario are going to pay for those taxes and no one else.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: He is at least talking about taxes.

Ms. Gigantes: Recycling our own money.

Mr. Reed: The minister referred to the fact that the mining of uranium in Elliot Lake would generate jobs, and it certainly will. Mr. Roman has also pointed out to us that if we choose not to buy the uranium he will sell it somewhere else. So the jobs are there so long as the uranium is there, and I should make that quite clear.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And Ontario stays in the dark.

Mr. Reed: I'll get to that in just a minute. There were a few premises upon which the government based its argument for accepting the contracts. One was the security of supply. That was one of the paramount arguments that were put forward by Hydro under consultation through Robertson Associates, who painted the picture that precipitated their position or their decision.

The security of supply is a very interesting thing to contemplate, since for many years, as we know, the uranium business was in the doldrums. It has only been in the last couple of years that there has been any active exploration.

I was asking one expert the other day about just how extensive the exploration had been in Canada. He said: "We have covered Canada from aerial surveys at 25 kilometres." I said: "Could you find the Denison mine with a 25-kilometre survey?" He said: "No." I said: "What are you doing now?" He said: "We have started to cover it aerially at five kilometres." I said: "Could you find the Denison mine at five kilometres?" He said: "Not unless you flew right over it." I said: "How do you find the uranium?" He said: "You have to go in on the ground to find it."

It was interesting to note that since the exploration has intensified in the last year or so the finds have started to come in. We know that during the time the select committee was sitting, announcements were made of finds—one in Australia near Darwin which is so close to the surface it will be mined open pit. It's very rich and it is considered by experts to be five to 10 times larger than anything found in Australia to date. In Canada, Hydro-Shell, that combination exploration effort, announced a find in Labrador as we were sitting. It was quite interesting.

The Globe and Mail, February 25, 1978—another little article: "Interest is Revived by Uranium Deposit Find"—"The discovery of yet another significant deposit of uranium mineralization in northern Saskatchewan has revived interest in a number of companies..." I would dare say that we will probably have a dozen or so new mines or new ore bodies come into being or be assessed in this next year.

That is entirely in contrast to the position taken by Hydro under the advice of their experts who painted the picture that the Denison Mines and the Preston Mines and the Elliot Lake ore bodies were all we were going to get. That's what they said, and that was the premise upon which they went into those negotiations. The government's other premise was its own fundamental philosophy which basically opposed any alternatives to outright purchase of the yellow cake after it was processed. It is interesting that that philosophy pervaded the whole picture right through the years of negotiation.

I must agree with my friend in the NDP that Hydro went into those negotiations with its pants around its ankles. You have to remember that; they went in negotiating out of fear.

Mr. Nixon: That was just the chief negotiator.

Mr. Reed: The whole picture has turned over since then. Look at the size of the contract to begin with. The staff of the select committee told us that there was an over-purchase in it over the 35 years of about 55 million pounds.

Hydro is about to revise its load forecast downward and by 1986 shows a downward forecast of 3,000 megawatts. If you spread the consumption of a reduced load forecast of 3,000 megawatts over that period of time—I'm not counting for any further reductions or anything at all, just what Hydro is doing itself—we can write another 30 million pounds into that over-purchase.

Ms. Gigantes: Right.

Mr. Reed: Now we've got an excess purchase of uranium under these contracts of 85 million pounds and that is almost the capacity of Preston Mines. So just let the minister remember that when he is making his recommendation to the Premier.

The value of the front money was another thing which we discussed at length in the select committee. According to the expert who testified on the last day—on the Friday—we asked him what the value was of front-ending those two mines to the tune of $300 million—odd and how did that relate per pound in uranium—what value could be applied? The answer was—and it surprised me—was upwards of $6 a pound. If you take the contract and add the $5 and you add your 50 cents and you do your split between your world price and you take another $6 input, Mr. Speaker, you are coming so close to world price you can eat it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You didn't convince your staff of that.

Mr. Reed: I want to talk about two more things before I am told to sit down, if I can. First of all the world price of uranium—and these things are tied to world price. The world price right now is supposed to be around $42 or $52.50 a pound. It's interesting to note that I have a little article here that appeared in the paper last July 14 which says, "France is buying 1,000 tons of uranium from Africa to begin delivery in 1980"—at, guess what? $27 a pound. That's a long way from $42.

[4:15]

I challenge the minister to explain to this House what the world price of uranium really is. He doesn't know and I don't know. We discussed in great detail about how the so-called club or cartel could have precipitated the escalation of prices and so on. We see prices, according to the world-price charts, of so much a pound. Then I read an article like this that an actual sale was made at $27. So where does the minister stand? He has no way to assess it. Yet he's tying it to a fictitious figure. How can he do that?

Ms. Gigantes: You are going to get hosed.

Mr. Reed: There is one other thing that I would like to put on record, that is, the Denison mine itself. It has come to my attention, and I probably should have paid more attention to it a little earlier in the game, that certain parts of that ore body, as we get down through the extraction of the uranium, contain an ore that is—and you'll have to forgive me, Mr. Speaker, because I'm not too up on my technology here—a highly chloritized ore. Apparently, there is a whole vein of highly chloritized ore that runs through part of this. I have the map here, if the minister would like to see it, that shows that during part of that excavation there's going to be a tremendous high cost awarded to the extraction of that uranium. I will quote from a book, A Geological Survey of Canada, 1969: "Highly chloritized ore was intersected in Denison's drill hole No. 29, a few thousand feet west of Can-Met workings."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I hope I shed some new facts in this debate and I pray that the minister will advise the Premier to reconsider these contracts.

Ms. Gigantes: I would like to support the position being taken by the opposition against ratification of these contracts by looking at the contracts in terms of the business deal involved. First of all, I'd like to talk about the quantities being purchased by Hydro under these contracts. The amounts that are being offered to Hydro in both these contracts are the amounts that the companies want to sell. We know for a fact from testimony from the directors of Preston Mines that the sale of this amount to Ontario Hydro will relieve this corporation of its obligation to provide any other reserves for the domestic market. That is very convenient for the companies. The amount we are being told to purchase is very convenient as far as the companies are concerned, but it is too much as far as Hydro's needs go.

With Darlington included—and I would join with some of my colleagues here in the Liberal opposition in feeling that Darlington may not be necessary before the period of 1990 and perhaps not at all if we get into a decent conservation program in this province—we are buying under these contracts too much uranium, 25 per cent too much, as my hon. colleague has mentioned; 55 million pounds too much.

Within the contract, the conditions for curtailment of delivery are too narrow and the resale conditions are too restricted. We may be stuck with 55 million pounds too much, or more, depending upon what we do with Darlington. The deliveries of these amounts do not match Ontario Hydro's needs in terms of time.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Do you want to take the whole thing?

Ms. Gigantes: We have a cumulative projected shortfall in deliveries of uranium to Ontario Hydro up to the year 1992 under these contracts of 10 million pounds.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Do you want the whole thing?

Ms. Gigantes: Somewhere Ontario Hydro is going to have to find that 10 million pounds if we're to believe the projections of requirement between now and 1992. That's the amount being offered in the contract.

If we turn to the price side of the contract, we see that under the Denison contract, which is the one which we face most urgently right now, we, the Ontario public through Ontario Hydro must advance to Denison—in 1978 dollars let me point out—the $178 million capital for Denison to invest in the expansion of its facilities. We know that some of that expansion will obviously enable Denison to more easily meet its current export contract with Spain and with Japan.

The capital advances are repayable to Hydro within the contract period but they are interest free. If these capital investments were made by Denison, as opposed to Hydro, the pricing formula contained in the contract would mean that the cost to Hydro of each pound of uranium would be lower.

What is that pricing formula? Roughly speaking, it is something called the "actual cost of production"—which we are supposed to be able to monitor, pray God—plus all taxes charged against that production, plus environmental costs. So that is what we call the basic actual cost of production. But to that, this contract adds 50-cents-a-pound for exploration charges—and that, Mr. Speaker, will be escalated over the period of the contract—plus $5-a-pound profit, also escalated over the contract period, plus one-half the difference between that total amount and the world price. That is their formula under this contract.

Now what will our price be? We do not know—there is no way we can know—but there are many reasons to fear it will not be to our benefit.

Let's look first at what world price is.

In 1973, Mr. Speaker, the world price was $6-a-pound and there had been, as my hon. Liberal colleague points out, very little exploration for new sources of uranium in the previous 14 years.

Mr. Nixon: You couldn't give it away for $6.

Ms. Gigantes: From 1969 to 1974, Mr. Speaker, the US uranium market was closed to all foreign sellers by an American government embargo; thus creating a cartel-like influence on 70 per cent of the world market. And overlapping this period, from 1972 to 1975, the major producers of uranium outside the US, including those Canadian producers of uranium, like Denison and Rio, operated a counter cartel. We know that. We have documentary evidence of that.

The price of uranium inside and outside the US rose rapidly in the period 1973 to 1975; and new exploration had not produced "producing" mines by mid-1975, when Westinghouse Corporation declared that because of rapid price increases it could not afford to meet its contracts to supply US utilities.

When the Westinghouse renege hit the market, there was a supply panic as the US utilities that had contracted with Westinghouse scrambled to try to cover their immediate requirements. Most of those US utilities—and we have testimony before the select committee indicating that this is the case—have now covered their immediate needs, and it is interesting to note that the world price has remained steady or even declined in real terms, even while this Westinghouse supply scramble was going on.

But to come back to the contracts for Ontario, we want to know how they relate to world price. Will they be better for Ontario than world price? Again, we simply do not know; but it is fascinating to note that within the Denison contract there is a specification that if world price dropped below the contract price by the year 1980, Ontario Hydro could not get out of the contract until 1992.

I note that with interest because it indicates that Denison Mines certainly considers it a possibility.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You would take over the whole mine for a lifetime.

Mr. Reed: You lose the front money too.

Ms. Gigantes: So we have to ask ourselves, is it likely that the world price will fall significantly in the future. Most of the testimony we have heard from the experts who came before us was negative. But it is important to underline that the track record of some of these very experts on price predictions for uranium, some of the most significant of the witnesses we have heard, is at least abominable. They have not been able to predict the price for uranium in the very near past, and I do not have much confidence in their ability to do it now. It is important that until 1975 there was not significant exploration going on and we couldn't expect to find new supplies coming on to such a degree that the price would have fallen since that time.

In summary, we are being asked to lock into 40-year contracts which do not cover our uranium needs up to 1992, which deliver us at least 25 per cent more uranium than we require under the overall contract period; we are being asked to take all the financial risks on a purchase that is coming at the height of a sellers' market, and we have no guarantee that we will not find ourselves paying more than the world price for uranium in a very few years.

I believe no businessman who had to report to shareholders would dare sign such a contract. We in this Legislature represent the shareholders of Ontario Hydro, the public of Ontario, and we have to say to this government loud and clear, these contracts represent bad business for the public of Ontario. They must not be approved.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Durham West.

Mr. Mancini: I'm surprised at you, George, real surprised.

Mr. Ashe: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to participate in this debate this afternoon. As a member of the committee for the past seven weeks, I have had an opportunity to be, and have been, presented with a tremendous amount of testimony from recognized experts in the field. Most without exception they have stated in no uncertain terms that the contracts negotiated by Hydro with both Denison and Preston are among the best that have ever been obtained by any public utility or private corporation.

Ms. Gigantes: For another company.

Mr. Ashe: Almost to a man they have said unequivocally that these contracts are in the best interests of the people of Ontario. It is also worth noting that the staff assigned to the select committee in their report to the committee a week ago very strongly supported the contracts and urged the committee to sign them because they are in the best interests of the people of Ontario.

What we have today is a situation in which, after several years of intense negotiations by Hydro, after independent analysis by experts of these negotiated contracts, after seven weeks of intense examination by a select committee of this Legislature, there are two opposition parties who say in the face of all this evidence, "Don't sign the contracts."

The position of both parties is, in my opinion, completely indefensible. The position of the Liberal Party, in fact, would be laughable if the question under discussion were not so serious. Almost from the first day of the hearings, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) decided that here was a chance to make some political hay. As he does so often, he let fly with a barrage of comments to the press before he even knew half the facts—as a matter of fact, a quarter of the facts. On the first or second day the committee met, before any facts had been presented—

Mr. Mancini: Did Darcy write that for you?

Mr. Ashe: —he went on record as being against the contracts. It was so obvious, that after two days of hearing of evidence I read a statement to the committee, which I would like to quote in part. "Consequently I suggest we stop rattling our sabres in the halls, stop trying to serve political expediency with the press and TV, with suggestions that these two contracts are going to be rejected." That was the atmosphere after only two days of the committee set up by this Legislature.

Then, as witness after witness gave testimony as to why the contracts were good, and why they should be signed, Dr. Smith found himself having to do his usual flip-flop as he tried desperately to get himself and his party off the hook. In this end he just could not quite pull it off.

Mr. Reed: Be careful, he has yet to speak.
[4:30]

Mr. Ashe: What a spectacle we witnessed, as the members opposite flip-flopped back and forth, just like a herring right out of water. First we had the member for Halton-Burlington, the Liberal energy critic, who by his statements obviously doesn't understand the contracts and doesn't understand the federal guidelines, saying in all seriousness to the committee on February 21: "The question of acquisition as an alternative is one that, so far as I am concerned under the circumstances, can be a very real alternative." Five minutes later the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio), from the same party, disagreed with his party colleague. He said: "Acquisition would take the pressure off the federal government, so we shouldn't go that route."

Mr. Nixon: You couldn't even vote along with your members. You couldn't even scare up a vote.

Mr. Ashe: Here is the best of all.

Mr. Reed: Why don't you read those statements in the proper context?

Mr. Nixon: He is still smarting because he wasn't asked into the cabinet.

Mr. Ashe: A very short time later, the Leader of the Opposition said that if he had been Premier he wouldn't have wasted five minutes before acquiring Denison in 1974. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, he did say that considering him as Premier was "perhaps an outlandish fantasy to the point of either a nightmare or insanity." In that, he's exactly right, and probably it was the only relevant thing he said during the whole debate.

Mr. Kerrio: You're running out of time, too.

Mr. Ashe: That's because you're taking up my time by interjections. Again we have a situation where the Liberals do their famous "I say I will and then I say I won't."

Mr. Reed: No, we've been consistent from the start.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Halton-Burlington has already participated in the debate.

Mr. Ashe: Then they have another approach. They say: Let's blame the Ontario government for the stupidity and ineptitude of their colleagues in Ottawa. They suggest the Ontario government should try harder to get the federal government to change its policy on uranium. The member for Halton-Burlington says of the federal Liberal uranium policy: "It is out of date, it's old fashioned and has to be changed."

Mr. Reed: Right on.

Mr. Ashe: The member for Niagara Falls says to the committee: "We have to put pressure on the federal Liberal government to look after the best interests of Ontario."

Mr. Kerrio: Right on.

Mr. Ashe: The Leader of the Opposition says of his colleagues' federal policy: "It is shortsighted and utterly, in my opinion, unprotective, and that's the most charitable word I can use of the federal government with regard to uranium."

Mr. Kerrio: That's pretty consistent.

Mr. Ashe: Out of date, shortsighted and old-fashioned are good words and are excellent to describe any Liberal policies. Far be it for this government to disagree with those statements. This government has moved heaven and earth to try to get the federal Liberals to change its policy.

Time after time this government has made urgent representations to the federal Liberal government seeking to have this policy changed and time after time the federal Liberals have refused even to consider it. Let there be no mistake about it. The federal government can never be accused of having the best interests of Ontario as a priority because time after time they have proved that they don't. This is just one further example.

Mr. Reed: Now you are agreeing with us.

Mr. Ashe: The committee heard all of the evidence on this point, and it was documented beyond question that the Ontario government has tried to have this policy changed. The Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz) sent the federal Liberal minister a telegram on February 4, 1978, and the reply left no doubt as to the federal position on this matter. I quote from Mr. Gillespie's answer: "A two-price system for uranium is not being planned by the federal government. While changing conditions in the industry might require the formation of a marketing board at some future time, the existence of such a board would not necessarily affect the domestic pricing regime. Even if it did, there could be no assurance that it would result in a more favourable price or security of supply situation than now possible through the contracts awaiting your approval."

The facts speak for themselves and the facts are that the federal government will not change its position. If the Leader of the Opposition and his colleagues think they can bring about a change, then why haven't they done so? What kind of conversations have they had with their federal colleagues, and have they heard or seen anything that would indicate that this change might be brought about? The fact is they know it can't and won't be done.

To advocate that the contracts not be signed and that the government try to get a better deal from Ottawa is the cheapest and most dishonest political ploy imaginable. Such an argument is specious and misleading to the citizens of this province. They know it but they have to run somewhere, so they try to hide behind the red herrings that were contained in six pages of gobbleddegook. The truth is that the Liberals have no answers. They obviously have no policies and they have no credibility.

Mr. Reid: Oh, come on now!

Mr. Bolan: Are you serious?

An hon. member: What's your name, Margaret Scrivener?

Mr. Ashe: They have no credibility whatsoever on this issue.

An hon. member: The new Margaret Scrivener.

Mr. Ashe: It is fine for them to say, "Don't sign the contracts," but from the beginning, they have had no alternative and have put forward no constructive policy whatsoever.

Mr. Kerrio: The Premier didn't ask us for an alternative. He asked us what we thought of the contracts.

An hon. member: You asked us what we thought of the contracts.

Mr. Ashe: The members opposite have used the term "windfall" in connection with these contracts. If the people of Ontario had to rely on the Liberal Party to provide future energy needs in Ontario, it would be a windfall, but it would be windfall for the candlestick makers and a disaster for the hydro users in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Bolan: Selling out to Steve Roman again, eh?

An hon. member: George, you don't believe that yourself.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, the evidence is overwhelming in favour of these contracts and their signature, and I would recommend to my cabinet colleagues that the contracts be signed.

Mr. Bolan: It is overwhelming in favour of a sellout.

An hon. member: It's a sellout, an absolute sellout.

An hon. member: Give them hell, Bob.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, to begin with I should tell you, sir, that I had the greatest respect for the Hydro negotiating team who came before the select committee to explain their procedures, and to more or less organize and orchestrate the presentation of the factual material which was considered by the committee. I don't often praise Hydro and in fact there may be times in the near future when we can be very specifically, and I hope effectively, critical; but in this instance I felt the negotiating team had taken a very valuable and healthy stance in their dealings with the people who own the uranium resources. They had said to Denison and later to Rio-Preston that they were prepared to pay the audited costs, plus a reasonable profit, which they assigned at $5 a pound, plus in one instance an additional 50 cents for further exploration for uranium, and some of these details have been very effectively put before us by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton—

Ms. Gigantes: Carleton East.

Mr. Nixon: Carleton East, one of those important ridings.

Mr. Foulds: That you held so briefly.

Mr. Nixon: They were continuing with those negotiations, not getting very far, when we were told in the committee the Premier, in another situation in which he was talking to the chairman of the board of Denison, had suggested that Mr. Roman should stop sticking to his side of the argument which was world price. The Premier is very proud of the fact that he was able to get what he called a better deal under these circumstances and persuaded Mr. Roman to agree that rather than world price, whatever that is, he—Mr. Roman—would be prepared to accept the formula base price plus one half the difference between that and the world price.

I think, sir, you would be interested to know that although the Premier did not talk to the authorities at Rio-Preston, Rio-Preston had meanwhile negotiated with Hydro to accept the base price plus, not a half, but only a third of the difference between that price and world price.

But I wanted to say this. While we hope and trust there are going to be extensive discoveries of uranium ore in the immediate and mid-range future which will be used to provide electrical energy here in Ontario and in Canada, my own feeling is that the logic of using uranium from the Elliot Lake deposits is almost irrefutable; I believe that this is one of the most extensive and richest deposits in the world. It's not only in Canada but it's in Ontario.

This House has concerned itself with the development and the stability of Elliot Lake on more than one occasion when we couldn't give the uranium away, when government policy at that time might very well have considered either acquiring the assets of the mine or even acquiring some substantial amounts of uranium to fulfil our future needs. But my own feeling is that this is a logical source for the uranium which we obviously need for the plants that are already built and that are specifically planned; that it's part of the terms of reference of this select committee to review the future plans of Ontario Hydro in this connection and certainly that will be a very interesting, and I hope, productive program.

My main objection to the contract and the one which gives me, let's say confidence, along with my colleagues in the Liberal Party, in saying that the contracts are not in the best public interest, has to do with the terms of the contract which associate the price we will be paying over the next 30 to 40 years with world price. This world price is as artificial, in my view, as the oil price which has been dictated by the OPEC nations.

At one point I brought to the attention of the people in the committee that if you were going to buy a gallon of gas in Abu Dhabi, you don't pay $1 a gallon. In fact, you can get it for 12 cents a gallon because that's where the oil comes from and the government there is not going to be so benighted as to feel that it is in the best interests of those people to pay a world price or anything that is even connected with it. They know that, in that instance, world price is meaningless; and it is just about as meaningless with reference to uranium.

Not only has there been a cartel in action, sponsored in part by the government of Canada, but there have certainly been restrictions by almost every nation that has uranium, either for use in its own reactors or for sale on the international market. Even the United States, which is still the largest producer of uranium, had an embargo situation for many years which certainly had an artificial effect on the price of uranium.

Let me say this: I have no objection whatsoever to the government of Canada, together with other uranium producers, establishing some sort of club which would establish a cartel pricing situation for world markets. I believe this is an important and extremely valuable resource, that we in Canada are very fortunate to have this resource, and I believe that it is our duty not to hold it away from the rest of the world but, for the development of our own nation, to see that we get the very best price for it. I see nothing wrong with that at all.

I do, however, object to any kind of contract which Ontario would enter into by its own free will, which would have us as a part of the pricing mechanism—in my opinion—a concomitant part of that price based on cartel operations, or even the artificial pricing situations that I have referred to very obliquely and without detail. Therefore, I would agree with those other members who have spoken, that the world price as a phrase or even as a concept is completely meaningless, and that Ontario Hydro was entirely correct—

Ms. Gigantes: They're going to have to pay it.

Mr. Nixon: —when they were attempting to negotiate with the producers in northern Ontario on the basis of audited costs plus a reasonable profit, which they deemed to be $5 a pound. That was the area for negotiation, nowhere else. If they want to tack on a few sweeteners like an additional 50 cents a pound for exploration—a few additions to the contract such as the Denison people insisted on, having to do with other safeguards which may or may not be meaningless—that's fine. That's the procedure of negotiation.

The Premier introduced his good offices in a friendly conversation with his friend, Steve Roman, when really, I think they were talking about the possibility of the Premier going to Ottawa as the federal leader, or something like that—and the Premier said, "Listen, Steve. I really think you should come down on this world price." Steve, as the president of Denison, with his great generosity and because of good corporate citizenship, decided they would do that. Of course, they didn't come down nearly as far as Rio-Preston came. And I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, Rio-Preston, controlled by the Rothschilds, is never considered to be some kind of a giveaway corporation in their emanations and decisions and actions in the world market.

I believe that the Premier should ask for and should still be insisting on the original concept of Ontario Hydro; that is an audited contract plus reasonable profit. This is surely the only reasonable alternative for the province of Ontario, or in fact for any jurisdiction in Canada; but particularly us.

It is probably wrong to say, "That's our uranium," and yet we feel that is so, because it is up there. Sure, it's owned by Denison. The thing that is hard to take is that in 1946, by an Act of Parliament, the government of Canada took over the jurisdiction of uranium because it was a strategic material. We sold hundreds of thousands of pounds to the United States—half the uranium that is presently sitting in those warheads in silos in the United States came from Ontario. That's an appalling thought; but that's a fact.

The whole thing was taken over as a strategic material in 1946. But now, we hope that the strategic importance has somehow decreased, and for us the importance is as an energy source. It's ours; it's right here, not in Alberta. It's not in Saudi Arabia; it's here. And we have led the world. With the greatest respect to the people in Hydro, to the Atomic Energy Commission—whatever we read about them from time to time—and, further, with respect to the initiative of the government of Ontario at the time, I believe most of the credit belongs to the Hon. J. R. Simonett, who made the announcement here that the government was prepared to go forward with the establishment of the Pickering reactor.

[4:45]

My feeling is that the only legitimate policy for the government of Ontario is the one I have enunciated. I believe that there is sufficient power remaining in this government and in this House, in co-operation and in conjunction with the government of Canada, to see that an audited cost plus reasonable profit is the basis for the operation of our uranium reactors both now and in the 30- to 40-year future.

In closing, I want to say to the Minister of Energy that his interjection, about the lights going out, I consider to be unacceptable—in fact, irresponsible—because the uranium will not leave Canada unless it is approved by an order in council in Ottawa—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You know how responsible they have been.

Mr. Nixon:—and I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that orders in council by this cabinet are necessary for the uranium to leave Ontario. There may be legal implications that would force those orders in council—

Hon. B. Stephenson: There sure as hell are.

Mr. Nixon:—but certainly they could be used as an effective bargaining agent.

The Minister of Labour is interjecting—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Nixon: She probably doesn't even know that she was part of the cabinet that approved those orders in council—

Ms. Gigantes: Did you know, Bette?

Mr. Nixon:—which now are seeing hundreds of thousands of pounds of uranium going to Japan and Spain; and it would be with her tacit approval.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, in this whole scenario, what puzzles me the most is why a government such as a Conservative government, which has prided itself on the ability to manage things in Ontario, has rejected so obviously and so arbitrarily what was a good business deal—why they rejected the acquisition route so summarily. I want to speak specifically on that point.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: They didn't reject it. The premise is wrong. Correct your premise and go on.

Mr. Foulds: The Minister of Energy intervenes and says, "Correct your premise."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Get back to the correct premise.

Mr. Foulds: What I want to point out to him is that the Tories like to talk about the so-called real world in which a contract has to be signed. Like the former speaker, I give Hydro's officials full marks for negotiating a contract in that so-called real world. But I want to point out to the Minister of Energy that he and his predecessors and the cabinet contaminated the real world because they cut the ground out from Hydro by not allowing them to pursue the acquisition route.

On December 10, 1973, George Gathercole, chairman of Ontario Hydro, wrote to the Minister of Energy: "In our view, we should proceed with the purchase of the uranium assets at Denison Mines, which are understood to have the largest, low-cost reserves available, as quickly as possible."

Mr. Lupusella: He lost the letter.

Mr. Foulds: Following that, on June 4, 1974, J. C. Matthew, manager of fuels and supply resources development at Hydro, wrote: "Acquisition of the Denison reserves is the key to Ontario Hydro's bargaining position now and in the future."

Then, in 1975, after a thorough investigation, Project Wellesley reported: "There is a significant, absolute dollar saving in acquiring the company." They also said: "It is recommended that Ontario Hydro enter into negotiations to obtain a majority interest in Denison Mines Limited through the purchase of shares."

As well as that, we had a number of witnesses before the committee; most impressive was a firm from Washington. The firm is called Donovan, Hamester and Rattien Incorporated—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Who liked the deal.

Mr. Foulds: Two of the principals in that company, one of whom had been a former president of Consolidated Edison in the United States and the other a consultant, clearly told the committee that acquisition was a desirable and acceptable route to any private utility company.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: They also liked the deal. They liked the contract.

Mr. Foulds: I'd like to quote directly from the Hansard of the committee on February 8, where my colleague, the member for Carleton East, said:

"We are buying a supply today. We are doing it in a $7 billion contract. And what Wellesley suggested is the same as you suggest, that in principle the better way would be to own a source."

"Dr. Donovan."—and I quote directly—"No question about that, provided it can be obtained at a favourable price . . ."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's the big question.

Mr. Foulds: What is interesting in the whole economics of the situation—

Mr. MacDonald: You blew it, the way you fiddled around.

Mr. Foulds:—is that what was economically sound and feasible in 1975 is economically sound and feasible today, in 1978.

Mr. Cassidy: Right on.

Ms. Gigantes: We know that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It ain't necessarily so.

Mr. Foulds: We know from the evidence that the staff of the select committee put before the committee that the economics have not changed at all since 1975.

What is interesting also is that Sinclair Stevens, the Conservative finance critic at the federal level, admitted to the committee that if he had been on the board of directors of a private utility seeking these contracts he would have recommended that they go the acquisition route because it was economically sound.

What it would involve is an expenditure of approximately $800 million. That interestingly is less than half the profit that Denison gets from the contract. Not half the price of the contract, but half the profit that Denison gets from the contract.

Not only that, but as one of the speakers has pointed out previously, we could finance the acquisition of Denison Mines through the revenue we would get after the second year from the Japanese contracts that are already in existence with Denison.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. Boy!

Mr. Foulds: I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if it is good enough for the private sector, why isn't it good enough for the public sector?

Mr. Swart: Because they are doctrinaire.

Mr. Foulds: When it is economically advantageous for the people of Ontario, the residents of Ontario, why do they reject arbitrarily—by the then Minister of Energy, now the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough)—the acquisition move? And I put it to you that we put that alternative as a real alternative, as a possible alternative, as an economically sound alternative.

Given the framework within which the Conservatives operate there are certain seductive elements in saying we must sign the contracts, because they have rejected every other alternative.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Such as jobs, the economy.

Mr. Foulds: They are hidebound to the contract route alone and they are hidebound only to the long-term contract route. They reject every other possibility.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Mr. Foulds: But that framework has been imposed upon them. It is not a real world; it is a contaminated world. And it is a world that is contaminated by a doctrinaire, dogmatic position of the Conservative Party, and it is one that is damaging the people of Ontario.

Ms. Gigantes: It's bad business.

Mr. Foulds: One of the main reasons I reject the contract route is because by signing contracts of this length and of this magnitude we are by this seal not only committing the people of Ontario to huge and unnecessary expenditures, we are confirming, aiding and abetting an artificially inflated, so-called world price for uranium.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Turn over the whole pie and eat the whole thing.

Mr. Foulds: The Minister of Energy—the five-day wonder—comes into the committee and says, "We could tax the windfall profits." What I would like to point out to him is that the Ministry of Natural Resources and the Treasurer have never taxed the mining companies the just economic rent that we deserve.

Mr. Renwick: They never will.

Mr. Foulds: When they were in trouble between 1969 and 1973 we financed them by stockpiling through the federal Liberal government, by stockpiling to assure them a profit. We can assure a company a profit when they are having a downturn, but we won't use stockpiling to assure jobs at Sudbury. And I just cannot stomach that dichotomy any more, Mr. Speaker.

We have received a mere $55,000 in economic rent over the years from those natural resources at Denison. I want to say, like Peter Finch in the movie "Network", I am mad as hell and I just don't want to take it any more. And I think the people of Ontario—

Mr. Nixon: You know what happened to him.

Mr. Foulds: Is Morty behind me? And I think the people of Ontario should be mad as hell—

Ms. Gigantes: They are.

Mr. Foulds:—and not take that pittance of an economic rent any more. One of the hecklers from the Conservative side at one point indicated that—

An hon. member: Warner.

Mr. Foulds:—jobs were the key. I want to point out that the jobs will be there under public ownership just as equally as they will be there under private ownership. In fact, Ontario Hydro—a public corporation—has directly or indirectly 25,000 employees and those are some jobs—they pay well. As well, in the public sector—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And you want to make it bigger—one day you complain it is too big and the next day you want to double its size.

Mr. Foulds:—we could plan for the job so it is not subject to the boom and bust of the Sudbury situation, and so that we could protect the health and safety of the workers and we could pay just as well.

I reject the idea of the contracts, because it is the single most expensive way to assure us of a supply of uranium.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Why did your experts accept it?

Mr. Foulds: I suggest that the government pursue acquisition because it meets our long-term need. It meets our necessity for an assured supply for the $14.1 billion investment in the nuclear power stations that already exist. And it assures us of a continued supply of electricity for the manufacturers and the home users in Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Natural Resources I would like to look at a different aspect of this contract rather than the issues of profit and of cost that have been looked at carefully by all parties up to date. I have listened to those arguments with interest and attention, but I would like to really relate this contract to other elements that are related to the responsibilities my particular ministry has.

My ministry is responsible for the discovery and the exploitation of minerals, and for the mining industry in Ontario. We believe that it should be done by the private sector. We have supported that attitude for many years.

Mr. Cassidy: Even Con-Ed disagrees with you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We have had one of the healthiest mining industries in the world. I believe Canada rates either number two or number three in the whole world in terms of the value of mineral exports.

I would like to look at the world situation for a second—

Mr. Deans: Why don't we relate it to the value of the minerals?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Remember that until an ore is taken out of the ground it has no value—

Mr. Deans: That is not so. That is nonsense.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Ore becomes wealth when labour is applied to it.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are some fundamental differences in attitudes—

Mr. Deans: Until you cut the tree, it has no value? Until the mineral is taken—oh, come on. You don't believe that nonsense.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The wealth is created when the labour is added to the resource.

Mr. Deans: Good heavens—is that your contribution?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, this kind of debate does spark real ideological differences, as the member for Wentworth is interjecting now. But if you look at the world mining situation at this present time you realize that there are problems in world mining right now.

Mr. Deans: There certainly are.

Mr. McClellan: Sounds like your Inco speech.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was lucky enough to get a copy of the Financial Times this week which has a supplement on the world mining situation.

Mr. Deans: Written by whom?

Mr. Warner: Steve Roman.

Hon. F. S. Miller: While we have heard a great deal of talk from the opposition about the fact that Canada or Ontario doesn't tax enough, it is interesting to see how we are seen by other eyes. "And in Canada, for example, there has been the spectacle of Ottawa and the provincial governments competing for mining taxes to the point at which royalties have been levied without regard to cost and profit."

That's the way it's seen from another point of view—in another part of the world.

Mr. McClellan: What has that got to do with the issue?

Mr. Makarchuk: That's the kind that comes out of there all the time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I heard some of the other members before me say that in fact we did have the best exploration in the world. I believe the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said that, or one of the members from the Liberal Party in any case, who was talking about exploration. It wasn't you?

Mr. Nixon: No, that wasn't mine.

[5:00]

Hon. F. S. Miller: We do have the best exploration in the world and as the demand for any particular ore improves, as the markets improve, of course we'll find more mines. The idea that this country or this world has found all the mineral resources that are around is far from true.

Mr. Swart: Are you going to vote for it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: This is one of the interesting points because I think I'm going to agree with some of the things the hon. members brought up in the course of the issue. But let's look at the history of the mining industry in Elliot Lake, or in fact look at the history of the mining industry in Sudbury.

It's only a few short weeks ago I was being belaboured by some of the hon. members opposite to find some mechanism by which we could guarantee employment in the nickel industry in Canada, and certainly I would like to. Yet here we have a mechanism by which we're guaranteeing employment in the Elliot Lake area in the uranium industry in Canada.

Mr. Reid: At what cost?

Hon. F. S. Miller: All right. One can always argue. I said I was staying away from the cost aspects today. I'm going to leave those members who sat in the committee and explored it to look at those.

Ms. Gigantes: What is $1.6 billion, eh?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would like to look at the fact that in a world that's becoming increasingly short of energy, one of the keys to all industrial success in the future is an assured source of energy in your own bailiwick.

Mr. Cassidy: At the best possible cost.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At the best possible price.

Mr. Makarchuk: And you hand it over to somebody else.

Hon. F. S. Miller: This contract will guarantee employment for decades to come in the Elliot Lake area at a relatively uniform rate. It will help us stabilize our balance of payments because—

Mr. Cassidy: You're going to guarantee a profit of $27 a pound.

Hon. F. S. Miller: May I suggest that the leader of the NDP do what I did: listen.

Mr. Swart: It didn't do you any good.

Mr. McClellan: The minister didn't learn a damn thing.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I've just been in another country and I realize how sharp the energy needs of the world are.

Mr. Nixon: Were you in Florida?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I was in Yugoslavia—
An hon. member: That was Jim Breithaupt.

Hon. F. S. Miller:—studying their energy sources, and I can tell the hon. members that as we go around this world—that trip was on me—as we go around this world, the industrial growth will depend upon assured energy sources. There's no question about that.

Ms. Gigantes: Who is arguing that?

Mr. Swart: Nobody is arguing against that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Therefore, if one sits here today and makes certain commitments to guarantee employment in the mining industry—

Mr. Makarchuk: Assuming you can provide power at a good price.

Hon. F. S. Miller:—to guarantee assured sources of supply, perhaps the argument about whether the cost is the best possible one, which will not be resolved until future—in other words, in historical hindsight we'll know—becomes a little less critical. The key thing is to have Canadian employment, Canadian sources of energy, and an assured source of energy so that we can go on. There are going to be about $300 million invested in the construction of the new mine. There are going to be about 1,400 jobs created in the expansion of the mine. There are going to be, I think, 2,500 jobs for miners as the mines are expanded. This gives us somewhere in the range of 2,500 permanent jobs in the future in the mining industry—

Mr. Makarchuk: And you could do it without giving away the province.

Hon. F. S. Miller:—and at the very minimum we'll have 10,000 to 12,000 other jobs in the service industries. All of those will come provided this contract is signed.

Mr. Deans: No. No.

Mr. Reeds: They'll come anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Don't count on it. Some of the hon. members were making comments about other sources of energy coming on stream at lower costs, but they aren't sure of that. In this case, Hydro is committed to buy, Elliot Lake is committed to deliver, the jobs are in Canada. That's a thing that we should keep in mind.

Mr. Reed: They would be either way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: As to acquisition, I think it was the member for Port Arthur who said acquisition by private companies has been always a natural route. But acquisition by private companies is not the same as acquisition by government.

Mr. Cassidy: Why not?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I didn't expect the NDP to have any other position but the nationalization position, and I respect their point of view. I disagree with it.

Mr. Samis: It's not nationalization.

Mr. Cassidy: It makes good business sense.

Ms. Gigantes: It's making your investment pay off.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At the same time, I am surprised to hear my friends in the Liberal Party—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, for the Tories of yesteryear who at least understood these things.

Hon. F. S. Miller:—the people who have been selling the free-enterprise line more than any other group in the last few years, stand up and say, as their leader did: "It wouldn't have taken me five minutes to nationalize the mining industry if I'd been Premier in 1974."

Mr. Samis: He didn't say "nationalize."

Mr. Reid: Not the mining industry, the uranium industry.

Mr. Reed: The uranium industry.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The uranium industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: But if you start taking the uranium industry because it suits you today, what will you take tomorrow? What will you take tomorrow?

Mr. Reid: Who nationalized Hydro?

Mr. Nixon: Today, uranium; tomorrow, the world.

Mr. Reid: Who nationalized Hydro?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The leader of the Liberals said—just calm down, Pat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This isn't the question period.

Mr. Nixon: George Ashe did it better.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Our friend, the leader, said he would eliminate the profits. He would, believe me, but he would not have cut the costs because government-run organizations do not run as efficiently as private organizations.

Mr. Swart: That is not true.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you saying that Hydro is more poorly run than Consolidated Edison?

Mr. Reid: We missed you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Now let me tell you this: Just for your information, within the mining corporation area—

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You know, I must be getting you fellows upset.

A review of Ontario's mining tax rates and corporation tax rates would show you that corporation tax is about 46 per cent—is that right? Forty-six per cent is currently the combination of provincial and federal—

Ms. Gigantes: We have to pay that.

Mr. Makarchuk: What do they pay though; what is the final payout?

Hon. F. S. Miller: And in addition, Ontario has a mining tax of up to 40 per cent on profits of the mining—

Mr. Cassidy: That is part of the base price.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —non-deductible for federal tax calculations. Today, incremental tax rates in profitable mines can be as high as 60 per cent of total profit.

Ms. Gigantes: According to whom?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would say that this government—

Mr. Haggerty: What are you going to do about it, Frank?

Hon. F. S. Miller: —this Parliament, should ensure the future economic stability of this province by ensuring that our energy sources are supplied by these mines and by ensuring that Ontario will have a sound, healthy economic future, both in the mines and the industrial sector.

Mr. Makarchuk: The only stability will be Denison's.

Mr. Kerrio: The top line, of course is, do you think these contracts are in the public interest? That is what the Premier has asked us to evaluate. Some of the implications that have been read into what has been happening here today simply should not be before us; we should address ourselves to the question; and I suggest that the contracts as they are presented to us are not in the best interests of the public. The government and the government members are basing acceptance of these contracts on the evidence of experts who appeared before us in the committee. I would just like to relate to you a couple of instances of testimony given by these experts.

In one case, there was an expert, who happens to be one of the top people in the world, supposedly, who suggested to us in the committee that he was certain, by some 90 per cent, that by 1980 the world price of uranium would not be over $15 to $16.

Mr. Haggerty: You got that, Reuben? Get that down. That's from an expert.

Mr. Kerrio: Another expert came before us and suggested that if we put front money up to the tune of $300 million the interest cost to the people of this province would amount to a similar sum, something like $300 million. Very shortly thereafter he changed his mind and suggested it might be $400 million or maybe $450 million.

Mr. Haggerty: You could have bought the mine.

Mr. Kerrio: As an individual who had been quite hesitant in speculating before I saw the expert change his mind two or three times. I suggest to you sitting in your places over there the front money is going to cost the people of Ontario $1 billion or better, because you cannot borrow what might end up at about $350 million in front money, when you get the back end of it back after 30 years for less than maybe two-and-a-half three times the principal sum.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: With that kind of mathematics you better not bid.

Mr. Reed: In 1978 dollars.

Mr. Kerrio: So now I would suggest to the minister that on that kind of evidence—and everyone who appeared before suggested that because of the circumstances in the United States of America, where they have some 17 per cent of the necessary fuel to fuel their reactors, they would jump at the chance to sign these contracts; and I agree wholeheartedly with them, when you are prepared to pay any kind of a price to get the supply. But we were not in such circumstances. The uranium was under our feet. We put Hydro in a very narrowly, confined box—we, the federal government and the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Kissing cousins.

Mr. Kerrio: You take that and do anything you want with that term. It is a bunch of garbage and you know it.

Now I say to the minister on this particular issue I am only concerned about the interests of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Cunningham: You need each other, I will tell you.

Mr. Kerrio: I care little for the way he wants to match me up with the people down in Ottawa. I suggest to you that in these very contracts that are before us, to show the figures that the government has set aside for the domestic users of Ontario, in this set of contracts we have used up all the supply dedicated to domestic users. It just points up the fact of how inadequate government policy was to protect the consumers of Ontario.

I am suggesting that the policy was made at a time when the federal government was more intent on exporting uranium than on seeing that the domestic users had a supply. I say that is why we suggest there should have been much greater pressure brought to bear when the whole scene changed as it has. That is what forced Hydro to put up the front money. Because it is happening all over the world it is not a fact that that is the way to go. It is a fact that those people have no option.

Because they were not guaranteed domestic supply, Hydro had to put up front money to open the mines and develop them. The federal government did not see to it that the guarantee to domestic users was coming off the belt and not just being left in a hole in the ground where hydro consumers of Ontario could be told there's the part that was dedicated to their use, it is in the back corner of the mine. That is what the federal policy does in as far as it protects the domestic user of Ontario, and that is the reason Hydro had to put up the big front money.

I would like to suggest to the minister that in incorporating the front money in the price, we are talking in terms of roughly $20 a pound as far as the cost of developing the uranium is concerned to the mines, and then we give them $5 profit, which makes $25. We are also looking at a cartel-inflated price of $40 for a difference of $7.50 which we add on. I suggest also adding $5 to $6 a pound for the interest on the front money. Isn't it strange that we should then end up paying maybe $38.50 a pound for uranium that is in this country of ours?

I suggest that some of the arguments that have been made are sound. They were made by people who have looked this thing over and I think have assessed many of the people who appeared before us. I would also suggest in talking about this government—and my associate from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk made this comment—the government signed export policies to send our uranium to Japan. The Ontario government had to agree. Whether it was in the works that they would have been forced to export it regardless of signing or not, certainly the position of this government should have been that they would see that anything that went out of the country was at least refined to the greatest degree we could. But the suggestion was the Japanese would not buy it under those circumstances; they dictated the terms and this provincial government signed the exemptions so that uranium could be exported.

While we are on that subject, it just seems the policy of the government is whatever suits it. I have heard the Minister of Natural Resources say that the government would not go the other route of public ownership. We are not suggesting that a public company should run it either. We are talking about free enterprise, that is, to bid, to run it legitimately and to take a legitimate profit. I would suggest this government uses policy to suit itself because it happens to be in the biggest construction business in the province of Ontario in Ontario Hydro. That certainly is not free enterprise. That is only because it suits the government to do that; in this instance it does not. The minister can muse on that particular situation if he will.

I would suggest that when I raise the question with the Premier as it relates to the conversation that he had with Denison, that in keeping with some kind of consistent policy he might well have called Preston, because while we had half the difference to the world price on one hand, we had a third of the difference on the other. Who says what might have transpired with the same kind of a conversation? This also points up the inconsistency of the price range in the two contracts.

[5.15]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: They're quite different contracts though.

Mr. Kerrio: Absolutely, they're different contracts. One is one-third of the difference and the other is a half. That's quite a difference.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Then don't compare them.

Mr. Reed: That's the first admission we've had of that.

Mr. Eakins: It is the Bermuda triangle.

Mr. Kerrio: I would suggest then, in summing up my submission here, that in 1973 when we were talking $6 to $7 per pound for uranium as being a viable price for mines to function and make a decent profit, it seems inconceivable that the government members will not admit that, at this stage of the game, this short number of years later, that just in the spiral of inflation as it exists, in the percentages over those few years, they could take $6 and elevate it to $40 and really convince themselves that there hasn't been something at work that influenced this price to those dollars.

I suggest that if there was a two-price system and we were getting the best dollar for uranium on the world market and that what was used within the province of Ontario was given at a fair profit to the mines, or the corporations, and that a fair royalty was put into position, that when the time came that the supplies were deleted we'd have something in the public purse to show for having had one of the great deposits of that particular ore in the world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you very much. I would just make one comment in closing and that is that I also have had great reservations about the kind of time they've given to the disposal aspects of the nuclear fuel wastes, and I hope they are going to do something about that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This applause is a practice which has to stop around here. It takes up time.

Mr. Conway: You're a special case.

Mr. Cunningham: It is also getting very phoney.

Mr. Deans: Yes, I must admit that. Whoever said that was right. There's a limit to how much of that you can stand.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Natural Resources made one accurate statement during his contribution. He said we must take steps to have assured energy sources in the province of Ontario. With that I agree. From that point on it seemed as if his contribution deteriorated significantly, since he didn't appear to understand what it was that we were talking about.

First of all, we have to decide why we need these assured energy sources and we've got to try to determine what the obligation of the government of the province of Ontario is, not only in terms of energy but in terms of long-term economic planning and how one goes about it. I think we've got to begin by the clear understanding that we're speaking about a resource that belongs to us, a resource of the people of the province of Ontario and a resource which we're prepared to share with the rest of Canada; a resource which we know, though it has a particular value today, is likely to become even more valuable as time goes on as we find ways of dealing with the waste that naturally accumulates from nuclear reactors.

We need not and we should not pay exorbitant prices for these resources that belong to us. We have to be sure that we utilize those resources in the best possible way to bring about the kind of economic planning and development in the province of Ontario that will not only maintain our position in the world as an industrial force but assist us in developing even further the industry of Ontario and, therefore, the industry of Canada.

We have to use these resources that are available to us, not only this uranium resource, but all of the resources to build our economic future. We have to use them to develop the diversity of employment opportunities that we all understand we're going to have to have if we're going to be successful in world terms over the next 25 to 50 years.

Why would we then decide to pay more than we absolutely have to in order to secure that energy source when we could, at this point in time, undertake the very appropriate measure suggested by my leader of acquiring that resource in the public sector in order that we not only are able to use it at the cheapest possible cost but to make sure that it is used in our best interest? I think that's what we're talking about here. There is clear evidence in this contract of the attitude of the government towards the private sector, and the attitude of the government towards the private sector, and the attitude of the government towards the utilization of public funds.

It seems that this government has adopted a view that it is appropriate to tax the people of Ontario, whether it be by way of direct taxation or whether it be by way of energy costs, and to pass that money on to the private sector. It seems as if the government of the province of Ontario has adopted a view which says that anything that is in the public sector is bad and anything that is in the private sector is good, notwithstanding what the evidence shows. That's the attitude that this government is putting forward.

Mr. Foulds: Shameful.

An hon. member: A dogmatic, doctrinaire, straitjacket.

Mr. Deans: We have had 35 years of Conservative rule in this province. In that 35 years the opportunity has been before the government on so many occasions to utilize the resources of the province in the best interests of the people of this province—not only in terms of immediate gain in tax dollars; not only in terms of immediate gain in the sale of the product; but in using those resources to develop the economy of the province of Ontario in the short- and long-term best interests of the province. If it is true that we should have the guarantee of this uranium in order to assure ourselves that we will have it available to us if, as and when we require it for the production of electrical energy, then surely the obligation is to make sure we will get that resource at the cheapest possible price and therefore make our economy more competitive in world terms.

Here we have mineral resources which we could have been using for the development of the secondary manufacturing sector that we all understand we are going to need. Here we have a uranium resource which we believe, and I believe, will at some point be developed for the production of electric power in the province of Ontario and, using those two sources alone, we could be infinitely more competitive in world terms.

We don't have to be in the world market. We don't have to adopt the Alberta position that the world price for that resource is what has to be achieved. We don't have to adopt that. We have that resource. We are rich, infinitely rich, in world terms. We have the capacity right here in the province of Ontario to make ourselves even more competitive in world terms. We have available to us a resource which, if used properly and wisely, could allow us to develop and to manufacture at prices which would be even more competitive than the prices at which we are able to manufacture now.

Why in heaven's name would we then turn around and enter into a contract which will guarantee to these two particular corporations excessive profits based on world prices, when in fact what we are really doing is saying to the consumer of the province of Ontario that he will have to pay the additional price in order to guarantee the almost $2 billion of profit? Why would we do that? Why is it necessary?

If it's true what the Minister of Natural Resources says, that there are some 2,500 permanent jobs to be gained in the province as the result of the development of this resource; if it is true that there are some 12,000 jobs in the service sector related directly to the utilization and the development of this resource, then that is true whether it is developed in the private sector or the public sector. And if that is true, then why would we spend an additional $2 billion to get those benefits?

What in heaven's name is wrong with the government? Why would it want to hand over $2 billion of public funds, of taxpayers' dollars, of consumers' dollars—

Mr. Makarchuk: Tell us why.

Mr. Deans: —when it can get the same results without spending the money.

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't just sit there, Reuben, say something.

Mr. Deans: Why would you not—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am trying to be a gentleman and not interrupt.

Mr. Deans: Please don't, because it's uncharacteristic.

Why doesn't the government utilize the resource as it now is? Why doesn't it develop it as part of the overall Hydro development? Why doesn't it guarantee to Hydro, because they own it—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Why didn't you convince all the experts who have been working on this for months?

Mr. Deans: —the utilization of that resource?

An hon. member: Hand it to the experts.

Mr. Conway: Deans for leader.

Mr. Cassidy: They never even looked at the Project Wellesley report.

Mr. Deans: I'm telling you now, Mr. Speaker, what I believe to be true and what I have believed to be true all along. When the minister signed over the approval to have that order in council approved, he effectively said to the consumers of the province of Ontario: "I, the Minister of Energy, am prepared to levy on you $2 billion more than you need to pay"—

An hon. member: Why don't you speak the truth?

Interjections.

Mr. Deans: —"in order to give that money to Denison and to Preston." I would like to know something about the relationship that brought that about.

Interjections.

Mr. Deans: How in heaven's name can the minister fly in the face of all the evidence, including the evidence before the committee? How can he stand in his place and say that he is prepared to tax the consumers of Ontario that additional $2 billion, in spite of the evidence of the former chairman of Hydro, in spite of the evidence put forward by his own subcommittee group which looked into it, in spite of the evidence of many of the key witnesses who appeared before the select committee? How can he then stand up and tell the province of Ontario that he believes it appropriate to hand over public funds to private corporations, even though he knows it is going to result directly in higher costs to those people?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Because we listen to people who know a lot more about it than you do.

Mr. Deans: That's what he is doing. Not only that, but he is alienating from the public sector something which is vital to its very well-being in the future. He is turning over, on a long-term lease, a resource which, if properly used and properly developed in the public sector in accordance with the needs of Ontario Hydro, could provide for this province in the long run energy at a price considerably below that which other parts of the world are going to be required to pay.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That sounds great, but you can't prove it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Deans: That is what is wrong with this policy. It means we are selling out to other parts of the world. We lose jobs, we lose economic development, we lose the opportunity for secondary manufacturing—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are getting carried away with your rhetoric.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Your time has expired.

Mr. Deans: —we lose the opportunity for diversity. The minister is wrong.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation for the opportunity to take part in this debate. I think in all this rhetoric we musn't lose sight of the question before us this afternoon, and that is basically the future energy needs and how to provide them for every citizen in this province, and what is at stake and what will be affected by the decision that is taken today.

I, too, want to emphasize, as my colleagues have done, the importance of the expert testimony we heard during the hearings of the select committee. We have heard some of that taken out of context this afternoon. The fact is that the weight of the evidence that was presented was overwhelmingly in favour of these contracts, and I believe we have to listen to that evidence that was presented to us. It seems obvious to me that during the several years in which negotiations took place, Ontario Hydro did an excellent job in protecting the interests of the citizens of Ontario while ensuring what would be an adequate uranium supply to meet our energy needs.

The New Democratic Party has opposed the contracts on the grounds that it would like to expropriate or otherwise acquire control of Denison Mines. We just heard from the member for Wentworth underscoring that. We heard the leader of the NDP saying nationalization "makes good business sense."

Mr. Foulds: Just as Hydro asked.

Mr. Cassidy: That's what Hydro said, too, only the government wouldn't listen.

Mr. Jones: I respect the NDP for at least having an alternative, for being consistent, I suppose, with the party philosophy in that alternative.

Ms. Gigantes: And good business practice.

Mr. Cassidy: Good business for the people of the province.

Mr. Jones: I personally, though, can't accept the premise that Ontario should follow that route, and I reject it on philosophical grounds—

Mr. Foulds: Philosophical grounds that cost the people of Ontario money.

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you sell off Hydro as well?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Jones: —because I sincerely believe the government should not be active as a partner in the marketplace. I am just not convinced that government could operate a uranium mine nearly as efficiently or as well as those can who have specialized in that field.

Mr. Cassidy: Then sell off Hydro.

Mr. Makarchuk: Where is the evidence?

Mr. Renwick: It is not so, and you know it.

Mr. Jones: All of my experience has taught me—and it's a fact—that government involvement in ventures is usually more costly and less beneficial than allowing private enterprise to do the job.

[5:30]

Mr. Makarchuk: Where's the evidence?

Mr. Renwick: It is not so and you know it.

Mr. Jones: The contracts, as negotiated, give the government the right to closely monitor—

Mr. Cassidy: There are exactly 25,000 Hydro employees.

Mr. Foulds: Are you implying you can run this government but you couldn't run a mine? Is that what you're saying?

Mr. Jones: —the operations of both Denison and Preston, and to intervene if it becomes necessary to protect the public interest—

Mr. Foulds: The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) nods in the affirmative.

Mr. Jones: —and that's sufficient protection. We need only look at Saskatchewan to see that government is better off not getting involved in such ventures. There we have an example of an NDP government investing hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars in potash plants. And what has been the result? Hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent without in any way changing the course of industry and without generating any additional revenues. If we paid for these mines, as you people propose, how do you suggest we—

Mr. Makarchuk: They're making money, aren't they? They are providing jobs. They're keeping the money in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Brantford may have a chance to speak later.

Mr. S. Smith: I hope not.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I merely ask this question of the NDP and their proposal—

Mr. Cassidy: You prefer the Inco proposal.

Mr. Jones: —how would they propose to pay for them. With increased taxes on an already over-burdened public? Or should we cut back health or education or social services?

Mr. Foulds: With the profits we get from the Japanese contracts.

Mr. Jones: It would be very interesting to hear how they answer that question.

Mr. Cassidy: Where are you finding the $300 million?

Mr. Jones: Of course, in the case of the Liberal proposal, there really hasn't been an alternative proposal, despite all the rhetoric. There simply wasn't.

Mr. Kerrio: We weren't asked.

Mr. S. Smith: That's not true and you know it.

Mr. Jones: "Don't sign," they say; but no answers and a lot of political posturing. That's the simple fact that prevailed in the committee and here again on this floor.

Mr. S. Smith: That's right—don't sign and declare a public policy you have never heard.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I urge this government to, indeed, sign these contracts—

Mr. Makarchuk: Give away the province.

Mr. Jones: —as they are clearly in the best interest of the people of Ontario; and that's also as the staff spoke in committee and also, of course, resulting from the extra testimony that can't be ignored.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not what the committee said. The committee voted you down.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken on this topic many times; to the select committee on several occasions, to this House during my reply to the motion after the Throne Speech and now, once again, I have a chance—and I'm grateful for the opportunity—to reiterate the point of view of this party.

Let me be very clear that we believe that the nuclear policy adopted by Ontario Hydro is not a question here, nor at question is the matter of exploiting the uranium resources of this province and creating jobs here. All those are obviously acceptable, at least within the framework that they have so far been approved. Our concern, however, is that there has not been a public policy in Ontario to declare that the uranium used to generate electricity for the consumers of Ontario, provided that uranium is found in the soil of Ontario, would be priced at nothing more than the cost of production plus a fair profit to the owners involved.

Mr. Turner: What's a fair profit?

Mr. S. Smith: That public policy has never been stated by the Premier of Ontario, although he has been invited to do so many times. Apparently, it does not represent the public policy of this government. This government prefers to settle for something that the Premier referred to during the time he was at the committee as "something less than world price." That was all he asked for. He never asked Hydro whether they had been demanding nothing more than the cost of production plus a fair profit, and he never asked Mr. Roman to settle for the cost of production plus a fair profit.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's a questionable premise.

Mr. S. Smith: Instead he admitted—and he will be here to speak for himself—that all he asked of Mr. Roman was to come up with something other than, something less than, world price.

We believe that the people of Ontario should not have to pay a price that is tied in any way to the world price for us to use in our own Ontario Hydro system uranium that is found in the soil of Ontario. We do not understand why we should have to worry about what escalation might occur in world price in the future when it is our own resource in this province. The only arguments that we have seen are, first of all, the fact that Ontario doesn't have control of its uranium.

What I would like to know is why this government has not fought hard, once it realized that we had in mind such a massive purchase of Ontario uranium, to regain provincial control of uranium. All other energy sources are under provincial control, and this one is out of provincial control only because of its possible relationship to defence problems and the creation of atomic bombs and weapons. The fact of the matter is, however, that we could have found many ways to provincialize the resource which is presently federalized. We could have found many ways to do that without impinging on the matter of national defence and the creation of atomic weapons. Yet the government has never fought for that.

What should have been done in 1974 was to have had a definite policy to acquire the uranium resources. At that time, the government had a willing seller and might have been able to handle the situation without the present problems. The present problems are constitutional because we can't expropriate. The problems are that the prices have gone up and the government doesn't have a willing seller. The problems are that it has to deal with the minority shareholders. Those are all real problems, even though the members of the New Democratic Party prefer to ignore those particular problems.

Ms. Gigantes: Come on! You are just scared.

Mr. S. Smith: We believe the government should have acquired that resource. I say in all honesty since the Premier is in the House that had I been in his place—and I know he doesn't like me to talk like that—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is fantasizing.

Mr. S. Smith:—we would not have hesitated five minutes to acquire those resources for the people of Ontario. Failing that, the next step is to demand a public policy of the kind I have outlined. The question is, what does one do now that they didn't do it, now that Hydro was sent in to negotiate with Mr. Stephen Roman. Hydro was given nothing in the way of support from the government in the way of a declaration of public policy. They were forced to negotiate with virtually no weapons of their own in what seemed to be a seller's market at the time. They are lucky to come out with anything at all. In fact, I don't fault Hydro at all in any of these negotiations. But I do fault the government in these negotiations. I fault the government severely and I fault it at both levels, provincial and federal, but in particular it is up to the government of Ontario to protect the interests of Ontarians.

Mr. Roy: Especially the former minister.

Mr. S. Smith: The question is what to do now? Look at this contract. Hundreds of millions of dollars are being put up by the people of Ontario for Stephen Roman to expand his mine, his production capacity, which he has to do to meet his Japanese contracts. He will use that production capacity, that you and I are going to pay for, interest free to send the best uranium in the mine to Japan for some years to come.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Come on! You are getting carried away now. You can't prove that.

Mr. S. Smith: Then and only then will he use that interest-free provided production capacity to produce uranium for us from poorer grade ore at the bottom of the mine. That is the deal that this government wants us to endorse.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You can't prove that.

Mr. S. Smith: I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this failure to defend the interests of the people of Ontario is something that the people of Ontario will have their opportunity to speak about at some time in the future, I suspect. I am saying to you that this has been a failure on the part of the government to defend the interests of our people. I would say to the government, don't sign.

The member for Mississauga North and the Premier have from time to time mused on the idea that we haven't given what they call an alternative. We haven't said "nationalize" and we don't say "nationalize."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: What do you say?

Mr. S. Smith: The alternative is that the government doesn't sign. It makes a declaration of public policy that the cost of uranium here is to be the cost of production, plus a fair profit.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Control yourself.

Mr. S. Smith: It demands renegotiation of the contract with Stephen Roman and then it sees what happens.

Mr. Deans: Then you nationalize.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: The government says what is going to happen is that Mr. Roman—and listen to them quaking in their boots—might sell the uranium to Japan tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The lights have gone. You have got no electricity. That's what will happen.

Mr. S. Smith: They are afraid he might turn around and sell the uranium out from under our feet to Japan tomorrow. They are afraid they don't have the power to bring him to the bargaining table and strike a fair and reasonable bargain with this so-called wonderful corporate citizen.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Get another picture taken with Pierre. You looked lovely. What did you whisper in Pierre's ear?

Mr. S. Smith. Let me tell the ladies and gentlemen in this chamber that Stephen Roman does not run the province of Ontario and, if he does, he should not be running the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: And neither do you.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: If Denison wants to sell out our uranium from under our feet, and if the Premier is powerless to prevent it from doing that, then I say it is a sorry day for Ontario to learn who really is running the show here. If I were Premier of this province—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That will never be.

Mr. S. Smith:—and Stephen Roman threatened to sell this uranium out from under our feet, I would move heaven and earth to block that contract.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You're bringing a little humour into it now.

Mr. S. Smith: I would fight the federal government to prevent an export contract. There are many legal ways in which you could make it impossible for Roman to extract that uranium. There are a good many ways.

Mr. Handleman: Is that what you were discussing with himself last Saturday?

Mr. S. Smith: I remind the former member of the cabinet from the Ottawa-Carleton area that when he was a member of the cabinet, I suspect, his cabinet actually gave approval to certain of those export contracts that Denison wanted in order to send uranium to Japan.

An hon. member: You didn't even know what you were doing.

Mr. S. Smith: None of them knows what is going on.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You're the only one who knows.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: The fact of the matter is that the government has to stand up for the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: By golly, Mike, you've got a fight on your hands.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: The government must not let Mr. Roman bluff them or threaten them or in any way frighten them. Have some guts, I say to the gentlemen in the cabinet. Stand up to him. Don't sign the contracts.

Furthermore, I would like those gentlemen to know that if they follow the way things are going nowadays, there have been some very significant discoveries of uranium in Saskatchewan. There is a lot more exploration going on right now for uranium.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And much greater use being made of it.

Mr. S. Smith: It is no longer going to be a seller's market in the next few years to come. Don't quake in your boots, I say to them. Don't get down and lick the shoes of

Mr. Roman or anyone else. Don't sign the contract. Demand a shorter-term contract under the public policy that says, "We'll pay for uranium the cost plus a fair profit—and no tying it to the world price. We in Ontario have that uranium in our soil. We should not have to pay any price related to the world price for uranium. That is our policy."

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: What is your position on oil? Tell us about your oil position.

Interjections.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when a week ago as chairman of the select committee on Hydro I wrote to the Premier indicating that a majority of the committee did not feel that these contracts were in the public interest and therefore orders in council should not be promulgated to legalize them or to authorize them, the press reported that the Premier was disappointed.

He acknowledged that a majority of the people on the committee felt, and expressed the view, that the contracts weren't in the public interest. But he expressed disappointment that they offered no alternative. May I say to the Premier, who is within earshot, that is not quite wholly true. I want to indicate why. It's partially true but not wholly true.

Mr. Handleman: It's either true or it's not true.

Mr. MacDonald: It is true that members of the Conservative Party indicated they were in favour of approving of the contracts. They used for their arguments a rather judicious choice of the summary and the synthesizing of the evidence that the staff presented to the committee a week ago Monday.

What the staff did was, on balance, to come to the conclusion that Hydro, within the restrictive parameters which were imposed upon Hydro by the two senior levels of governments, had negotiated good contracts. Within those parameters they negotiated good contracts. They were toughly negotiated; they were skillfully drafted. The majority of the committee didn't accept the contention that the contracts were acceptable because they questioned the parameters imposed by government on Hydro; and I want to focus on those for a moment.

For example, the staff argued that you could sign the contracts and then go to Ottawa and continue to press to get a two-price system. In fact, if you got a two-price system and that price happened to be lower than the price that is negotiated under the contract, it would apply because it would be the posted domestic price authorized by the government of Canada. However, as late as a week or so ago we had a letter from Mr. Gillespie in Ottawa indicating that the government of Canada has no intention at all of changing its policy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You're right. And you didn't even read your friend's letter.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no intention at all of changing its policy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Your buddy—your friend. [5:45]

Mr. MacDonald: Therefore, I suggest that to argue that this is a way to escape from the restrictive parameters of the contract and that you should go ahead and sign it is a false conclusion.

Secondly, it was argued that if you signed these contracts at lower than the world price—

Interjections.

Mr. MacDonald: Have I got the floor, Mr. Speaker? Very good.

Hon. Mr. Maack: Looks like it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize you.

Mr. MacDonald: If you sign these contracts at less than world price, the capital value of the mine would be less than if you didn't have the contracts and they were selling their uranium at world prices; therefore, go ahead and sign it at something less than world prices and the capital value would be less, so that if you wanted to proceed with acquisition presumably you might be able to get them for even less. That, I suggest, with all the respect I have for the staff of this committee—the best staff I've ever seen in any select committee—is also not a very convincing conclusion.

Mr. Reid: That doesn't say much for the other staff.

Mr. MacDonald: The reality is that these contracts, if they were signed would remove the dynamic for moving towards something of a lower price than Ottawa is going to impose upon us. Secondly, it would remove the dynamic for moving towards acquisition.

Let me pause right there to address another point. There has been a very false impression created—assiduously cultivated, I would add—that if these contracts aren't signed, suddenly we're going to get into deep trouble. The light won't go on, the lights will go out down at Hydro.

Mr. Speaker, will the House please recognize this reality? The first delivery on the Denison contract is in 1980. By the year 1985, the total delivery will be 3.7 million pounds.

By 1990, the total delivery on the contract will be 15.9 million pounds. These contracts aren't meeting our short-term needs. There's no crisis going to burst upon us with the lights going out if we don't happen to sign these contracts.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You need lead time.

Mr. Nixon: What about shortfall?

Mr. MacDonald: In fact, the situation is even worse. These contracts don't meet our immediate needs. There's a shortfall of some 10 million pounds which Hydro has got to go out and borrow from the federal stockpile, or to purchase on the international spot market; in either case at world prices. So they do not meet our immediate needs and there is no urgency for signing it now. We have got time to negotiate, that is the point, we have got time to negotiate.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not what you were saying in November, Donald.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We need lead time.

Mr. MacDonald: Don't let anybody panic you into believing that we're going to have a crisis on our hands. There won't be a pound of uranium delivered for two years from Denison. Indeed there will only be 3.7 million pounds by 1985 and 15.9 million pounds by 1990.

So I come back to the really tragic thing, the missed opportunity that this government has imposed upon the province of Ontario for the last five years. In 1973, Task Force Hydro—not a group of socialists, not a group of ideologues—said that it was in the interests of Hydro to secure its long-term supply by acquiring a mining complex. And in precisely that year, Denison was a willing seller. Indeed, they sold their mine and then the federal government vetoed it and they had to take it back and they cancelled the sale.

In that year, as has been pointed out by two or three of my colleagues, you had the beginning of a scenario. You had George Gathercole, the chairman of Hydro, writing to the Minister of Energy, and indicating in his view that we should proceed immediately with the purchase of uranium assets. In June 4, the next year, you had J. G. Matthew indicating that the key to Ontario Hydro's bargaining position now and in the future was the acquisition of uranium assets. Not an ideological position—

Ms. Gigantes: Business.

Mr. MacDonald: —a cold, hard business proposition presented to the government by Hydro.

Mr. Cassidy: You can't run Ontario any more.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The member has never made a business decision yet.

Mr. MacDonald: And what were you getting back from the government? You have it magnificently summed up by Darcy McKeough's letter to George Gathercole at one point, when he plaintively said, "Surely there must be an alternative to acquiring the mines?"

Ms. Gigantes: Yes; some alternative!

Mr. MacDonald: Ideological position? There it was: "Surely there must be an alternative to acquiring the mine?" This government has consistently opposed it. When Project Wellesley indicated that there were economic advantages in it, they did not even look at Project Wellesley. For something like three and a half years they didn't look at Project Wellesley.

Mr. Nixon: They did not even show it to Jim Taylor.

Mr. MacDonald: They did not show it and, indeed, the government did not even get a copy until a week before the committee began to look into it.

May I just finalize this scenario, Mr. Speaker? The staff of the committee, from which the government members are willing to pick and choose for their analysis—and they choose to ignore this—the staff has pointed out that the economic advantages for acquiring Denison are as great today as they were five years ago; as great today as they were in 1975, when Project Wellesley was reported.

Ms. Gigantes: Better.

Mr. MacDonald: So, Mr. Speaker, there is an opinion that there is a viable alternative. Here is where the Premier has half a measure of truth.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We never deal in half truths over here.

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute now, just let me make my speech. The Premier is not in this debate. I am a little puzzled by where the Liberals stand, because the leader of the Liberal Party said in the committee, and he repeated it here this afternoon, that if he had had any say back in 1974 he would not have delayed five minutes, he would have moved to acquire the Denison assets. Now he says it is too late.

Mr. Breithaupt: That is correct. You're getting it.

Mr. MacDonald: There has been no documentation by the Liberal Party as to why it is too late. The only other alternative that they have given is the alternative that we should have from the government, a declaration of public policy.

Mr. S. Smith: I will give you three reasons.

Mr. MacDonald: What is that declaration of public policy? It is that the resources in the ground of Ontario should be available to meet Ontario needs. Are they going to get that from the federal Liberals? Of course they are not. Their policy is contrary to it. It is going to be at world prices and with guidelines that are no sure guarantee. The only viable way of implementing that policy is by the acquisition route and I only wish the Liberal Party had shared it and the government would not be able to twist the story. We would have had a clear alternative.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I just say to the Premier, quietly, in conclusion, if he goes down University Avenue and takes a look at the Adam Beck statue he will find in the base of it, or he will find over in the Hydro building, a motto. Does he know what the motto of Hydro is? "Dona naturae pro populo sunt"—"The gifts of nature are for the people."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. MacDonald: There used to be Tories who understood that. There used to be Tories who recognized the viability of public ownership—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I find it a little difficult to sum up the discussion of the past two-plus hours in the very few minutes that are left. I must say to the honourable members, if they felt I was not listening, in fact, I was. I had my volume turned up in my office when the member from Wentworth was speaking, I could actually turn it down and still hear him, but that does not diminish his contribution in any way.

I would like again at the outset, as I did when I appeared at the invitation of the committee, to express my appreciation to the members of the select committee. We did ask them to assume this responsibility and I guess, as I have said at the committee and I have said since, that on occasion one must expect that the human reaction will be such that sometimes partisan politics will be placed ahead of, shall we say, objective points of view. I understand that.

The distinguished member who is the chairman of that select committee wrote me a very interesting letter. He did say the only area where there was a consensus was that opposition members said don't sign. He is quite right. There was no alternative agreed upon by the majority of the committee. The fact of the matter is that the select committee in reviewing these contracts in its judgement said don't sign, with no alternative supported by the majority of the members of that committee.

Mr. MacDonald: Not to let you off the hook.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is the fact that faces the government. I would say to the new Liberal House leader that I listened to his observations—and I would never accuse him of misinterpreting the facts—but he perhaps did not portray them with the accuracy that the facts really represent. I would say to the very distinguished member, who has had a lot of experience in this House and on these matters, if he tries, as he is, to oversimplify by saying that it was as simple as Denison asking for world price, and Hydro asking for the cost of production plus a reasonable profit—and no one has yet defined what he means by a reasonable profit—that was not the alternative. Denison had refused to discuss it and there was no question that that was not going to happen. That is when I was asked to intervene. As I said at that committee, I am a very modest person.

Mr. Cassidy: A modest apologist for business.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh my God.

Mr. Kerrio: You've got a lot to be modest about.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is right. I would say to that very able member from wherever he is who knows it all and who knows it all on every issue, that if my intervention led to the terms that have been agreed upon and did result in savings of hundreds of millions of dollars to the consumers of this province I am not taking any credit for that.

We talk in very large sums, and I hope the media put this in some form of perspective. We are talking about two contracts which are worth a lot of money, $6 to $7 billion. I think the public should know that if we are talking about other forms of energy or fuel to produce the same comparable amount of energy, if we are talking about US coal, which is something which is not indigenous to this province, we are talking $50 billion. If we are talking about coal from our western provinces, we are talking about $65 billion.

Ms. Gigantes: What a red herring!

Hon. Mr. Davis: If we are talking about oil, that Liberals want at world price—and if I have ever heard a more inconsistent policy in the history of my time in this House, it is the policy of the Liberal Party that says, "World price for oil and natural gas, but let's have a two-price policy for uranium".

I have decided that is the Greer formula. I have decided to name it the Greer formula. At world price for oil, do members know what the oil bill would be for the same amount of fuel? The member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) should be interested. He is a businessman he keeps telling me, and his family keep telling me.

Mr. Peterson: I have told them not to speak to you.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is our uranium.

Mr. Nixon: You will give away what is ours.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member's mother and father came through the receiving line the other day.

Mr. Peterson: They needed the free coffee.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I say how could their son be so misguided.

Mr. Speaker, do you know what that figure is? It is $67 billion under their formula to produce the same amount of energy that $6 or $7 billion in nuclear power will produce for the people of this province. Those are the figures that should be put in perspective.

Mr. Makarchuk: What's a billion dollars in oil?

Mr. S. Smith: You're right, we should not burn oil in nuclear reactors.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is right. You cannot burn oil in nuclear reactors. We cannot control the price of oil because they want it to go world price.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let's put it into perspective for my wife. I have dealt with the hon. member's family.

Mr. S. Smith: She does not want to burn oil in nuclear reactors either.

Hon. Mr. Davis: She pays the bills in our household. She may be listening. Let's put it in perspective for the consumer. We are talking about 75 cents a month or two cents a day. That is what this contract represents in fuel cost for the development of this amount of energy. That is the perspective it should be put in. What this House should be concerned about is the security of supply that these contracts may afford. Members opposite talk about nationalization or confiscation. If they had any sense, do they know what they would have done?

Mr. Roy: As usual you are not listening.

Mr. Martel: You cannot nationalize what belongs to the people.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You would have accepted it. You would have made your position more credible. You should have said: "Sign the contracts and then see if you can't take it over." That would have been a more intelligent position to take. That's what your staff told you.

So, Mr. Speaker, to sum it up: the government is left with this—and we're going into cabinet very shortly—we have the judgement of seven intelligent people in this House. I don't quarrel with that. We have their judgement based, I think I can say honestly, on somewhat partisan and perhaps even on somewhat philosophical points of view.

Mr. Martel: Doctrinaire.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am taking a look at that. On the other side of the equation, Mr. Speaker, and this is what we have to consider in our responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: What do the Steelworkers say?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: They said to sign it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have the report of your own staff, which I think is one of the excellent reports that have been presented. You have the objective advice of the adviser to the Ministry of Energy. You have the objective advice from the people retained by Ontario Hydro. And I would say to the former Leader of the Opposition, there was one man there at least whose judgement you should accept, one Mr. MacIntosh—

Mr. Cassidy: What about George Gathercole?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —who impressed me, really, in a very singular sense. His advice is to sign these contracts, and the former leader can't dispute this because that's the same man who in 1975 was going to arrange for the take-over by the Nixon administration of the affairs of this province. That's the same Alec MacIntosh. That's the same man in whom you had this great confidence. I must say I didn't know him before, but I now share that confidence in his judgement.

Mr. Cassidy: You don't understand the parliamentary system, you know. You are flouting minority government.

Mr. Nixon: We are keeping him on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: So, Mr. Speaker, we're left with the interests of the public, the consumers, the employment opportunities, the security of supply and—

Mr. Nixon: Why haven't you been able to attract able people?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —one very relevant factor that some members in this House forget. Mr. Speaker, since Hydro began—and I know the motto, I spent a little time down there—that corporation has provided the cheapest power to the people of this province. They have provided security. We haven't had brownouts; we haven't had the problems. We can supply this ore for our economic growth.

Mr. Makarchuk: Do you mean our government operation can work efficiently?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I still have to make up my mind as to whether or not that order in council can be signed, but I would say to the members opposite that nothing they have presented this afternoon adds anything to the discussions in the select committee. The policy of nationalization or confiscation by the NDP—and I say it—

Mr. Roy: You're not listening. As usual you're not listening.

Mr. Martel: That's a lot of crap. You can't nationalize what belongs to the people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time has expired.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Come on. The member for Sudbury East knows full well the reason he wants me to nationalize it. It's so he can run Denison. He wants to run Denison.

Mr. Foulds: That's a complete fabrication and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: He wants to be president of Inco.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He would be signing everything overnight if he could run that company.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: I have never heard so much crap in all my life. You couldn't even spend $15 million to save 8,000 jobs. Don't tell me such nonsense. You're incredible.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And Mr. Speaker, the totally incredible, incredible position of the official opposition who claim, "Don't sign it, things will sort themselves out; we will buy it in Saskatchewan, buy it in Australia," with no finality, no solution.

Mr. Roy: Show some guts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I say that does not present a viable alternative as far as the government considerations are concerned.

I want to assure all members of this House—

Mr. Reed: You should have been listening to what I said.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that the government will make a decision taking into account the public interests, the consumers, the cost, and we will make that determination sometime before midnight tonight.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are vandalizing the province. That's what you are doing.

Mr. Martel: You don't need a cabinet meeting. Just sign the document. Give it away.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You social workers and teachers are all the same.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: You ex-cops are all the same, finks.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are giving away the province.

The House recessed at 6:03 p.m.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 28, 1978

Point of privilege on statements made re Darlington nuclear plant, Mr. Laughren	165
Boarding house fire, statement by Mrs. Birch	165
Securities legislation, statement by Mr. Grossman	165
Income tax discounts, statement by Mr. Grossman	166
Vital statistics legislation, statement by Mr. Grossman	167
Judge Williams, statement by Mr. McMurtry	168
Health records, statement by Mr. McMurtry	168
Health records, statement by Mr. Timbrell	169
Public officers' securities, statement by Mr. McKeough	170
Health records, questions of Mr. McMurtry: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Renwick, Mr. Roy, Mr. Lewis	170
Spadina expressway, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Warner, Mr. Reid	172
Crown land sales, questions of Mr. F. S. Miller: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Reid, Mr. Martel, Mr. Wildman, Mr. Breithaupt	173
Job creation, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Cassidy	175
OHIP claims procedure, question of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Conway	175
Health records, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Lewis	176
Minimum wage, question of B. Stephenson: Mr. Mackenzie	177
Teachers' superannuation fund, questions of Mr. Wells and Mr. McKeough: Mr. Van Horne, Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Cassidy	177
Rape, questions of Mr. Kerr: Mr. Stong, Ms. Gigantes, Mrs. Campbell	179
Brampton Times dispute, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Mackenzie	180
Trucking legislation, questions of Mr. Snow: Mr. Cunningham, Mr. Haggerty	180
Workmen's compensation, question of B. Stephenson: Mr. Bounsall	181
Gold coin purchases, question of Mr. Maeck: Mr. Epp	181
Environmental assessment of Hydro projects, questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. Wildman	181
Beare Road landfill site, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Gaunt	182
Driving instruction, question of Mr. Wells: Mr. Young	182
Petition re change in Coroners Act, Mr. Davidson	182
City of Timmins-Porcupine Amendment Act, Mr. McKeough, first reading	183
Shoreline Property Assistance Amendment Act, Mr. McKeough, first reading	183
Securities Act, Mr. Grossman, first reading	183
Commodity Futures Act, Mr. Grossman, first reading	183

Business Corporations Amendment Act , Mr. Grossman, first reading	183
Income Tax Discounters Amendment Act , Mr. Grossman, first reading	183
Vital Statistics Amendment Act , Mr. Grossman, first reading	183
Foodlands Protection Act , Mr. Swart, first reading	183
Motion to debate matter of urgent public importance , Mr. Cassidy, agreed to	183
Debate on Hydro contracts : Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Baetz, Mr. Reed, Ms. Gigantes, Mr. Ashe, Mr. Nixon, Mr. Foulds, Mr. F. S. Miller, Mr. Kerrio, Mr. Deans, Mr. Jones, Mr. S. Smith, Mr. MacDonald, Mr. Davis	184
Recess	213

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Ashe, G. (Durham West PC)
Baetz, Hon. R. C.; Minister of Energy (Ottawa West PC)
Bernier, Hon. L.; Minister of Northern Affairs (Kenora PC)
Birch, Hon. M.; Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Scarborough East PC)
Bolan, M. (Nipissing L)
Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
Campbell, M. (St. George L)
Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
Davidson, M. (Cambridge NDP)
Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
Edighoffer, H.; Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
Epp, H. (Waterloo North L)
Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
Gigantes, E. (Carleton East NDP)
Grande, A. (Oakwood NDP)
Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (St. Andrews-St. Patrick PC)
Haggerty, R. (Erie L)
Handleman, S. B. (Carleton PC)
Havrot, E. (Timiskaming PC)
Jones, T. (Mississauga North PC)
Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General (Burlington South PC)
Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
Laughren, F. (Nickel Belt NDP)
Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
Lupusella, A. (Dovercourt NDP)
MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
Maeck, Hon. L.; Minister of Revenue (Parry Sound PC)
Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
Mancini, R. (Essex South L)
Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
McCague, Hon. G.; Minister of the Environment (Dufferin Simcoe PC)
McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
McKeough, Hon. W. D.; Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs (Chatham-Kent PC)
McMurtry, Hon. R.; Attorney General (Eglinton PC)
Miller, Hon. F. S.; Minister of Natural Resources (Muskoka PC)
Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
Peterson, D. (London Centre L)
Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
Renwick, J. A. (Riverdale NDP)
Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
Roy, A. J. (Ottawa East L)
Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)

Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)

Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)

Snow, Hon. J. W.; Minister of Transportation and Communications (Oakville PC)

Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)

Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)

Stong, A. (York Centre L)

Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)

Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)

Timbrell, Hon. D. R.; Minister of Health (Don Mills PC)

Turner, J. (Peterborough PC)

Van Horne, R. (London North L)

Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)

Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)

Wells, Hon. T. L.; Minister of Education (Scarborough North PC)

Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)

Young, F. (Yorkview NDP)

No. 7

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Tuesday, February 28, 1978

Evening Sitting

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(continued)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I arise to speak on the address of Her Honour which is a very commendable address. She said a number of things that I consider to be particularly relevant and important. I wanted to draw attention particularly to the reference to the sunset law in the Throne Speech, as some may have guessed.

Mr. McClellan: Well, is it a reference or isn't it?

Mr. Walker: I am not sure—there are times I wondered if it was the initiative of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith), whatever that initiative may be.

On page 11 of the Speech from the Throne, Her Honour said that "in addition, the government will establish a mechanism to review the operation of agencies, boards and commissions which have responsibility for many of the regulatory functions that are now carried out." I am of the opinion that this signals intention on the part of the government to proceed—I had the feeling on occasion—kicking and screaming to the altar. But in any case it is along the lines of "sunset" as I traditionally know it.

I was disappointed that the Speech from the Throne did not actually state the word "sunset" because I thought that was a word that offered a certain meaning all of us in this House would fully appreciate. However, from my discussions carried out prior to the Speech from the Throne, and discussions with a number of people, I am satisfied that there is an indication here that sunset is likely to be deemed part of the legislative process that we may see in future months, in terms of its having been presented to the House. I am most appreciative of that, and feel it will go a long way towards solving many of the problems that we have as a Legislature—that all governments have—in terms of the growth of the size of our bureaucracy, the dimension of our bureaucracy and its involvement in the daily lives of people.

When we talked about sunset, I really don't need to remind members that we are talking about an automatic termination, an automatic death date if you choose to use those words; but, in any case, a point in time when there will be a finish, an absolute end, a termination, a death of a regulatory board, an agency, a commission, and for that matter a government program. The proposal in the Throne Speech does not seem to go so far as to include government programs, but I would hope that government programs might come under the scrutiny of the sunset provision.

Mr. Wildman: What about government members?

Mr. Walker: I want to remind the member for Algoma, who has indicated we should include government members, that the first and only form of sunset has occurred with government members and with opposition members. It occurs almost every four years and occasionally sooner.

Mr. Laughren: You know that.

Mr. Walker: There is a certain accountability that occurs, and speaking with some degree of knowledge—perhaps somewhat greater than that of others in this Legislature—I can say that the provisions of sunset are at times very devastating. They certainly accomplish their purpose and solve a number of problems.

The sunset that we see here does not go so far as to include the provisions of a government program. I think that is unfortunate; however, I think there is room for government programs all eventually to be included.

My particular concern involves the area of licensing. I think all of us are concerned about the degree to which regulatory agencies, through the vehicle of licensing, interfere with the ways of our lives. We don't have to look very far—to municipal licensing, to provincial licensing, and in fact to federal licensing—to realize that we have a gross amount of over-regulation in this country. I mention what used to be called the CRTC. I don't know what the new acronym is, but it is the equivalent of the agency which licenses the right of television to provide some form of service but which in fact provides, for our benefit, what we want to see, whether we want to see it or not. And I think that's the unfortunate part of these licensing agencies.

The regulatory agencies in Colorado: some members will remember the debate on November 3 concerning the regulatory agencies in that state of the union. There, 40 of the regulatory agencies were brought under the aegis of what is called the "sunset provision," and legislated into them was the automatic termination date beyond which these boards and commissions and agencies, which were regulatory, would not continue. That has had a very good effect.

The program was scheduled so that some 13 agencies were to be considered in the year 1977; the Act was passed in 1976. The 1976 Act in Colorado indicated that 13 of the agencies would be reviewed in the year 1977, a further 13 in 1979, and 13 more in 1981. It gave a proper vehicle for review. The review process was to be completed by the Legislature prior to the actual termination date of the agency. In Colorado in 1977, as I indicated, 13 agencies were reviewed, one being the Passenger Tramway Agency, whatever that was. That was one of the four which ended up being terminated completely. It was allowed to come to a successful conclusion and entered into that area restricted to those who depart life.

The other agencies were reviewed very methodically and some four or five survived the review process completely unscathed. An additional four or five were modified in serious and significant ways. That process alone was very valuable. But perhaps the inherent process that was unexpected in the Colorado review was the therapeutic value that it had on the other agencies, boards and commissions within the purview of that state. Suddenly all kinds of new and good and methodical changes in the policies came forward.

A good many of the boards and commissions, who were self-regulatory, went through that good, medicinal approach of removing their worst appendages and correcting some of their abuses. That process was extremely good, too. By the end of 1977 a good number of the boards had eliminated the unnecessary parts of their legislation. That in itself, while not directly part of the process of sunset, was a spinoff which proved to be extremely successful.

The general philosophy in all this is that no program, no agency, no board, no commission—no regulatory body—is so sacrosanct as to escape regular and periodic review. That is something I think our Legislature fails to achieve. It fails to accommodate a review process. There just is no review. I don't know when this Legislature has reviewed anything.

Only occasionally the odd item will come forward from the past for some reason—usually due to media attention—and it is given some review. But by and large we have a process that's not unlike a sausage machine in that it cranks out—if I may use that awful description—one sausage after another sausage after another sausage, and they merely pile up on the floor, there to lie forever. Really, they're never thoroughly reviewed. That, I think, is a significant bad side in our legislative process.

The real issue is whether or not all those boards, agencies, commissions and programs are really worthwhile, are really worth keeping. Are they ever reviewed? The answer is no. The approach we take in the Legislature is a scattergun approach. We approach it through the estimates and the estimates approach, I think for all members, is a totally—well, I don't like to use the word "useless," but I must suggest that the word "useless" comes to mind. I am not convinced that the estimates approach has any value whatsoever in our legislative process.

What happens? If we review it, it's in a scattergun approach. If we review it and we reduce it by $1 the government's liable to fall. So what are we really going to accomplish, even in this minority time?

Mr. Wildman: That would be something.

Mr. Walker: The estimates are neither increased nor reduced. What happens is that the minister goes before the estimates committee—whatever it might be—and he subjects himself to the kind of abuse that only some of us can provide, and he comes out usually scathed—

Mr. Wildman: Quit looking at the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel).

Mr. Walker: —certainly being offered comments that are not appropriate for reproduction at this moment, and he's not at all happy about the process.

What about the government members? Most of the government members go in and, frankly, they sit there and wonder why they're there.

Mr. Haggerty: I can give you some reasons.

Mr. Walker: If they raise too many questions, the minister starts to wonder why they're there too.

Mr. Martel: They will not get to be a PA, Gord.

Mr. Walker: That's right. And if they start to raise very embarrassing questions, I think there are times when the minister has some feeling that perhaps we would be better off if they weren't present at that time.

For the members of the opposition, I guess there is good therapy in that, because it's a chance to berate people, to rake people over the coals, to rake even civil servants over the coals. What is accomplished in the end? Really nothing. The minister walks out with his budget intact. So what has been accomplished by that period of 20 hours spent on it?

The Ministry of Transportation and Communications had their estimates before our committee—and I see the minister (Mr. Snow) looking forward and I remember him so well appearing before our committee. It was a very interesting discussion that we had with the minister. We spent 20 hours discussing the estimates of his department and that ministry carries estimates that are $1,063,144,000.

Mr. Kerrio: Too much money.
[8:15]

Mr. Walker: The estimates were neither increased nor decreased.

Mr. Blundy: And they won't build a highway to Sarnia.

Mr. Walker: I don't think that really says the minister was perfect in his estimates. I think that merely recognizes the fact that if the estimates had been reduced or altered in some meaningful way then there would be likely an election in the offing. So, of course, there was no reduction of the estimates.

Mr. Wildman: There must be a couple of roads in your riding you don't want built.

Mr. Walker: However, I have a very able person by the name of Ann Townsend, who is a parliamentary intern this year with me, and she did an analysis of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications estimates to see just what the votes represented and just what was discussed generally. It might interest you to know that, as I indicated, the budget is $1,063,144,000—a lot of money.

Mr. Martel: Yes, 10 per cent a year.

Mr. Kerrio: Just about what the government is going to overspend; what you are going to go into debt for.

Mr. Laughren: Just about the deficit.

Mr. Kerrio: Cut that one right out and you will balance the budget.

Mr. Walker: The votes were rather interesting. I think the opposition can take a lot of credit for their review and thorough analysis of what this minister presented before the House, because during that period of time there was one area that was reviewed, and in terms of money it represented three per cent of the budget—approximately $32 million. Yet 25 per cent of the estimates time was devoted to it. Fully five hours was devoted then to three per cent of the budget.

Mr. Wildman: What was it?

Mr. Walker: That was the area involving vote 2503, dealing with the Ontario Highway Transport Board and the administration of that particular area; half the time was spent on that $714,000. And for the balance, the $30 million, another two and a half hours was spent on that. That involved licensing, inspection, examination and enforcement.

Then there were three votes—just to make up the balance of the time—that totalled 92 per cent of the budget—almost $1 billion; $987,144,000. You would expect that 92 per cent of the budget would command an awful lot of attention; and it did—fully 21 per cent of the time was spent on 92 per cent of the budget.

Mr. Martel: But we don't all have assistants to do that research for us, Gordon.

Mr. Walker: These were parliamentary interns, and they were available.

Mr. Martel: That's right, but there are only eight of them floating around.

Mr. Walker: I am very properly accommodated by my parliamentary intern who has provided some very good research.

Mr. Martel: Right, now give us all one and we would be happy.

Mr. Walker: She has indicated that just over four hours was spent on over $978 million—which was 92 per cent of that particular budget.

Mr. Bounsall: It's disgraceful, the way the government schedules its business.

Mr. Walker: I agree with the member for Windsor-Sandwich who indicates that that is disgraceful. I can't understand why members of the opposition would have spent so much time on so little.

Mr. Bounsall: The government organized the time structure.

Mr. Cunningham: Trying to get the answers; in fact, we are still waiting.

Mr. Walker: I think that all points out that very little time is spent on the kind of programs that come before the Legislature. For the benefit of the minister, it is a kind of tiring exercise. I suppose he wonders why he goes through it. For the opposition, when they get all the way through, they too wonder, I suppose, why they have gone all the way through it.

Mr. Bounsall: It is called being a government.

Mr. Laughren: It doesn't bother Jim Snow.

Mr. Walker: All they ultimately find is a scattergun approach, so that extremely important programs are totally ignored in the whole process. And that is why I think the estimates approach should be given a look at.

Mr. Bounsall: We will really take Transportation down the next time.

Mr. Wildman: Did you break it down in terms of questions and answers?

Mr. Walker: This was one particular ministry taken at random. I think other ministries would reflect the same. There is not the proper opportunity to review all the programs in a meaningful way and then to do something about it. It would seem to me that with a sunset law built into a certain number of government programs—in fact, hopefully, all programs at some point in time—these might properly be brought before the opposition and government members who sit on these committees—

Mr. Cunningham: Sunset law for ministers.

Mr. Walker: —to carefully consider and determine whether a program has served its usefulness or not. That, I think, would be an extremely valuable purpose, and I would recommend it as a logical extension of the entire process.

Mr. Martel: I thought you were going to recommend a researcher for each of us.

Mr. Wildman: Did you calculate how long the minister took to answer the questions?

Mr. Walker: That is a comment about sunset. Certainly sunset can be blended very well with the concept of zero-base budgeting, which I gather the government is approaching in fairly strong and meaningful ways.

Mr. Wildman: Did you say the government was approaching a sunset?

Mr. Walker: No, zero-base budgeting. But I understand that great representative of the people, the Ombudsman, has introduced his budget before the Board of Internal Economy—I think that is how it is put, Mr. Speaker; variously, other words are applied to it. In any case, I understand the Ombudsman has put forward his budget, which is something like $89,000 less than what it was last year and which was fairly significant.

I am told the reason for that achievement was an approach to a budgeting called the zero-base budgeting process, which means that instead of considering the budget as of last year and adding on a certain percentage for next year, what you do is take the budget, go back to zero and say, "What would happen if we had no dollars in this particular budget, in this particular decision package for this particular year?" Then, when you've considered that and come to the conclusion that calamity would occur, you say, "All right. What would happen if we had 25 per cent of the dollars?" You scale it upward to 100 per cent of the dollars and, after four attempts, you may arrive at 100 per cent and then even add something on. That would be unlike last year, when let us say the budget was $82 million last year, as an example, for a certain program; therefore, we would add on 10 per cent for inflation and the budget logically would be whatever that is—$90 million or so—for the ensuing year.

That is why I think zero-base budgeting is so attractive; it is a way of getting to the root question: Is this program even needed at all? Can we get rid of it? That is the kind of thing that I think would be extremely valuable through much of the government process, and I am very pleased to see so many of the ministries now venturing into zero-base budgeting.

The connection with sunset is that sunset is merely a triggering mechanism that brings it about. Once the triggering mechanism occurs, once the review is forced upon the legislative body—whatever it may be—then the approach of zero-base budgeting is properly reviewed at that point of time. So there is a strong marriage between the two points.

I think zero-base budgeting has an awful lot to offer, and I am so pleased to see the government proceeding along that line in so many of the ministries at this moment in time. It is impossible to attempt to zero-base the whole government at once and it has to be done on a gradual basis. I commend the government in their approach this way, and I am even more pleased to see the addition of what I deem to be a sunset provision in the Throne Speech. I suppose if it is not sunset, we will have to bring in some kind of a bill that might propose sunset at some point in time.

Mr. Wildman: I think you are moon-gazing.

Mr. Walker: In any case, at the moment it looks to me as if this is the sunset and I am very pleased that we have arrived at that point.

Mr. Martel: We could have sunset for Frank Miller. It would be a new idea.

Mr. Walker: It all fits well into the concept of deregulation which I think is a thread through the entire Throne Speech—deregulation, less government, less size, less bureaucracy and so much the better for everybody concerned.

Mr. Riddell: You'd better come over to this side. That's what we have been saying.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, it's rather interesting that the former member for London North is followed by the member for London North. First of all, I would say that it is a pleasure and honour for me to reply to the Throne Speech for this second session of the 31st Parliament. As the member for the riding of London North, to which I alluded a moment ago, I am very mindful of my duty and obligation to those constituents who thought enough of me to make me their representative in this great province.

Mr. Riddell: They love you, Ronnie.

Mr. Van Horne: I hope their foresight in this past election will be not unlike that of Lieutenant Governor John Graves Simcoe, who back in the year 1793 selected the forks of the Thames as his choice for a possible future site for the capital of the province, or at least the western seat of the province. Of course, those of us who are historians will recall that that city, although it was not founded until 1826, did in fact become the administrative seat for the vast London district of what used to be known as the south-western peninsula.

The ongoing growth and prosperity of this fine community is a reflection of the strong character of those fine people and, again, a reflection of those people that we call Ontarians. If there is a thread through the Speech from the Throne, and the member for London South has found a thread—

Mr. Laughren: It's threadbare.

Mr. Van Horne:—perhaps a little different from mine, I would have to suggest that that thread is a people thread.

Mr. Wildman: It's going to hang them.

Mr. Van Horne: I would like, before I get into specific comments, to make one or two observations that would be of interest, I hope, to the members of the House. I would like to point out particularly that the University of Western Ontario, which is in a part of the riding that I represent, will celebrate its 100th anniversary on March 7; in other words, in another few days. Western's centenary, which will be marked with a week of special activity culminating in activities on March 7, I would hope would be acknowledged by all members but specifically by those members who happen to claim Western as their alma mater. It was on March 7, 1878 that royal assent was given to the Act of incorporation of the University of Western Ontario.

There is another general observation, too, before I get to specifics, and that is that I'm very concerned as a new member to look at the history of the House in the last eight years. If my research is correct, I would call to the attention of the members that the number of days in which the House has sat from 1970 through to the end of 1977 would average about 101 days per year. This sounds amazing, does it not, that in a province which has over eight million people and with a budget that has within this last year passed the $14 billion mark, all of its business can be done in so little period of time, so few days.

For example, in the year 1970, the House sat for 88 days; in 1971, for 62 days; in 1972, for 77 days; in 1973, for 112; in 1974, for 135; in 1975, for 155; in 1976, for 103; in 1977, for 76. This total of 808 days over eight years is a deplorable record.

I would like to suggest that it has been far too easy particularly for the government to insist on the business of the House being done in committee. The guise, to me, is obvious. This frees up, for members of government and cabinet, a lot of time for them to carry on business, public relations and other business, and assists them in the perpetuity of Tory government.

It is my attitude and my opinion that this must change. I would state very clearly that this House should sit as long as necessary to get its business done. It should not, except in dire circumstances or emergency situations, refer its business to committees that meet when the House does not normally sit. We should all take it upon ourselves to resolve that the business of the province of Ontario will be done five days a week, 52 weeks or 50 weeks a year if necessary, to make sure that the job is done.

This comment leads me into the thrust of the Speech from the Throne, this speech which indicated in its early comments that our main challenge as members of Parliament is to meet the crisis of confidence—I think that is an exact quote—also to build upon our assets to reflect the belief in the type of society we are trying to preserve. [8:30]

I, for one, and I am sure also my colleagues in this part of the House, would assure the government that we accept this challenge. The Speech from the Throne indicates that the worst unemployment, in Ontario as in Canada, is among the youth. Unfortunately, the speech does not give too much hope for this group. Vague reference is made to a training program especially geared to satisfying the manpower needs of industry. It also goes on to say that development of such a program will be given the highest priority in the coming year. It says too that the new training scheme will emphasize employer-centred training and will provide the required level of skills in the shortest possible time.

It goes on to point out, moreover, that the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) will in the very near future convene a conference with college and university personnel and representatives of labour and business as well as federal and provincial officials directly concerned. What a tower of Babylon will be built again! I would submit that the history of the apprenticeship training program in this province is not an altogether happy one. There is a growing confusion between the levels of authority in so far as apprenticeship is concerned. These levels of authority are those levels that one would find in the secondary schools. They are the teachers responsible there for the preliminary training at least of the people going into trades and then, beyond them, the people at the colleges and universities, particularly at the colleges of applied arts and technology level. Then they have to work in concert with the various employers involved in whatever training program.

These lines of authority have turned fuzzy at best. It would now seem that there really is not one central authority. To add to this, as is suggested in the Speech from the Throne, further confusion from the Ministry of Labour will not, in my opinion, resolve the problem. If it is true that the major group with which the government has to concern itself, that is, the unemployed group, is that group from age 16 to 24, I would suggest the central authority which must take upon itself greater responsibility is not Labour or Colleges and Universities but rather Education.

This is the system which has these young people in the years leading up to 16 years of age and has a responsibility to teach these young people the very skills they will need to succeed, be it in a trade or otherwise, in our economically lagging province. People must be encouraged—and I am not quarrelling with that particular part of the implication in the Speech from the Throne—to train in technology and skilled trade areas. I do not think we should be training more and more teachers and nurses, if I can use this as an example, when our obvious need might be for people such as geriatric care workers or environmental specialists. No matter how one looks at it, the educational system starting in elementary and on into secondary schools is that agency which must have as its major function the concern of these youngsters on an ongoing basis.

If I could revert just for a moment to the role of the secondary and elementary schools, it is my opinion that we have to build in our schools a new spirit of self-reliance. Our young people must learn to rely upon themselves and not on government jobs and government handouts. We need to regain the pioneer spirit which built this great country and this great province. Our young people are going to have to work harder, compete more fiercely and scramble faster than any other recent generation of Ontarians. It will not be easy for them to make it in the world and we had better start telling them that.

Hard work, competition and discipline will be the keys to success and to survival, but these are, in my opinion again, exactly the qualities which have been taken out of our school system. In other words, hard work and discipline must be restored to our schools. We owe that much at least to our young people, who desperately need to learn the skills which will make them able to get a job and make their way in our free-enterprise economy.

I was disappointed that in the Speech from the Throne we did not find too heavy a reference to the various problems in our educational system. It has been said before by our party and I would like to repeat it. Personally I am of the opinion that there is a great need to establish diagnostic evaluation processes to measure the achievement of children within our system. The results, we would hope, would enable these children and their parents and teachers to identify areas which require more work, or from which they could benefit from enrichment.

In this connection, too, I would suggest that although there has been recent reference from the ministry to basic subjects, or a more definitely underlined emphasis on core curriculum, we must go a step further and spell out the specifics of core curriculum, including English grammar, English literature, mathematics—Canadian history and geography would not hurt either—and perhaps a little more emphasis on physical education and health education, which for some time unfortunately have been getting nothing much more than lip service.

I would like to digress for just a moment. From time to time—and I give credit to the government for this—there has been an attempt to try to find out what some of the shortcomings are, what some of the problems are as a youngster moves from elementary to secondary, or secondary to post-secondary education. This little quote from the text “Basic Skills at School and Work” I think is a reflection to prove the point, and I am quoting:

“Students, too, are keenly aware of their shortcomings. Their teachers in secondary school and post-secondary institutions have hammered the point home. Young people have discovered that they are ill-equipped for the formal demands of any post-secondary courses which require much reading and writing. Students rarely express pride in their secondary school education. They feel that much of their work was futile. Many now express regret that they were permitted to avoid the drill and discipline needed to provide solid competence in mathematics and English composition.” I use that, Mr. Speaker, as only one evidence of some of the earlier comments I made.

It is rather disturbing as one looks through the Speech from the Throne to hear that the government plans to attack the unemployment problem—and with emphasis for this younger-age group to which I have referred—through two, what I would call, Band-Aid programs. I refer specifically to the Ontario Youth Employment Program, which is basically a summer employment subsidy program, and to the Career Action Program, which too, really is nothing more than a short-term proposal. Surely we can do better than that.

I will come back to education in a moment, but following through the Throne Speech I would like now, very briefly, to move into the area of the economic proposals. I must submit that I am not an expert in matters economic. Certainly one, however, could not quarrel, be he expert or not, with the aim suggested, and that is to improve our balance of payments and return our deficit position to a balance point, particularly in such fields as tourism. That has to be commendable. There is also an intent, as I understand it, to increase efforts to find new export markets for Canadian products, particularly Ontario products, and technology. This, too, has to be commendable.

But let me submit to the House that in this regard we are overlooking perhaps one of the biggest assets our province has. There wasn't a reference made to this in the speech. That oversight is this: In my opinion, we have more well-qualified doctors, medical technicians, dentists, dental technicians, pharmacists, pharmaceutical technicians—generally speaking, if you want to put them under one umbrella, scientifically oriented people—per capita than any other part of Canada or any part of the western hemisphere. We are blessed with many capable scientific people. Yet we are not assisting in any way—we are not giving any provincial encouragement in—the field of medical and related research. That, in my opinion, is more than sinful.

Hopefully, the comment in the Speech from the Throne in so far as the challenge of coping with the unprecedented growth of the 1960s being replaced by the need for reordering of priorities in the late 1970s—that is to do better with relatively less—cannot and should not apply in the field of medical, nor for that matter scientific, research.

In regard to the comment made about the government increasing its investment in energy conservation and renewable energy projects, let me say at the beginning I applaud this statement. Lest the government—three or four representatives of which happen to be here tonight—

Mr. Mancini: It's nice of the member for Peterborough (Mr. Turner) to show up.

Mr. Wildman: He's practically the only one from the government here tonight.

Mr. Van Horne: —feel that it has come upon something new, I would like to read a quotation:

“Within our lifetime, our greatest need will be conservation. Our greatest thrust should be to encourage scientists and engineering people to plan the wisest possible use and development of our energy resources. The comparatively cheap hydro power which we can now provide will attract industry and population. Our concern then is for development based on a foundation of wise use and conservation.”

This statement was made to the Rotary Club of London in 1928. The speaker was Dr. E. D. Buchanan, a lifelong friend of Sir Adam Beck and a former general manager of the London Public Utilities Commission. His statement, which I just read, sounds very much like something that we heard last Tuesday.

Surely the government and Hydro should have known for many years that conservation had to be one of its main programs. Let us hope the growing concern for Hydro over cost and conservation will be put into a program that will be a positive and meaningful program.

I found it interesting, in following through the Speech from the Throne, to see how references continually were made to education. I'm going to go back to that topic, because in the sequence of things this does come up at this point in the evolution of that particular document.

I note with interest that the government will seize—note the word—it's going to seize the opportunity to place an increasing emphasis on special education in our elementary and secondary schools.

Mr. Wildman: They're going to put it in a straitjacket.

Mr. Van Horne: I'm pleased to note that a plan of increased funding has been introduced to stimulate and support expanded special education programs and services at the local board levels. At least that's what I'm told. I've tried to analyse this statement with some people in the ministry and my analysis has revealed, in these last few days, that approximately $12.6 million more will be made available for special education at the elementary level and $11.5 million available at the secondary level for this coming year. Add them together and you get $24.1 million. When we take a look at the overall budget of $2.4 billion plus for this past year, we will realize what a rather insignificant percentage increase that is.

[8:45]

These increased funds, as I understand it at any rate, come through the ministry manipulating weighting factors; and if anyone wishes to take on an interesting exercise of an evening, I would suggest that he goes through the grant regulations and then follows that up by trying to understand weighting factors.

Although this project is commendable, one has to wonder just how long these funds will be available to our school systems. The ministry cannot, if it is serious about these programs, put the funds in for a year or two and then remove them if things happen to get a little tougher.

Special education programs are just that. They are special. They take a long time to plan, they take a long time to implement. The minister must, at the same time that he announces such increased funds for the coming year, also indicate to school boards a greater continuing concern for special education than has been shown in the past.

In this regard I note that the Throne Speech also makes reference to initiatives being taken to place more emphasis on early identification of children with learning disabilities. It brings tears to your eyes. I am sure the former leader of the third party is about to reach for his Kleenex.

Mr. Speaker, if they are serious about this, one would have to question some events from the past. Some six years ago the Windsor board of education and the Ministry of Education in the province of Ontario began a project called the Windsor Early Identification Project. This very commendable undertaking was completed and its findings summarized in a booklet form issued in 1976. Many of the findings in that report could be used for future planning. I would like to know if the ministry is intending to use this as its foundation for this new program or whether something else is being planned.

I find it very disturbing that the ministry puts great emphasis on projects such as this. The projects seem to be nothing more than just that, a project, something to be done for a year or two and then left alone.

To give evidence again to this criticism, I would suggest that during the estimates debate in July of 1977 when a question was put to one of the staff of the ministry about incidence tables for those children with learning disabilities, the ministry replied that it, in fact, did not have an Ontario incidence table. Yet there was the project to which I referred just a few moments ago, the Windsor Early Identification Project. If any members are interested copies are available; it's an interesting document.

How much dust is that gathering on the shelves now, and why didn't they follow it up with further studies to find how many of these youngsters there are in the province so that they could properly fund for them? How can they fund for children with learning disabilities or for special education if they don't know how many they have got? It makes absolutely no sense at all and I hope, beyond all hope, that the ministry is not playing with this. To give them credit I feel that they are not, but I am not sure that they are going in the right direction.

Before I leave this topic, I would like to note that there is not one single reference in the Speech from the Throne, not one single reference, to where the Ministry of Education particularly, or for that matter any of the ministries, is going to cut. Where? Where do we find reference to that? Certainly, is that not one of the thrusts that should have been taken in the opening of this new session?

I find other comments that are made in the Speech from the Throne interesting. I found it a little disconcerting to see that reference was made to compulsory automobile insurance before there was any opportunity for the select committee on company law to make any of its recommendations known to the House. That particular committee is winding up its considerations and its study on that theme of automobile insurance. It struck me that the government moved a little bit beyond what it should have considered its domain and, as far as I can determine, made no reference to that committee before it made that statement in the Speech from the Throne.

I am not quarrelling with compulsory automobile insurance; I am quarrelling with the way in which it was presented and perhaps with the uncertainty about the implementation date. What does implemented by December, 1979 mean? Will we be totally phased in by then or will we start phasing in at that point in time?

I have another comment or two. Legislation is proposed to protect children caught up in family disputes, and one cannot help but applaud that type of legislation. It is interesting to note in the sequence of things in the Throne Speech that this legislation is followed with a direct reference to a series of initiatives towards an overall approach to combat alcohol abuse in our society. I am sure that this back-to-back reference to family law legislation and the new legislation controlling alcohol is not an accident. It was rather skillfully designed to put these back to back. Hopefully, when the members of this House deal with these problems, party loyalties will be put aside and the common good of all those people in our province will be considered.

At this point in time, I must take a moment to remind all of those present and those that might read the Hansard record of this evening that we cannot forget that the initial impetus for changing the drinking age—the legislation coming from a private member's bill—came from the Liberal member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini).

Mr. Mackenzie: And the select committee on highway safety.

Mr. Van Horne: Or both.

In conclusion, it will be interesting to see how the government manages to manipulate the finances of our province in order to try to achieve the goal of a balanced budget over the next year, or two or three or four years. Hopefully, the government will not resort to taxation only as a means to attain this end. I am sure we are all aware that when Adam Smith proposed his four basic principles of taxation, he insisted that taxes should always be—

Mr. Laughren: Did he say Adam Smith?

Mr. Van Horne: It depends on which book the member likes to read.

Mr. Samis: That's not one of the member for Nickel Belt's favourites.

Mr. Van Horne: Does he want me to bring out another reference, say Karl Marx?

Mr. Laughren: I used to stand on his book to reach the cookie jar. That is how old it is.

Mr. Samis: You should see what he's got in his library now.

Mr. Van Horne: The basic principles referred to, either by him or others, are that taxes should be certain, convenient, economical and based on the individual's ability to pay. What wasn't mentioned was that taxes should also have the capability of raising a great deal of money for the hard-pressed taxing authority. We all know who that is; members opposite, I am sure, will be aware of that.

I had to chuckle at an article in our local press in the fall headed, "How the Government Picks Your Pocket." A reference was made therein to Ontario introducing the provincial gasoline tax back in 1925, which raised a humble $2 million in the first year of operation. I understand that in this past year there was something over $500 million raised through that same tax. Those members who scanned the press today will realize that gasoline is going to cost even more in another day or two.

The provincial sales tax is another device. Julius Caesar is really the one who introduced the old sales tax. Then we had our own dictator; I think Frost was his name. In 1961 he exhibited some of the same fearsome facility for filching money out of our taxpayers' pockets. In 1961 the government introduced something that was called the Frostbite. I may have the date just a little inaccurate, but the Frostbite, the first provincial sales tax, fixed at three per cent, raised $175 million. Now that it's up around the seven per cent level, how much is the government pulling in? Short of $2 billion? Whatever the numbers, surely the taxpayers of this province are staggering under the weight of these various hidden and open taxes.

Let us, before we consider any further taxation, take a look at those areas within our provincial budget from which we could cull out those fat areas. Let's review all of those budgets and reduce them wherever possible.

I can't help but chuckle when I recall another comment made by a gentleman by the name of Levenson. We're all struggling with making ends meet, and Levenson said, "I spent so many years of my life learning how to make ends meet. Now that I have the means, they've moved the ends farther apart." I think that's what's happening to our people here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: Right.

Mr. Samis: Even down on the farm, Bob. Next page.

Mr. Van Horne: In summary, our job as members of Parliament is to work for the individual welfare of each Ontarian and the collective good of our province. Can you imagine how effective we could be if we did work together for the people of Ontario?

There is reference made from time to time about the individual. It has been said that behind every deed and behind every great movement there has been an individual, a person existing. As the dictionary puts it, "Person: A separate, indivisible entity; unique, never repeated phenomenon, acting and feeling in a peculiar way, a way peculiar to himself." He is a person who has resolved, "I will walk on my own feet. I will work with my own hands. I will speak with my own mind." If we could get together, we could get the job done in the province of Ontario. I was hoping that I would have seen more of that in the Speech from the Throne. Perhaps the members would take these few words under advisement and work together.

Mr. McClellan: I'm pleased to take part in the Throne Speech debate, Mr. Speaker, although God knows this is surely the most vacuous Throne Speech that has come our way, at least since I was elected in 1975.

Mr. Martel: It is called the year of the dinosaur.

Mr. McClellan: At a time when unemployment is verging on 300,000 people in this province out of work, the Throne Speech offers on the major social problem of the day a complete cop-out; a little cheer-leading towards Mr. Trudeau's feeble efforts to deal with the problem of unemployment, but a self-righteous, Pontius Pilate-ish washing of the hands in the face of the tragedy of unemployment in this province.

It's pathetic. As my colleague said, it's a theadbare Throne Speech that is a disgrace to any government in any province.

I don't want to dwell on this—

Mr. Nixon: Are you for or against it?

Mr. McLellan: I'm against it. This is a fairly dead crowd. You have to realize the difficulty—

Mr. Nixon: We remember when you used to work for a living. You used to sit under the gallery here telling Yaremko what to say. Do you remember that?

Mr. Martel: You can't even insult them.

Mr. McClellan: That's right; there's nobody to insult. There's nobody for me to work myself into the—

Mr. Martel: Frank Miller is over there giving away land.

Mr. McClellan: —into the self-righteous rage that this Throne Speech deserves.

Mr. Wildman: You've got two members of the government.

Mr. Turner: Where are they when you really need them?

Mr. Samis: Come on, John, work on him.

Mr. Nixon: I see Villeneuve.

Mr. McClellan: So I hope you'll appreciate the difficulties that I'm labouring under.

Mr. Cunningham: Dispense.

Mr. Samis: We've got more in the back bench than you've got in the whole place.

Mr. McClellan: The last Throne Speech, as I recall, wrapped itself in the flag. This Throne Speech, I suppose you could say, Mr. Speaker, hides behind the skirts of the family. This little series of diversionary hallelujahs to the family is set out as though this government had some reason to be proud of its record with respect to services to families or to people in this province.

[9:00]

I thought it would be useful to spend my allotted time elaborating on a tiny little section of Throne Speech on page 17, and just look at this government's record with respect to services to families in this province.

The Throne Speech, on page 17, has the following noble sentiment: "My government shares the concerns of thoughtful citizens who see a need for concerted action, and is prepared to take a leading part in supporting and strengthening the family in Ontario."

Mr. Martel: Going to increase family benefits tomorrow.

Mr. McClellan: "First, the government will undertake a comprehensive review of its policies and programs as they affect the family, with the aim of making changes to" et cetera. "Special attention will be focused on the needs of single parent families, working mothers and their children, family care for the handicapped, the sick and the elderly."

Mr. Martel: At the same time cut the budget.

Mr. McClellan: At the same time cut the budget.

This government has nerve in associating itself with, as it says, thoughtful citizens who have a concern for the family, who see a need for concerted action. We should just spend a few minutes looking at this government's record in each of those areas that it outlines for itself as subjects of special attention.

We can make some suggestions to this government, some fairly concrete suggestions, around what they might do if they are serious about undertaking a review of this government's policies and programs with respect to family. I hope that the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), and the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), will pay some attention.

Mr. Martel: Would they were here.

Mr. McClellan: If they were here.

Single-parent families are the first group identified; and the plight of single-parent families in this province ought to be one of the major concerns, even obsessions, of a government concerned in a serious way with the needs of the family.

Since 1961 there has been an 85 per cent increase in social assistance caseloads in this province and a substantial portion of that increase has been attributable to the increase in the number of single-parent families on social assistance rolls.

The children of single-parent families in Ontario who are members of families on social assistance rolls number 100,000; one hundred thousand children in Ontario are members of single-parent families on social assistance. Quoting from a June 1977 report of the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto, as follows: "We may say that Ontario welfare allowances are neither adequate nor equitable, and that those dependent upon them are unquestionably living in poverty." One hundred thousand children in this province, who are the direct responsibility of this government because they are dependent for their support on this government, are living in poverty.

Mr. Wildman: They should go on Workmen's Compensation benefits.

Mr. McClellan: The government has had an opportunity to redress this inequity. There was a period between June 1975 and April 1977 when the social assistance rate remained unchanged; the period during which the consumer price index went up some 20 per cent. Finally, in April 1977 the government raised the social assistance rate nine per cent to restore exactly half of the lost purchasing power of families on social assistance in this province. At the same time, the government had unspent funds in the family benefit and general welfare assistance budget for 1976-77 of $36 million. At the end of the fiscal year 1976-77, $36.6 million was left unspent and disappeared back into general revenue. That $36 million was sufficient to give an eight per cent increase to social assistance recipients, including the 100,000 kids in poverty on social assistance in this province. And yet this government used that money as part of its ruthless and obsessive desire to meet its goal of a balanced budget. That money would have been sufficient to restore the purchasing power of social assistance recipients; almost exactly to restore the purchasing power that had been eroded over the years 1975 to 1977.

But that is not what this government is about. This government is not about meeting the needs of single-parent families. That is not what this government is in the business to do. Their business is to keep these kinds of families, these kinds of kids, in a state of poverty to meet their overall objectives of restoring profit to the private sector. That is simply what they are about. For them to say in the Throne Speech that they have concerns about families is the sheerest unadulterated hypocrisy. This government still pays foster parents more money to look after somebody else's kids—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Balderdash.

Mr. Wildman: The minister says that's balderdash.

Mr. McClellan: This government still pays foster parents, in case the Minister of Labour wasn't listening, more money to look after somebody else's children than it will pay a mother to look after her own child.

Mr. Mancini: Are you listening, Bette?

Mr. McClellan: And this is a government that states in its Throne Speech that it has a concern for the needs of families. That is the sheerest bunk.

The government says it intends to review the special needs of working mothers. They are going to have a comprehensive review of the special needs of working mothers. This is the same government that brought a total halt to day-care expansion in 1976-77. I should say not a total halt—the government was going to build 215 new day-care spaces for the year 1976-77.

The government budgeted, for day-care operating money, $29 million. They spent $24 million for a surplus of day-care operating funds of $4.4 million. They budgeted $5 million for mental retardation day-care centres and spent $3.7 million for a saving of $1.3 million. They budgeted $5.4 million for day-care capital. They spent $3 million for a surplus of $2.4 million. They had a surplus at the end of 1976-1977 of $8 million in unspent money for day care. And they have the nerve now to say in the Throne Speech that they are going to pay special attention to the needs of working mothers, after bringing a complete halt to day-care expansion and after piling up a surplus of $8 million—again, for the purpose of restoring profitability to the private sector, regardless of the social consequences.

This is the government that requires working mothers who wish to obtain a day-care subsidy to go to the welfare office. This is the government that requires ritual degradation and humiliation of working mothers who want to get day care for their kids and need a subsidy. And they have to go to the George Street welfare office in my city of Toronto and fill out the most humiliating and intrusive means test that exists, I think, anywhere in this country. I think that the Form 7 means-test ritual that is required of day-care subsidy applicants is probably the most abusive and humiliating means test that exists anywhere in this country.

This is the government that says in the Throne Speech that it has a concern about the needs of working mothers. They have the gall in the Throne Speech to say they are going to celebrate this year the United Nations' year of the child. If you are going to do that—

Hon. B. Stephenson: That starts next year. It's not this year; it's next year.

Mr. McClellan: Is it 1978 or 1979?

Mr. Lewis: It's 1979.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's 1979.

Mr. Lewis: But you're celebrating family unity month next month. The hypocrisy doesn't really matter.

Mr. McClellan: I was going to come to family unity month a little later.

Mr. Makarchuk: I've always wondered where the Tories came from.

Hon. B. Stephenson: At least we can say we had parents; that's more than you can say.

Mr. McClellan: If you are preparing for celebrations for the year of the child, they might remember that in Ontario, according to the National Council on Welfare—

Mr. Wildman: Go back to figuring out workmen's compensation benefit increases.

Mr. McClellan:—that in Ontario there are 400,000 children who live in poverty. Seventeen per cent of all the children in this province of Ontario are members of families living below the Statistics Canada poverty line. Ontario has a child poverty problem of what can only be called enormous proportions.

The great irony, of course, for the benefit of the Minister of Labour, is that most of the children, most of the 400,000 poor kids in this province belong to families whose parents are in the work force. That's why we talk so angrily to her about the inadequacy of Ontario's minimum wage law. That's why we talk so angrily about the absence of measures that would make it easier to extend the collective bargaining process in this province. Ontario's minimum wage, even after the August 1978 increases, will still be lower than British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Quebec.

Mr. Martel: We're a poor province.

Mr. Lewis: And the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Martel: Some day we'll get a Minister of Labour who supports labouring people.

Mr. McClellan: And yet it is understood by all of us on this side of the House that the government will not eradicate poverty in this province as long as they tolerate substandard labour conditions, as long as they tolerate exploitation of working people and their families in secondary sectors of the work force. That is where poverty exists. That is where poverty exists in this province. The way to deal with it is through an adequate minimum wage. They can keep their four or five or how many it is—

Mr. Lewis: Four.

Mr. McClellan:—philosophers who dispute the need for a decent minimum wage or for any minimum wage.

Mr. Makarchuk: Colin Brown will be number six on the list.

Mr. McClellan: May is going to be family unity month in Ontario. It wasn't too long ago that I obtained a report—this is by way of illustration of how this government fosters family unity through its social development policies, Mr. Speaker—from the Metro Children's Aid Society that indicated that 41 per cent of the kids in protective custody of the Metro Children's Aid Society were kids who suffered from mental retardation, from a development handicap, and who were in care absolutely unnecessarily. They did not need to be in care. There was no reason for them to be separated from their families, except that this government has failed to develop the kind of family support services that would make it possible for a family to keep a handicapped child, a mentally retarded child. Forty-one per cent of the kids in the care of the Metro CAS were forced into care unnecessarily because of the absence of services and because of the absence of adequate income support for parents to keep their own kids.

At the same time that I received this report, we learned that $50 million of the new money that this government had received to provide community and home support services for the mentally retarded had been spent instead on the operating costs of the old hospital school. In other words, that $50 million became part of the government's restraint program. It became, in a sense, a windfall profit to the government that was ploughed into existing operations for a cost saving of $50 million, in their own narrow little bookkeeping terms, and that money was not put into programs that would have made it possible for parents in Metro Toronto or other parts of Ontario to provide adequately for their own retarded children.

This is the same government that spends $33.50 a day to send a person to a hospital school for the retarded. That comes out to $10,000 a year per person.

[9:15]

Mr. Makarchuk: That even makes bad economics.

Mr. McClellan: Shortly before the election, members may recall that the minister announced he was finally going to bring in a special allowance for the parents of retarded kids that would enable them to absorb some of the enormous additional costs entailed in looking after a retarded child at home, and he offered the glorious and generous sum of $150 a month maximum. That is $150 a month this government is prepared to offer to a mother and father to keep their child at home together with them while at the same time it is willing to pay $10,000 a year to send the child to an institution.

That, by way of illustration, is a typical pattern with respect to this government's social development policies. That is what this government has always done and it has, in the past and to this day, refused to move away to a different sense of social services, to a different philosophy of social development.

Yet it has the nerve to use the rhetoric of family unity when its policies are absolutely destructive of family unit.

Mr. Wildman: Penny wise, pound foolish.

Mr. McClellan: The Throne Speech offers special attention to the needs of the sick. I do not have to dwell on the health cut. I do not have to dwell on the cut in nursing services. There has been an enormous exodus of Ontario trained and educated nurses to the United States, nurses who could be used to form the basis of a community-based, home-based health delivery system. We have seen cuts in services such as visiting homemakers, for example, budgeted by the Ministry of Community and Social Services at $7.9 million, spent at the level of $4.9 million for a surplus in that area alone of $3 million. It all adds up. It all adds up to the kind of cost savings that the Treasurer was referring to this afternoon, I believe, during question period. If members want to know where he got those cost savings, he got $55 million of those cost savings or cost trimmings out of the budget of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. Yet again they have the nerve, while at the same time savagely decimating services to families in Ontario, to pose as the champions of family unity, to pose as people concerned about the need for action to strengthen family life.

Finally, they mentioned in the Throne Speech that they intend to pay special attention to the needs of the elderly. I have a sense that we are heading for—I think one can use the phrase—an enormous social catastrophe with respect to the elderly. Ontario still has a relatively small percentage of elderly people, relative to the total population. I think it is in the order of eight per cent and that is substantially lower than the proportion of elderly in most western industrial societies, where it is more in the neighbourhood of 13 to 15 per cent.

Yet we are unable to cope in Ontario with the needs of our elderly today, even while they remain a relatively small segment of the total population. We know, as clearly as we knew that the baby boom was going to disrupt the school system and as clearly as we knew that the baby boom was going to disrupt the labour market, that the baby boom eventually is going to place enormous demands on our society and on our capacity to provide both income support and social services to the elderly population.

If we do not start planning for that immediately, if not sooner, we are going to be in an absolutely hopeless situation. Unless we begin to put into place now the two essential elements of an adequate income support scheme and a comprehensive community-based, home-oriented geriatric care service, we are going to be faced with the only alternative, which is a return to what amounts to incarceration of the elderly. There is no other way out. One cannot put that kind of a system in place overnight. It needs to be developed slowly over a period of time. Resources need to be allocated in a planned and systematic way over many years until that kind of a system gets put in place.

Failing that, we will have a crash program of building homes for the aged, which is a rather hideous prospect. We have barely emerged—I don't think in fact we have really emerged—from the poor law era of dealing with the aged, which was to incarcerate the aged. Lambert Lodge was torn down last year or two years ago. It was in my riding. It was the old poor house in Toronto, a relic of the 1834 poor law tradition of looking after the indigent. It became the home for the aged. It was a hideous way to look after old people, and yet we have not really emerged from that.

The 1975 interministry report on residential services indicated very clearly and very starkly that this province really has not progressed from a policy of institutional incarceration as the main way of addressing the needs of the elderly people. The interministry report spoke to the reality of the situation. It said: "Ontario gives its seniors a strong financial incentive to go inside, to go into institutional care. In the meantime, the aged person in the community can barely make ends meet and has extremely little in the way of service to help him stay there." That is simply a description of an elderly care system that is based on a poor law mentality, on an institutional or custodial mentality. And Ontario has not moved away from that.

It is starting to pay lip service to the notion of developing adequate income supports and adequate community-based geriatric services on an integrated, comprehensive planned basis. But that has not happened in any serious way. All we have had so far is last summer's student employment program. This government still has a sufficiently low sense of priorities with respect to the needs of the elderly that it is able to feel it can fob off such essential services as home support, home help and visiting homemakers to a temporary, ad hoc, low paid, minimum wage summer student employment program. That is a simple disgrace.

The Social Planning Council in its recent submission to the royal commission on pensions has pointed out the stark reality that in Metropolitan Toronto alone more than 50 per cent of the elderly individuals who are living alone, who are in the main women, have retirement incomes of less than $3,500 a year. That means that in Metro Toronto half the elderly individuals living alone are living in a state of poverty.

This government has no business identifying itself with those, as they say in the Throne Speech, thoughtful citizens who see a need for concerted action and are prepared to do something respecting supporting and strengthening the family. The government has much to do to get its own social development house in order if it intends to undertake a review of each of those five areas within the Social Development secretariat. The review shouldn't take very long. The review shouldn't take any longer than 10 or 15 minutes.

Members in both parties on this side of the House have been addressing themselves to these concerns for many years. My colleague from Sudbury East has spoken on all of those issues in the years when he was social service critic prior to myself. Before him, critics have addressed themselves to the selfsame issues I'm raising again here tonight, probably for the umpteenth time.

This government does not need a review of action to support and strengthen families. This government needs the guts to do something about these long-neglected areas of social development policies.

Mr. Laughren: You just hit on the missing ingredient.

Mr. McClellan: I would like to conclude by making a couple of remarks respecting the needs of my own constituency. I don't know how to describe the sense of anger within the community I represent with respect to the Workmen's Compensation Board. I raise it every year at every possible opportunity, I suppose, to the Minister of Labour. It's beginning to sound boring.

I remind the minister that I fought the last election with my Conservative opponent largely on the issue of the Workmen's Compensation Board. We joined in combat very directly and very specifically on that issue in my community, and the results speak for themselves. The Conservative candidate managed to reduce the Conservative vote to less than 25 per cent in a riding that had been held by the Conservative Party previously for 25 years when the issue was the Workmen's Compensation Board. It really was a local issue election in many respects in 1977.

I would hope the minister would take note of that. I doubt she will. Her remarks in this House as recently as Friday, in response to my request that she bring in an amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act to raise the rates, which have been raised since 1975, were simply despicable.

The consumer price index has gone up something in the order of 20 per cent since the last increase in the workmen's compensation rate. It is only just that the minister raise the workmen's compensation rates at least by an equivalent amount. Those rates are already inadequate, as every member in this House knows. Every single member in this House knows that the workmen's compensation rates are inadequate. For the minister and the government to sit there and refuse, after three years, to bring in a cost-of-living increase, that is sick government; that is government that is unworthy of any people.

Mr. Makarchuk: Her ideology has paralysed any sense of compassion she ever had.

Mr. McClellan: The explanation is very simple: After the last raise in 1975, the government was unwilling to raise the assessments on companies sufficient to retire the cost of the last increase. As a result, the government has a $400-million unfunded liability. Rather than deal with the problem by raising the rates and retiring the cost in a reasonable period of time, it commissioned this study. It is now postponing and deliberately delaying the obvious rational course of action, which is to raise the rates, and it is an act of pettiness that—

[9:30]

Hon. B. Stephenson: Don't impugn others with your motives.

Mr. Laughren: The minister is a blot on the landscape.

Mr. McClellan: It is an act of pettiness that is a blot on this government's record, and on any government would be.

Mr. Conway: It is an act of Bette-ness.

Mr. McClellan: The other issue with respect to the Workmen's Compensation Board is the problem of jobs for injured workers, and again that's an issue that's been raised by both parties on this side of the House. Surely to God that's not a partisan issue. Surely it makes sense for the government to provide, through affirmative action or through any other means, even if it's affirmative action within its own hiring policy, jobs for injured workers, particularly for injured workers who—

Mr. Laughren: The government is not doing anything for them.

Mr. Makarchuk: Don't mumble. Just raise the amounts.

Mr. McClellan:—work in manual labour and who lack, for a variety of reasons, the skills to upgrade themselves vocationally and there are thousands—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. members for Nickel Belt and York Mills carry on their private conversation elsewhere?

Mr. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are thousands and thousands of workers in this province who are in that predicament and the government still fails to act.

Mr. Wildman: Let them eat cake.

Mr. Makarchuk: Marie Antoinette.

Mr. McClellan: Let them do what? Let them go on welfare. Let them eat cake. Let them do anything, this government's attitude is, except go back to work. My constituents will not go to welfare. My constituents won't go to the welfare office. Injured workers in the riding of Bellwoods will borrow from friends and from family and they will do without, but they will not go to the welfare office. They don't want workmen's compensation particularly either. What they want is work that they can do at a decent wage that will support their families.

That's not a very irrational demand. That's not a very unjust demand for people of this province to make on their government, and yet this demand is being made year after year. Injured workers have come in their thousands to demonstrate here in front of this Legislature and they came from my riding. The Union of Injured Workers originated in the riding of Bellwoods. Nothing has been done. Nothing has been done since that ferment first began within my community back in 1969-70 and now it's 1978 and the frustration is just as strong and the resentment is just as deep and just as bitter as it was eight years ago.

It will stay so until this government comes to grips with the needs of injured workers through a twofold program of adequate compensation, eventually through universal accident and illness insurance, and secondly, through a program of guaranteed jobs for injured workers through affirmative action. Yet the Throne Speech says the government is going to pay special attention to the needs of the handicapped. What a lot of bunk. What a lot of hypocrisy.

Mr. Makarchuk: They should have printed it on stitched rolls.

Mr. McClellan: Finally, the issue of property tax relief: Nothing promised nothing gained. There continues to be a need within my community for some kind of special tax credit provisions for home renovation. We are very interested in development in the great riding of Bellwoods, but not in highrise development. We would like to redevelop our own homes. Most of my riding has been redeveloped by the workers who own and occupy their own homes; and they, by and large, rebuilt their own homes from the inside out and from the bottom to the top. Those who haven't done it yet are doing it now. It is a part of the economy of my community that supports a lot of people, a lot of small businessmen, a lot of tradespeople. It is a very vital part of the economic life of the community that I represent.

It is an enormous hardship to the working people who spend their time and effort—mostly their own sweat equity—on renovating and redeveloping their homes, to then get socked with an enormous increase in their assessment. It's iniquitous. The contribution that that kind of sweat equity and that kind of investment represents to the community, in terms of preserving the housing stock and preserving the stability and liveability of our neighbourhoods and communities, ought to be recognized through property tax credits that accrue to the renovator-owner of the property.

I would hope the government would see the wisdom of introducing those kinds of measures. I appreciate the opportunity to have joined in the debate. But I regard this Throne Speech as even more obnoxious than previous Throne Speeches. I thank you for your indulgence.

Mr. Sterling: Although I have had the opportunity of speaking in this House on two or three occasions prior to this time, I have never really had the opportunity to talk to this House about the former member for Carleton-Grenville, Donald Irvine. I would like to pay tribute to him at this time, because I believe that he served the province of Ontario and served his community in an outstanding manner.

Before coming to the Legislature of Ontario, Don served on his council and as mayor of the town of Prescott. In 1971, he was elected to the Legislature for the riding of Grenville-Dundas. In 1975, he was re-elected as the first member for Carleton-Grenville, and retired in 1977. Don served as the parliamentary assistant to the Treasurer and was the Minister of Housing. He then went to the Provincial Secretariat for Resources, Development. I know Don, personally; I know his wife Eleanor. I think that both these individuals have given to Ontario a tremendous contribution.

I would like everyone in the House who were friends of Don to know that he hasn't withdrawn from community life. He continues as a representative for the town of Prescott and the South Grenville Industrial Commission, and is doing everything in a local sense to try to attract industry to his town of Prescott.

Mr. Nixon: He'd be pushing Edwardsburgh in every way he could.

Mr. Samis: He'd probably be criticizing the government for their inaction. He already has, hasn't he?

Mr. Sterling: Don is doing everything to help in the development of Edwardsburgh, and I might report that he was at our meeting with the other local representatives on November 18. He agreed with all of the proposals that were put forward by the relative ministries at that time—

Mr. Wildman: Was he out planting trees?

Mr. Sterling:—including those by the Ministry of Natural Resources to utilize some of the land in the southern end for the growth of poplar and other types of forestry programs.

Mr. Samis: Why don't you plant jobs, not trees?

Mr. Sterling: And I might add to the member for Cornwall that one of the reasons Don felt so strongly about supporting that program was so that that particular land site can provide pulp that is badly needed for the mills in Cornwall.

Mr. Samis: Well, we'll see what he produces.

Mr. Nixon: We liked his goodbye speech at his dinner.

Mr. Sterling: At that speech at his dinner on November 17, I had the pleasure of reading a telegram from the Treasurer. He described Mr. Irvine as "the greatest right-winger since Maurice Richard."

An hon. member: Since Attila the Hun.

Mr. Samis: Where does that leave Handleman? Don't mention that name in Dundas.

Mr. Sterling: I believe that that was probably a fairly good description and Don never hid his political leanings.

Mr. Samis: He sure didn't. How could he?

Mr. Sterling: I only wish that some of the politicians in this House had listened more closely to him and recognized the facts as they were.

Mr. Nixon: We got along with him fine, but his colleagues didn't get along with him very well sometimes.

Hon. W. Newman: Look who's talking.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We got along very well, very well indeed.

Mr. Nixon: The Tories wouldn't listen to him. He had more sense than half of them rolled into one.

Mr. Foulds: What board, agency or commission has he been appointed to?

Mr. Sterling: Don is in private industry at this time—

Mr. Cassidy: He is waiting for his appointment, is that right?

Mr. Walker: That means he is a taxpayer.

Mr. Sterling: —for the information of the members opposite, and in his endeavours at this time he has been travelling to the province of Quebec. We have spoken on several occasions of the situation of the economy and the feeling of the people in Quebec. He is very concerned with that feeling, and I think we all must recognize in this House that the political uncertainty in this country is having more effect on the economy than anything else, and we must all work together to attempt to rectify that situation at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Wildman: Inco's trying.

Mr. Sterling: I think another thing that Don would have said and which I would endorse, and after listening to the proposals by the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan)—

Mr. Cassidy: What do you think? We learned too well what he thought.

Mr. Samis: Who's the member for Carleton-Grenville?

Mr. Sterling: I think we could endorse the policy that we cannot continue to spend ad infinitum more than we collect.

Mr. Nixon: Darcy's got a plan.

Mr. Samis: Tell Darcy that.

Mr. Nixon: It's called slip-year finance.

Mr. Kerrio: Just keep bringing the money up from New York on a triple-A train.

Mr. Sterling: I was interested in reading the Ontario Economic Council's report on business investment. That report outlined that the rates of return on our investment at this time are too low to attract additional investment. It also pointed out that our costs of manufacturing and labour are too high and our productivity is too low.

I think it's important to remember that every time we as individuals or any particular labour group get a dollar more on the wage packet, it effectively takes a dollar out of another wage earner's packet. It's usually from a weaker worker.

Mr. Nixon: How about those dollars we gave Steve Roman this afternoon?

Mr. Sterling: I think we must face up to these things. I must state that we must face up to these actual facts and deal with them in the very near future.

Hon. W. Newman: I'd love to put the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk in the hot seat.

Mr. Samis: We want to hear the member for Carleton-Grenville here.

Mr. Wildman: Give him a chance, eh?

Mr. Samis: Come on, Bill.

Mr. Sterling: I'd like to turn now to the riding of Carleton-Grenville, which is an eastern Ontario community, part rural, part urban.

Mr. Wildman: Part Irvine?

Mr. Sterling: It was part Irvine and now it's part urban.

Mr. Wildman: One saw him for one minute and he'd disappear for weeks.

Mr. Sterling: In the Throne Speech there was reference to the—

Mr. Samis: Ah, finally.

Mr. Sterling: —South Nation watershed. I'm glad that our government has given a top priority to this problem which has existed for some period of time.

Mr. Nixon: That is the Edwardsburgh swamp.

Mr. Sterling: Part of the Edwardsburgh land site is located in the South Nation watershed and no doubt will become part of this overall program.

Mr. Samis: Forget the raging river.

Mr. Sterling: It is hoped the program in total will alleviate the flooding, provide adequate quantities and quality of water to meet the needs of the people, industry and the community during all of the year and optimize the use of agricultural land in the area.

It is expected that the program will require a great deal of capital expenditure and our government recognizes that it will not be able to solve all of the problems encountered. However, it is presently undertaking major engineering studies to determine the best possible route to take in this endeavour. One of the first projects is already under way, being the Chesterville dam. I am glad to see that our government is recognizing this most important need in eastern Ontario.

There are other areas of the Throne Speech which directly affect my riding. Recently Ontario Hydro has indicated that there are four sites in the southern end of Grenville and the southern end of Dundas county which would be selected as future generation centres. It is noted, as the former Minister of Energy noted in this House, that the municipalities located close to these potential centres have all expressed a desire to explore the possibilities of an energy station being located near them.

The leaders of these communities, the township of Augusta, the township of Edwardsburgh, the town of Prescott, the town of Cardinal and the town of Iroquois, all have taken a positive approach to the location of a generating station in their area.

Mr. Samis: Along with other things.

Mr. Sterling: They see that Grenville and Dundas can have a greater role in providing the energy for eastern Ontario. While I myself have some reservations about the size of any generating station that might be built there, I congratulate the municipalities on their openness to Ontario Hydro at this time. If we have to provide jobs in eastern Ontario we must also provide the energy to eastern Ontario.

On February 17 of this year I was honoured to be named the parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurry). I look forward to working closely with him and taking to a final conclusion the Family Law Reform Act which is now before this Legislature. I also look forward to working with all of this Legislature in attaining the best possible Custody Act in this session of Parliament.

In the fall session we dealt with amendments to the Small Claims Courts Act. I believe this Act again could be amended and the whole small claims court system could be revamped. I intend, if I am able to maintain my position as parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General for a long period of time, to look into this particular area. I will also be looking into the need for courthouse facilities in the locale from where I come—that is in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. McClellan: What if you are sacked?

Mr. Sterling: It is interesting that the members should talk about my neighbours across the way in Quebec because we do have many problems with them in terms of trying to keep straight the policies of the provincial government of Quebec in terms of offering opportunity to tradesmen and to small businessmen to carry on their business in that province.

Mr. Samis: The problem is in Ontario, not in Quebec.

Mr. Sterling: I have worked closely with these businessmen in attempting to dispel any rumors which are untrue, and I have also approached our government in urging them to seek agreements with the province of Quebec in clearing the way.

Mr. Samis: With no results.

Mr. Sterling: I think it is noteworthy that a press release not more than two weeks ago came out noting that the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) had a meeting regarding the licensing of trucks with the province of Quebec and was successful in reaching an agreement with them to alleviate a potentially aggravating condition. In that area I think that most eastern Ontario residents understand the difficulties in implementing a blanket policy regarding the use of a second language within its system. I believe that the bilingual policy of the federal government has done immeasurable harm to the cause of unity in my riding.

Mr. Samis: That's not what Joe Clark says.

Mr. Sterling: I am thankful that we are not making the same mistakes here in Ontario.

Mr. Samis: That is not what Walter Baker says.

Mr. Sterling: This is my first term in the Legislature of Ontario and I trust that I will be here for a few terms in future.

Mr. Foulds: You almost missed your cue that time.

Mr. Ruston: The Minister of Agriculture and Food is the only one who is applauding.

Mr. Sterling: Of the 36 years which I have now lived within this province, 35 years have been blessed with Tory rule.

Mr. McClellan: Blessed did you say?

Mr. Nixon: Blessed! Maybe that's your problem.

Hon. W. Newman: It sure is yours.

Mr. Samis: Quit while you are ahead.

Mr. Kerrio: You can't win them all.

Mr. Walker: Maybe you meant to say shock.

Mr. Wildman: Doesn't it make you feel old?

Mr. Nixon: No, he's just a baby—one of these war babies.

Mr. Sterling: Our province has prospered in the past and presented unlimited opportunities to its young people.

Mr. Samis: Not in eastern Ontario.

Mr. Sterling: Now we are moving into an era where we have moved from the basic economic premises that ruled our parents.

Mr. McClellan: Speak English.

Mr. Sterling: I believe that the programs outlined in the Throne Speech will start us back towards the position where the people of Ontario can again regain the optimism and security for the future of this province.

Mr. Blundy: I am very happy to participate in the debate on the Throne Speech. You might say, Mr. Speaker, this is my maiden speech in the House, although I have spoken a number of times on various pieces of legislation and on estimates in the House, but tonight I am going to be able really to tell you all about Sarnia. When I get through I would imagine there will be a great exodus from all of your ridings to the Sarnia area.

Mr. Cassidy: Just from this House; that's all.

Mr. Foulds: Why is everybody leaving?

Mr. Blundy: I got rid of that many. By the time I get through speaking there won't be anybody but the Speaker and myself here. However, I do want to say several of the news media asked me what about the Throne Speech.

Mr. Kennedy: We are all listening.

Mr. Blundy: I said it was so vague it was very difficult for me to pinpoint anything that would be of interest.

Mr. Walker: You haven't read it.

Mr. Blundy: If one speaks in very vague terms, then one is really not pinned down to anything, and that's the way I look upon this recent Throne Speech. When one thinks about the province of Ontario and the problems we have now, its economic condition and financial condition and its unemployment—

An hon. member: You blame Trudeau like the rest of them.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Fight about the price of uranium.

Mr. Blundy:—it's hard to realize how the government could propose a Speech from the Throne so vague as the one that we heard last Tuesday. I hope that those vague terms in which that Throne Speech was written will produce more than they did in my mind when I heard that Speech from the Throne on Tuesday.

There was some reference to looking at boards and commissions. I don't believe they used the words "sunset law," which my friend from London South (Mr. Walker) mentioned, but I personally think that a sunset law is long overdue in this province, when you consider the number of boards and commissions, most of which came into being so many years ago that most of us don't know what they stand for. I think that if we really want to streamline the government of this province, we ought to look at those. I hope there will be something done in that regard.

Mr. Kerrio: We'll have to streamline most of the government.

Mr. Blundy: There were very few hopes for unemployed people of this province in the Throne Speech debate. I noticed in today's paper that the Economic Council of Ontario said it is likely that unemployment will be a problem in this province for the next eight years. Well, God help us. There wasn't very much in the Throne Speech of last Tuesday that is going to deal with the problem of unemployment that exists right now. I know that the troubles we are in with unemployment and inflation and economics cannot all be laid at the door of the government, but I think a good deal of it can. I was interested that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Sterling) talked about this government being in for 35 of his 36 years of life. All I have to say is that I feel sorry for the member for Grenville-Carleton. He hasn't lived yet. Wait until we get another government and then he'll see what this province can be like.

Mr. Germa: How it was with Mitch.

Mr. Blundy: I think what I've said about the Throne Speech is about all that it deserves.

I would like to talk about some of the good things in the province of Ontario; and, in particular, about the riding of Sarnia. The riding of Sarnia, for the edification of all of those present, is composed of the city of Sarnia and the township of Sarnia and the village of Point Edward. The village of Point Edward is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year, 1878 to 1978. The village of Point

Edward came into being with the coming of the Grand Trunk Western Railroad in 1877, and was incorporated in 1878. So we're going to have a big celebration down there and Her Honour, the Lieutenant Governor, will come to open that celebration.

As far as the city of Sarnia is concerned, I'm sure that most of the members know the vibrant economy and the vibrant industrial complex that we have in the city of Sarnia. The people of the city of Sarnia can never understand how they can have all these industries, with continuing employment and their contribution to the gross national product of this country—and think of all the income tax and the corporation tax and so forth that comes out of the city of Sarnia—yet what does the city of Sarnia get in return? Very little. This government in power now, looks out from the ramparts of Queen's Park, peers out to the west and perhaps on a good day might see as far as London; but as far as Sarnia, no.

Mr. Ruston: Or Windsor.

Mr. Nixon: They don't see much past Brampton.

Mr. Mancini: Shame on your government.

Mr. Ruston: We'll fool you. We'll secede.

Mr. Blundy: A neighbour of mine was doing some alteration in the home and tore out a partition and found a newspaper of May 1925. The headline story was that the chamber of commerce and the city council of the city of Sarnia were coming to Queen's Park to see if they could get the road paved from Sarnia to London.

[10:00]

Mr. Mancini: They're still trying.

Mr. Blundy: Fifty-three years later, I am pleading with the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow)—

Mr. Mancini: Where is the minister?

Mr. Blundy: —to build a road from Sarnia to Highway 401 that will take care of the traffic that is generated by the city of Sarnia.

Mr. Mancini: How many years to macadamize a road?

Mr. Blundy: If you drive out Highway 7 from Sarnia towards London, you have to pass convoys of tank trucks and other transport trucks, in addition to the ordinary automobile traffic. Highway 7 and Highway 22 from Sarnia to London is known as the death strip. Every year the number of deaths and the accidents and the injuries to people are increasing.

And here now, 53 years later Mr. Speaker, I beg the province and the government of Ontario to provide us with a four-lane controlled-access highway to the centre of government and commerce in the province of Ontario.

I think the city of Sarnia deserves it. The city, in our immediate area, is the leader in the petrochemical field. The refineries of all the oil companies are there, the chemical industries. Every time you people drink a cup of coffee out of a Styrofoam cup, you are adding and contributing to the welfare of the city of Sarnia.

When you stand at the corner of South Vidal Street and Churchill Road, you can just look around, and in a glance you can see the entire ethylene production of Canada, with Imperial Oil, Dow Chemical and Ethyl Chemical.

There is no doubt about the contribution that has been made to the province by the Sarnia area, but there is considerable doubt about what has been returned to the long-suffering people of the city of Sarnia and area.

There is another matter that I would just like to touch on, when I was speaking about the industries of Sarnia, Mr. Speaker. For some time the mayor and members of council, and the people of Sarnia, have wanted to have a daily air pollution index for the city of Sarnia.

When I came here, I talked to the Minister of the Environment at that time, now the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr), on several occasions. One time he said to me, "Why do you want so badly to have a daily air pollution index for the city of Sarnia?" I said, "Because I want to show the people that we have been maligned over the years and that we don't smell nearly as badly as people have painted us."

Mr. Ruston: That's what comes of using a good deodorant.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There's the answer.

Mr. Blundy: I tell you that the daily air pollution index was commenced as of December 1, 1977, and since that time I have been proven right.

Most of the days we are lower than Hamilton, Toronto, Sudbury, Windsor et cetera; most of the days. Check it out and you find out that I am right. Occasionally there is an accident, odour will release or something. Consider, Mr. Speaker, that in the last 15 years, the incidence or the amount of industry in the Sarnia area has increased tenfold, and in that same time, the air pollution, the quality of the air has improved tenfold.

The industries are not perfect, they are not pure; but they have done a tremendous job in trying to come up to and stand up to the requirements of the Ministry of the Environment in the province of Ontario and I have to give those industries credit where credit is due.

I would like to speak about finance, particularly as it pertains to my riding. Over the past seven or eight years during the term of this government, they have used every nickel that came into the teachers' super-annuation fund, the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement Service Fund, and the Canada Pension Plan as it pertains to Ontarians. All this money was so handy it burned a hole in the pocket of the government and the government had to spend it. They did spend it. They have been on a spending spree for the last seven or eight years. Now we are reaping the whirlwind. We are going to have to restrain ourselves. The government is saying we must restrain here and there and so forth.

What really gets me is that the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has the nerve to renege on the Edmonton commitment as far as the municipalities of Ontario are concerned. Tomorrow is March 1. In that month, March, the municipalities of this province will be sitting down and going over the budgets for the year 1978—and are they ever going to have a time. Their costs have gone up—everything that they do has gone up, their wages and so forth—and they are going to get a smaller percentage increase from the province than they have had in years gone by. The municipalities of Ontario don't know exactly how badly off they are until the end of this month is over and they have done their municipal budgets.

Another thing I want to speak of is the matter that has been raised by the mayor and city council and by myself. It is the matter of the treatment of certain municipalities in this province which, because they looked after their affairs, had an updating of their assessment prior to the takeover of the assessment function by the province in 1970. In the case of the city of Sarnia, we had an updating of our assessment, not quite to market value but very close to it, in 1962. Several other municipalities, such as Windsor, St. Catharines and Waterloo and other areas, did the same thing.

Mr. B. Newman: Emphasize Windsor.

Mr. Blundy: I'll leave that to the hon. member.

However, now, Mr. Speaker, those people who were aggressive and tried to do something for their municipality are being penalized, because as the function of assessment throughout the province was taken over in 1970—practically over my dead body because I was the mayor at the time and I was very much opposed to it—now the resource equalization grants are based on those sums of assessment as of that date.

Naturally the city of Sarnia had its assessment increased to the point where it gets zero resource equalization grants—nothing, zero. The city of Sarnia gets nothing.

We have been asking that until such time as market value assessment is introduced throughout the province of Ontario, we and the other municipalities similarly affected should get transitional grants to tide us over. This is the only fair way to treat the cities of Sarnia and Windsor and St. Catharines, and the other municipalities similarly affected. It has been asked by me in this House, it has been asked by the mayor, and up to this time we have received a negative answer.

What does it mean to my constituents? It means that in this year of 1978 they will pay additional taxes of at least $58 on the average home throughout the city because they are not able to get the grants that are due to the city of Sarnia and the other municipalities which I mentioned.

I was reading in the paper, I believe it was the London Free Press, where they were making a comparison of assessment, because they were talking about the subject of which I am now talking. They mentioned that the Treasurer's home in Raleigh township outside of Chatham was assessed for $11,000. According to the article I read in the paper, the minister said the taxes he paid on that house were just a little under $1,000.

Mr. Conway: Another Tory.

Mr. Blundy: Let me tell you what the comparison of that is in the city of Sarnia that produces so much to make Ontario a great province.

On my home, which is on the shores of Lake Huron in Sarnia, the assessment is $20,400, and you can look it up. The taxes that I pay on that property are $1,794. You know as well as I do that a poor man like me would not have a home as nice as the Treasurer has. So you can see the injustice of it. I have pleaded and pleaded for this government to look on this in a fair and just manner, and we have had nothing but a deaf ear.

Mr. Nixon: That fellow McKeough has a dual estate.

Mr. Blundy: The people of the Sarnia riding are going to remember that. They're not going to forget it. They can remember that for 35 of those 53 years that we've been waiting for a highway, the government in power now has been in power—and they will not forget that.

Mr. Roy: He pays less taxes than I do, even.

Mr. Blundy: I would like to continue in a more peaceful vein. There are a couple of other things that I would like to speak about that are perhaps less controversial than those of which I have just spoken. One of the things I would like to mention, and I hope to pursue this matter later in the House as well, is the matter of insurance for municipalities.

Many of the municipalities pay out ever-increasing sums of money for public liability, property damage, fire and theft—the ordinary things that we all pay in the way of insurance. It is becoming an increasing burden for municipalities. What I would like to propose is that the ministry responsible for municipal affairs try to correlate the insurance needs and the insurance problems of all the municipalities of Ontario.

Let us have a co-ordinated approach to insurance. The people of Ontario could save considerable money if we had a large blanket policy to which all of the municipalities contributed and which would cover the insurance needs of all the municipalities of Ontario. This is something that, when I was mayor, I tried very hard to get going and never was able to obtain it. I hope that later on I will be able to make some proposals in this House that might be able to achieve that. It is a way of municipalities being able to save dollars on their insurance.

I would also like to speak on behalf of the municipalities—that they be given more autonomy. The more that they become a creature of the province through budget, grants and so forth, the more the autonomy of a municipality is eroded. I think that the people who are elected on the municipal scene are just as important as those who are elected on the provincial level or the federal level.

[10:15]

As a matter of fact, when you are a municipal politician, the people who vote for you know you so well—you live in their community; you work in their community—they really do pick people who they know can be responsible. I have said over and over again that the municipalities are losing their autonomy every year because of the grant structure of the government at this time.

I would like to mention something about the recent report on provincial-municipal grants. The report talks about a number of things, but there's one thing about which I am quite bothered. In our riding we have what is known as the St. Clair Parkway, which is one of the most interesting drives in the province of Ontario. You drive from the beautiful waters of Lake Huron, all the way down the St. Clair River, by our industries and through the farm lands of Moore township.

Mr. Conway: And the Lorne Henderson estate?

Mr. Blundy: Yes. We go right through the riding of the Minister of Government Services, and I think he probably will be very interested in what I have to say.

It has been suggested that the St. Clair Parkway and the Sydenham River Conservation Authority, which chiefly runs through Lambton county, be amalgamated. That's absolute nonsense; they are 40 miles apart. If they were two organizations that were close by, whereby they could share the equipment and the manpower of the two of them, there could be a saving seen in that respect. But to try to cut down the contribution of the province of Ontario to those two great bodies in the Sarnia-Lambton area, under the guise of amalgamating the two, is really a dirty trick; that's all I have to say about it.

The people of Lambton riding—although the Minister of Government Services may not tell you this—feel the same about it as we do in Sarnia. To amalgamate the Sydenham Conservation Authority and the St. Clair Parkway, which are really not the same kinds of bodies in many respects and which are 40 miles apart, is a ridiculous thing and I hope to be able to speak about against that at a future time.

I have appreciated this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to tell you something about the wonders of my riding and about the problems that I believe my constituents face. They are not only problems that are being faced by my municipality but they are being faced generally by the municipalities of Ontario. I just hope there will be more of a sense of direction given to the municipalities, that there will be a greater degree of autonomy for the municipalities of Ontario and that the government of Ontario is not going to try to reduce that awful deficit it has at the expense of the municipalities of Ontario. This is what is being talked of now and the municipalities of Ontario recognize that. The government members can talk about their 35 years in office—

Mr. Conway: Has Bette been here this long?

Mr. Blundy: No, it just seems that long. But I am saying that after 35 years of the government we have had, it isn't going to continue very long; there are going to be some changes very soon.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You have got a cloudy crystal ball, Mr. Blunder.

Mr. Blundy: I am sorry that the minister is not going to be around for another 35 years—

Mr. Cassidy: You never put your hatchet away.

Mr. Blundy: I don't take offence at the minister calling me Mr. Blunder. At least she is getting the first five letters of my name correct anyway.

An hon. member: You are half right, Bette.

Mr. Conway: What is it over there? Is it Miss, Ms. or Mrs.?

Mr. Cassidy: Just call her Mr. Stephenson and see how she reacts.

Mr. Cunningham: Ms. One of these days, Bette, your job is going to turn you grey.

Mr. Blundy: I want to conclude my remarks on a very pleasant tone. I think it is a great opportunity for me to be a member in this House, and I really appreciate being able to represent the people of the city of Sarnia and the township of Sarnia and the village of Point Edward here in this House. I appreciate having this opportunity to speak tonight.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to be able to join in this Throne Speech debate. This is my first Throne Speech debate since being elected.

I guess I could spend some time talking about my home town and my home riding. I don't want to talk about it in any great depth, but I maybe should point out that Windsor too, like Sarnia, feels a little bit alienated from the great metropolis of Toronto and the present government. I should point out especially to the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) that although she did suggest at one time in this House that Windsor should be shut down, and the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) at another time suggested that we should raise the American flag over Essex county, Windsor and Essex county intend to stay part of this province and we intend to send good NDP representatives to this House for many years.

Mr. Mancini: Yes, not too many.

Mr. Cooke: We've got two out of three in Windsor, and we'll get that third one one of these days.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No such thing. That's a contradiction in terms, good NDP representatives.

Mr. Cooke: I think the people of Windsor would disagree with the minister.

I would like to talk briefly about some of the issues raised in the Throne Speech—some of them local issues and some that affect the province as a whole. I was very pleased that the Throne Speech finally recognized that unemployment is the number one problem in this province. In the past, we have heard the Premier (Mr. Davis) and members of the cabinet talk about national unity being the number one problem. We've heard them talk about inflation and balancing the budget as being the number one problem. The people of Windsor and the people of this province recognize unemployment is the number one problem.

I recently sent out a questionnaire as part of my Queen's Park report, and clearly the people of Windsor-Riverside state that unemployment is the number one problem. Fifty-nine per cent of the people who returned the questionnaire stated that was the number one problem. Another top-priority problem that I will talk about later was the reform of the property tax.

The government, as I say, has recognized now that unemployment is the number one problem, but what does it plan on doing about it? We continue to hear that our economy is recovering. Over the last three years the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) and the federal officials have told us that our economy is getting better, but each month we get the unemployment figures and they continue to rise. Last year the government coped with unemployment by suggesting that it would redefine what full employment meant. Now this year it decides it is going to cope with it by saying it is out of its jurisdiction, it is a federal problem.

Mr. Cassidy: It's a cop-out.

Mr. Cooke: I just don't agree with that approach. I think this government has it within its power to have a great effect on unemployment and to resolve the problem to a certain extent. Instead, what this government is doing is it is contributing to unemployment. The budget cutbacks in Health, Colleges and Universities, grants to municipalities, have all contributed to thousands of civil servants being laid off.

Nobody knows better about that problem than the representatives from Windsor. In Windsor the provincial government is attempting to close a chronic-care hospital, it has closed our OHIP office; we are being affected like every other municipality by cutbacks in municipal grants, school boards are being affected, and our university is being affected. The government decided to close Riverview Hospital. That decision will eventually be made in the courts, but if that hospital is closed there will at least be a number of layoffs. The union says a couple of hundred; it's debatable exactly how many layoffs there will be, but a number of people will lose their jobs as a result of that hospital being closed. Not only will people lose their jobs, but the quality of care to chronic-care patients will certainly be decreased when they're moved into a hospital that has been a general hospital up to this point.

The OHIP office closing probably enraged the citizens of Windsor more than anything else that has happened to us over the last few months. Forty-seven people could possibly have lost their jobs. It didn't quite amount to that many, but around 40 people lost their jobs. Instead, the office was centralized in London. I should point out that Windsor has an unemployment rate of 11.4 per cent as of January 31. London has an unemployment rate of 7.3 per cent. If this government had any sense at all, what they would have done is reversed the trend. They would have had the OHIP office centralized in Windsor, if they really felt that was going to be saving money.

The school boards in our province are being cut back. As a former school board trustee, I think I have some understanding of exactly what's going to happen. In Windsor, for example, the Windsor Board of Education is talking presently of laying off a number of caretakers. With declining enrolment, teachers are now losing their jobs. Again that is another example of the government's cutting back grants or not increasing grants in order to keep up with inflation and, as a result, more people are unemployed.

The Ministry of Colleges and Universities, which is now the area for which I will be responsible for my party, recently announced that grants for 1978 would be increasing by an average of 5.8 per cent. The immediate reaction of universities across this province was that there will have to be cutbacks in staff. We know that the cutbacks in staff are going to result in teaching assistants being laid off and graduate students losing valuable income. Also some professors will no doubt lose their jobs. Courses will be cut and therefore programs for our university students in this province are going to be seriously affected. I just don't think that's the direction in which we should be going.

I don't understand why this government is so obsessed with balancing a budget by 1981 when we have 300,000 people in this province presently unemployed. Even the President of the United States, President Carter, who said he wanted to balance his budget by 1981, is now saying that that is an unrealistic goal and that the priority should be to get the people back to work. With increased revenues and with people working and paying taxes, then we can start talking about balancing a budget.

I'd also like to talk a bit about the auto industry since it's so very important to my home town. So far in 1978 the workers in the auto plant at Chrysler Canada have been laid off for four weeks, and the prospects are that they're going to be laid off again. Auto sales are on the decline. Big cars are not selling and the cars we produce in Windsor are fairly large cars. I beg the government to start looking at the problem now before we have another crisis. Windsor is pretty well a one-industry town. If they don't start coming up with plans to revitalize the auto industry, we're going to have a serious problem in Windsor, as they had in Sudbury.

Mr. Foulds: When it starts hitting the manufacturing sector, the economy is in real trouble.

Mr. Cooke: I suggest to the government that they look at that problem immediately, that they look at what could be done and what can be done and not wait for a problem to arise and then react to a crisis. Because from what I've seen of this government so far, that's exactly what they do. They plan and they react. They react to a crisis all the time. Sudbury is an example.

In social services right now with the child abuse problem they could have made some major changes when people were talking about it before. Instead, they had to wait for child abuse cases to be reported in the press and tragic deaths to occur. Then the government decided they're going to take action. That's not the way an effective, responsible government should be acting.

The Throne Speech states that the government is committed to getting a better deal on the auto pact for Ontario and for Canada.

They are committed to convince or put pressure on the federal government to make those changes or possibly renegotiate the auto pact. I've been hearing that for quite some time now. The Treasurer has been talking about it, but I get the impression that he's not really serious about the renegotiation of the auto pact.

On motion by Mr. Cooke, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. F. S. Miller, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, February 28, 1978

Throne Speech debate, continued, Mr. Walker, Mr. Van Horne, Mr. McClellan, Mr. Sterling, Mr. Blundy, Mr. Cooke 221

Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Cooke, agreed to 245

Motion to adjourn, Mr. F. S. Miller, agreed to 245

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Blundy, P. (Sarnia L)
Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
Haggerty, R. (Erie L)
Kennedy, R. D. (Mississauga South PC)
Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General
(Burlington South PC)
Kerrio, V (Niagara Falls L)
Laughren, F. (Nickel Belt NDP)
Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
Makarchuk, M. (Brandford NDP)
Mancini, R. (Essex South L)
Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
Miller, Hon. F. S.; Minister of Natural Resources (Muskoka PC)
Newman, B. (Windsor-Walkerville L)
Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
Riddell, J. (Huron-Middlesex L)
Roy, A. J. (Ottawa East L)
Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)
Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
Sterling, N. W. (Carleton-Grenville PC)
Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
Turner, J. (Peterborough PC)
Van Horne, R. (London North L)
Walker, G. (London South PC)
Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)

No. 8

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Thursday, March 2, 1978

Afternoon Sitting

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CROWN LAND SALES

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members will recall the Speech from the Throne announced a special northern program to allow the purchase of Crown land for private recreational use. This, we believe, will help increase jobs in several ways.

For the past seven years summer cottage lots on Crown land were only available on a lease basis.

Mr. Martel: That's because there wasn't enough land available.

Hon. F. S. Miller: During the first year after registration of a subdivision, only Ontario residents were eligible to lease land. During the second year, Canadians from other provinces have been permitted to lease, and after that non-residents could apply for any remaining lots.

The new program approved by cabinet will follow the same timetable, except that for Ontarians and other Canadians lots in a subdivision may now be purchased. Non-residents will still be able to lease lots after the second year.

We believe that ownership will stimulate cottagers to invest more money in the buildings erected and will encourage improvements which will create employment in the local communities.

We have received many inquiries about this program since it was announced. Details on its administration are being worked out and will be announced in three or four weeks time.

Mr. Martel: What a cop-out.

Mr. Mancini: Are you asking us to wait a little longer?

DEATH OF KIM ANNE POPEN

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, last week I announced to the House that I had decided to hold a judicial inquiry into the Kim Anne Popen case of child abuse and the role and operation of the Sarnia-Lambton Children's Aid Society.

I wish to inform the House today that the terms of reference and the appointment of a judge to conduct this inquiry have now been made under the provisions of section 3 of the Child Welfare Act.

In this regard, I have named his honour, Judge H. Ward Allen, of the county and district courts of the counties and districts of Ontario to conduct the inquiry and report his findings and recommendations to me.

The terms of reference are as follows:

1. To investigate all matters relating to the care of Kim Anne Popen by the Children's Aid Society of the city of Sarnia and the county of Lambton, including: (a) the circumstances relating to the removal, care, return and supervision of Kim Anne Popen by the said society; and (b) the actions of and the performance of duties by the said society and its officers, employees, agents and of any other person or agency relating to such removal, care, return and supervision.

2. To review any matter arising out of this investigation of the care of Kim Anne Popen by the society in relation to the ability of the society to perform the powers and duties assigned to a Children's Aid Society under the Child Welfare Act.

3. To report his findings and to make such recommendations as he may deem fit to the Minister of Community and Social Services.

I wish also to advise the House that his honour Judge Allen is in your gallery this afternoon following a meeting that we had recently.

Mr. Lewis: We wish him well; it is not an easy job.

Mr. Speaker: Point of privilege?

Mr. McClellan: Would you remind the ministry that the House requires copies of ministerial statements to be provided to party leaders or their representatives at or before the time of the statement.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I apologize that that was not done. It was intended that that be done during the lunch hour. If they did not reach the critics and the leaders of the opposition parties, I apologize and I will certainly find out why they did not, because I specifically inquired and was told that they were being delivered.

Mr. Warner: Don't apologize, just resign.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Will you change the gramophone needle?

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, later this afternoon I will introduce proposed changes to the Mental Health Act.

As the members are aware, while there have been significant changes in the philosophy of mental health services and their delivery in the past decade, there have been no changes in the corresponding legislation.

The senior advisory body to my ministry, the Ontario Council of Health, is undertaking a thorough review of the Mental Health Act. After the council's study is completed, in mid-1979, I should be able to submit legislative proposals for a complete revision of the Act.

However, certain aspects of the Act require immediate consideration. The members will recall that on April 14 last year I advised the House of my intention to introduce proposals for interim changes to the Act. On December 13 last I did so.

There are three principal areas being addressed at this time: civil commitment, confidentiality and the role of the public trustee. The first of these, civil commitment, involves involuntary hospitalization and the rights of patients. Under the present Act, anyone found to have a disease or disability of the mind severe enough to require hospitalization, either in the interest of his or her own safety or the safety of others, can be confined for a period of up to 30 days on the application of a single physician.

While use in the present Act of the word "safety" may give physicians latitude in judgement, the lack of legislative clarity has resulted in some confusion. At the crucial phase of the process of incarceration, when a commitment decision is made, relevant parties are uncertain as to their rights and obligations. The confusion over the meaning of the word "safety" underscores the necessity for speaking clearly in an area that obviously deals with the freedom of the individual. To achieve maximum clarity in directing physicians and others in society who have a moral or social investment in fair and equitable treatment of persons found in this condition, we are proposing to set out in detail the nature of the evidence required and the grounds for action by a physician, a justice of the peace or a peace officer.

Specifically, the bill provides that "where a physician examines a person and has reason to believe that the person has threatened or attempted or is threatening or attempting to cause bodily harm to himself; has behaved or is behaving violently toward another person or has caused or is causing another person to fear bodily harm from him; or has shown or is showing a lack of competence to care for himself; and the physician is of the opinion that the person is apparently suffering from mental disorder of a nature or quality that likely will result in serious bodily harm to the person, serious bodily harm to another person or imminent and serious physical impairment of the person, the physician may make application in the prescribed form for a psychiatric assessment of the person."

Since I first introduced this bill in December, concern has arisen that the criteria in the bill may exclude from commitment many people who are mentally ill but refuse to seek help, even when it is urgently needed. Many of the examples drawn to my attention are, in my view, covered by the criteria set out in the bill. Other examples should be confronted and resolved by placing greater emphasis on community and family support and resources.

This is a trend that has been under way for several years in the field of mental health, of which the members are already aware. Many patients who would previously have been admitted are now being looked after on an out-patient basis. Many of the issues raised are already being addressed, through our current programs and practices. For some years now, we have been treating the most acute cases as involuntary patients in our psychiatric hospitals. The emphasis has been on treating as many people as possible in the community. There has been a substantial growth both in the establishment of mental health units in public hospitals and in community mental health programs.

I firmly believe that many examples drawn to my attention as not covered by the criteria should be dealt with on an out-patient basis or as voluntary in-patients. Other examples can be dealt with through existing legal mechanism, such as the Mental Incompetency Act, which provides for a committee or guardian of the person being appointed by the court. I believe that as much as possible society must rely on alternatives, like community and family support, and use involuntary hospitalization only when warranted.

The bill further provides that when a physician completes the commitment certificate, the patient can be taken into a psychiatric facility for psychiatric assessment and can be detained there for a maximum of 72 hours. During that 72-hour period the individual must be either released, admitted informally, that is voluntarily, or admitted involuntarily. It is important to note that if a certificate of involuntary admission is to be issued, a physician other than the one who completed the application will have to conduct the assessment. When a certificate of involuntary admission is completed, the patient or his or her representative will have an immediate right of appeal to a regional review board. This proposal contrasts sharply with the provisions of the present Act, under which an individual can be held for up to 30 days on the certificate of one physician, with no right of appeal for that period.

With the larger number of people now working with psychiatric patients, the potential for improper disclosure becomes more critical and legislative action is needed. In a public hospital, for example, no distinction is made today between psychiatric patient records and others. The officer in charge of government psychiatric facilities has broad discretion in releasing information. The sensitive nature of psychiatric data demands that stringent controls govern its release. In any event, this legislation affects only public hospitals or government facilities. Many other facilities under the Mental Health Act lack guidance in this area entirely. This section of the bill will now remove this issue from the area of hospital administrative discretion and put it in primary legislation affecting the interests of psychiatric patients.

Along with these provisions, appropriate forms will be included in the regulations. These forms will set out the requirements for gaining access to records for research purposes, and for obtaining consent to the release of information.

[2:15]

Further, provisions have been included in the bill granting a court discretion to keep out of court any clinical records that could result in harm if disclosed. The great value of medical privilege lies in the inviolable nature of medical confidences, recognized by law and secure from controversy and interference. Legislative action now will bring recognition of such privilege.

Psychiatric units of public hospitals already have been asked to require requests for patient information to be in writing and to keep a log. The ministry also has issued directives, consistent with the spirit of this legislation, designed to reduce significantly the discretionary powers of our psychiatric facility administrators under the present Act.

Currently, individuals admitted to a psychiatric facility must be examined as quickly as possible to determine their competency to manage their estates. Where they are incompetent, a certificate of incompetence is issued to the public trustee, who assumes responsibility on behalf of the patient. However, many outpatients also need the help of the public trustee because of their incompetence but are unable to qualify. By extending the application of the certificate of incompetence to outpatients, the services of the public trustee now will be available to more people.

A notice of continuance now permits the public trustee to continue to act on the patient's behalf for three months after hospital discharge. Often this is not long enough, so a provision is included in the Act to allow the public trustee to maintain control over the estate of discharged persons by applying to the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Present legislation permits patients to ask a regional review board to inquire into their competence to manage their estates when a certificate of incompetence or a notice of continuance is issued. This provision has been retained. However, current legislation permits only yearly applications by the patient thereafter. This has been reduced to once in any six-month period.

I believe that the proposed amendments will serve well as interim reforms until the Health Council report provides the basis for a major overhaul of the Act. The field of mental health is a personal priority of mine, Mr. Speaker, and I intend to do all that I can to see that it receives the attention it deserves.

MULTILINGUAL TV STATION

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, in response to a question from the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith), I believe to the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch) on Friday, I would like to make my position clear regarding the establishment of a multilingual television station in the Toronto area.

When the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission held its hearings on this question, the government of Ontario supported the introduction of a multilingual TV station. The CRTC has approved the concept in principle and we strongly welcome this positive decision.

The idea of one television station broadcasting in several languages to a number of selected audiences is a unique idea in North America. As such, it is a new specialized television service which can play a role in maintaining cultural identity and the provision of information to third-language groups in the Toronto area.

There is one concern I do have about the licensing of a multilingual station. That question is whether it should be placed on the basic cable service or on the augmented channel service when it is delivered to the home by cable.

My concern has nothing to do with the introduction of a multilingual TV station in itself. I am concerned about the nature of the product that consumers in the Toronto area can expect when they want to purchase the basic cable service but not a converter.

In the past, Ontario has agreed with the CRTC policies that give priority to Canadian television channels on the basic service. Now, however, the establishment of any new television services in the Toronto area threatens to change dramatically the nature of the basic service.

Mr. Warner: Channel 2.

Mr. Lewis: Some loss!

Hon. Mr. Snow: If the new station is placed on the basic service, 28 of the 49 affected cable systems will be left with one clear American channel on the basic service.

I believe that the primary purpose of the basic service should be to deliver Canadian broadcasting signals. I think it is fair to say, however, that over the years most subscribers in Toronto have come to expect that they will receive some limited choice of American channels without having to buy a converter. This is particularly true of those with fixed and low incomes.

Mr. Warner: We want to make it more limited.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister was going to lose Wide World of Sports.

Mr. Warner: He wants to protect the Americans—the great defender of NBC.

Hon. Mr. Snow: If the CRTC continues with its present policies, I am concerned that the consumer in the Toronto area will be required to purchase a service which is radically different from the basic service available in Ottawa, Edmonton or Halifax, for example, where a selection of American stations is available.

In view of this situation, and since the multilingual TV station will be providing specialized service, I indicated to the CRTC that it should be placed on the augmented channel service, as should any new specialized service. The three applicants for the new station naturally indicated their preference for the basic cable service carriage, but stated they would be willing to accept carriage on the converter service.

As far as general impact is concerned, we have estimated that a rather small percentage of Toronto area cable subscribers will be watching the multilingual station at any one time, even in prime time. My conclusion is that the overall economic cost to cable subscribers of all language groups will be much higher if the new station goes on the basic as opposed to the augmented channel service.

Mr. Cassidy: A slap in the face to people in the city.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate that at the time of the hearing on this issue, I recommended to the CRTC that it conduct a policy review of the nature of the basic cable service. I feel even more strongly now that such a review is necessary.

POINT OF PRIVILEGE

Ms. Gigantes: On a point of personal privilege: It appears that the Toronto Star, according to today's paper, has access to a report which has been commissioned by the Ministry of Education—the report of the Jackson commission on declining enrolment in Ontario schools—to which members of this Legislature do not have access. As a member of this Legislature, I would like to let this government, and particularly the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), who is responsible both for the ministry and for the commission, know that I resent this access given to the media before it is given to the Legislature. I would ask, through you Mr. Speaker, if the minister would be kind enough to table that interim report of the Jackson commission in this House.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the hon. Minister of Education, I will bring it to his attention, and perhaps he will respond to it at the first opportunity.

TRUCKING LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Snow: In the Speech from the Throne, the Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Pauline McGibbon, announced that all ministries will undertake a thorough examination of statutes, regulations and related policies with a view to selective deregulation.

In respect to the highway transportation of goods, the Throne Speech specifically mentioned amendments to the Public Commercial Vehicles Act, which regulates the for-hire trucking industry. We have devoted some considerable attention to reviewing government policy in this area as a result of the comprehensive series of recommendations made to the government last year by the all-party select committee on the highway transportation of goods.

My purpose in reporting to you today, Mr. Speaker, is to outline in more detail the measures announced in the Speech from the Throne and at the same time to provide the House with a comprehensive government response to the final report of the select committee. I also want to outline the content of amendments to the Public Commercial Vehicles Act and the Public Vehicles Act which I am introducing later this afternoon.

When the interim report of the select committee was made public, I indicated it had endorsed the basic regulatory structure in Ontario. Today I want to stress that it is not the government's intention that the policy announced in the Speech from the Throne should jeopardize this structure. The reference to selective deregulation in the Speech from the Throne refers to certain specific areas of regulation, where a relaxation of the controls offers some very real benefits in terms of energy conservation, efficiency, services and user costs.

Specifically, the government proposes that this selective deregulation apply to for-hire transportation within the boundaries of an individual regional municipality and to certain specified commodities, many of which are of the sort which could conveniently be carried to fill empty backhauls.

Turning to the select committee report with its more than 300 recommendations, I am tabling with this statement a compendium which outlines the current status, and in most cases the government's response to each of the recommendations.

In reviewing the report, I have been guided by a number of the principles stated in the Speech from the Throne, including the need to stimulate the productivity of Ontario's economy, restrain government spending, simplify rules and regulations, and conserve energy.

The legislation I will introduce later today reflects the application of these principles to the report's recommendations, as well as the substantial advice and comments received since last summer. As suggested in the report, we are proposing amendments to both the PV and the PCV Acts to provide a means whereby government policy can be transmitted to the Ontario Highway Transport Board.

Those amendments will also contain substantially increased penalties for offences under the PCV Act, perhaps the most effective measure which can be taken where enforcement is concerned. Later in this session

I intend to introduce additional proposals relating specifically to the select committee's enforcement recommendation.

I have given serious consideration to the committee's recommendation that the ministry's licence issuing, investigation and enforcement functions should be transferred to the board. Here I have decided that these functions should remain with the ministry, which I believe will allow more efficient use of government forces and permit the board to concentrate on its judicial role.

Today's amendments will remove the north-of-North Bay restriction on existing licences and exempt the transportation of lumber and lumber products from the provisions of the PCV Act. The removal of the north-of-North Bay restriction, along with the deregulation of lumber and related products, will provide opportunities for new carriers to provide service to and from northern Ontario points. I am therefore asking the board to monitor the impact on the levels of competition and service in northern Ontario of these initiatives and to take them into consideration in reviewing any future applications by such "A" carriers for additional operating rights in this corridor.

My reference to selective deregulation applies to the exemption for lumber and related products. It will also apply to a proposed amendment which will extend the present exemption covering the direct transportation of farm and forest products to include all fresh fruit and vegetables. I hope this will improve export opportunities to the United States for Ontario growers and provide additional opportunities for backhaul as a means of combatting empty-truck movements.

An additional benefit will be the freer movement of US produce during those times of the year when the Ontario consumer has to rely on imported fruits and vegetables. The amendment will also simplify the task of PCV enforcement and assist in the success of reciprocal agreements with the American states.

The exemption from the Act of a list of farm and construction supplies is aimed at improving transportation efficiency and reducing energy consumption by decreasing the number of empty or partially empty backhauls returning to the rural and northern areas of Ontario.

In addition to the commodity exemptions outlined, the government's policy of selective deregulation includes the relaxation of controls over short-distance for-hire trucking which takes place in a single regional municipality. Regional boundaries have been selected to allow the operation over a reasonable geographic and economic area in those parts of the province where urban concentration and growth are conducive to increased competition.

This bill creates the authority for the ministry to issue a new class of operating licence for the transportation of goods within the boundaries of a specified regional municipality. Applicants will not be required to go before the OHTB to prove public necessity and convenience. An integral part of this system will be an authority for exempting from the PCV Act those specified regional municipalities which operate or propose to operate a licensing system for trucking services similar to those proposed in the bill.

Where a regional municipality opts to assume the licensing jurisdiction, complementary legislation will be required in the appropriate regional Act to create the necessary authority. I should note that the current situation in Metro Toronto will be unchanged by this proposal, which in fact is aimed at establishing a similar system in other regional municipalities.

Although this bill constitutes the first major legislation in response to the select committee's report, we have already taken steps to deal with other specific recommendations which are outlined in detail in the attached compendium. Two additional matters provided for in this legislation include the enfranchisement of certain unlicensed carriers and a uniform bill of lading, both recommendations of the select committee.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think today's presentation is a fair indication of the considerable amount of work that has gone into our review of the select committee's recommendations. It also clearly demonstrates the concerns about productivity and restraint in government intervention in the economy which were highlighted in the recent Speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Aren't you going to support it, Margaret? There are a lot of truckers in St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: I know. They were all here yesterday.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Minister of Health: Could the minister tell us whether he now has found out who it is in his ministry who gave out the information to the RCMP that we discussed in this Legislature, and exactly what punitive steps his ministry has taken with regard to the individuals involved?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We believe we have, Mr. Speaker. A hearing will be held under the Public Service Act and, depending upon the outcome of that, further action may be possible. But, certainly, any and all information will be turned over to the commission under Mr. Justice Krever.

Mr. S. Smith: Does the minister agree that there has been an apparent breach of the law; and also even a breach of the manual of practice, which was used in this House to excuse the other breaches of the law with regard to the so-called bare bones information? Why will he not, in fact, immediately turn over this information that he has in his possession to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) for his consideration?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am advised that in the circumstances we are wise to hold a hearing under the Public Service Act; and as I said, depending on the outcome of that hearing such further action is possible. I think we should wait until we have that completed.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Has the minister yet found out what happened to the two people who were investigated within the federal civil service? Does he intend to inquire what impact the OHIP information may have had on their job applications?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I haven't had an opportunity to do so. I intend to discuss it with my colleagues to determine what course we might follow.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us at approximately what level in the hierarchy were the individuals who gave out this information; and which of the more supervisory personnel were consulted about this, who knew about it? Did anyone give approval of this? Can he also tell us exactly when the incident occurred?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Each and every detail that we have uncovered to date and that we will uncover will be turned over to the commission headed by Mr. Justice Krever. In fact, today I spent a better part of an hour with the counsel to that commission discussing events that led up to the creation of the commission and the material that has come to light since, and indicated to Mr. Strosberg that he can be absolutely certain that we would be co-operative in every possible respect.

Mrs. Campbell: Could the minister tell us who advised him of the facts which he gave to this House, which apparently were in error? Has he examined that individual or those individuals as to how they came to give misleading information to the minister himself?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the hon. member knows, to a great extent we have relied on, or have been guided by, the assistance and co-operation of the RCMP in providing information from their side. From my side, I can tell you that representatives of the commission of inquiry are speaking with staff at all levels of the organization within the ministry and within OHIP. And yes, I have talked to the individuals who advised us, based on their own surveys of our staff. Certainly, I have my own concerns about this, but the commission may very well recommend certain actions within the organization of the ministry itself, and I am prepared to consider such things.

HYDRO RATES

Mr. S. Smith: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Energy: Is the minister aware, and does he agree with the comments of the former Minister of Energy—the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) who we certainly miss on this side of the House?

Mr. Foulds: Never know your luck until you lose, Jim.

Mr. S. Smith: Can this minister comment on those remarks of the former minister as quoted in the February 23 edition of the Intelligencer of Belleville, concerning rural Hydro rates—which I believe are 36 per cent higher than urban rates—when the former minister said: “The rural consumer has no voice”; “Large corporate consumers can negotiate—they have clout”; “It is the energy minister’s responsibility to protect rural consumers?” Does this minister agree with those comments and what is he going to do about it?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would you like an answer?

Mr. S. Smith: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am well aware, and also very much concerned, about the fact that rural Hydro rates are indeed larger than those of industrial users and other municipal users.

Mr. Bolan: What are you going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There is at the present time a study under way to see what can be done about this—

Mr. Kerrio: Not another study?

Mr. Peterson: We have enough studies in this government.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—and to see what kind of equalization can be brought about. When that report comes in and we have had a chance to look at it, I will report in full detail to his House.

An hon. member: The same old game.

Mr. Stong: We call it paralysis by analysis.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You people should know about paralysis.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary. Does the minister not recognize that the gap between the rural and urban rates gets larger with every increase in Hydro rates and that this discrepancy has now been on the books for some considerable period of time? Can he not take some remedial action while he is waiting for yet another of his famous studies to come before him? Why must the people suffer while he and the other ministers go about doing studies in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Bolan: How about another study for northern Ontario?

Mr. Bounsall: Equalize the costs.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: First of all, this is not yet another study of mine, this is my first one.

Mr. S. Smith: We can expect more?

Mr. Foulds: I thought Darlington was your first study.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Secondly, the Leader of the Opposition is not altogether correct when he says the gap is widening between the rates of all rural hydro users and the rates of other users.

Mr. Wildman: They are all going up.

Ms. Gigantes: It’s true.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There is a whole variety of differences. When we get our report we will bring it in here. In the meantime, we would like to assure rural hydro users that we are very much concerned and aware of the differentiation.

Interjections.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate to us when he expects to have the results of this study; and will it affect consumers of electricity throughout the province, whether or not they are rural consumers of Hydro, that is of some of the private utilities which are supplying electricity in rural parts of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are expecting a report this summer.

Mr. Eakins: Just in time for the cottagers. Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: At that time, as I said, I will be reporting back further. Also, in the meantime, as the members of this House know, through the restructuring of Hydro utilities more and more rural users are being included under the municipal rates. So there is some mitigation of the problem taking place right now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All of Bramalea is in now.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Since the minister apparently doesn't agree entirely with the former minister about the urgent need for reform in that area, does he agree with the statement that the former minister was quoted as making that in the Prince Edward-Lennox area: "We have been paying for a probably insecure, not entirely reliable electric utility for many years. We may have paid for that system by now?" Does the minister think he is correct in that statement?

Mr. Nixon: It sounds correct to me.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I do not know the answer to that question.

Mr. Foulds: That's the first admission of fallibility we have had from this minister.

An hon. member: It won't last that long.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the minister at this time has in his possession information indicating that the average spread between rural and urban municipalities is 34 per cent, doesn't he feel that this is a very disproportionate charge upon the rural people and therefore he should start doing something about it?

An hon. member: The Tories don't care about rural Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Again, I would not accept the fact that there is a 34 per cent differential across the board. That is not correct.

Ms. Gigantes: On the average; has the minister heard of an average?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am as much concerned as the members opposite are about this. It is one thing to recognize the problem. We cannot solve it quite as quickly as we can recognize it, but we are working on it.

Ms. Gigantes: That's what the minister said three years ago.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I wish the members opposite would exercise some patience and we'll come up with an answer.

Mr. Makarchuk: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter here from this ministry saying: "On the basis of this comparison, the spread between rural and municipal rates would therefore be about 34 per cent." What does he mean that he doesn't have the information?

Ms. Gigantes: He doesn't know what an average is.

Mr. Martel: Come on, Reuben.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As the hon. member, I'm sure, knows or should know, the Hydro rates vary very substantially from municipality to municipality.

Ms. Gigantes: Have you ever heard of an average?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Some are very high, and where they're very high, as for example in Nepean township—

Mr. Makarchuk: What are you doing sending out letters like this then?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —the rate between Nepean township and the rural users there is not 34 per cent.

Mr. Wildman: What's he talking about, Nepean?

Mr. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would take the opportunity, when this study is completed, and use it to introduce a new pricing structure for electric power in Ontario, possibly an inverted rate structure or something related to that—

Hon. Mr. Davis: You don't even know what the word means.

Ms. Campbell: Don't sell him short on energy.

Mr. S. Smith: He knows more than you—

Mr. Reed: —which would improve our conservation efforts in the province of Ontario and make this whole business of pricing electric power more fair? The Premier will pardon my stuttering, but it's the best I could do this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I will take the suggestion under advisement. In reply to the latter part of the question, if I heard it properly, I would like to remind the members opposite that the rates of Ontario Hydro are among the lowest in the whole western world.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's called socialist enterprise.

Mr. Breithaupt: They won't be for long.

An hon. member: A billion here and a billion there.

Mr. Bounsal: That's what comes from not having the right program.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No supplementaries?

Mr. Speaker: Would you like five or 10 minutes to complete your little private conversation? If not, I'll hear from the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

HOSPITAL CUTBACKS

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Health. Can the Minister of Health assure this House that the proposed restraint program for hospitals announced this week will not affect the quality of health care available to the residents of the province; and what information does the Minister of Health have on which to base any such assurance?

Hon. B. Stephenson: What a dumb question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Oh, I'm ready for this one.

An hon. member: When did you stop beating your wife?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think the experience of the last several years, during which time we have been living with restraint in the health care system—

Mrs. Campbell: Except your own ministry.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —that is to say lower rates of growth in spending than a number would otherwise have hoped for—and to answer the member for St. George, I should point out that over the last number of years the number of staff in the Ministry of Health itself has been reduced by 1,600—

Mrs. Campbell: I have your figures.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —so that the ministry itself has taken the lead—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That wasn't a part of the original question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You're right, Mr. Speaker; I'm sorry, you're right.

There is no question that with a four and a half per cent average increase in most of the hospitals, and a six per cent in the very small hospitals in rural and northern Ontario and to the chronic hospitals and related facilities such as crippled children's centres and so forth, there are going to have to be adjustments made. In some areas, that will mean reductions in some services, amalgamations of services with adjacent hospitals, perhaps the phasing out of some beds or perhaps converting them from active treatment care to chronic.

In addition, the hospitals are going to have to continue the trend of the last four or five years of getting into more programs that are not the usual, traditional, institutional kinds of programs where you assume that everything has to be done in a hospital bed in a ward—that is to say, to get more and more into such things as day surgery—

Mr. Deans: What will we use to fund that, pray tell?

Mr. Warner: Tell that to the Hospital for Sick Children.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and the less expensive forms of care. I think it's fair to say that the quality of health care in this province has not suffered in the last few years and is not going to suffer in the future.

Mr. Deans: Another good answer considering he was waiting for the question.

Mr. Foulds: Why don't you ask those who have died?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We must all of us turn every possible stone to ensure we are finding and following every possible way to make the best use of the available funds. Mr. Speaker, when you consider that my budget in the coming fiscal year will be just shy of $4,000 million, that surely is significant proof of the continuing commitment of my party and my government to quality health care.

(Applause)

Mr. Cassidy: That's somewhat feeble applause, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister is not prepared to put forward any specific information about the reduction in quality of care, or otherwise, can the minister indicate whether he's prepared to put his money where his mouth is and say what additional funds above the two per cent now available he is prepared to devote to the development of the community-based services which he indicates are the wave of the future?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Budgetary letters went out in the last week or so to the health units and to the administrators of home care programs indicating a six per cent increase in that area.

Mr. Foulds: That is a cutback.

Mr. McClellan: That was a three per cent cutback.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We are trying to also protect additional sums for expansion in such things as chronic home care and what has become the more traditional kind of home care, because that load, first of all, has been increasing and it is one that we want to see increase faster than perhaps other areas in the health care system.

Mr. McClellan: That doesn't even keep pace with inflation.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Members must recognize that they can't have it both ways.

An hon. member: Neither can you.

Mr. Warner: You can't have better health and cut back.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Members must recognize that in order to free sums of money to do these things, it means it has to come from areas of the budget that would otherwise go to the more traditional forms.

Mr. Swart: Like hospital and doctor care.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Most certainly this has nothing to do with how healthy you are. I suppose you have a yearly physical examination.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We are in a period in this province, and it is not peculiar to Ontario, where the health care system is very much in a state of transition as we change to meet differing needs of the future and as we live with the official realities of our time.

Mr. McClellan: From bad to worse.

Mr. Warner: You can't run this system and you know it. It's mismanagement.

Mrs. Campbell: Could the minister advise us, since he says that we can't have it both ways, is the government prepared to ensure that it doesn't get it both ways, by on the one hand cutting off meals-on-wheels programs and other support services while it cuts the hospital costs? Has the minister discussed the matter of these support services with Community and Social Services?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, let's, first of all, put this thing into its proper context. It is difficult to understand how an increase in spending on hospital programs, existing programs and additions and enrichments in the coming year, of $109 million can be referred to as a cutback.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is called inflation.

Mr. S. Smith: The government never keeps its spending within the inflation rate. How will hospitals do with so much less?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Secondly, all of these matters are discussed thoroughly at the social development committee of cabinet at full cabinet, so that yes, the implications of our actions and of our programs on our sister ministry in ComSoc, are very much on the table.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary Mr. Speaker: Since the funding for community services is predicted to rise at six per cent, which is less than the rock bottom increase projected in costs, how many hospital workers or health workers will be laid off in community services as a result of this program of restraint? How many hospital workers in general will be laid off because of the minister's program of restraint and what programs has the ministry got for retraining of those people who are laid off?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very premature to be talking about possibility of layoffs.

Mr. Samis: That's what Inco said.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, I would make an additional point, that for the first time ever we have given the hospitals two years' notice of financing—

Mr. Sweeney: It's completely irresponsible.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —the four and a half per cent average increase for 1978-79. I reiterate, for the first time ever we have indicated that for the following fiscal year they can expect a similar amount.

Members may argue with the amount, but the fact is that they do now, for the first time, have the ability to plan for two years. It is extremely premature. I think that the bulk of the transitions, the changes that will have to be brought in, can be accommodated through attrition.

Mr. Warner: Now tell us who's going to be sick for two years?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I hope that also can be kept to a minimum but I certainly don't discount the possibility of it. I think it is far too premature to be talking about specific numbers and throwing up scare headlines.

Mrs. Campbell: In view of the determination to deal with the matter on the basis of attrition, could the minister, since he has shown such equanimity for cutting of programs, advise what he is doing perhaps to deal with possible attrition in administrative staffs in hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not entirely sure of the point of the question. I hope that the hon. member is agreeing with the position I have taken, and that is that hospital boards and administrators, in looking at their organizations, once they have exhausted all the possibilities of amalgamations of services and the elimination of duplications perhaps with adjacent hospitals, will look at all aspects of their operations, administration on down, for any changes.

I have a note from the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), I don't know what it says.

An hon. member: Is it suggesting suicide?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: At this point, I would only repeat that it is far too premature to be talking about the numbers of layoffs. I think the bulk of this can be accommodated through attrition, but as I said I don't discount the possibility of some layoffs.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Will the minister agree that he has put his duties as hatchetman for the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) ahead of his responsibility for the health of the people of the province of Ontario?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Having sat on that side of the House at one time with that hon. member he never had that much respect for me in the first place, but when he comes out with that kind of nonsense, surely he doesn't expect me to respond to it. That is the most ridiculous thing he has ever said; and he has said some stupid things.

Mr. Cassidy: It is not nonsense; purely accurate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But you'll do worse, Michael. Don't let that disturb you.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre with his last question.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health is guilty of hyperbole, apart from everything else.

Mr. Peterson: The minister is wrong, that isn't the most stupid thing the member for Ottawa Centre has said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let's have a vote.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There have been several. It is hard to assess which is the one.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of order, the hon. member for London Centre is quite correct. That is not the most stupid thing the member—

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order.

HYDRO SALES TO U.S.

Mr. Cassidy: A question for the Minister of Energy: Can the minister confirm that Ontario Hydro contracted for approximately 1.5 millions tons of coal-equivalent in electrical power to be delivered to American utilities, and also diverted 25 carloads of coal a day from a non-union mine to a Cleveland utility; and can the minister explain why Hydro was profiting from the US coal miners' strike at the expense of striking workers down there?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Rather than accept the fact that this was some sort of undue exploitation on Ontario Hydro's part of our American brethren when they were in trouble this winter with a shortage of electric power, I felt this was a gesture of hands across the border.

(Applause).

Interjections.

Mr. Bounsall: It's called strikebreaking.

Mr. Foulds: International strikebreakers.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

We are 125 member in this Legislature. We are supposed to be setting an example for everybody in the province of Ontario. We have many students as guests in our galleries today. I am sure you wouldn't want them to be going back making a report to their respective schools, saying what a bunch of oafs we were in this Legislature. You have given them plenty of ammunition here this afternoon. I would just like you to reflect upon that for a moment.

Now if we could have some order, I will hear from the hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Lewis: You are not an oaf, Reuben, you are an unctuous fop.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister then say whether this is a further step in the privatization of Ontario Hydro that this great public corporation could act only in the interests of private enterprise in the US and not in the interests of workers as well?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: First of all, I think Ontario Hydro by doing what they did—and I fully endorse it—helped the workers of Ontario to remain employed.

Interjections.

Some hon. members: How?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: How? By not cutting down on our hydro.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: They were exporting their hydro to the one state that required it, namely Michigan. If by circumstance those happened to be private companies, what was so dreadfully wrong about that? The people of Michigan got the hydro they needed. They weren't in the cold and dark this winter, thanks to Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Foulds: They might have been if they had got the coal from those suppliers.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And they continued to work too.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the minister assure this House that Ontario Hydro will develop a policy in the future of refusing to participate in this kind of strike-breaking activity?

Some hon. members: No.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: No, I will not.

Mr. Cassidy: There are four million working people in this province. It's not good enough for the minister to turn his back on Ontario workers.

Mr. Martel: Why doesn't the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) go up and talk to them like that in Sault Ste. Marie?

Mr. Cassidy: Let him not try to pretend he is the friend of the workers any more. He has the Minister of Energy on his back.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: I can't make myself heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I'm not going to warn the House again. I will recess if I hear any further outburst.

PAPER MILL CONTROL ORDERS

Mr. Gaunt: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Have the pulp and paper mills of Domtar at Red Lake and Great Lakes Paper at Thunder Bay complied with the March 1 control orders dealing with the completion of the construction of domestic sewage treatment facilities in the case of Domtar and the installation of the Rapson-Reeves system in the case of Great Lakes Paper?

Mr. Peterson: He has got you on that one.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Excuse me, did the hon. member say have they?

Mr. Gaunt: Yes, have they.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I don't know the answer to the hon. member's question at this point but I will get it for him.

Mr. Gaunt: When the minister is checking into the matter, could he determine what the ministry is going to do if the companies haven't complied? Does the ministry intend to lay charges under those circumstances?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I will be glad to find that out also.

BENDING LAKE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Foulds: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Can he share with the House what initiatives his ministry and his government have taken with regard to the postponement of the development at Bending Lake near Atikokan?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's not just within my ministry, I'm sure the hon. member knows.

Mr. Foulds: That's why I asked about the initiatives of the government.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's a matter that has been discussed as recently as today, as a matter of fact. I can assure him that this government would have been delighted to see a project of that importance in that particular area of Ontario go forward.

We had been quite willing to provide certain infrastructure to assist the project, but even so the world market for iron ore is such right now that, as I understand it, there were no willing buyers for the product from that proposed mine. That, plus a very marginal operation, was the reason the company decided it couldn't go forward at the present time. We would very much like to have found ways of carrying on production at the two existing operations in Atikokan, but I don't know if there is any economic way those can be carried on past the present completion times.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: First, on a point of clarification, did the minister indicate that the Bending Lake development itself was a marginal operation or the present existing mines? Given the fact that there are approximately 600 workers in Atikokan who eventually face permanent layoff by approximately the end of 1979 should no new form of work be found for them and could he tell the House whether his government has taken steps to find on its initiative, through the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, possible markets for ore mined at Bending Lake?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not sure it is as simple as that. One of our problems is that currently there is a great slump in iron production in the world. It happens that Canadian sources, particularly Ontario sources of iron ore, have been amongst the higher-cost sources for a long time. There is a complex arrangement by which companies procure their reserves. They usually buy interests in mines in various parts of the world. Some of these are long-term commitments that couldn't easily be reneged upon and redirected, to a Canadian source in some cases or to an Ontario source in others.

[3:00]

We certainly are aware of the problem in that area. That's one of the reasons, I believe, the Ministry of Energy and Hydro are going ahead with the construction of an electric generating station in that area. I also understand the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) felt that the cottage program I talked about should get some degree of support in that area in the hope that we could provide some employment.

But the fact remains that those mines sooner or later, I am optimistic, will be needed. I am hoping there will be an increase in the demand for iron, steel and iron ore and therefore that we will have, maybe in another year or so I hope, some indication that the Bending Lake proposal and the Lake St. Joseph proposal will go forward.

Mr. Foulds: A final supplementary, if I might, because the minister referred in his original answer to infrastructure: Does this mean that the statement in the Speech from the Throne about the completion of the Ignace-Atikokan link will still go as proposed last December via Bending Lake in the hope that development will eventually take place? Can the minister see no possibility besides hope at this stage of speeding up that development?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think that should really be redirected to my colleague on my right, the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister wishes to answer, he may.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, as stated in the Speech from the Throne, it is the government's intention to proceed with the Atikokan-to-Ignace highway; we are working on the engineering on that project now. I doubt whether the project will proceed with as high a priority, as far as number of contracts per year, as if the mine project were going ahead. But we do expect to continue with the construction.

CROWN LAND SALES

Mr. Hennessy: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Natural Resources. On the Crown land issue, would the minister clarify if there is any limit on the amount of land to be leased by a non-Canadian?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the three-step sale or leasing system mentioned in my comments today would have been heard by the members of the House. If we create a subdivision, in the first year of its registration only Ontario residents will be eligible to purchase land. In the second year, residents from other provinces will be eligible to purchase land, and past the second year foreigners may lease land. So you have actually, on any given subdivision—

Ms. Gigantes: The answer is no.

An hon. member: Maybe.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —a full two years, as we have had in the past, before anybody other than a Canadian could have the option. To give you an example, out of about 2,200 lots created in the past five years, only 85 have been leased by non-Canadians.

Interjections.

Mr. Hennessy: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister if it would be possible to get more clarification. It was just mentioned today in the House and it is very difficult for me, being a resident of north-western Ontario where this is going to take place, I would appreciate it if perhaps the members of this House could receive more information so we would know what direction we are going.

Ms. Gigantes: You didn't let him know, eh?

Mr. Bolan: Come on over.

Mr. Nixon: You should never have gone with the Tories, Mickey.

Mr. Stong: They won't tell you anything.

An hon. member: They just got a policy act together, Mickey. You can't expect them to have the details.

Hon. F. S. Miller: And it isn't even the ides of March.

Unless I misunderstood the quotation attributed to the hon. member in the paper in Thunder Bay this week, I have done exactly what he said. He said Ontario and Canadian residents should have a priority and should be protected before any non-residents could have a chance.

Ms. Gigantes: For one year—12 months—24 months.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have done just that. I read the Thunder Bay paper.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Minister, I wonder if you might share with us what you are considering in terms of length of lease for the non-residents?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will have to check this back but it strikes me that the terms of lease in the past have been 30 years, plus 10 plus 10.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Has it not been a problem of too few lots becoming available for lease that has reduced the amount of employment that the minister anticipates, and could he indicate to the House how many lots were offered for lease since the lease policy started and not taken up by the public?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Just by coincidence, 2,261 lots have been offered. I would agree it is not enough, but we still have an inventory of 195 lots not taken up by anybody in spite of the 2,261 being a relatively low figure.

Mr. Lewis: So why do you have to sell?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It would be one of our objectives to increase the number. In fact, my staff tell me they have had a number of subdivisions on the drawing board which for one reason or another have not been proceeded with. A number of these were because the Ministry of the Environment had certain qualifications on a lease basis. We will be reviewing these qualifications with the Ministry of the Environment and with other ministries in the next two or three weeks.

Mr. Martel: Then why do you have to sell?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Fort William with a further supplementary.

Mr. Hennessy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Natural Resources mentioned that he had to read the Thunder Bay paper to learn what I said. I would like to advise the minister I had to read the Globe and Mail to find out what he was going to do.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that if the hon. minister will check Hansard, that was not a question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I know, Mr. Speaker; I'm up on a point of order or privilege. I say to my friend, does he necessarily believe that?

Mr. Foulds: The minister had to read the Globe and Mail to find out what he said himself.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister could tell us two things: First of all, what becomes of existing leases with regard to the new purchase policy; and, secondly, what provisions will there be with regard to the resale of these lots to other than Canadians?

Hon. F. S. Miller: In my announcement today, I dealt with only one aspect—and I ask my friend to let me only answer that aspect today—that was the ownership—

Mr. Deans: Why does the minister dribble this out day by day? Why can't he give us the whole program?

Mr. Wildman: He still hasn't developed a policy.

Mr. McClellan: Drool it out all at once.

Mr. Speaker: The question has already been asked.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I thought the issue deserved a prompt answer, in terms of ownership, because of my comments to the press the other day. Therefore, I promptly—

Mr. Deans: You shouldn't have made the comments in the first place.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, can you not keep this gentleman in order?

Mr. Martel: The cabinet couldn't keep the minister in order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There has been a concentration, in a nuclear sense, of a sound critical mass in the front row of the third party recently.

Mr. Speaker: That has nothing to do with the question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It has a lot to do with the interference.

Those matters are being considered, Mr. Speaker. In my statement today, I said that within three to four weeks the full details of the administration of the program would be answered.

PSI MIND DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Health with respect to the Psi mind-benders, to use his words: Given the minister's statement of last Saturday that the province has no intention of outlawing the mind-benders, what action does he intend to take to protect the health of the people of Ontario, in view of his own statements of concern, those of George Matheson of the Clinical Hypnosis Society, and those of Dr. Powell of London Psychiatric Hospital?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the hon. member's raising this question. Having been the one who gave those remarks last Saturday and similar remarks a few weeks ago to the Psychology Association, and having in fact indicated to the Globe and Mail reporter present that copies were available—and presumably he picked up a copy—it is beyond my comprehension how someone sitting in the Globe and Mail office could write that headline.

In fact, I did not say—and the member's colleague from St. George was present—that a decision had been made not to try to bring them under control. Quite the opposite. What I have been saying in connection with the recent proposal of the Psychology Association, whatever one might think of that particular proposal—and there are many who have doubts and concerns about it—one of the goals which I support is to try to frame in legislation some means of bringing under control those quacks, those charlatans who for financial gain abuse the minds of innocent people.

Mr. Bolan: You mean the Tories.

Mr. Warner: Sounds like Steve Roman.

Mr. Sweeney: I am delighted to hear that.

Supplementary: Can the minister verify that the recent OPP report, although not being able to make the case with respect to fraud, did raise other issues of serious concern and ask for further investigation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can confirm for the hon. member that there are a number of concerns, some of which arose out of that particular investigation, others from other sources that are under active consideration by a number of ministries.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: I would ask the minister, in view of the status of this matter at the moment, if he will now seriously consider looking at the current legislation with reference to the use of hypnosis as it may relate to Psi—something that he has not been prepared to do in the past. Would he do it now?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That has been done, Mr. Speaker, within our ministry. We've looked at the possibility of prosecution under the Hypnosis Act, which is a very old statute, as you know, and under which no prosecution has ever been carried out, to my knowledge. That forms part of the overall consideration involving a number of the ministries which I referred to a few minutes ago.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Ms. Gigantes: My question is to the Minister of Education. Is the minister aware that the Metro school board is in the process of reallocating funds from the $1 million he gave during the election for the protection of special education programs, and that the reallocation will mean the loss of special education teachers within the Metro system?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I haven't been informed of that by the Metro school board. I'm sure my friend agrees that school boards in this province have a high degree of autonomy and they know that they get, in effect, what is practically a block grant except for certain cases—French and special education—and must exercise that autonomy in the interest of the people who live in their jurisdiction. I certainly would regret it if the city of Toronto is again finding it difficult with its special education. We have allotted much more money for special education this year than we did last year, in the form of a weighting factor, and I would hope that—

Mrs. Campbell: In Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Wells: —Metro school board would accept this responsibility and would indeed improve their programs, as we expect all boards in this province to do.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Would the minister provide us with an accounting for this $1 million which would reveal what long-run benefits, if any, have been achieved for Metro children in need of special educational help? Will he, at the same time, indicate how his ministry intends to account for the money, the $20 million that it looks like the new legislative grants will allocate for new special education programs in 1978?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Of course, we'll have a chance to talk about this at great length in our estimates which will be beginning soon.

Ms. Gigantes: You'd better look after the $1 million now.

Hon. Mr. Wells: But, of course, we expect boards, in order to qualify for the extra money—as my friend knows—to have the program in place. They must have a certain number of teachers and a certain number of programs.

Ms. Gigantes: What's happening in Metro then?

Hon. Mr. Wells: If they have those programs in place they qualify and generate the extra money. We keep a constant monitoring on this information and, thus, we know what programs they have in effect.

Ms. Gigantes: What's happening in Metro right now?

GROUP HOMES

Mr. McCaffrey: My question is for the Minister of Community and Social Services and it deals with an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail recently. The heading of the article was, "Union will use fear campaign to stop change-over to group homes." In particular, the Ontario Public Service Employees Union and their spokesman, a Mr. Slee, were expressing concern that closing of institutions might jeopardize some of their jobs—I think, a legitimate concern. But what prompted my question is his reference to their tactics, and a specific quote of Mr. Slee's: "The union is clearly going to undertake—

Mr. Cassidy: Speech, speech.

Ms. Gigantes: Question?

Mr. McCaffrey: —to disrupt, within the community, any attempt to move"—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. McCaffrey: —"patients in need to a group home." Since this flies in the face of the government's program, would the minister comment on that?

[3:15]

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, initially there I thought that perhaps it was the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy) who was coming at me from the other side.

Mr. Kerrio: No, he has gone into hiding.

Mr. Eakins: He is under the shower.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I must say first of all that I am not certain of the accuracy of the statements that were attributed to the representative of OPSEU in that report. In have had no formal communication from OPSEU or from the individual quoted to support those kinds of statements.

However, if in fact that is an accurate rendition of the statement, I must say I am just shocked at the apparent lack of responsibility on the part of an individual who has a responsible role to play in our community.

I don't have an indication that his statements in fact reflect the views of the government employees for whom he purports to speak. If I recall correctly, I do know that in the one particular case he made reference to—namely Oakville—the views he expressed are not the views of the employees of this government working in the Oakville Centre. In fact there have been some efforts on the part of the employees there to dissociate themselves from the statements of this gentleman.

It has been my experience that the employees of this government involved in the programs with the mentally retarded and with the children of this province, see their responsibility in a much broader role than is reflected in the statements of Mr. Slee—if these are, as I say, accurate renditions of his statements. I just refuse to believe our employees would support that kind of irresponsibility.

Mr. McClellan: May I ask the minister, by way of a supplementary, since I share his views—and he knows it—whether he would think it wise to arrange a meeting with OPSEU officials to discuss this matter before it goes any further? Secondly, would he think the fear campaign in Oakville is being waged by OPSEU or by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow)?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: We know who is waging it all right.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is the unkindest cut of all.

Mr. Foulds: Largely because it is true.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is certainly not true.

Mr. Foulds: He has certainly aided and abetted it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would be prepared to meet with Mr. Slee and any other officials from OPSEU at any time. If one looks at the sequence of events relating to the Oakville Centre it would appear that the escalation of concern, or fear if you wish, that was generated in that community—

Mr. McClellan: By the minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—began with a press conference that had been called by one, Mr. Slee. I would point out also that to the best of my information Mr. Slee has at no time set foot in the Oakville Reception and Assessment Centre either before or since these events. I don't know on what he bases his information.

He made, again, some very irresponsible statements there in reference to the clientele group who might be in the reception centre, totally ill-informed and erroneous statements that did create fear in the community. The Minister of Transportation and Communications I am sure is not associated with those kinds of views and would feel as I and repudiate them.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the matter under discussion is related at least in part to the cabinet decision to close certain institutions associated with the Ministry of Correctional Services, would the minister not join with Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) and have the matter referred to the standing committee on social development so that these matters may be brought before the members of the Legislature, and those people directly concerned, either as employees of the ministry or in the communities concerned, might express their views?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the answer simply is no. I will at all times be open to input from members of this Legislature and members of the communities that might be affected.

I have taken steps to assure communities across this province that might at some point be affected by the policy, that we will make every effort to consult with them in advance and, in fact, also make arrangements for alternative uses of such facilities, as might be closed, to assist employees in either relocation or alternative training for continuation in the total program for children in this province. But I would be very reluctant at this point to consider any proposal that might either delay or impair what I think is an essential move that we should make in the interests of children in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Why not use it to inform the community?

Hon. Mr. Norton: And I could foresee the kinds of proposals that the members have made here as being something which could delay for many months our being able to move ahead with what I think is a forward step.

URANIUM DRILLING

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, last week the Premier (Mr. Davis) was asked a question by one or two members concerning the drilling for uranium in Lake Wanapitei and it was my understanding that I was to answer that question.

The Ministry of Natural Resources had in the beginning stated that it would permit drilling on Lake Wanapitei and it discussed the matter with cabinet. We are still of that opinion. However, up to this point we have not issued a work permit for the drilling on Lake Wanapitei because of the fact that there was a good deal of discussion going on.

I believe the hon. member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel)—who was one of the people posing the question—and I had agreed that the drilling per se was not the risk but the development of any potential mine which could possibly affect the quality of the drinking water supply for the city of Sudbury. This is one thing which our ministry and he shares in common; we want to protect that water supply.

As few as five or six holes were planned by the one company intending to do the exploration activity. An injunction was obtained, as I am sure the member knows, against the drilling, in any event. The proceedings related to the injunction were heard in Osgoode Hall, I believe, on February 24. The judge hearing the matter decided that in fact a trial should be held and he continued the injunction until such time as that hearing was held. This will be in the early part of the spring and precludes any drilling taking place in the balance of this winter.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Given the fact that the Sudbury region has responsibility for drinking water under your legislation and the fact that over 10,000 people, without any type of real advertising program undertaken, petitioned the government to alter its position with respect to drinking water being tampered with by drilling, would the government not reconsider now—particularly in view of the fact that it has backed off in Elliot Lake—the drilling for uranium in the source of our only drinking water supply, that being Lake Wanapitei?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the statement that we have backed off in Elliot Lake is correct, either. I don't think a work permit has been issued there. But on the other hand, there has been no statement by our ministry to any people in that area that we would or would not permit the drilling. I can only assure you that if drilling in that lake was carried out, under the 12 or 13 requirements of the Ministry of the Environment and their monitoring, it would not do what apparently some of the members of the public have been led to believe it would do, and that is to release large quantities of radioactive matter into the lake.

There are some people who have apparently been led to believe that radon gas is something like a natural gas, or that there would be large quantities of radioactive material freed up in the process. That, I am sure the members know, is not so. There are radioactive sediments in the lake now; there have been for many years, simply because the rock in that area contains a small amount of uranium.

There have been many people who say that drilling would be fruitless; that may be the case. The fact remains that the people who were exploring for uranium were willing to take that gamble and, in our opinion, would not in any way through the drilling process be risking the quality of the water. Based upon their assays they would require some kind of environmental impact study or assessment if they found any viable amounts of ore. That's the point at which the protection acts would be taken to ensure that the water supply would be protected. If adequate protection could not be guaranteed, no mine would be permitted.

Mr. Germa: To what purpose would the drilling be allowed when there is evidence already recorded that, even if an ore body is found, it is technically impossible to develop that ore body outside of the watershed and consequently the ore body could not go ahead at any point, even if it is found?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think the hon. member has jumped to a couple of conclusions. I think people who say they—

Mr. Martel: Not according to the engineers we've talked to.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Right. The fact is that exploration in any part of this country is very much like a poker game.

Mr. Martel: Yes, but don't play poker with our drinking water.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One drills in the belief one might find an ore. If it were a definite science, then in fact this type of exploration would not be needed.

Mr. Wildman: What happens if you want to protect the water supply?

Hon. F. S. Miller: However, I'm sure those people willing to risk their money have assumed that—

Mr. Martel: We're not willing to risk our drinking water.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —if ores were found, they would have to comply with our requirements.

TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION FUND

Mr. Van Horne: I have a question for the Minister of Education: In view of his answers on Tuesday of this week concerning the government makeup of payments for the teachers' superannuation fund, would the minister agree that he and the members of the standing committee on social development should meet, along with the members of the superannuation commission, to consider the operation and administration of this fund as soon as possible?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think I indicated in this House that I'm willing to do it any time and in fact I have been attempting to facilitate this meeting. I wrote a letter to the former chairman of the committee. Of course, he may not be chairman this year; there may be a new chairman for this sitting. But certainly any time that the members wish, the superannuation commission would be very pleased to appear and discuss the whole thing fully with the members of the committee.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: Would the minister agree that this should happen before the new estimates are discussed for the fiscal year 1978-79?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I certainly would have no objection to that, but I think the hon. member should discuss that with his House leader and it should then be discussed by the House leaders—

Mr. Foulds: It already has.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —because as I understand it, the matter of scheduling estimates is a very delicate and organized matter. If this is going to be done, it's fine with me.

The only thing I draw the member's attention to is that the members of the superannuation commission come in from all over the province and we have to give them adequate notice and time to get down here for the meeting.

ASSESSMENT APPEAL SERVICES

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Revenue, if I may have his attention.

An hon. member: Lorne. Are you awake?

Mr. Makarchuk: Pie in the sky.

Mr. Cassidy: This is your debut.

Mr. Swart: Is the Minister of Revenue aware that private property assessment companies have been formed—I. I. Nash Associates Limited, A. B. Gray, and Vercan Associates Limited, to name three—which are promoting assessment appeal services to major industrial and commercial corporations on the basis of splitting the taxes saved in the first year if they are successful, and that the same people are acting as both agents and witnesses in the same appeal hearing?

Does the minister not consider this practice somewhat improper, in view of the fact that accountants, lawyers and appraisers prevent similar practices in their professions and when, in fact, it means that large corporations are being successful in getting reductions where the ordinary property owner cannot?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that situation. We have looked into it. Obviously there's nothing really illegal about it. It's done by other—

Mr. Wildman: It's unethical, though.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, it is unethical as far as I'm concerned, but it isn't illegal.

Mr. McClellan: That makes it all right then.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The only time it would be illegal would be if the legal profession, who are representing these people, were taking a percentage, but they are not. It's my understanding that the legal people who go through the claims situation are being paid on a per diem basis, which is quite within the legal profession's code of ethics. We have investigated it but while I don't really approve of it, I can't find anything that's illegal about it.

[3:30]

RE TABLING OF REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding the hon. Minister of Education has a response to the point of privilege raised by the member for Carleton East.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand the member for Carleton East was claiming that the report of the Jackson commission on declining enrolments had been made public in some way and in some other place than in this Legislature.

I would like to point out to members of this House that the interim report of the Jackson commission which was to be ready February 28 has not been received by me at this point in time. Therefore, the allusion in the Toronto Star that I had received it on Tuesday is incorrect. As far as I know there are no copies of the Jackson report ready yet at all, so it is probably very unlikely that the Star or any other newspaper has any copies of it either.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MENTAL HEALTH AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Timbrell moved first reading of Bill 13, An Act to amend the Mental Health Act.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 14, An Act to amend the Public Vehicles Act.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC COMMERCIAL VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 15, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before calling the orders of the day, may I take this opportunity in keeping with the provisional rules to indicate the order of business for next week.

On Monday afternoon next, we will complete the Throne Speech debate with a vote on the various motions to be held at 5:50 p.m.

On Tuesday afternoon, we will take into consideration second reading of Bill 10 and then go into committee, if there is any committee work to be done on Bill 10. This would be followed by the commencement of the consideration of Bill 59 in committee of the whole House. Tuesday evening, of course, is the budget. Wednesday is committee day and there is no meeting in the House.

Thursday afternoon, we will take into consideration private members' bills 2 and 3, standing on the order paper in the names as indicated there. Thursday evening, we will go back to legislation and I assume carry on with consideration of Bill 59 in committee of the whole, as will be the case on Friday morning.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

NOTICE OF MOTION No. 1

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution No. 1:

Resolution: That in accordance with the agreement announced on Thursday, December 15, 1977, the ballot taken for private members' business at that session will extend to the present session subject to the following: A supplementary ballot will be taken for those who did not or could not take advantage of that first ballot. The order determined by that additional ballot will be added to the order indicated by the previous ballot.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on the Speech from the Throne later on today and therefore would not speak to the motion now, but I want to reserve the right to talk about it.

Resolution concurred in.

NOTICE OF MOTION No. 2

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution No. 2.

(Reading dispensed with)

(See Votes and Proceedings)

Resolution concurred in.

NOTICE OF MOTION No. 3

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution No. 3.

(Reading dispensed with)

(See Votes and Proceedings)

Resolution concurred in.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(continued)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Cooke: On Tuesday evening when the debate was adjourned I was just beginning to talk about some of the problems in my city in the auto industry. Since it is a very important topic for the Windsor area I would like to continue on that.

I should point out that since January of this year, there have been 7,000 employees laid off at Chrysler Canada in Windsor for a total of four weeks—temporary layoffs, but nonetheless they are layoffs and the prospects for further temporary layoffs are very likely. As I pointed out on Tuesday evening, the rate of unemployment in Windsor is 11.4 per cent, and therefore I think it is very incumbent upon this government to take a look at Windsor and cities like it which are based on one industry and try to diversify.

If I may offer a suggestion for my particular area, I should point out that Windsor is surrounded by two lakes and the Detroit River. We should have a very thriving tourism industry, but at present the tourism industry is not what it should be in Windsor.

In the middle of my riding there is a provincial park called Peach Island, which the provincial government bought, I think back in 1973, for approximately half a million dollars. They then developed a plan for that provincial park at a cost of about $50,000. The plan that was developed has never been approved by the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) and there has been absolutely no development to this park at all. At present the only access to this park is for those people who live in Windsor and those Americans who have boats. Therefore, the great majority of the people in Ontario who have paid for this island and paid for the plan to be developed can't use that island. I think that is a very unfair situation.

I have written to the Minister of Natural Resources on several occasions and his response is that due to the restraint program they just can't do anything about it. I would like to point out that the plan is there. All it requires is some amendments and at least we could get a plan for Peach Island to have a provincial park in my area developed and we could start to develop it. The cost would not be a tremendous amount.

I would like to talk briefly about the auto pact as that also affects jobs in my area to a great extent. In the Throne Speech the government said it was going to continue to pressure the federal government for changes in the auto pact and a renegotiation of the auto pact. I really don't have too much faith in that promise because I have been hearing about it for quite a few years now. The fact is that there is a $3 billion deficit in the production of auto parts and an overall deficit of $1.1 billion. That represents approximately 15,000 to 20,000 jobs that we should have here in Canada.

If the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) used some of the energy he uses in this House occasionally in yelling at the opposition—he gets quite upset at times—and directed it at the federal government, I would think the federal government possibly would understand Ontario's position and that we in this Legislature demand immediately the renegotiation of that auto pact to make sure that the 15,000 jobs we have owing to us are developed here in Ontario. I hope the government will take a much more aggressive stand on the renegotiation of the auto pact.

With regard to youth unemployment, the fact is that youth unemployment in Ontario remains extremely high even though the provincial government brought in a program last year which really amounted to summer jobs. That was their answer to youth unemployment last year. The fact is that youth unemployment is still extremely high. And now all they plan on doing is throwing some more money into the same type of program. It is still going to be an extremely dangerous issue for this government and I would suggest that unless the government takes very concrete steps to attack the youth unemployment problem, this province and this country are going to see some very serious things happen over the next few years.

Just as important as youth unemployment is youth underemployment. Of course, that refers to the many teachers, nurses and so forth that we have trained in this province for whom there are absolutely no jobs. I don't see the government, and in particular the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott), taking any concrete action to make sure that we are not overproducing more teachers and more nurses and having to export some of the nurses to the United States. We in Ontario pay for the cost of educating these professionals, and what's the result? We have to export them to Texas and other places in the United States that are demanding nurses. I think that's the wrong approach.

What we can look for, if the government doesn't attack youth unemployment very seriously, is increased crime and, maybe in the future, civil disobedience, because I just don't think our youth are going to stand for this.

The government is going to be bringing in a package addressing the problem of alcohol abuse. If they were serious about addressing this problem, they would look at some of the social problems that cause alcohol abuse among our youth; and one of them is the unemployment problem. Unless they're willing to really look at the source of the problem, raising the drinking age by one year or eliminating lifestyle advertising is not going to have any dramatic effect.

In the Throne Speech the government also addressed itself to developing an education system that would encourage skilled trades. I want to make one suggestion in that area: With declining enrolment at the secondary school level, we have the facilities and the teachers available in this province. I hope the government won't build new facilities. I also hope they won't completely restrict this type of program to the college level because we have the facilities at the secondary school level. If we could somehow convince this government and boards of education across this province to be a little bit more flexible and to look at alternative forms of education rather than the regular classroom structure that we have now, these types of programs could be offered in the regular classroom setting. I hope the government will consider that type of thing.

One area of the Throne Speech that quite pleased me was that at least the speech addressed itself to and mentioned the problem of job satisfaction. Now that we are looking at occupational health—a bill will be brought in and I hope there will be amendments made to make it very satisfactory to the workers of this province—the next problem that the Legislature has to address is job satisfaction and stress in the work place. There are more days lost in the work place as a result of stress and psychological problems than there are because of strikes or even injuries in the work place. I was pleased the government recognized that as a problem, and I certainly will be looking forward to seeing a committee report back to this Legislature with some concrete recommendation.

[3:45]

I did want to mention one other thing. The Throne Speech also mentioned that there will be increased money for school boards for children with learning disabilities. I don't think we know the full extent of what the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) is proposing, but from what I have been able to gather so far from boards of education in my area the grant regulations as announced really do not encourage boards of education to provide this type of education.

What it amounts to is that the minister is putting the responsibility for educating these children on the boards of education, as he probably should, but he's not providing the amount of money that is necessary. If the minister is really serious about providing education for these students, what he should be doing is offering 100 per cent funding for programs for these students. That's the only way that boards of education are going to be able to provide those programs.

Mill rates have increased to such an extent—in my area in Windsor over the last three years the mill rate has gone up 30 per cent—that boards of education are just not going to be willing to raise the mill rate any further to create new programs. They just can't because ratepayers are paying too much already of that regressive tax, property tax. I encourage the Minister of Education and I encourage the government to look at this problem much more actively and much more sincerely and come up with a realistic solution to the problem.

My colleague from Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) mentioned the other night about the hypocrisy in the Throne Speech when it talks about strengthening the family. I had to mention it because I read that and I laughed because it sounds very good in the Throne Speech. I understand one of the Conservative members has introduced a private member's bill to create a new holiday called family day. That too is a joke.

If this government was serious about strengthening the family, it would be looking at expanding day care. In my city we don't even have infant day care while here they are with a green paper from the children's division talking about expanding day care to cover up to, I believe, age 13. To heck with expanding it. Let's talk about providing for and about the freeze that they have put on new daycare centres. Just 215 new places in the province amounts to a freeze.

The home care program the government announced back when the election was on is another area where, if they were really serious about strengthening the family and in particular the extended family, they would have provided a very adequate home care program. In the long run, it would save this government money because we wouldn't have to expand nursing homes and we wouldn't have to expand chronic care hospitals to the extent that we are going to have to in the future. The government has to address itself to the problems that will be facing the people of Ontario as more and more of our people retire and grow old because that time is coming when a larger percentage of our population will fall into the retirement age bracket. We have to start providing adequate programs and services for those people.

On single parent families, I would suspect that other members of the Legislature are facing the same problem that I am. The increased number of complaints I have had in my constituency office of people being refused welfare is just unbelievable. In Windsor last year, in 1977, there was something like a 300 per cent increase in the number of appeals in front of the social assistance review board. I won't get into the social assistance review board because, as far as I am concerned, it's a very unfair system that is used and needs to be improved very very much. People need to have either lawyers with them to protect their rights—

Mr. B. Newman: Kangaroo courts.

Mr. Cooke: —or we shouldn't have to have members of the Legislature going with them. There should be a provision built into that system to protect the people who go in front of that social assistance review board because the odds on winning a case right now—

Mr. Wildman: Every third family in Blind River is on welfare.

Mr. Cooke: —are stacked against them right from the beginning. If this government was serious about strengthening single-parent families, they would be looking at an adequate guaranteed annual income. They wouldn't be just increasing it when they feel it's politically advantageous for them to increase welfare payments.

In any case, I would expect that we will get into those types of things in great depth when the recommendations from the green paper from the children's services division come before this Legislature. I look forward to that because my initial impression of the green paper is that I am not overly impressed with it at all. There are some very good recommendations, but I really don't think that the government is willing to do what is necessary, that is, exert its authority over Children's Aid Societies and some of the other agencies in this province that the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) is responsible for.

He takes that authority when he wants to. A good example of that is when the anti-inflation program came in. All of a sudden, Children's Aid Societies were public agencies and they came under the anti-inflation program. But when it comes to putting into effect other policies on their group homes, all of a sudden, when I talked to the minister about that, the Children's Aid Societies are private agencies and there is nothing we can do about it. So when it is politically popular the government calls them public agencies, and when it doesn't want to exert the control then all of a sudden they are private agencies.

There are two other items that I would like to touch upon, and I will be very brief. In my area, in Essex county, when the French-language secondary school was being discussed it was quite an issue. I would just like to point out to this Legislature that since my election I have discussed with many people in Essex county as well as in Windsor, my riding, the French language and the French-language secondary school.

First of all, I am very pleased to inform any members of the Legislature who don't know, that the tenders for that particular school are going to be let very soon and it would appear that that school will be built. Construction will start this spring.

Secondly, I would like to point out that the biggest complaint that the people have in my area, and I think all across Ontario, isn't that they want to stop French-language secondary schools, they want equal access to French language for their students. Even if they are English families they want equal opportunity for their kids to learn a second language, and I don't think the government is moving quickly enough in that area at all.

In our area recently an English family, a Protestant family, went before the Windsor Board of Education and wanted permission to send a child to a separate school in order for the child to get a French immersion course at the elementary level. The Windsor board refused them that; it would not pay the tuition on their behalf. Therefore, there is not equal opportunity in this province for English children to learn French as a second language, and I think we have to move in that direction. If the government would move more quickly a lot of the hostility that has been expressed across this province would be lessened. I hope the Minister of Education and the government will move much more quickly in that area than they have in the past.

The final thing I want to talk about is the resource equalization rights from the Treasurer to cities. As I think most members of the Legislature know, that is a very important issue in Windsor, in Sarnia, and in other ridings across this province. We in Windsor are presently being penalized because our assessments are up to date and we are not getting our share of the resource equalization grants. In 1978, we are losing $8.5 million; that amounts to 10 per cent extra for the ordinary ratepayer on the property tax.

Just as important, we must consider the effects it is having on new industry coming into Windsor. Any corporation, any industry that is looking at us is going to look at the property taxes that it is going to pay. We know that in Windsor we are paying higher taxes than most other cities in the province because the provincial Treasurer refuses to make the system fair. With an unemployment rate of 11.4 per cent in Windsor, it is about time that the provincial Treasurer did something to make the system fair.

I understand that there are problems with bringing in the tax reforms and bringing in market value assessment, but I would suggest that if he doesn't want to do that, if he honestly believes in a fair tax system and making grants fair, then we should get a transitional grant. That transitional grant should be made immediately and should be part of the 1978-79 estimates. I know the provincial Treasurer has refused that up to this point, but in the interests of fairness I hope he will reconsider. I hope that his colleagues in caucus will persuade him that it is in their best interests and in this province's best interests.

As I said the other night, although the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) has suggested at one point that we shut down Windsor, and I believe the Minister of Education at one point suggested, probably jokingly, that we could raise the American flag over Essex county—

Mr. B. Newman: But you didn't say that, did you?

Mr. Cooke: I would suggest that Essex county is part of this province and we intend to stay part of this province. We don't elect any Tories and I think that—

Mr. Cunningham: That's to your credit.

Mr. Cooke: —demonstrates the intelligence of our voters. But I would suggest that if they want to treat all parts of Ontario fairly they should extend a grant to Windsor, to Sarnia and other cities that are not getting these resource equalization grants. This would lower our property tax and encourage industry to move into cities like Windsor where unemployment is much higher than the provincial average.

Mr. Speaker, I have appreciated being able to express some of my views and express some of the concerns of the people in my riding, and I thank the Legislature for listening.

Mr. Handleman: It's remarkable—here we are in the second session of the 31st Parliament, and I have my first opportunity to congratulate Mr. Speaker on the assumption of his office. While he is represented in the chair by his alter ego, the Deputy Speaker, whom I also congratulate on the assumption of his office, I know that somewhere in these hallowed halls he is listening to my words with great eagerness and interest.

Mr. Wildman: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Handleman: Somewhere the message will get through, because I do want to comment on some of the remarks that were made here today. We had an example, I think, of the kind of atmosphere in this chamber that we sometimes pride ourselves in. We say this is the most unruly Legislature in the Commonwealth—or even of the western world when we're really being magnanimous.

Mr. Nixon: Some people say it with pride.

Mr. Handleman: Quite frankly, it is sometimes with pride that we say this. I sympathize with you, Mr. Speaker, in your efforts to try to achieve that balance between decorum, which you would like to see the school children of the province observe, and the parliamentary tradition of interjection, heckling and barracking. I hope that we will never cease to have the latter. The type of interjections which come from one side of the House are not always as bright as they might be, pertinent, or intelligent. But Hansard seems to miss the brilliant interjections that come from this side of the House on occasion and I really do wish—

Mr. Cunningham: Always nice to know you are here.

Mr. Handleman: —that we could get those on the record and not be stopped from making them. I noticed today, sir, after you stood on your feet and warned us, that this place became a pallid imitation of a parliament. It was so quiet you could hear a pin drop. Even the Minister of Natural Resources commented on the artificially quiet atmosphere which resulted.

I just want to say that I think some of the types of behaviour that we indulge in are really in order and that they should not be too severely curtailed. At the same time, I recognize the need to maintain some kind of order. I recall when I was in another capacity—I don't know that I was being provocative—but because of a certain amount of interjection that was coming from members of the House you did recess for 10 minutes. When we resumed I stood on my feet and said, "In conclusion, Mr. Speaker." I felt the recess was somewhat premature because I was ready to wind up.

You have another role besides presiding over this chamber and that is as the guardian of the members' rights. In that capacity I have appealed to you on a couple of occasions for some assistance. In the last session of this parliament, I believe it was, I raised a point of order and it stemmed from certain actions of a committee of which I was a member, and since the committees have not been restructured, I don't know whether I will be a member of it again.

But I want to refer to that point of order, because I do feel that when the committees are struck it should be pointed out to them quite clearly that they are creatures of this Legislature. Their terms of reference restrict their activities. Committees are not free to determine their own courses of action, except within their terms of reference as granted by this Legislature. When they exceed those terms of reference they infringe on the rights of the individual members.

Today a resolution was brought before the House—a government motion. It was passed and carried. That makes it the rule of the House, and I accept that. I do feel, however, that the agreement that was made by the House leaders without the sanction of the members of this Legislature was not in order. It did require this kind of a motion today to carry on the ballot order as determined in the last session. Because the rule is quite clear: "There shall be a ballot in each session." When that session ended without there being a resolution of this Legislature to extend the ballot, it ceased to exist. We have carried on as though it continued, without any order. The motion today, which was carried, does validate it; and I don't argue with it.

[4:00]

Mr. Nixon: It tacks former cabinet ministers on at the end of the line.

Mr. Handleman: I just want to question that rationale, which I understood was agreed to by the caucuses, because there were some members of this Legislature who chose not to participate in the ballot in the last session, for whatever reason; they may have had very good reasons. There were five members of this Legislature who were not able to participate in the ballot. I must say that I do object to being put in the same category—because I was unable to participate—as those who failed to participate.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, but there were certain compensations.

Mr. Handleman: The compensations, of course, are long gone—

Mr. Nixon: Well, if you are a spend-thrift!

Mr. Handleman: The compensation exchange, I suggest—and I did put this to our House leader—should have been that those five members should precede in the ballot order those who did not take advantage of their opportunity to participate in the last session.

Mr. Nixon: A new type of precedent.

Mr. Handleman: The member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) categorizes this kind of argument as nitpicking. I wonder if he has ever talked to his friend Stanley Knowles, who does this kind of thing on almost a daily basis in Ottawa—and I think rightly so, Mr. Speaker, because you are the protector of the lowest of us all; that is, the private member.

Mr. Wildman: Don't say Stanley Knowles is the lowest of us all.

Mr. Handleman: I am saying we—the backbenchers, the private members—have to have the protection of the Speaker. Our privileges are quite precious to us and should not be infringed.

You also have another capacity, Mr. Speaker, and that is chairman of the Board of Internal Economy. I want to appeal to you in that capacity to help continue the intern program which has been introduced in this Legislature. I understand that some members of the private sector may be withdrawing their support, and there will be a request put to the board to continue the program.

For the first time in my new capacity I have had the advantage of using the services of one of the interns, and I think these bright young people should be encouraged to learn something about the operation of this Legislature. I think it is important for us to know there are people of that intelligence going out of the Legislature to tell people that we do do a good job once in a while and that we do work hard, because we need all of that kind of help that we can get.

Mr. Breithaupt: You're sure that's what they are saying?

Mr. Cunningham: Sounds like we need more interns.

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, it has been customary in speeches during the Throne Speech debate to comment on one's riding. I recall my maiden speech—which seems so long ago that it is back in the dark ages—

Mr. Nixon: Tell us about Andy Haydon.

Mr. Handleman: —in which I did go over the hills and valleys of Carleton and mentioned the great attractions of my riding; and I received a congratulatory note from the then Leader of the Opposition after he had heckled me through half my speech. I want to review briefly the history of Carleton again because it is one of the seven ridings in this province which have an unbroken history since Confederation.

In the glow of Confederation in 1867 the people of Carleton, for some reason which has never been understood by anyone, elected a Liberal for four years. They then started to elect members of my party—and since 1871 they have continuously returned a member of this party to the Legislature. There was one slight aberration in 1919: A member of the UFO was elected and immediately appointed to cabinet; therefore, he became the first Carleton cabinet minister, and he was promptly defeated in the next election.

Mr. Breithaupt: Your riding is so Tory they even voted for George Drew.

Mr. Foulds: That should have been a lesson to you, Sid.

Mr. Handleman: Since then we had an unbroken string of distinguished representatives, starting with the legendary Holly Acres—and I know some of the members of this House remember him. One of my predecessors with whom I had the privilege of sitting in the House was the recently retired Don Morrow. I met Mr. Morrow yesterday in the hall and told him I would be going through this review again. I wished him well as he left for Florida. He is in very good health, I want members of the House to know.

Mr. Nixon: His pension cheques are arriving regularly?

Mr. Handleman: My immediate predecessor, who is known to some of the members opposite and to some of the members here, was Erskine Johnston. He has not been well recently, but I want hon. members to know that he is holding his own. I see him from time to time, and I know that all hon. members would ask me to bring him their best wishes.

Mr. Nixon: One of the finest members ever to come from eastern Ontario—and a good farmer.

Mr. Handleman: Absolutely.

Since 1971, Mr. Speaker, I have been through three elections against six different opponents. In the sports world they generally give you permanent possession after you have gone through that kind of exercise. I don't expect that kind of privilege here.

Mr. Foulds: I should hope not.

Mr. Handleman: I would like, at this time, to pay tribute to my most recent Liberal opponent, Eileen Consiglion, who passed away a couple of weeks ago. She was a woman who had a very difficult task in trying to win a riding such as mine, and I think she carried off her task with wit, great humour, great fortitude and patience. She was a very worthy opponent indeed and the people of Carleton mourn her loss at this particular time.

It is also customary to touch on a couple of local problems. I want to speak about the school accommodation problem in the Ottawa-Carleton area, because at the present time it's probably the most urgent situation facing the people of my constituency.

Mr. Nixon: The matter of French-language schools?

Mr. Handleman: We have a classic situation. Carleton, for a variety of reasons, is not losing school population. It's one of the few areas in this province where the school population is rising and rising rapidly. At the same time the city of Ottawa with a separate school board—I mean separate and distinct school board—has a declining school population and a number of schools which are only partially occupied. The answer would seem simple; the solution is, of course, for the city of Ottawa to take its excess school space and allow the board of education in Carleton to use it for the growing population in Carleton.

It makes so much sense that this was proposed when I was a school trustee back in 1968; even before that, when we were forming the Carleton board, and the Ottawa Board of Education was in existence at that time. The chairman, a Mr. Ken Boucher, agreed entirely with the rationale of that solution. And it seemed so easy. His board overturned his recommendation, and here we are in 1978, still facing the same problem, except that it is becoming more critical every day. At the present time the Carleton Board of Education has 2,200 students—2,200 students—attending the schools of other boards. The parents of those students have absolutely no democratic rights in determining the course of their children's education. The trustees they vote for—

Ms. Gigantes: That has been going on for years.

Mr. Handleman: —have no say in the administration of the schools they attend.

Ms. Gigantes: What has your government done about it?

Mr. Handleman: The Minister of Education, who came to Ottawa, met with the trustees—

Ms. Gigantes: Nothing. Absolutely nothing.

Mr. Handleman: —and the most surprising thing is that here is a problem of 10 years standing and the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) says: "What has your government done about it?"

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, for 10 years.

Mr. Handleman. There are two boards of education, locally elected, presumably made up of intelligent people. They are not little rural school boards with primitive, unsophisticated systems. They know what the problems are.

Ms. Gigantes: Financing is such that you can't work it out.

Mr. Handleman: You would think that boards of that nature would be able to come to a decision on the basis of sound common sense. And I think the minister was quite right to go to Ottawa and say to them, "For goodness sakes, you have this problem. Solve it."

Ms. Gigantes: You also have to give them some money.

Mr. Handleman: What the member for Carleton East would like us to do of course, is to pass legislation in this Legislature compelling a board to do something that they should be doing on their own. I don't believe that that has to be done.

Ms. Gigantes: You have to give them some money to build. They have had $300,000 since 1975; that's it.

Mr. Handleman: The province can go ahead and give Carleton $25 million to build schools when there are empty school spaces in the city of Ottawa? That doesn't make sense. It can't make sense.

Ms. Gigantes: Your solution doesn't either.

Mr. Handleman: And I don't suggest for one minute that the minister do that. There are a number of immediate problems and the minister—

Ms. Gigantes: Are you going to give them the money or not?

Mr. Handleman: —granted them the money to meet the most urgent need, and that is for the junior vocational school.

Ms. Gigantes: Aha, finally.

Mr. Handleman: There are a number of other schools that are required. However, I would not propose that this government encourage the overbuilding of schools when there are empty school spaces.

Ms. Gigantes: Who said that?

Mr. Handleman: There are a number of solutions. He has asked the board to consider the possibility of those solutions. I myself have asked my constituents to comment on them. They are four-fold. But at the moment the boards are deliberating on the solutions which the minister proposed; and they are not all as hysterical as some of the press reports would indicate.

I have before me a letter from the chairman of the Carleton Board of Education, addressed to the Minister of Education and referring to that meeting. I would just like to read one short paragraph: "Monday's meeting provided a forum for a very frank and open exchange of views. Indeed, the honesty was almost overpowering at times. I think we all need to reflect on just what transpired and bring it all into focus in the interests of the students and the communities affected."

Now, that in my view, Mr. Speaker, is a reasonable response to the minister's proposals.

Ms. Gigantes: It's been reasonable for years. That board has been reasonable for years.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Handleman: No question about it. The Carleton board has been reasonable for years.

Ms. Gigantes: Just what has the minister done in response?

Mr. Handleman: But there is no point in the Minister of Education taking over the administration of the Ottawa Board of Education.

Ms. Gigantes: Nobody suggested that. There are a number of solutions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Handleman: Well, there are a number of solutions which can be adopted.

Mr. Ruston: Name them.

Mr. Handleman: I would say that the options are well known to both boards, and I feel that as intelligent people they will come to a decision.

Ms. Gigantes: It involves money from the ministry, and you know it.

Mr. Handleman: I don't understand why it is that money seems to be the solution to all problems in that party. "Spend lots of money and all your problems will go." All problems eventually resolve themselves in terms of money.

Ms. Gigantes: Are you going to have to build new schools or not?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Carleton has the floor, not the member for Carleton East.

Mr. Ruston: Name her.

Mr. Handleman: We don't have to build two secondary schools below the green belt. There are schools outside the green belt that will have to be built, and the minister agreed to that. There was no question about it. The priorities have to be established by the Carleton Board of Education and nobody else. Those priorities have been established. The requests are in. The capital funding will be made very shortly. However, long-term solutions still have to be found and, in many cases, it may require changes in school boundaries, changes in attendance boundaries, which can be done in this Legislature. The minister is fully aware of the various options which are open to him.

There is one other point I'd like to dwell on of a local nature before I go on to some of the other things that have happened here. It is something which may be a completely local matter, that is, the debenture on the Queensway, which is a matter of some concern to those of us who are outside the city of Ottawa. When the Queensway was first constructed in the city of Ottawa, the then mayor, Charlotte Whitton—

Mr. Wildman: A good Tory.

Mr. Handleman:—floated a debenture—no problem there—which paid for the Queensway. Then the province, as it usually does with progressive moves, took over the complete maintenance of the Queensway, the policing of the Queensway and the ownership of the Queensway. However, that debenture was transferred from the city of Ottawa to the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, which meant that instead of the people of Ottawa paying for the debenture on the Queensway within the city limits, all of the people in the regional municipality are paying for it. I think that's fair enough because we all use it.

However, in other parts of the province, the government has taken over the debt on what they consider to be provincial highways. There's no question at all that the Queensway forms part of Highway 417, part of the provincial network. I understand the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) is looking with some sympathy on taking over that debenture which will relieve the people of the entire region of a fair financial burden. I look forward to an announcement on it as quickly as possible. I have no inside knowledge as to when that may be or if it will be.

I sat here on February 22 to listen to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) respond to the Speech from the Throne. I didn't sit here, I must say, as I don't want to mislead the House. I went out into the lounge and listened to it on the loudspeaker. I felt something like Mark Twain when he first heard the music of Stravinsky. His comment was "It can't be as bad as it sounds." So I came back in to listen to it. I waited here for a motion to be made by the Leader of the Opposition because he really was passionately angry with the government. There was no question about it, the indignation was so obvious. He rejected the government's proposals and programs.

Normally, since I have been here, that has been followed by a motion of some kind moving an amendment to the Speech from the Throne. I went back and looked through Hansard from 1971, since I've been here, and I found that is in fact the case. Only on one occasion, November, 1975, the then leader of the New Democratic Party, who was Leader of the Opposition, did not move an amendment but gave notice of the fact that he would do so at a later opportunity. In this case, the Leader of the Opposition did not move an amendment to the Speech from the Throne.

I listened to him again in the emergency debate on February 28, in which he said that the people of the province would some day have an opportunity to review these measures of the government. I said, "How soon?" I don't know whether Hansard caught the interjection. The member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) said: "Sh! Don't challenge him."

It seems to me that when he is talking in terms of important decisions of this government and is criticizing them with passion, anger and indignation, that he should use the opportunity he has as Leader of the Opposition to move an amendment and put his future where his mouth is. There are worse things than an election. Nobody wants one, everybody agrees to that.

Mr. Nixon: Then what are you talking about? We had one less than a year ago. Surely this is a place where we can put forth alternatives.

Mr. Handleman: Exactly. All I'm saying is that a motion would have made this House vote.

Mr. Nixon: Talk about an irresponsible comment. It is shocking to all of the members of the House who are here.

Mr. Ruston: All the other two Conservatives who are here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: There is no more than a quorum.

Mr. Ruston: It should be noted that there are three Conservatives in the House.

Mr. Handleman: I didn't think I was being provocative. If the former member for High Park were here he might draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a certain problem we are facing at this moment, which I am not doing.

Mr. Nixon: We have our share of the quorum.

[4:15]

Mr. Handleman: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to borrow a favourite phrase of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Gaunt: Oh, oh, one more story.

Mr. Handleman: He uses it quite frequently in his speeches. He says, "If I were Premier"; and of course the chances of my doing it are just as great as his chances, maybe even better.

Mr. Gaunt: I don't think so.

Mr. Handleman: He keeps saying, "If I were Premier, this is what I would do."

Mr. Cunningham: You can say, "When I was a minister."

Mr. Nixon: It is all downhill from now on.

Mr. Handleman: If I were Premier, I would ask this House for a vote of confidence on the uranium contracts.

Mr. Cunningham: You wouldn't get it.

Mr. Handleman: I might not get it. The member is absolutely right, I might not get it, but I would ask for it because I do feel, unlike C. D. Howe, $6 billion or $7 billion is a significant amount of money, and I think the Leader of the Opposition makes Howe look like a piker when he doesn't think the $6 billion to $7 billion expenditure is worth bringing in a motion for an amendment or some kind of motion to challenge the government on it.

Mr. Nixon: Why didn't you bring forward a no-confidence motion? It's clear a majority of the House thinks you are making a mistake.

Mr. Handleman: All I am suggesting is that if I were Premier, I would do that. I am not and that will be up to the Premier to do.

Mr. Ruston: He never will do it.

Mr. Handleman: That's right. As I say, I borrowed the phrase from somebody else who never will either.

Mr. Gaunt: Obviously your pocketbook is affecting your judgement.

Mr. Handleman: There was another part of the speech which I listened to very carefully and that was the comments that the Leader of the Opposition had on minority language rights, because—

Mr. Nixon: We know your views.

Mr. Handleman: Yes, you do, and I'm going to give them to you. I'm going to give you my views.

Mr. Nixon: You're an embarrassment to your party.

Mr. Handleman: I am going to give you my views because this has been a major issue in Ottawa-Carleton ever since Lester Pearson introduced the Official Languages Act. I want to say that if the Official Languages Act was introduced in the House of Commons today it would again receive the unanimous support of all parties, as it did when it was first presented.

There are no problems whatsoever with the principles in the Act. What happened was, when you pass legislation you suddenly find yourself in that very difficult position of having to implement it, and it was the regulations and the administration of the Act that gave rise to an ugly backlash, the kind of backlash that nobody in this House wants to see.

Ms. Gigantes: It was the public service language training program, nothing else.

Mr. Handleman: Having seen the ugliness of the reaction of some of the people—there was a backlash and there has been one—I would like to again put on the record the position that I put to the Alliance for Bilingualism in Ottawa on December 2, 1976; and I would like to make sure that this appears on the record exactly as I put it to that organization, which is a very admirable organization designed to promote the acceptance of the bilingual program of the federal government.

What I said to it then was this, and I quote: "As an elected representative from this area, I receive my share of complaints about shoving French down people's throats. As a school trustee and school board chairman I was often attacked as one of the people doing the shoving. The fears are often irrational and sometimes they are downright silly, but they are real fears nonetheless. We must try to eliminate the fears but we will ignore them at our peril.

"What I have learned in my political life is that confrontation does not resolve these fears. It magnifies them and makes justice harder to achieve. It creates backlash. For those who believe in the principles reflected in the Official Languages Act, as do all recognized political parties, there are two courses of action we must pursue simultaneously.

"First, we must implement practical measures to provide more services to French-speaking people in their own language where it is necessary, where it is practical and where it is affordable; and secondly, we must work to create a new majority in Ontario which actively supports the principles of the Official Languages Act."

That is only part of the problem, of course, and that is services to francophones in their own language. The government's policy is to provide services in French where needed, where practical and where affordable without reference to any minimum percentage of the population, and that was part of the problem in the implementation of the Official Languages Act. As soon as you set up a formula, you immediately create problems.

Ms. Gigantes: It was the language training program that was the problem.

Mr. Handleman: We in Ontario are limited only by the cost and our concern that progress must give the community time to adjust. This is a policy of patience rather than sudden successes. We do not have to dramatize the steps that we take. I hope the great majority of Ontarians are willing to accept this policy, provided steady progress continues. The only thing we have to fear is extremism from either side of the problem.

Services to Franco-Ontarians is only part of the question. I was pleased the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) referred to French instruction to English-speaking people—the teaching of French as a second language—because he related a situation where there was a problem in Windsor. I want you to know, Mr. Speaker, that in my part of Carleton in any case we have been teaching French from kindergarten for the past 15 years. We have had French immersion for the past eight years. It is a matter of a board of education being willing to do that kind of thing.

Mr. Cooke: It's a matter of funding.

Ms. Gigantes: Why doesn't the province provide that kind of funding?

Mr. Handleman: I don't believe the provincial government should come in and mandate that to any board.

Ms. Gigantes: What about the funding from the federal government?

Mr. Handleman: It was done long before the federal government program ever came into effect. When I was a trustee the federal government didn't even know we existed. We implemented French immediately in a three-room school in a rural area in old Orange Carleton, and we did it willingly. There was no problem whatsoever. That is the way it should be done, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cooke: There has to be adequate funding.

Mr. Handleman: Again, when I was speaking to the Alliance for Bilingualism, I put that point to them too. I want to read that portion of the speech that I gave that day:

"I continue to believe that most parents would rather have bilingual than unilingual children. I continue to believe that most citizens would prefer a province which is fair and just to its French-speaking members. We must reach out to these people, the people that support the program, for support and understanding. In the end our success will be determined, not by the boldness of our plans or the justice of our cause, but rather by the number of the ordinary people of Ontario who are willing to follow the program."

There has been a great deal of talk about my position and other members' positions on the French-language program. I wanted to be sure that that was on the record because I feel that my position has been distorted from time to time, probably without full knowledge of the position that I have taken.

I also read the speech of the new leader of the New Democratic Party. It is too bad he is not here because I would like to have congratulated him on achieving his ambition. I would like to congratulate his party too, but I don't think I can do that. I feel sorry for them but that's it.

Interjections.

Mr. Davidson: Don't worry about us We can look after ourselves.

Mr. Handleman: He achieved his ambition. I would congratulate the Liberals and the Conservatives on his having achieved his ambition.

I said two days after the convention to a member of the NDP that I felt the convention had reflected the almost unconscious acceptance of the NDP that they will never form a government in this province, and that they felt that they should have somebody—

Ms. Gigantes: So little you understand, Sydney; so little you understand.

Mr. Handleman:—who could use his fair share of the debating time in the Legislature as their leader, rather than one who would give the kind of what I thought was impassioned leadership that I heard from the member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) the other day in the special debate, which I thought was one of the best presentations of any member who spoke on that matter.

For six and a half years now I have had the privilege of being on a sort of three-way program—with the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), and myself—commonly known as the Mike, Sid and Albert show. We have done the tour of the media. The night of the election in 1977 we appeared on a local program agreeing to disagree about the great benefits of minority government.

Mr. Breithaupt: These aren't the Marx brothers or anything?

Mr. Handleman: No. The member for Ottawa Centre talked about sharing responsibility. I have seen little evidence of that in this Legislature. There has been a great deal of criticism of decisions taken here, but no sharing of the responsibility for them.

Mr. Mackenzie: Who is the government? We are not going to do your job.

Mr. Handleman: I quite agree with you. I don't think there should be a sharing of responsibility.

Ms. Gigantes: We tried to tell you what to do on uranium. You won't listen. Don't ask a question you don't want an answer to.

Mr. Handleman: Because if you want to have a share of responsibility, it is quite easy to achieve. It is quite easy to achieve a majority government. All you need is a coalition and you'll have a majority.

Mr. Mackenzie: You have already got that with the Liberals and Tories.

Mr. Handleman: There is no reason for the opposition to share it. What I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the member for Ottawa Centre talked about how it would be great to share in the responsibility of government and that that would make this type of government work.

Some of the things I heard during the convention and read in his speech reminded me of a crib sheet that is being sold to political science freshmen on a campus not far from here. I would like to just tell you what this crib sheet says. It reads thus: "When answering any question on NDP policy, one of the following is always the correct answer: (a) expropriation; (b) confiscation; (c) legislation; (d) nationalization." There is an asterisk after (d) and it says, "If you're stuck for an answer, nationalization will be correct 75 per cent of the time."

Most of those students who follow that crib sheet are going to pass, because that is obviously the correct answer every time the NDP comes up against a problem—

Ms. Gigantes: You live on blather.

Mr. Handleman: —it's: "We're going to buy Inco. We're going to buy Falconbridge. We're going to buy Steve Roman. We're going to buy everything." Every time we have a problem it's: "Let's take it over."

Mr. Davison: We'll buy anything; but what are you selling, Sydney?

Mr. Mackenzie: You have got an even simpler approach; government freebies for the corporate sector.

Mr. Handleman: The hon. member who was with me on that committee may remember a line from a document which was presented to us in evidence and on which he relied greatly. It said something like this: "Passing a law cannot make economic sense out of economic nonsense." It was a very good line. It was one which the members of that party ignored because there were other lines in it that they preferred. Unfortunately, there seems to be, at all levels of government, a philosophy of "when in doubt legislate."

I must say that the Speech from the Throne was pleasant to me because it does de-emphasize government action in favour of allowing individuals to make more of their own decisions. We need more and more individual decision-making in our society and less and less of this collective government imposition of rules and regulations.

Mr. Mackenzie: Like the decision Inco would make, Sydney?

Mr. Handleman: If we could keep on that kind of a path for a few years—

Ms. Gigantes: Floating along, floating down the drain.

Mr. Handleman: —Orwell's dire prediction for 1984 might remain only entertaining fiction. I hope, of course, that will happen.

Mr. Davison: You are not going to be anything until 1984?

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, if I may be somewhat personal for a moment, because my position in this Legislature has changed. One of the most amazing things about resigning from cabinet is the rumour and speculation that seems to abound—not only here but everywhere, particularly in the Ottawa area—about my plans for the future and what my reasons were. The former House leader of the Liberals came up with an amazing concoction on a moment's notice.

Mr. Davidson: Why don't you run federally and lose?

Mr. Breithaupt: I hear you are going to the Senate.

Mr. Handleman: It never entered my mind. But I've collected some of these rumours and I'd like to put some of them forward and comment very briefly on them.

Mr. Ruston: But you're interested.

Mr. Mackenzie: They haven't told you what you are going to get, Sydney. Maybe somebody else wants the job that you want.

Mr. Handleman: The first rumour—and unfortunately the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) is not here—was from a member who was very adamant that this was absolutely true. The rumour was that I would seek the federal Conservative nomination of Ottawa West. That's not true, Mr. Speaker. It's not true. I'm sorry that the member's not here.

Mr. B. Newman: Ottawa East instead.

Mr. Handleman: Then Ottawa Centre came up.

Mr. Davidson: They don't want you.

Mr. Handleman: All I can say is that it's not true. In fact, it's not true of any federal constituency. I will not be participating in the federal election.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is not a good year for them.

Mr. Handleman: However, those rumours came to the ears of some people in the federal government and they started some other rumours about my being offered a major federal appointment. I'm still trying to trace that one down, to find out if there's any validity to that at all because I haven't been offered anything.

A rumour was started a few weeks ago because the reeve of Nepean township, with whom I've been on the very best of terms over the past few years, is running for the Progressive Conservative nomination of Ottawa West. The rumour immediately started that I would run for reeve of Nepean township.

Mr. Davidson: Doesn't that say something to you?

Mr. Handleman: I have totalled up the salary attached to that position, counting regional government, executive committee, Hydro commission, police commission.

Mr. Breithaupt: What's holding you back?

Mr. Handleman: I tell you, Mr. Speaker, it's a very attractive option and I'm keeping my option open on that one.

Mr. B. Newman: Press, please note.

Mr. Handleman: Absolutely. There is also a rumour, because of a statement which was made, that I would be a shoo-in for the chairman of regional council for Ottawa Carleton. I'll have to wait and see what happens in the municipal election, because the flavour of that regional council at the present time—

Mr. Mackenzie: Heaven help Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Handleman: —I'm afraid, does not represent my philosophy. However, I may have enough friends to do it. Again, we'll wait and see what happens about that one.

There is also a rumour that I will be running again in Carleton, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mackenzie: Sounds more like you are bargaining, Syd.

Mr. Handleman: I want to say to you that at the moment that is probably the most likely of all. I hope to run again, I hope to win again; I hope to be back in this Legislature to talk to you all again. And maybe I'll be seeing you two or three years from now. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cunningham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Normally it is the custom to involve one's self in discussions of one's local riding in the Throne Speech debate; I would like to make a departure in that regard, and possibly a radical departure, insofar as I'm going to talk about the Throne Speech itself.

The Throne Speech last week came as somewhat of a surprise to me. I see it moves for selective de-regulation in the trucking industry and the rationale that such a selective de-regulation would go a long way in removing the inequities that exist within regulated transportation in the province of Ontario itself.

[4:30]

I am sure you are no doubt aware, although you weren't here as a member at the time, that the Ontario Legislature, at the direction of course of the government, directed that a select committee be struck to examine the entire nature of highway transportation of goods within the province of Ontario, recognizing the number of difficulties that have gone on since regulation was implemented in the year 1934. At that time it was recognized that there was a great deal of excess competition. There were a number of bankruptcies; certainly a great deal of instability in the transportation industry, largely due to the economic dislocation that was going on in the 1930s and to a tremendous amount of over-competition.

In 1934, the transportation system was regulated through the Ontario Municipal Board. It remained within the jurisdiction of the Ontario Municipal Board until the Transport Board was established.

The rationale for the establishment of the select committee that I refer to, came I suppose during debate on a rather infamous piece of legislation, Bill 4, which unfortunately carried in the House but was never proclaimed and has since become obsolete. It carried with the blessing, I suppose, of the NDP at the time, who I guess very sincerely hoped that it would add some regularity and some rationale to regulated transportation.

Fortunately, our party voted against it with the view that it was a somewhat arbitrary piece of legislation that would have put a tremendous number of small business people out of business overnight, and at the same time would have caused a great deal of dislocation to the manufacturing sector that they served, the sector that relied on them.

It was a rather extensive and heated debate at the time and I recall I suggested we establish a select committee to look at, not only that particular issue, the issue of leasing and gypsy truckers and unregulated transportation, but also all facets of transportation. The select committee in fact was formed and announced on May 25, 1976.

My House leader at the time, the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt), called me at my constituency office and indicated to me that the government had seen the wisdom in the suggestion we had put and felt that it was time to take a look at this whole issue in a rather non-partisan sense. To that end I can suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the select committee did just that. We set aside our partisan feelings and directed ourselves to the rather arduous and complicated task of examining regulated transportation.

As directed, we tabled an interim report, which I believe was tabled in November or December of 1976; and in that interim report we indicated some of the basic principles to which we adhered. On no occasion were there any dissents to the reports. They were on time and they were unanimous. They were unanimous, Mr. Speaker, in the adoption of the principle of regulated transportation.

Most specifically, I think in our final report, which was ironically tabled just several hours before the call of the last election on April 29, 1977, we indicated the necessity to retain the principles of regulation. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, just for the benefit of the House, because I don't believe we have debated this particular report, and it is not my intent to do so today, but I would like to record the fact that we said the following:

"Fundamental to the recommendations of the committee is the assumption of continued provincial control over commercial vehicles on provincial highways; that transportation as a development tool has the ability to assist in the bringing of equity to people, communities, to producers and to our society in general; that it is in the public interest to ensure that Ontario has: (a) The ability to move goods; (b) the flexibility to expand, contract or shift that ability in recognition of changing market conditions; (c) the flexibility to move goods to assist in the achievement of objectives outside the transport system; and (d) the ability to control the movement of goods so it will be: (1) safe, (2) energy efficient, (3) equitable in its availability, (4) regular and stable, and (5) affordable. It is the desire of this committee to establish objectives together with policies designed to achieve these objectives."

Of course to accomplish those particular and rather worthy goals can only be done in the context of a regulated system of transportation. In fact, appreciating the importance of that, the Minister of Transportation and Communication (Mr. Snow) said on the occasion of April 6, the second reading of Bill 4 which I previously referred to: "I think that this is one of those industries—" the trucking industry—"which would be in complete chaos without regulation." That I think, in a nutshell, indicates probably the concern the minister at least had at the time for the principle of regulation.

It is with, I suppose, some concern that I view some of the suggestions in the Speech from the Throne. As of today, with regard to some of the suggestions made and the legislation tabled, although I haven't had a chance to go over the legislation in detail at this time, I must say I am concerned about what appears to be some radical departure within the government, and by that same minister himself who has been a great adherent in the past of regulated transportation and who is now moving in a selective way to deregulate transportation in this province.

It has been some time since we had the tabling of both the interim and the final reports, and both members of the New Democratic Party and members of our party have been concerned about the delay in the implementation of the report. I think inherent in our concern was the fact that we hoped the report itself would be accepted and implemented. It was widely acclaimed by the industry and the consumer public alike, who felt it was an appropriate report and one that was worthy of implementation.

On the occasion of the last convention—I think it was the 51st annual convention—of the Ontario Trucking Association, the Premier (Mr. Davis), on the front page of their book—and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I read this into the record, because I know you would like to have the Premier's words of wisdom on the record as it relates to his comments in this letter. He said: "Your association has long demonstrated a regard for maintaining the highest of standards in safety and courtesy on our highways, and the initiation of your campaign to promote greater safety awareness by both public and commercial drivers deserves our highest commendation.

"I would also like to express my deepest appreciation for the Ontario Trucking Association for their efforts on behalf of energy conservation, a concern which is of paramount importance to us all, and for their continuing contribution to the economic growth of our great province.

"On behalf of the government and the people of Ontario, may I express to all my very best wishes for a stimulating and productive convention in 1977 and for every success in your future endeavours."

I am just wondering now why he has suggested through the Speech from the Throne that we are going to have some selective deregulation, and I will get into the minutiae of that in a moment. I wonder what he will write if he is asked to write a letter on the occasion of the 52nd annual convention, if in fact he is the Premier at that time.

On the occasion of the 51st convention, both myself and the critic for the New Democratic Party indicated our concerns as they related to the very serious importance of implementing this report and getting on with the business of regulated transportation with regard to hauling of freight by for-hire carriers.

On that occasion, I said to the association—and again, with your indulgence, I would quote: "I am referring now to the problems identified by the select committee, which will not go away." And, Mr. Speaker, they will not. Many will remain like cancerous sores unless some immediate attention is given. To that end, I sincerely hope that the minister will be able to convince, not only his cabinet colleagues but more significantly the bureaucrats in his ministry that effective legislation is needed now.

I am sorry he is not in his seat here today, because on behalf of his party I know he does share my concern, the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip), the NDP critic, who said: "The select committee tabled its report on April 24, 1977, yet we have seen little evidence of legislation being brought forth as a result of it."

The minister himself did on that occasion acknowledge that in fact they had been dragging their feet. I think the reason they have been dragging their feet is that the bureaucrats, the very bureaucrats who have caused this problem in the first place, have been ignoring the report, ignoring the suggestions of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party caucus, of which there were a number of members who signed that report—again a unanimous report—and most important ignoring the excellent advice they'd been getting by the Ontario Highway Transport Board itself, and of course the Ontario Trucking Association.

The minister went on to say that though there were some obvious problems he didn't want to get into Band-Aids or confusing, ad hoc regulations. He indicated that some legislation would be forwarded to us for debate in December. I want to say that is definitely not the case. We have not seen the legislation. It is only today that we have seen some legislation, and I believe we are long overdue for that.

What did he do after the tabling of the report of the select committee? He set up a task force of these very bureaucrats who have thumbed their noses at the Ontario Legislature and at the thesis inherent in the report that we have made. While there have been some suggestions in the compendium today that indicate that some of our suggestions will be adhered to, for the most part a number of them are going to be ignored.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's not a Band-Aid, it's a total amputation.

Mr. Cunningham: In the Speech from the Throne they said: "The government has concluded that the adoption of a policy for selective deregulation of the trucking industry will go a long way to removing the inequities that remain." It almost sounds as if Professor Norman Bonsor and the Ontario Economic Council have somehow found the ear of the great laissez-faire economist, the Hon. Darcy McKeough, and that somehow he has now taken on, in addition to his municipal responsibilities and that of Treasury, the responsibilities of Minister of Transportation and Communications. There are times when I could say that might be an improvement, but this is not one of them.

Mr. Foulds: Quote more from Norman Bonsor.

Mr. Cunningham: We just may. I just happen to have his report right here. The member for Port Arthur, I know, is probably a great adherent of Professor Bonsor.

Mr. Foulds: No, no; he's a great adherent of mine but doesn't know it.

Mr. Cunningham: The Bonsor report, of course, is in the latest report by the Ontario Economic Council. If I could digress on the Ontario Economic Council—was never attracted to the feelings that the former member for Hamilton Mountain had with regard to that organization, that they were in any way subversive. Not too bright sometimes, but I never thought they were subversive.

The rather strange adoption or embracing of Bonsor's report, which I must say is not exactly a scholarly piece of literature in any way—were I a university professor grading Economics 20, I'm afraid I'd have to flunk Professor Bonsor. I am not, so I guess he can pass for the time being.

What really bothers me, if I could digress again, is that he is teaching our children somewhere. People are going through universities and are actually being taught by guys like this. They have tenure and they're compensated at a level probably in excess of the level that we compensate the hon. member for Port Arthur, notwithstanding the fact that—

Mr. Foulds: Higher, much higher.

Mr. Cunningham: Much higher.

Mr. Bounsall: About the same again.

Mr. Cunningham: He probably has a pension too.

Mr. Foulds: He'd probably flunk you too.

Mr. Bounsall: You'll never draw yours.

Mr. Cunningham: I'm not looking forward to having to draw a pension.

I'd like to indicate the concern of a couple of people in the industry. I know from time to time certain members of the Legislature brook no favour with the private sector. But in our select committee report, certainly the members of the committee were unanimous in their appreciation for the job done by the private carriers in Ontario. Many of them have been in business for 30 or 40 years, and day after day attempted to do business in a very fair and ethical way—sometimes making profits of one or two per cent, sometimes making no profit at all, hoping that the next year will be better. Year after year some of them live almost on a shoestring to do business.

Here's a letter that I got. It was directed to the hon. Premier (Mr. Davis), and I would like to share at least parts of it with you. It's from R. J. Franks Transport Limited, Alliston, Ontario. I guess that would be the constituency of the hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague), who unfortunately can't be in his seat today. It says:

[4:45]

"Dear Sir: It is a great shock to read the extract from the Throne Speech, February 21, 1978. I have been in the trucking business for the past 20 years, having come out of the air force as a leading aircraftsman after six years of service, borrowed money from the local parish credit union and bought a truck with limited D and F PCV operating authority.

"I have struggled and worked hard since that time, acquiring operating authority in both Canada and the USA bit by bit and at great expense to operate"—and I want to stress this—"within the laws, laws which this government put upon us and enforced whenever it suited them. I have spent time and money trying to do what the government said we must do in the trucking industry.

"I have now built a fleet of 43 tractors and 45 trailers, obtained a two-acre parcel of land and made an offer for two more acres. We employ"—I want to stress this part—"52 people and are in the midst of opening a branch in Timmins, Ontario, as well as an office now operating in Farmington, Michigan. We are constantly purchasing new equipment so we can run as safely and economically as possible, and this becomes a great financial responsibility.

"We have appeared before the select committee. We have appeared before the PCV board. We have appeared before the ICC in the United States. We have appeared before the Quebec licensing board. We have tried to operate a successful business which I can pass on to my two sons, and I am becoming more frustrated by the government themselves, by the slipshod way that things are done.

"I am enclosing letters from myself to Mr. Gregory of the enforcement branch about some carriers that operate outside the law. If you note the dates on my letters and Mr. Gregory's letter, and the dates on the reinstatement of the so-called offenders, you will see why I shake my head in disbelief. I use this only as one example.

"Then I look at the extract from the Throne Speech which says that the high costs are a concern and that selective deregulation will go a long way to removing the inequities that remain. I wonder, will the government cut the cost of fuel going up north so that the price will be the same in Hearst as Toronto to help the so-called situation? Will they help the Toronto Star deliver its papers as economically to Thunder Bay as to Alliston and so on? Will they deregulate all the freight that Ontario Northland carries, as it is a government-owned trucking company and we can use the freight for an uphaul and probably do it cheaper?"

"The select committee recommended that truckers who operate legally from October 1974 to 1976 be allowed to obtain licences under the PCV Act. If this is true, then the only smart trucker is a crooked one. Maybe the operators that stayed within the authority were damn fools. Maybe we can rob banks for two years and that will be okay."

There is a further point farther down here. He talks about a further amendment in the Act to exempt transportation of lumber and lumber products—and the word "byproducts" should be of great concern to these people in this industry.

He says: "Even as this goes on here, there are hearings concerning lumber and lumber byproducts being held at the Ontario Highway Transport Board at great expense to the trucking industry and at great expense to the Ontario taxpayer because we pay for the operation of that board and last year the cost was in excess of $600,000 or $700,000. I can't help but think why in hell I am paying approximately $20,000 a year for PCV plates, never mind all the other taxes and fines imposed upon us."

Then last, but not least, he says: "When a governing body then can say exempt lumber and lumber byproducts entirely, why not exempt everything, because you see, sir, I have built a business on trucking lumber and lumber byproducts and have outlived the gypsies that you wish to license so easily? If the government is prepared to do away with licensing in total so we can all operate on the service basis or price war, it will not work. Why license someone just because they broke the law? Why deregulate a product to accommodate a few?"

I think the people of northern Ontario and the smaller communities in the province of Ontario should be very concerned about the possibility of selective deregulation, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, if such a thing occurs it will be the lucrative areas, the highly populated areas, that will become the areas that the trucking industry is inclined to serve for basic reasons of economics, and the smaller communities will receive very little service whatsoever.

I would further suggest that the large "A" carriers, many of whom are owned and dominated by foreign interests, especially in the United States, will be able to get involved in monopolistic practices through predatory pricing and the small operations—and this operation that I refer to here is really a small operation in the context of regulated transportation—will go under. The Ontario consumer will be at the peril of these large international interests and will go under.

I suggest that after that has happened, we would be then at the mercy of these large international concerns and that we would pay through the nose. The areas that are going to get it even worse, and they are being subjected to a great deal of difficulties at this time, are those outlying areas and the areas of northern Ontario. They, in fact, will face much higher freight rates than they already have now and it will become even more expensive to live in those particular communities.

Those in a nutshell are some of the ramifications of deregulating. Certainly we can look at people who have operated in the past on a rather legitimate leasing or buy/sell arrangement, and pursuant to our select committee report consider that they may be able to make applications to the Highway Transport Board and if they meet the requirements, as we have suggested within the report, and generally the suggestions we made in our report were accepted by the industry, then in fact that particular group should be admitted and thereafter operate under law.

I am concerned about the legislation that we had tabled today, and quoting from some of the explanatory notes, these are areas that in fact may receive, if the House so desires, some consideration for deregulation: fresh fruit or fresh vegetables; logs; timber; rough or dressed lumber; wooden ties; poles; plywood; particleboard; waferboard; fibreboard; veneer; wood chips; shavings; sawdust; wood; flour; farm or forest produce other than livestock or milk; ready-mixed concrete; waste, including ashes, garbage, refuse, domestic waste, industrial waste, municipal refuse; hay; straw; livestock; feed; grain; seed; turf; sod; et cetera; blocks of clay, concrete or cinder; bricks; cement; masonry cement or lime; tile or pipe. These are all things that effectively could be deregulated if the legislation were to receive approval and be passed into law.

A very serious number of companies would go down the drain. Communities and people that they serve would be put in a serious position of disadvantage and a number of people who have gone out of their way to invest their own money in the private sector, recognizing that we live in a regulated system and that they would operate within the law, those very people who lived up to the obligations of Ontario law and regulation would be put in a position of disadvantage.

This is another letter that was sent to me from Keith Faritz, of Faritz Brothers Limited. This is an individual, I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, who accepted very maturely I believe the recommendation by the select committee and subsequently the regulation by the government that we involve ourselves in a program of reciprocity with the United States. We are the only major province in North America that has not effected intelligent reciprocal legislation with the United States. We have been dragging our rears for a long time.

Finally, after the report of the committee, the government saw the necessity to do this. Of course, the implementation of this cost this gentleman some money, but he realizes this idea had a time that had come and that it was important that we have some freer movement of goods across the border, and this cost him some money. He accepted that but what he doesn't accept—and it becomes clear in his letter when he says:

"Gentlemen, over the 25 years Zavitz Brothers has become a specialist in the movement of bananas. Our 80 trucks and 110 families depend on Zavitz Brothers Limited trucking bananas. If some sort of deregulation is inevitable in order to retain reciprocity with Georgia, South Carolina and Florida we are very concerned that bananas not be included in a blanket clause definition of fruits and vegetables.

"Our case is as follows: By nature bananas are different from other fruits and vegetables because they do not grow in the continental USA or Canada. Our extraprovincial operating licence—which he attached here—states that we can move bananas provided the moment is made in conjunction with the complementary authority of the ICC in the United States." They made application for that and it was granted. "Bananas are not an exempt commodity in the United States. In the composite commodity list of the ICC they are specifically mentioned as not exempt. Bananas are not classified as a fruit or vegetable in Quebec. They receive special status.

"In summary, we would like to submit that in any legislation to be tabled in Ontario, bananas should be treated as a separate commodity and not included as fruit and vegetables."

I see here that they will be, and if such legislation were passed that would be the end of Zavitz Brothers Limited and tough luck to the 110 families that rely on Mr. Zavitz to sign pay cheques.

It must be difficult sometimes to be a member of the government party and not have the pleasure, I suppose—and maybe the fiscal gain—of sitting on the executive council. I really can't tell you how frustrating it would be to go to a government caucus meeting, having signed this report. And here are some of the members who signed: the chief government whip signed the report, the member for Mississauga East (Mr. Gregory); the member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane) signed the report, and worked very hard to see that we had an intelligent report. A hard-working member of the committee was the member for Durham—

Mr. Foulds: East.

Mr. Cunningham: —East, who is no longer here. Mr. Moffatt worked very hard. In fact, probably one of the reasons—if he'd just taken a week off of the committee and spent a little more time back home, we'd be tied—

An hon. member: To win Durham East.

Mr. Cunningham: —we'd be tied, and the present member for Durham East (Mr. Cureatz) wouldn't be here. He is not in his seat. He shouldn't heckle when he's not in his seat.

Mr. Foulds: You're seldom here anyway, Sam.

Mr. Cunningham: The former member may be back anyway and inject a little common sense into his party.

An hon. member: I don't think so. He has got such a good job at OTS.

Mr. Mackenzie: His contribution doesn't compare either, in the House.

Mr. Cunningham: The member for Oriole (Mr. Williams), whom I never see here, signed the report. The member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger) signed the report.

Mr. Foulds: Certainly no homeowners' grants with the former member.

Mr. Cunningham: And the hon.—I want to stress this—the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea)—he too signed the report. It was, in short, a unanimous report. And in this report—all 11 pounds of it—we have, I think, an effective and intelligent start, at least, for a transportation policy—finally, after 30 years in the province.

But what do the hon. Treasurer and the hon. member for Oakville, the Minister of Transportation and Communications, tell these people who worked so hard and spent so much of their time? What do they tell these people who signed this report? What do they tell Mr. Franks of Franks Transport, and Zavitz Brothers? I guess he tells them that in some laissez-faire approach to free-enterprise and the open competition aspect of things in this province that we're going to deregulate things and it's going to be tough for them.

It just is a fundamental disappointment to me. I would like to have seen that caucus in operation. I would have liked to see the concerns put by these members. I know they're concerned because they attended these meetings day after day and experienced—I left out the distinguished member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell—

Mr. Villeneuve: Stormont-Dundas-Glen-garry.

Mr. Cunningham: I'm sorry. Stormont-Dundas-Glen-garry—who worked so very hard on it. He indicated concerns about some inequities as they relate to the Ministry of Revenue and some of the problems that milk producers were having, and the problems of collecting gas tax. I rather doubt that the Ministry of Revenue has still addressed itself to the difficulties that the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry expressed on behalf of his constituents.

I can only say it is a tremendous disappointment to see a report that was as costly as this, but accepted unanimously by members of the committee. We set aside all of our partisan feelings and we have come up with two intelligent reports embracing not only the idea of reciprocity but the maintenance and the continuation of an intelligent regulatory system in this province.

To come in here today, as the Minister of Transportation did—largely, I would suggest, at the direction of the hon. Treasurer who seems to be the guy who runs things around here—and suggest that overnight we're going to put these people who truck these commodities that I've mentioned, Mr. Zavitz or Mr. Franks or many of the other companies who rely on this freight and have for a number of years—to put them out of business overnight, I can only say I'm repulsed.

Mr. Davidson: Unlike some who have risen in their places to speak to the Throne Speech and claim to have done so with pleasure, I can find very little to stand here and feel pleased about after having read the Throne Speech a little more closely. I thought it lacked substance when I heard it read from the throne, but once having read it and having had the opportunity to fine-screen it, I found that like grains of sand everything disappeared through the screen and there was very little left for anyone to take out and put into operation.

[5:00]

I did find, however, a couple of things in it that I thought I'd like to discuss with members today. One of them appears on page eight, and it says: "While we recognize that certain sectors of our economy will benefit from freer and fairer trade, we remain concerned about the likelihood of real reciprocity being achieved."

I would like to know how much that concerns is. I say so because I go back to October 1977 when the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) went to a federal-provincial conference in Quebec, and he, along with Jacques Parizeau told reporters that reduced protection is necessary to enable Canada to argue for lower tariffs on other products on which it can compete during current world trade.

That statement as it appeared in the papers created a great deal of concern among many industries in the province of Ontario. I say "industries" because in most cases we get accused of protecting only the workers in the province. Let me assure the members that while I am far more in favour of protecting the worker, I can assure them also that I am in favour of protecting a company that must hire workers, particularly at a time when here in the province of Ontario we have over 300,000 seeking employment and very few jobs available for them.

What really would have happened had Mr. McKeough's and Mr. Parizeau's statement been implemented immediately? The Canadian Textile Institute points out that had that taken place, some 200,000 jobs would have been lost in Canada in the textile industry alone, a large number of those being here in the province of Ontario, where between Ontario and Quebec, the greatest textile business takes place. Two hundred thousand jobs in one industry—because of Mr. McKeough's proposal to reduce tariffs.

Let's see what some of these people have had to say on this. "Reduced or phased-out tariffs in the textile and clothing industry could cost 200,000 jobs nationally because the industry cannot compete with cheap imports." That's not my statement—that's the statement of William Barry of Montreal, who is the director of the Canadian Textile Institute.

Let's take a look at some local people. W. H. Cline, who owns W. H. Cline Company Limited in Kitchener, said: "It's bloody earth-shaking. It should cause us great concern as Canadians." He goes on to say, "The politicians are threatening the viability of the industry."

Again, here we have a situation where in the province of Ontario we have in excess of 300,000 unemployed. We have no job creation programs being implemented by the government of the province and yet we have the Treasurer of this province advocating a policy that would throw people out of work and put more people on the lists of unemployed in the province.

That just doesn't make sense to me. It doesn't make sense at all. So when the Throne Speech came out, I thought perhaps somewhere in this document it would say what this government is going to do to create jobs, to put the people who are displaced because of this kind of a proposal back to work.

Maybe they're right. Maybe eventually we do have to approach a freer trade policy. Maybe we can't always offer the protectionism that is being offered at the present time, but let's not do anything of the kind that Mr. McKeough is proposing until jobs are available for the people who will be displaced.

If we don't have jobs available for them, we would have headlines such as this one from the Kitchener-Waterloo area: "Proposed textile tariff cut threatens 5,000 area jobs." That headline would spread right across the province of Ontario into each little community where textile mills exist; and that is in one industry. One could also include shoes, plastics, small appliances. Lord knows how many people would be thrown out of work by the kind of a policy that the Treasurer of this province is advocating.

So I picked up this document and I thought there must be something in there to tell me what they are going to do; there has to be something there to show me where they are going to create jobs. And lo and behold, what do I find? I find that this government, in the richest province in the country, is going to create 36,000 jobs at a cost of $26 million, most of that being short-term summer work for students. Even at that, there are to be thousands of students unemployed during the summer months, because that comes nowhere near meeting the requirement that is needed for student employment.

I thought that disappointed me. So I thought maybe they are right. Maybe we shouldn't protect these places anymore. Then I found out something very interesting, that the textile industry alone paid out in wages in 1976 some $850 million. I said to myself this money is going to be taken out of our economy. These people aren't going to make $850 million. That money is not going to be spent. Once again, our economy is going to be driven to the back wall.

I became a little more concerned when I read further on in the report of the Canadian Textile Institute. I read there is a growing market for textiles based on increased consumption in Canada. The share of the market served by domestic producers has dropped from 64 per cent in 1964 to 39 per cent in 1976. That is rather funny, because the United States, which is a large producer of textiles but is also a country into which imports are allowed, has set a policy whereby it is producing and using domestically 85 per cent of its requirements. Here we are at 39 per cent and we have a Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) in this province telling us that he is going to reduce tariffs even further.

Let me tell you something, Mr. Speaker, I worked in the textile industry for 25 years. Outside of the large conglomerates that exist, most of the textile industries in the province of Ontario are owner-operated by small businessmen employing in many cases anywhere from 20 to 100 people. They exist in the smaller communities throughout the province; and in many small towns and communities throughout Ontario they are the only industry in those towns and the only industry that provides employment for the people living in those towns.

Mr. Kerrio: You finally found some common ground.

Mr. Davidson: If this proposal is implemented, we are not only going to have 200,000 people out of work but we are going to have plant closures throughout the province of Ontario; we are going to have small communities in which there are no employment opportunities because the plants aren't there anymore. We're going to have all kinds of disruption taking place throughout this province, based on one policy that really should not be looked at or even considered until the government has taken care of the job problem in this province at this time. It hasn't done so. It is nowhere close to doing so. It doesn't even have a job-creation program.

Here we are looking at a program that really is not going to be beneficial to anyone, except the large conglomerates. I said in the estimates of Industry and Tourism that the policy of the Conservative government of this province would destroy the initiative of the small businessman in the textile industry in this province and that the government would be selling out to the multi-national corporations at the expense of the Ontario investor.

As a matter of fact—and this is again a quote from Mr. Cline, a small businessman with a plant in Kitchener; I don't know how many people he employs, but it's not a large plant: "It's an abrupt about-face on everything the government has said in the past." The Canadian Textile Institute said almost exactly the same thing. They said: "It is essential that the announced federal and provincial government goals of restoring employment in these industries be achieved."

Somewhere along the line, both the federal and provincial governments have led these people to believe they would have the protection that was necessary for them to continue their business, to try to build it up and to make it once again a viable industry. Instead, we have a Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) over there, who is prepared to throw everything like that down the drain, to throw people out on the street or whatever.

I looked again, because I thought I might be wrong on that one—nine times out of 10 I'm not always right. Then I read an announcement by the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) about the minimum wage. After months and months of both opposition parties asking when the minister was going to bring in a new minimum wage, and after hearing for months that she was waiting for some study or some report, when that report finally did come down we found that she has increased the minimum wage to $2.85 an hour and then, as of January 1, 1979, to $3.

When one looks at what is happening in this province today, people yell and scream about $2.85. Employers are saying, "That's too much. How are you going to make it $3?" What is $2.85 an hour? Based on the normal 40-hour week, that's $114; by the time you take deductions off it, it comes to about $90 take-home pay. I ask any one of the government members, "Would you be prepared to live on $90 a week?" Better yet, I should ask, "Could you live on $90 a week?" I doubt very much if they could.

Mr. Mackenzie: Some of them have enough stored-up fat.

Mr. Davidson: Even when it goes to $3 an hour, that is $120 a week; with deductions, it's still less than $100 take-home pay. To squeeze even that amount out of this government has taken months of opposition pressure to get some kind of movement in that direction. Even at that, we're still fourth or fifth in the country in terms of minimum wage.

What have we done in the minimum wage? They've used the same old rigmarole about people working in restaurants and places where alcohol is consumed and are still relying on tips to pay those people. They rely on tips to say: "We keep their wages down to $2.50 an hour because they get tips and that shouldn't be looked at in terms of wages."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There's nothing wrong with tips. I worked my way through college on them.

Mr. Hodgson: What do you recommend for a minimum wage?

Mr. Mackenzie: A lot more than you're willing to pay.

Mr. Davidson: The hon. member knows our policy on the minimum wage. We fought it in the last election campaign. If he can't remember the figure, I would suggest he go back and read some of the statements that have been made.

Mr. Hodgson: I can remember very well. It was $4 an hour.

Mr. Mackenzie: You're darn right. We've never backed off it either.

Mr. Davidson: Here again, in terms of the minimum wage, the government can't do anything without discriminating against somebody. Here they're discriminating mainly against women who work as waitresses and in many cases single-parent women who require that income in order to maintain their families. But the government takes the attitude that they all get tips. It may be true in some of the high-class joints the government members go to, where high tips are paid, but there are a heck of a lot of women working in small, side street restaurants somewhere who perhaps pick up nickels and dimes but they sure aren't getting any high wages. Yet the government can't seem to take that into consideration.

[5:15]

Even worse, the government maintains the student level at $2.15 an hour. Most student employment takes place in the summer months. Most of the students go to work because they are trying to accumulate some money so that they can go back and attend their school in the next semester, pay their tuition fees, do whatever it is that is necessary to find accommodation, et cetera, but the government says, "No, no, they are only worth $2.15 an hour."

I find it a little tough to think that in most plants that I have had the opportunity to go into—textile plants and steel plants—there's a job to be done and if they get a student in there to do that job it may very well be that there's a full-time employee doing that same work for $3 or $4 or $5 an hour, but what the government is saying is that the company has the right to hire some kid to do exactly the same work for $2.15 an hour, and at the same time it raises tuition fees and cuts back on grants to students. Boy, oh boy, the government has it all under control and I only wish it knew what it was doing with it. Here we have a minimum wage program that really isn't the best to begin with and it discriminates against various people in our society.

I was going to talk a little bit about the lack of mention of property tax in here. Most members have heard the story about the problems that have existed in Cambridge, problems that were first recognized in 1976, in terms of tax inequities, where many people are paying anywhere from 40 to 50 per cent above what their normal taxes should be. The ratepayers association, the city council and myself have been trying since 1976 to bring a permanent solution to that problem.

Last year we were able to get a Band-Aid solution and some of them got rebates which really didn't amount to much, but this year we thought we had the solution to the problems. They met with the former Minister of Revenue. The city did. The ratepayers did. I held discussions with some of her staff. We got the entire region of Waterloo to request that they implement market value assessment, put it in as a trial program so that these inequities would be solved, at least within the Waterloo region, and at the same time the government would have had the opportunity to see how market value assessment was going to work, or whether it was going to work. Every municipality in the Waterloo region sent letters to the government requesting that this be done.

I find today from the new Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) that they are not going to do that. They are once more going to get out the first-aid box and apply another Band-Aid. The answer to that is this, I am afraid: We don't need any more Band-Aids, the amputation is too big. The people can't afford to pay any longer and the government had better start now coming up with a permanent solution to the problem or the municipality may find itself in very serious difficulty, because those people have threatened to withhold their taxes. It affects over some 1,000 households, so one can put that in terms of dollars.

I think I have probably taken almost all of the time I should have, other than to say there is a bit of a discussion taking place in our area now between the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) and our city regarding a highway bypass. The city of Kitchener also wants a highway bypass. There is a little bit of argument at the regional level as to which one should be built first, the argument being that this government doesn't provide sufficient funds to the region to build both.

I would suggest that perhaps in terms of producing some jobs in that area, perhaps in accommodating both municipalities, that the government invest a little money into capital projects that allow municipalities to carry out the work that has to be done. That will put some of our people back to work, particularly those in the construction industry, and they will once again have money in their pockets. They will be able to go out and buy the new refrigerator or television set that they had been hoping to get before they were laid off. That, in turn, will create work in other areas and in other industries. And, who knows, if that kind of thing happens, maybe the prophecy of the charter for Ontario will come true. Maybe the government will create 100,000 jobs; but as a government, it has to invest first. And unless it invests, it won't happen.

In closing, I would like to say one thing about the Glendale ATC—the adult training centre. Three colleagues of mine, the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton), the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra), the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) and myself, toured the Glendale ATC. It is our opinion that it is a mistake to be closing that facility, because we feel it does the job it was set up to do. We received many letters from people within the community, and what impressed me more than anything else were letters from the inmates themselves, who were pointing out the benefits that the program had given them during their time there. We feel it is a mistake for it to be shut down.

Along with some of the Liberal members, we attended on Monday morning a meeting with the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea), and we left that meeting with an understanding that an effort would be made to have the ATC closing brought before the committee on justice. I am given to understand today that that meeting is not going to take place; for some reason the government doesn't want to bring in people before a committee of this Legislature to question the closing of Glendale—people who perhaps have more information than we have available. So that meeting will not take place, and it is most unfortunate. I can only suggest that if the government was so sure that the closing of Glendale was in the best public interest, they wouldn't hesitate to allow the public to come in and sit before that committee to state their reasons.

I want to thank you for giving me the opportunity to sound off, Mr. Speaker. As I said earlier when I began, I didn't find too much in the Throne Speech to be pleased about. But I guess I should be pleased that you have allowed me the opportunity to stand in my place and say what I felt. Thank you very much.

Mr. MacBeth: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me at this great distance; I am now sitting further from you than in the past. I want to extend my felicitations to you, as you again occupy the Speaker's chair. Last time I was speaking—I think it was in the budget debate—I complimented you on your sonorous voice and the way it echoed through this chamber. I think I compared it to the whistle of one of our great northern steam engines in days gone by, as it used to whistle across the pre-Cambrian shield. And in view of the fact that you have recognized me today at this distance, I am now going to compliment you on your eyesight, sir, and say that you have the eyesight of one of our great Canadian eagles. I wish your stay in the chair to be a long one.

I also extend my best wishes to your Deputy Speaker for keeping this House in order and to all those who make the work of this House tick. That includes, of course, those at the clerk's chair at the table, the Deputy Speaker and the chairman of the committee of the whole. To all of you, I extend my best wishes.

I also want to say a word to one or two who have recently been appointed to the cabinet, the government of this province. They take on a very onerous responsibility. Sometimes I think that the press and others are too critical of them and don't necessarily give them a chance to function. But in any event, that's the way our democratic system works. Having had some experience with the weight of cabinet responsibility, I extend to those four new members of cabinet my very best wishes as they in turn take up this responsibility. I know they'll do it to the best of their ability.

Likewise, to the new parliamentary assistants. The post of parliamentary assistant is proving a very worthwhile training ground for members of cabinet, and I wish them well.

I have agreed with the member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan), who cannot be here this evening—as I cannot be—that we would split the time remaining before 6 o'clock, so I'll only deal with one subject and I'll move along quickly. I wish to speak on a theme that I have spoken on in this House before. That is the subject of the British North America Act.

The Throne Speech, of course, is concerned with the immediate problem of Canadian unity and of the economic conditions in which we find ourselves at the present time. I have faith in this country. I have faith that Canada will remain together and I have great faith that we will come out of our economic plight.

However, I am concerned with a longer problem that I see in connection with the British North America Act. I think that this government and the federal government, and perhaps the governments of all the provinces are not paying the attention that should be paid to getting on with the work of looking at our constitution in a spirit of co-operation and a spirit of trying to remedy the problems that exist today in Canada. There are problems and we all know that.

I think that a review of the constitution is needed. I know attempts have been made at a review before, but I am afraid those attempts have been made too much on a partisan basis, too much on a local basis—either provincial or regional—and not sufficiently on the basis on which the Fathers of Confederation originally looked at the problem: What can we do to have the best country for all of us and still have the best economic facility and the best cultural facility and all that goes with it? If we approach it too much from a regional basis, of course, that won't happen.

The original Fathers of Confederation, I think, built better than they realized and better than some of us have given them credit for in the interval. It concerns me today that there is such overlapping in the responsibilities that Ottawa assumes and the responsibilities that we at the provincial level assume and the responsibilities that the municipal people assume. Co-operation is a good thing; it's good for all of us to co-operate. Yet sometimes there should be no need for co-operation.

In other words, if we were all masters in those fields that we are purported to be in control of, then we wouldn't need to co-operate with the municipalities and we wouldn't need to co-operate with the federal government. We could each bear the proper responsibility that we should if our individual responsibilities were set out.

In other words, if we want to do some housing now, it's not only the municipality that's involved, it's the province, and there may be some federal grants as well. That means that you've got to co-operate. But if for any reason you don't, or can't, co-operate the project comes to a standstill.

[5:30]

It seems to me when the Fathers of Confederation drafted the BNA Act, sure there were some places where they talked about joint responsibility, such as in agriculture and transportation, but they did try to set out fairly clearly those matters that should be a provincial responsibility and those that should be federal. I think we have to return to a clearer picture in that regard. I think we have to sit down and decide, "All right, what should the provinces be looking after, what should the federal government be looking after, and what should the municipalities look after?"

In addition to redrafting those responsibilities and trying to make clearer lines—and

I know you can't make them absolutely clear—we should also give to those governments the power to support those responsibilities that we may eventually saddle them with.

In other words, it is a poor kind of business to say that the municipalities shall have the responsibility of collecting the garbage and the many other close-to-the-citizen jobs that municipalities do, and not give them adequate means to look after those things.

Similarly, we in the province have to go to the federal government for handouts when we want to do certain things. The medical field, I suppose, is a prime example. We are saddled with the necessity of fitting ourselves into what the federal government wants us to do if we in turn want to carry out our responsibilities in the field of health. That means the federal government is trying to fit us all into the same mould across this country, whether there is a need for us to fit into that mould or not.

I am suggesting that this country of ours is sufficiently diverse—and the Fathers of Confederation recognized that diversity—that what is good for Nova Scotia is not necessarily good for Quebec, and what is good for Quebec is not necessarily good for Ontario. Originally, in setting out the division of powers, the Fathers of Confederation when it came to education said: "Yes, let Quebec run its own education system; let Ontario run its." But now, because of the taxation system, if we want certain things, if we want to obtain certain grants from the federal government, then the federal government says: "Yes, if you do it this way, the same way as it is done in British Columbia or Quebec, we will give you those funds." That to me is one of the flaws in the way our constitution has developed.

It wasn't always this way. I think it has happened for a variety of reasons. First of all, I think the First World War, when the federal government got into the income tax, was the first move in that direction. For the sake of Canadian unity, and for the sake of the war effort at that time, the federal government got into income tax and, as we all know, it never got out of that field. But it proved, in the way the economy of the world developed, to be one of the most fertile fields to obtain money from the citizens, and I suppose, one of the fairest means.

Following the First World War, we got into the Depression—and we remember the problems we had in those days—and we decided that if only we had some cross-country unemployment insurance scheme managed by Ottawa, in that way we would be able to solve some of the problems that we had. So changes were made in the constitution to allow Ottawa to manage unemployment insurance, which under the original Act was a matter for the provinces to handle; so that became Ottawa's.

Then, of course, there were a variety of court decisions that seemed to centralize the authority in Ottawa as opposed to provincial rights. Those court decisions have continued over the years, even though there was the suggestion recently by the present Chief Justice that he is certainly not a centralist when it comes to his decisions. I think the record of the Supreme Court of Canada in recent years—certainly since the First World War—has been towards centralizing power in Ottawa rather than on the basis of provincial rights.

Then came the Second World War, when the federal government doubled its taxation through the income tax and, of course, has kept that up.

The provinces have lost a great deal of their independence by reason of their becoming dependent on the handouts from the federal government for income tax. I think one of the faults we are currently suffering from in our constitution relates to the power to tax for the necessities that we have. In other words, the spending power should be the taxing power and the taxing power the spending power. We should have the authority to tax for those things that we have responsibility for administering. As I say, at the present time if we want to get certain grants from Ottawa, such as we do in health, then we have to fit ourselves into the common mould. The original BNA Act didn't see it that way. It tried to set out very clear responsibilities and, as we all know, most of the monetary responsibilities set out under section 92 of the BNA Act, those things such as education, such as health, such as highways and transportation, those things that take the majority of the public expense, were given to the province. Yet those things that were given to the federal people to administer, such as the post office, should be self-supporting, self-sustaining; there are things given to the federal level that really call for very little expenditure, apart from national defence. Look at section 91, the big expenditure there would be national defence. Apart from that, those things that the federal government is financially responsible for by the constitution are a very small proportion of our public expenditures.

To bring my short talk on the constitution to a close, I am suggesting that we as legislators are remiss in not sitting down to look at the long-term future of this country and its constitutional problems. So many of us support Quebec in its theories. In other words, Quebec, through all of this, has been the one province that has stood up for provincial rights. So many of us have taken the attitude that we are Canadians first and provincial people second. That is good to a point, but in doing so, becoming centralists as so many of us have, we have tended to overlook the rights of the minority. We have tended to overlook some of the rights of the people of the province of Quebec, and Quebec has really been the one province that has shown us the way on this matter.

I am not speaking in any way against this great country of Canada, but I think Canada's future would be better assured if we were looking at the division of the responsibilities more from a provincial way. I am sure it would keep Quebec happier. I am sure it would keep Alberta happier. I am sure it would keep Manitoba and British Columbia and some of the other provinces happier. The problem is some of the smaller provinces have had to go along with centralism in order to get the handouts that they have needed from the federal government to run this country.

I am not speaking in any way against the necessity for equalized payments. We must have equalized payments to the less fortunate provinces, but they should not be conditional payments. They should be the same kind of payments that the municipalities want us to make to them. They should be payments based on their various needs, based on a revamped formula, but it should be at their discretion how they expend them. Ottawa should not be in a position to dictate to those other provinces, "If you want this money you spend it this way." There should be no strings attached to that.

What I am saying to this House is it is time that we as a nation, not to deal with the immediate problems but I think with the long-term problems, should be sitting down and in some constructive, non-partisan way looking at how we could bring our constitution up to date with a view to returning to the provinces those things that I think properly belong to them, and at the same time assuring both the provinces and the municipalities the taxation resources to look after those responsibilities that go with them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I think I have taken about half the time.

Mr. Bolan: Before proceeding with the remarks which I have to make this afternoon I would like to thank the hon. member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth) for allowing me the opportunity of sharing his time. I have to be in North Bay at a meeting this evening; this was conveyed to the hon. member for Humber and he kindly relinquished his remaining time to me. I might say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member for Humber, that having been involved over the past few years in the courts and having dealt with the various agencies of the office of the Solicitor General, I can say to him that the people with whom I have dealt thought highly of him as a minister.

Mr. Speaker, before I get on with the few remaining moments that I have I would like to pay congratulations to you for the manner in which you have handled this House. I might say that your stentorian voice has reverberated through these halls. It certainly has brought to this House and to all parties a definite feeling of impartiality. Again, I congratulate you on that.

Mr. Foulds: He had good early training.

Mr. Nixon: At least he keeps the NDP in order.

Mr. Foulds: Name him. He shouldn't insult the Speaker like that.

Mr. Bolan: Unfortunately, I have run out of platitudes. In dealing with the Speech from the Throne, this rather pallid document which was read to us by the Lieutenant-Governor of this province last Tuesday—

Mr. Foulds: It's full of platitudes.

Mr. Nixon: She's doing a good job too.

Mr. Bolan: —I did feel in a sense that she must have kept wondering to herself, "My goodness, what am I reading? What is this?" I did feel somewhat sorry for this honourable lady as she tried to—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Are you suggesting that she didn't write it?

Mr. Bolan: —groped through this document, which I really considered to be not a Speech from the Throne but rather an act of resignation by the ruling party.

Mr. Mancini: That was well put.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is an insult to Her Honour.

Mr. Bolan: In fact, it goes beyond that. It is an act of abdication because when the government of the day cannot come up with more than is in this document, then it has forfeited the right to govern.

I would like to restrict my comments to those remarks in the speech which affect my area. I would like to deal, first of all, with the question of Crown land. Through some form of mysticism, the Minister of Natural Resources somehow was able to read into my mind and to put in this statement which he read in the House today a press release which I actually made yesterday morning to the North Bay Nugget. It's amazing the similarity of the policy which he came out with and the policy which I said the Liberal Party should take.

Without breaking it down into the three stages which are set out in the statement by the minister, what I did say was that yes, Ontarians should have the right of ownership of Crown land; yes, other Canadians should have the right of ownership of Crown land; and no, non-residents should not have the right of ownership, but rather should be given an opportunity to lease Crown land in certain areas and in certain percentages after it has gone through a process whereby Canadians are first given entitlement to it. This is precisely what the minister has related to us in his statement.

However, as I say, I had said practically the same things yesterday morning in a release to the North Bay Nugget. The question was asked of the minister what he would do with those properties which are presently under lease. It would be my suggestion to the minister that those lots which are presently under lease to Canadians be transferred to them outright so they do have complete ownership of these lots. Those lots which are presently owned by non-Canadians should remain under lease, with the end result being that non-Canadians would not have the right to acquire permanent ownership of Crown lands.

[5:45]

One must remember that if a non-Canadian is interested in acquiring title to land, there are vast quantities owned privately by individuals right across the province. So if they are interested in acquiring title to land, it can be done.

Dealing with another subject which is very close to my heart—the situation which exists in northeastern Ontario—I would like to refer to page 11 in the Speech from the Throne. This is where the government proposes measures to alleviate the problems which exist in northeastern Ontario. The second paragraph reads as follows:

“New measures relative to regional and resource developments are proposed to provide direct assistance to northern and eastern Ontario as priority areas and the overall economic thrust of Ontario's growth and development.”

And that's it. This is the proposal of this government for an area which it very well knows is already suffering from economic disparity. This is the proposal of a government which has failed to even try to implement the six studies which have come from this government since 1958. There have been some six studies made as to how to deal with northern Ontario—some specifically with northeastern Ontario—and all of these have resulted in complete failure. I am not aware that any significant aspects of any of those particular reports were implemented. I understand there is another one coming out as well some time this month, and it must be very questionable just what that document will contain.

I look at northeastern Ontario just as you, Mr. Speaker, have looked at northwestern Ontario. I look at the resource industry town, a town which grows up based on a certain resource being available. I am speaking particularly about a non-renewable resource.

As the town grows the taxpayers of Ontario, of Canada, and of the municipality, invest millions of dollars to set up the infrastructure to support that community. They build schools, they put in sewage, they put in water, they put in treatment plants. They set up what is known as the infrastructure. They build roads for it. Then when the day comes that the non-renewable resource runs out, the town fails and the very expensive capital investment in that community all goes for naught.

This is one thing I have noticed in my short time here, there does not appear to be any type of plan by this government to try to protect its investment. Basically that's what it is. When you put millions of dollars into the infrastructure about which I have spoken, you are investing in that community, and a responsible government should certainly try to protect it's investment by having alternate plans when the day comes when the non-renewable resource is no longer there.

I would like to address myself also to another point which is very close to me, the question of French education in the province of Ontario. Fortunately, I am bilingual. I am so because I was raised in a small community in northern Ontario—Cobalt.

Mr. Nixon: You're true blue.

Mr. Bolan: This was done in the days when the French-speaking person in a community really didn't have much going for him. You have to remember that this is the aftermath of what I call the dehumanization of the French culture in the province through the introduction of the famous regulation 17 in the year 1915. From that date until 1930 that was the rule of law in the province of Ontario. Everything possible was done to, as I say dehumanize the French-speaking people in this province; but they stuck with it because they believed in their culture and they believed in their language.

Then in 1930 there were some relaxations with respect to that regulation and it stayed that way until about 1960.

But I remember as a child going to an elementary school called Ecole de Ste. Therese; it was run by the very kind and very charitable Sisters of the Assumption. As we went along we noticed varied differences between that school and the other separate school which was called the Irish school and the public school. One difference was this: Aside from those fine nuns who were there to teach us, there was nothing; there were no facilities for sports, there were hardly any facilities for education in terms of supplies and what have you. I remember when we used to play hockey against the teams of the two other schools, they had sweaters, nice fine school sweaters. We had nothing. We had to buy our own hockey sticks; theirs were given to them by the school board. The one item which we received to play with in the schoolyard once the snow went was a softball, one softball for one year; and when somebody had knocked the hide off the ball, we couldn't play for about a week while the dear sisters sewed it up.

So you go along this way and you start asking yourself some questions: "What gives here? Why is it?"

Mr. Nixon: What year was that?

Mr. Bolan: It was 1946, 1947.

Mr. Nixon: Those were tough Tory years.

Mr. Bolan: Yes.

At that age, when you are 12 or 13, you more or less take it for granted that that is the way it is in life, that there are differences. And then you start to ask yourself more questions. You start to ask your parents questions: "Why is it this way?"

Well let me tell you that is the way it was in those days. Fortunately, it has changed, and it has changed because of the foresight of people like John Robarts; and I must also say that the present Premier of Ontario (Mr. Davis) has taken it upon himself to try to rectify what I consider to be a system which still needs great improvement.

I remember I was on a school board in 1967-68 in North Bay; there was a big fight going on at that time about acquiring a French high school. Do you know we got a French high school before Bill 141 was even passed? How we did it, mind you, is very questionable, but we did it and we did it because the people wanted it. Then, of course, this was an example to the rest of the province that there was a demand for secondary education in the French language.

Mr. Martel: It didn't work in Sturgeon Falls.

Mr. Bolan: It worked in Sturgeon Falls. Unfortunately, I was not on the school board at that time. Had I been there, it would have worked much better.

My reason for mentioning this is because I read with interest what the Speech from the Throne contained about the French services, and I have been following with great interest what the Premier of Ontario has been saying about it. I think it is sincere; but by the same token I am suggesting to this House that what I consider to be a formula laid down by the leader of the Liberal Party of Ontario is appropriate, is reasonable and is the policy and the procedure to follow to see to it that there is an improvement and a raising in the standard of the French language in this community.

In the last few moments which I have, I am going to quote from yesterday's Globe and Mail which had an editorial and which was headed, "Ontario and French." I'll read it in case there are some of you who have not. I'll read it because I want it to appear, not only in an editorial, but I want it to appear in a historical document; I want it to appear in Hansard. It reads like this:

"To the sometimes confused, sometimes misleading and often awkward discussion at Queen's Park of the provision of government services in French to French-speaking residents of Ontario, Liberal leader Stuart Smith has contributed a voice of consistent principle, reason and leadership."

Mr. Reed: Listen to that. Listen to the truth.

Mr. Bolan: "And now that the debate seems in danger of deteriorating into a destructive, or at best futile, argument over the meaning of words like 'bilingualism,' it is again Dr. Smith who offers a useful proposal to help get it back on a more productive course."

Mr. Martel: Signed by Bob Nixon.

Mr. Bolan: "He suggests, simply and sanely, that Ontario should first find out exactly where it stands now in this important area, and then go on to decide in an orderly manner where it should go from there."

Mr. Lewis: It's called retreat, skillful retreat.

Mr. Bolan: "The vehicle for this exploration, Dr. Smith argues, should be an all-party committee of the Legislature. Its mandate should be to review such programs as now exist, assemble the information gathered into a clear statement of the services now available in French, decide what further services should be provided, and propose a timetable for getting them in motion."

"What Dr. Smith proposes, in short, is nothing elaborate or esoteric, but one of those suggestions that, once made, seems so obviously reasonable that we are left wondering why they did not fall into place long ago without having to be specifically spelled out."

"As things now stand there is a great deal of misunderstanding about the nature of the need, the demand, the availability and the cost of French-language services in Ontario."

"Former Premier John Robarts, in his time, committed his government firmly in principle to recognition of the needs and rights of Franco-Ontarians. Premier William Davis has, with some fumbling and foot-shuffling, done the same thing."

Mr. Nixon: Right.

Mr. Bolan: "But progress has been slow and bumpy."

Mr. Reed: Held up by the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Bolan: "A sober and balanced study on the subject, commissioned by the Ontario Arts Council, came to this conclusion: 'In summary, the Franco-Ontarian community has had to acknowledge the limitations of the provincial government's action on its behalf. Outside the realm of education where there is still much to be done, and the realm of cultural and artistic matters where government agencies have taken some positive measures, the government of Ontario hesitates to commit itself towards the Franco-Ontarian minority.'

"We need to do better. And Dr. Smith has given us good advice on the place to start and the way to go about it."

Mr. Nixon: Great editorial.

Mr. Bolan: I say to the Premier of Ontario, if he is serious about trying to improve the services of the French language in the province of Ontario, if he is serious about doing it in such a way so as not to show partisanship or aggravate old wounds, what he should do is select a committee consisting of all parties. Let all of those parties look into it. Let all of those parties report back to this House and, then Mr. Speaker, perhaps we will be on the right way.

On motion by Mr. Bounsall, the debate was adjourned.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

CONTENTS

Thursday, March 2, 1978

Crown land sales, statement by Mr. F. S. Miller	249
Death of Kim Anne Popen, statement by Mr. Norton	249
Mental health services, statement by Mr. Timbrell	250
Multilingual TV station, statement by Mr. Snow	251
Point of privilege re tabling of reports, Ms. Gigantes	252
Trucking legislation, statement by Mr. Snow	252
Health records, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Lewis, Mrs. Campbell	254
Hydro rates, questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Wildman, Mr. Makarchuk, Mr. Reed	255
Hospital cutbacks, question of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Cassidy, Mrs. Campbell	257
Hydro sales to U.S., questions of Mr. Baetz: Mr. Cassidy	259
Paper mill control orders, question of Mr. McCague: Mr. Gaunt	260
Bending Lake development, questions of Mr. F. S. Miller and Mr. Snow: Mr. Foulds	260
Crown land sales, questions of Mr. F. S. Miller: Mr. Hennessy, Mr. Kerrio, Mr. Martel, Mr. Deans	261
Psi Mind Development Institute, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Sweeney, Mrs. Campbell	262
Special education, questions of Mr. Wells: Ms. Gigantes	263
Group homes, questions of Mr. Norton: Mr. McCaffrey, Mr. McClellan, Mr. Nixon	263
Uranium drilling, questions of Mr. Davis and Mr. F. S. Miller: Mr. Gaunt, Mr. Martel, Mr. Germa	265
Teachers' superannuation fund, questions of Mr. Wells: Mr. Van Horne	266
Assessment appeal services, question of Mr. Maeck: Mr. Swart	266
Retabling report on declining enrolments, Mr. Wells	266
Mental Health Amendment Act, Mr. Timbrell, first reading	267
Public Vehicles Amendment Act, Mr. Snow, first reading	267
Public Commercial Vehicles Amendment Act, Mr. Snow, first reading	267
Business of the House, Mr. Welch	267
Notices of motions nos. 1, 2 and 3, Mr. Welch, resolutions concurred in	267
Throne Speech debate, continued, Mr. Cooke, Mr. Handleman, Mr. Cunningham, Mr. Davidson, Mr. MacBeth, Mr. Bolan	267
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Bounsall, agreed to	294
Recess	294

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Baetz, Hon. R. C.; Minister of Energy (Ottawa West PC)
 Bolan, M. (Nipissing L)
 Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
 Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
 Campbell, M. (St. George L)
 Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
 Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
 Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
 Davidson, M. (Cambridge NDP)
 Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
 Davison, M. (Hamilton Centre NDP)
 Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
 Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
 Edighoffer, H. Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
 Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
 Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
 Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
 Gigantes, E. (Carleton East NDP)
 Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations
 (St. Andrew-St. Patrick PC)
 Handleman, S. B. (Carleton PC)
 Hennessy, M. (Fort William PC)
 Hodgson, W. (Yorck North PC)
 Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
 Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
 MacBeth, J. P. (Humber PC)
 Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
 Maecck, Hon. L.; Minister of Revenue (Parry Sound PC)
 Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
 Mancini, R. (Essex South L)
 Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
 McCaffrey, B. (Armourdale PC)
 McCague, Hon. G.; Minister of the Environment (Dufferin Simcoe PC)
 McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
 Miller, Hon. F. S.; Minister of Natural Resources (Muskoka PC)
 Newman, B. (Windsor-Walkerville L)
 Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
 Norton, Hon. K.; Minister of Community and Social Services
 (Kingston and the Islands PC)
 Peterson, D. (London Centre L)
 Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
 Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
 Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
 Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)
 Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
 Snow, Hon. J. W.; Minister of Transportation and Communications (Oakville PC)
 Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
 Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
 Stong, A. (York Centre L)
 Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)
 Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)
 Timbrell, Hon. D. R.; Minister of Health (Don Mills PC)
 Van Horne, R. (London North L)
 Villeneuve, O. F. (Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry PC)

Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)

Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)

Wells, Hon. T. L.; Minister of Education (Scarborough North PC)

Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament
Thursday, March 2, 1978
Evening Sitting

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(continued)

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, this is the traditional time in the debate in the Throne Speech where one pays some sort of a compliment, if that is possible, to the Speaker of the House. In this case, I can most certainly say that any accolades which the members would make about this present Speaker certainly are not just so much traditional hot air or platitudes, as the previous speaker mentioned this afternoon, but they are well earned and well deserved.

I might say to this House that the thing I appreciate most about this Speaker is the way in which at the drop of a hat or at a moment's notice he can whip up the most tremendous outdoor meal of barbecued chicken.

Mr. Nixon: I guess that's not available to all the members.

Mr. Foulds: That was in one of his former lives.

Mr. Nixon: Eating with socialists, eh?

Mr. Bounsall: He has threatened to set this up in the Speaker's apartment here, and I would wish he would carry through that threat. It is superbly barbecued chicken, much better and much tastier than I have had the opportunity to eat at some other establishments very nearby, I might say

Mr. Speaker: Just to clarify matters, I think the hon. member should mention he got that kind of hospitality in Schreiber, and not in Toronto.

Mr. Bounsall: It was in Schreiber, indeed.

Mr. Nixon: I have been in Schreiber, and I didn't get any chicken dinner.

Mr. Foulds: Anybody who wants to go to Schreiber is welcome.

Mr. Bounsall: This was before I had become a member. I had met the hon. Speaker on several occasions and found myself passing through Schreiber mid-afternoon one day. I said, "There can't be that many Jack Stokeses resident in Schreiber," and sure enough, there was only one. He and his lovely wife produced a very delicious meal on short notice. The Speaker said to me that night: "Would you like to go out on a couple of constituency cases with me to see what the life is like?" And I said yes. We got in his car; it was 6:30. We got back at 11:30. We had put 270 miles on his car, visiting three constituents briefly. I think the Speaker has maybe forgotten that. I was thankful for his sake that there was no provincial policeman on the highway at the speed we had to travel to visit his three constituents.

Mr. Lewis: Shall I tell him about that ride we took down Highway 17 in the middle of winter?

Mr. Bounsall: No, it was in the middle of summer. We were sweltering.

The remarks I would like for a few moments to address myself to tonight concern the youth employment programs of this government; or, by and large, the lack thereof. The Experience '78 program is a disgrace—not in the programs, but at the rate of pay this government now proposes to pay these highly-educated students to work on our behalf in the summertime. We have increased the funding by $1.1 million over the Experience '77 program. That is fine; but the job proposals have increased from 11,492 to 13,500.

That large increase in jobs for that small amount of total increase in moneys to the program comes about by taking every one of those post-secondary job positions and placing them at the minimum wage rate. They were low enough at $3 last year; they should have been increased this year, and a reduction now takes place to $2.65—a minimum wage which, even when the increase comes in on August 1, still keeps the province of Ontario in the fourth lowest position in terms of the minimum wage in this province. That is a disgraceful position to put the summer students from our colleges and universities through this coming summer. We are ripping off their talent, and paying them only the minimum wage.

They have increased the funding in this program by 7.3 per cent, but the number of positions has gone up 17 per cent. This amounts to nothing more than a spreading of the poverty in this province, and does not in any way meet the financial needs of the students in the province of Ontario to return to their studies the following year. This year is a year in which we have a revised grant loan scheme coming into effect which, in terms of the reports from the Ministry of Colleges and Universities on the grant portion thereof, is going to apply stricter controls and tighter criteria. If there is any wonder why the University of Toronto has some concern about the number of students who are going to enrol this coming year, it is because of what is happening to the students' summer wages and what for most of them will be a drop in the student grant. It's a deliberate attack by this government on the students in the province of Ontario; you discourage them from further attending the university by means of the grant loan schemes you have devised, and by ensuring that they are paid less for the summer jobs. It is a total and utter disgrace.

I won't take the time tonight to talk in any great detail about the other two youth employment programs which this government has devised for the unemployed youth of this province. But let me tell you, if I was picking a way to increase employment for the youth of this province, I would think very seriously before I would put in the OCAP program an increase of 49 per cent in moneys to go to the OCAP and the OYEP programs—that is the $1 per hour subsidy for new jobs, to private employers—with a predicted increase of jobs at 56 per cent. Even in these programs, funding goes up 49 per cent, the job expectations 56 per cent. Again, the recipients of these jobs will be in a worse position than were people in these jobs a year ago. Again, another sharing of poverty in your employment programs this summer for the youth of the province of Ontario.

I might say that some of that OCAP money should certainly go into ensuring two things, something which this government has not done in the past to any great effect. One is to ensure that the training of people on OCAP programs is in fact, taking place. I have heard, not from my own community in Windsor but from across Ontario in my capacity as Colleges and Universities critic, about people getting OCAP jobs in which they have received little training and little supervision. That is supposed to be one of the goals of this program, and the government had better start taking it seriously.

It is going to pay them less than it paid them last year—the least it can do is ensure that in those jobs they get some training and that they get some supervision. In some of those jobs they do. It's clear in some, if not many, they do not.

Secondly, in those jobs taken by those OCAP students or OCAP youth, they are not replacing, as has become common practice at some institutions in our province, notably Niagara College, full-time employees who would ordinarily have to be employed full-time at those institutions. There are many examples of the OCAP program where that person supplied, particularly to a United Way agency, has in fact been a person they wouldn't otherwise have got. But in far too many instances, it's been the replacing of what would be a full-time person if they hadn't been approved under the OCAP program, and that practice should stop.

I want to turn to some remarks about the appalling pollution situation and concerns which are prevalent in Windsor, particularly the west side. As a start to my remarks, I'd just like to remind the House of a fact which I have told it before, that in late 1966 a federal health study reported that living in the west side of Windsor and across from the heavy pollutant factories in Michigan—and 85 per cent of the wind direction is towards Windsor from that particular industrial area—living in the west side of Windsor was equivalent to smoking 46 cigarettes a day. That's in excess of two packs of cigarettes a day.

Commensurate with that study was the very careful statistical analysis done some years previously by Professor Linus Pauling, of which I'm sure we are all aware, who indicated, taking the United States as his sample, that smoking two packs of cigarettes a day for 20 years, on the average, knocks six years off one's life expectancy. So we have in the city of Windsor on cross-boundary pollution a situation where if one is born, exists, grows up and lives in the west side of the city—which is the majority of my riding—for 20 years, one will have, on the average, six years knocked off his life expectancy. That's an appalling situation.

Some improvement has taken place since the late 1960s, but this week the local office of the International Joint Commission issued a report to this effect, that the air pollution monitored in Sarnia and in Windsor over a five-year period showed improvement. However, in 1976 there were some increases in maximum levels of certain pollutants in Windsor, as well as increases in the number of incidents of pollution that exceeded the IJC objectives. The study was not able to say definitely whether the 1976 figures represent another trend, the beginning of a trend for the worse in the Windsor area, which is certainly bad enough as it is, but the authors warn both levels of government to be aware of sources of this increased pollution and to monitor changes more carefully, with more sites of monitoring to implement specific remedial programs where necessary.

The study concludes that unless there are some significant efforts on the part of the Ministry of the Environment here in Ontario the overall IJC objectives that were set to be met by the end of this year, 1978, will not be met, and the government can in no way relax its surveillance nor should it be allowed to relax its objectives.

[8:15]

As one of the authors of the IJC report said: "We feel government"—meaning the Ontario government—"should make sure that stringent enforcement is in place to meet the IJC objectives." Something of great concern to the authors of this report are the figures and the incidences and the locations of increased pollution in the Windsor area, which is already sufficient to knock six years off your life expectancy if you live there for one 20 year stretch.

With respect to further pollution in the area, of continuing concern all last fall was the chance that Peerless Cement, situated on the Detroit River, again in the very centre of the prevailing wind from the west that blows this heavy industrial pollutant on to the west side of Windsor, would have approved by the Wayne county board of health, with support from the Ministry of the Environment of Ontario, the burning of PCBs in that cement kiln. We had to depend, finally, on the Wayne county board of health—not on Ontario's Ministry of the Environment—to protect the west side of Windsor; the ministry were giving their go-ahead and approval of it. We had to depend on the Wayne county board of health and the city council of Detroit, Michigan, to prevent the Peerless Cement company going ahead with the burning of those PCBs.

I would just like to indicate what has been determined by Environment Canada and the city of Windsor in some of these regards. The Environment Canada report of two years ago did indicate that the burning of PCBs and other chlorinated hydrocarbons can be accomplished in a cement type kiln if the kiln can be operated under steady state conditions. But that is the big "if." As a chemical engineer and knowing plant processes and plant production, I can tell the members of this House that you cannot ever assure continuous steady state conditions to operate in any industrial plant.

Do we have to depend upon that to ensure that no PCBs get into our atmosphere on the west side of Windsor? No way. We couldn't count on our Ministry of the Environment here to protect the residents in the west side of Windsor. What are appropriate facilities if cement kilns aren't?

It is very interesting that there has come to light a company called Rollins Environmental Services, operating in the eastern and southern United States in areas where there is very little population. They have incinerators that are specifically designed to burn PCBs and other chlorinated hydrocarbons that are steady state in their operation and have extensive backup systems to make sure that the operation is as fail-safe as possible.

If we want to dispose of that very thorny problem—how to dispose of PCBs that are accumulating mainly in our transformer oils in the province—this is the sort of system which we should be encouraging to be built somewhere. It should not be near any metropolitan area, such as Peerless Cement opposite Windsor, or the St. Lawrence Cement Company in Mississauga, but should be built in a non-builtup area that has a steady state operation and this extensive backup system. Any second-best technology for disposal of this dangerous chemical is simply not good enough for the residents of this province. I suggest they could best be built in either Brant, Oxford or Norfolk counties.

Mr. Kerrio: Or all three.

Mr. Bounsall: Or all three—one in each county. In deference to the member who comes from that area, who has been rather quiet here tonight.

Mr. Nixon: You leave it on Peche Island or Peach Island.

Mr. Bounsall: Maybe in Sarnia where the prevailing wind is the other way. However, I wouldn't wish that on our friends in the United States.

I could go on at great length upon my concerns about PCBs but I will go no further tonight.

I just want to end up with one other further point about the pollution in Windsor. There has been a proposal placed before Governor Milliken of the state of Michigan that due to the problem with coal supply for electrical generating facilities they do what the governor of Ohio has done—

Mr. Nixon: Is that Dusty Rhodes?

Mr. Bounsall: —and that is to suspend, possibly to relax or even totally suspend temporarily, the pollution control and standards for electrical generating facilities.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, one of the major sources of pollution on the west side of Windsor is the Detroit-Edison coal-fired generating station directly across the river and in the centre of that industrial complex. This proposal would pour even more pollution on the west side of Windsor; and the Ministry of the Environment had better be in there this time saying to Governor Milliken, "you don't do it," and defend the residents of the west side of Windsor, two-thirds of whom live in my riding. "You don't do it just for the simple health reasons." But the second reason is, "You don't even conserve coal, of which there is a shortage, by relaxing the controls. In fact, it's the reverse. You put back into the system what you take out by your stack-cleaners. So it's the wrong way to go." The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) had better be saying to Governor Milliken today or tomorrow, "You dare not as a means of conserving coal, pour more pollution on the west side of the city of Windsor."

Mr. Kerrio: Now we're going to get it.

Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, it's a great pleasure to see the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk paying so much attention here.

Mr. Nixon: Well, let's get this straight. Is this your maiden speech or not? If it is we won't even interrupt.

Mr. Foulds: No, he's spoken before.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Whoever heard of a maiden?

Mr. Nixon: Well, with the hon. member it's appropriate.

Mr. Elgie: Manners I have never come to expect from you.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to make some remarks in reply to the Throne Speech. I would like on this occasion to congratulate you and your Deputy Speaker, incidentally an old friend of mine, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Edighoffer), for the very capable way you handle the affairs of the Legislature and the fair way in which you allow all of us to express our opinions, sometimes parochial, often partisan, but nevertheless you treat us all fairly.

Mr. Foulds: You said "parochial." Who is parochial and partisan, us or him?

Mr. Elgie: Hang on, it's a new word; the member will learn it soon.

In addition, I would like to join the other hon. members of this House in extending my congratulations to the new leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Cassidy). The hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) was sitting there a moment ago and I hardly noticed the difference.

An hon. member: Quite a compliment.

Mr. Foulds: You should get up on a point of privilege.

Mr. Elgie: Although in some respect I must say I enjoyed his contribution to the debate, I do wish he had spent less time reiterating the many challenges he sees facing Ontario and more time in putting forward realistic, practical and workable solutions. I would like to let him know that the problems we all appreciate; responsible answers are what we require. There are no easy solutions to the problems facing us, only intelligent choices, and this government is endeavouring to make those choices.

As for the leader of the official opposition (Mr. S. Smith), one can only express a certain degree of sympathy inasmuch as he must, almost on a daily basis, carry the albatross of his federal counterpart heavily on his shoulders while at the same time pretending they are the enemy.

Mr. Kerrio: Well, you can't be proud of Joe Whoever. What's his name anyway?

Mr. Elgie: At this juncture I am reminded of that famous Pogo cartoon when he said, "We have met the enemy and he is us." That's your enemy, my friends.

One must, however, give the official opposition full marks for the effort they put into attempting to disavow their federal brothers and sisters. But in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, I must say that after blowing out the candles on the cake and after cutting through the icing, there was a certain sensitive underlying substance to his remarks and I appreciated them.

Mr. Foulds: What?

Mr. Elgie: At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I also failed to congratulate the members of the Liberal Party on Mr. Trudeau's most recent definition of a Liberal as someone in the radical centre. Surely they must feel they are crowding what Jonathan Manthorpe has called the socialist Tories in that area.

Mr. Nixon: The extreme moderates.

Mr. Elgie: In any event, the Speech from the Throne, as on other occasions, got a mixed but in my view generally favourable reaction. As usual, editorials thundered, clamouring for more details about the government's programs, this in spite of the fact that for more than 100 years in this country, and even longer in the mother of parliaments in London, the Throne Speech was historically never designed to outline specifics but rather to indicate in very general terms the government's legislative program. This is as true here in Ontario with the Progressive Conservative government as it is in Saskatchewan with the NDP government as it is in Ottawa, where the Liberal Party temporarily reigns supreme.

Still, this Speech from the Throne was in my view an important one, as much for the absence of large new spending programs as it was for the presence of some very sensitive, much-needed programs recognizing the needs of special education and of the need to recognize the rights of children in this society.

In many ways, the Speech from the Throne in my view captured the mood of Ontario today. It reflected the public demand to control public spending, to lessen the impact of government in the daily lives of people, to strengthen private sector activity while still restraining the growth of government bureaucracy.

There will, of course, be some who will say that the government is doing nothing or not doing enough.

Mr. Nixon: Any sensible person would say that.

Mr. Elgie: But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there are a lot more people who believe that governments are already attempting to do too much and that this government is in the forefront—

Mr. Foulds: Doing yourselves out of a job.

Mr. Elgie: —of the effort to reduce extravagant government spending and inappropriate involvement in the lives of citizens in this province.

On the whole, the Speech from the Throne proposes several imaginative programs, programs that are affordable and that should not further jeopardize the economic situation of this province.

There are a couple of areas mentioned in the Throne Speech upon which I would like to comment. I particularly want to commend the government for its intention to increase support for and its emphasis on special education.

There are few families in this country or in this province which are not in some way touched with the problem of learning difficulties of one sort or another. If we consider ours to be a humanitarian society, a society which prides itself in helping the disadvantaged, then I can think of few other ways to express our compassion than to make it possible for those who have a disability also to have an opportunity for an appropriate education—an education which although it may not promise an equal outcome and although it may not promise to enable all children to learn at the same rate or even to attain the same level of learning, does safeguard the quality and the appropriateness of that education.

The Throne Speech has promised to set aside additional funds for this purpose, to place more emphasis on the early identification of children with learning disabilities and to ensure that all boards provide appropriate levels of service for students within their jurisdiction and, as the speech declared, regardless of their disabilities and handicaps.

The government has also indicated that it will establish a demonstration school for a limited number of children with severe learning disabilities who require services which can only be provided in a residential facility. There is a need for this sort of project, both to fill the educational needs of some children with learning disabilities who require this type of care and to provide a teacher training centre to prepare teachers for the task of providing and/or upgrading their own local school board programs.

All of this is exceptionally noteworthy and commendable, as far as it goes. Yet I look upon it as only a beginning, albeit an important one, and I would be greatly disappointed if we were not able over the next few years to assure more in the way of individualized educational programs which are appropriate to the needs of individual children, including the gifted children.

[8:30]

At this point I would like once again to stress the fact that in my view, as more local school boards develop or upgrade their own learning disability programs over the years ahead, it is anticipated that the number of children requiring this special residential facility will diminish and in time only the most severely learning disabled students or perhaps some from the smaller population areas of the province would require such a special program. I again commend the government and the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) for this substantial step forward in placing greater attention on the areas of special education in this province.

There is another area relating to the special needs of children that I would like to comment on briefly, and this is the subject of child abuse. Again we find mentioned in the Throne Speech new government action respecting the rights of children. The government has pledged to bring forward the recommendations of a consultation paper on children's services and particularly to take firmer steps in protecting children against the increasing problem of violence and physical abuse. I know I speak for the entire Legislature when I commend the government and the minister sincerely for proposing these strong positions on this important problem. Even then, I wonder if we have gone as far as we should in this respect.

It seems to me that perhaps we should be taking a further step, a step that could effectively give children the right of access to civil action against the abuser whether that be a parent or be it someone else. In the final analysis, we as legislators and this Legislature, which is responsible for determining the law, must take every measure possible to curtail the abuse and make extremely severe the penalty for all who would indulge consciously or unconsciously in the deplorable habit of abusing and violating children. Towards this end, I will be introducing later in the session a private member's bill regarding the civil consequences arising from child abuse. I look forward to an earnest and concerned discussion of this problem by this House at that time.

I realize that politics by its very nature is a very partisan business. One cannot be here day after day without realizing that. Yet there are occasions—maybe not all that often—when partisanship and party loyalties ought to give way to a general recognition of the efforts of a government to represent this province in a forceful and decisive manner. Such an occasion, I submit, was the Premier's (Mr. Davis) activity at the recent first ministers' conference in Ottawa because, let's face it, without Ontario's program for economic recovery, very little else was put forward at the meeting that was worthwhile and meaningful.

The Premier's plan as outlined in the document, An Economic Development Policy for Canada, was a major discussion paper. The fact that nine of the major proposals were contained in the communique released at the conclusion of the conference speaks for itself. I believe that what helped to focus the main attention on the Ontario contribution was not only the imaginative and sensible suggestions put forward by the Premier, but the fact that Ontario's concern about the economy was not limited to this province alone but rather showed a remarkable knowledge about, recognition of and concern for the difficulties of other parts of the country as they faced them.

Surely no one in this Legislature would oppose the recommendation of establishing a national council on the economy or that governments should hold the growth of public spending below the growth of the economy or that the federal government should give priority to the improvement of manpower training programs. These are only some of the more specific suggestions the Premier brought up at that conference.

Mr. Kerrio: You're experts on the big spender's side, I'll tell you.

Mr. Elgie: As long as you're not the big buyer.

Mr. Kerrio: Tell us about balancing the budget.

Mr. Elgie: The member for Niagara Falls should meet one of my children. They have a lovely saying for things like this: Stifle it. That's their lovely phrase.

Mr. Kerrio: Oh, that's right. I buy that. That's all you people over there can talk about.

Mr. Elgie: I believe the Premier deserves the applause of all members of this House. Hopefully, the federal government will respond in a positive fashion to his recommendation. As he told the conference: "Let us shed the old competitive unproductive ways. Let us commit ourselves to genuine consultation on economic issues. In this way, Canadians can be confident that our efforts will ensure that all will share in Canada's potential for prosperity."

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you, as others have done on numerous occasions during this debate, that your presence in the chair is certainly a welcome one. I congratulate both the Speaker (Mr. Stokes) and the Deputy Speaker (Mr. Edighoffer) for their adroitness in the chair in trying to handle what is obviously, at times at least, a rather unruly crowd in here. I know that is difficult from time to time, but certainly both gentlemen do an admirable job in that respect and I pay tribute to you and wish you well in the office.

Mr. Conway: One room-mate to another.

An hon. member: Not all of them applauded.

Mr. Nixon: What is going on here?

Mr. Gaunt: I just wanted to take a few moments to put some views on the record with respect to some parochial problems and then perhaps with respect to the Throne Speech, such as it was.

First of all, as far as the Throne Speech is concerned, I think one would have to say that it really boiled down to a hymn of hope for a senile government. There weren't really many new ideas. Any of the new ideas in it came from the Liberal side of the House.

Mr. Nixon: Right.

Interjections.

Mr. Gaunt: We don't mind the government stealing our platform—

Mr. Lewis: Or for that matter, your senility.

Mr. Gaunt: Actually they are more inclined to steal the latter, than the former.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I never stole an idea in my life.

Mr. Nixon: You never had an idea—even your own.

Mr. Kerrio: Bob Elgie did.

Mr. Lewis: The way you were rattling on, mumbling to yourself and someone else, while Bob was speaking, one began to think of senility.

Mr. Gaunt: In any event, I can't help but feel the Premier (Mr. Davis) is having a little difficulty getting his act together over there. I am sure that come evening he gets down on one knee and gives thanks for his enemies and asks for protection against his friends—

Mr. Lewis: What is he going to do with the other knee?

Mr. Gaunt: He saves that for another day—because I'm reminded that during the swearing-in ceremony of the new cabinet ministers, no sooner had the swearing-in been completed than the new Minister of the Environment, the member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. McCague), rushed out to tell the press that as far as he was concerned, the pollution laws in this province were just too stiff—

Mr. Nixon: Oh, he's a bear for publicity.

Mr. Gaunt: —I think his words were "plenty stiff"—and that the whole pollution laws in this province were of such a nature that we had over-regulation in the environment.

Mr. Samis: Take him to Hawkesbury some day.

Mr. Gaunt: Really it seems to me that hardly is government policy established before one of the ministers over there renounces it. In terms of the environment I want to say to the minister that in my view when one has to read, as we did last summer, that 160 lakes and rivers in the province of Ontario have been shown to show contamination to the point that we are advised not to eat the fish, then I say I don't think we're over-regulated in terms of the environment at all.

Further, I just quote again from my opening remarks to the former minister on November 28, 1977, during his estimates when I said—and I'm talking about the pulp and paper industry here and the fact that the government has been so slow in cleaning it up: "For example, your ministry allowed Great Lakes Paper in Thunder Bay to discharge 68,775 kilograms of organic substances each day during 1976. This represents a concentration of 500 parts per million, twice as concentrated as raw human sewage."

Mr. Kerrio: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Gaunt: "Abitibi Paper Company in Thunder Bay was allowed to discharge 39,220 kilograms of organic substances a day, an equivalent of 250 parts per million. In this case, reported data showed that the plant was not able to meet even these generous effluent allowances from the ministry. In fact, it discharged 64,500 kilograms a day, or an equivalent of 410 parts per million, of organic substances during that year. That is almost twice the concentration of raw human sewage." I don't think that sounds like a province that's over-regulated or a province where pollution laws are "plenty stiff," to quote the minister.

Then, on the same occasion, the same day, the new Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz), had barely finished swearing his oath before he proclaimed that Ontario was going to have to rely on nuclear energy to a greater and greater extent; unless we are prepared, I think he said, to accept a declining standard of living. I found that curious, because I thought that was what the Porter commission was all about and I thought that was what the select committee of this Legislature was all about, to determine whether the emphasis of Ontario Hydro and the Ministry of Energy was correct with respect to nuclear power and nuclear development over the next 15 or 20 years.

I presume from the hon. minister's comments that he wants to pre-empt the committee and the Porter commission and bring in his own views and place them on the public record to indicate that he's in favour of relying more and more on the nuclear energy generating system in this province. I don't personally agree with that and I think that the Porter commission findings, without really knowing what they'll be, will find some deficiencies in that particular approach. I hope the select committee will also have a different view from that expressed by the minister in that respect.

Then, of course, there was the latest one. It was the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller), my good friend, who said that he was in favour of selling off cottage lots to foreigners. Then he backpedalled on that one and said: "The cabinet hasn't really arrived at a decision."

Mr. Warner: He got lost in the woods.

Mr. Gaunt: Then he came in today and indicated that these lots would be leased to foreigners. I say to the government that somewhere along the line I think the Premier (Mr. Davis) is going to have to pull a collection of the ministers over there together and give them a little talking to and get things straightened out, because that's not the kind of policy emphasis—

Mr. Foulds: Away in the forest.

Mr. Gaunt: —that we should be getting in this province. It's not the kind of leadership that we should be getting at this particular time in our history.

Mr. Ruston: There's no leadership over there.

Mr. Gaunt: I think that the government, while it is an aged government and while it's been in power for a long time, can certainly do better than it has been doing in the three instances I've cited.

Mr. Nixon: Too long in power.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There's more to come.

Mr. Gaunt: I want to talk about two local issues, although they do have provincial ramifications. The first one with which I want to deal has to do with the proposal of the Colleges of Nurses wherein the college is advancing a proposal whereby nurses in this province are going to have to work for a period of 50 days during one year over a period of five years in order to maintain their certificates, otherwise they'll be deemed to be incompetent.

I think that proposal has many deficiencies. Certainly, the nurses with whom I have spoken and the organization with which I'm dealing in our part of the country is very adamantly opposed to that proposal and I know that they are making representation to the college on that matter.

[8:45]

It seems to me that it's most unreasonable and completely unrealistic to advance a proposal like this at a time when we have a surplus of nurses in the province and when it's very difficult, particularly in rural areas of this province, to get a job at a local hospital or in a nursing home. Because of the health cutbacks, the hospitals are curtailing their staffs.

One hospital alone in my area, the Kincardine General Hospital, has on file a list of 200 nurses who have applied for part- or full-time positions at that hospital but who are unable to get any positions. There is just no movement of staff; if there is movement, it is usually attritional, whereby if someone retires or quits, the position isn't filled because the hospital has to live within certain budgetary constraints now that the ministry is cutting back.

Under those conditions, what does one do? What does a nurse in the province of Ontario do in those circumstances? If the nurse happens to be a young graduate nurse and is unattached, in all likelihood she will go to another province or to another country, as many of them have done in recent months. With this proposal, if they came back in two or three years, they wouldn't be allowed to nurse in this province. Their certificate would be of no value to them in this province unless they went back and took a refresher course at a community college. I believe the refresher course proposed is something in the neighbourhood of 18 months. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the total course is only 24 months and the college is talking about a refresher course of 18 months, which seems quite unrealistic to me.

Mr. Nixon: Right.

Mr. Gaunt: I hope the college in this province will review that. When they get all the ideas from the nurses across the province, with all the objections and alternative proposals, I hope they will reject the proposal and come in with a new one that would be more workable, particularly if it includes a provision to give nurses who have gone out of nursing for various reasons—maybe they couldn't get a job here or they wanted to quit for a period of time and raise a family, both legitimate reasons—a refresher course right in their own setting, in the hospital setting. The length of time of the refresher course could vary, but I would suspect that perhaps a four- or five-week refresher course would be more in keeping with maintaining a nurse's knowledge of new techniques and new technologies constantly coming in and being developed from time to time.

In any event, I do hope that when the college votes on March 15 it will take into account these various points, because they have been made very strongly in discussions with myself and, I am sure, with other members from rural areas particularly.

The other matter that is somewhat local is the fact that our police are rather unhappy with Bills 113 and 114. I understand the genesis of these bills and the fact that we did have problems in Metropolitan Toronto. We had two commission reports which dealt with these problems and with the fact that citizens basically don't have a clear-cut channel through which they can voice their complaints in relation to how police treat them in the course of their duties.

I suggest to you that Bills 113 and 114 overcompensate in that respect. I think they go too far the other way and really take away from the police most of their rights as citizens. After all, policemen are citizens too, and they are charged with the protection of all the rest of us as citizens.

I suggest that there is a very fine line between a free, democratic state and a police state. It is a question of maintaining a balance, somewhere in the middle. I suggest that Bill 114 has gone too far the other way.

Back a few years ago we had Bill 99 that resulted in the resignation of the then Attorney General, Mr. Cass, because the legislation which he advanced was too pro-police; it was too much of a police state. I suggest that perhaps this legislation is too much the other way and that there has to be a middle ground.

I think there are some sections in this bill that really violate the rights of the police. I can think of the sections dealing with suspension without pay prior to final appeal and so on; and the fact that a citizen or a police chief can bring a proceeding against a police officer up to 18 months after the alleged act has taken place. I think that's just a little unfair, and I would hope that the now Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr) would certainly step up the consultation process with the police associations, with the police chiefs across the province, to come in with a better piece of legislation, which is more acceptable to the police and at the same time will accomplish the purpose for which the original was intended.

Just a brief word about the economy and the fact that it appears to me to be the most pressing issue facing us at the moment, both provincially and federally. I think the Throne Speech shows a lack of imagination in dealing with the economy. I am not an economist but the people with whom I speak who are knowledgeable in this area tell me that the cycles are intensifying. The upturns aren't as pronounced and the downturns are coming closer and closer together and are intensifying in nature, which is rather disturbing. It seems to point up the fact that instability is growing and the recoveries are becoming less pronounced and shorter in duration.

I suppose that as far as governments are concerned, the traditional approaches these last two or three years haven't been working because there are so many new ingredients in the mix now which weren't there a number of years ago. The theories that government should pump more money into the system when things start to slow down and that this automatically helps unemployment, automatically assists inflation, apparently are not valid now. The traditional methods of remedy are not working anymore.

I guess there comes a point when the burden of debt becomes unsustainable, and that's really the problem facing governments at all levels, municipal, provincial and federal. There is only so far one can go as a government in mortgaging the future.

The fact of the matter is that interest has to be paid on that debt. It's got to come out of the taxpayers in one form or another. I suppose unless the matter is cured by policy—which hopefully it will be; and that policy will have to be different, now, from the traditional policy approaches when this has happened, that is to say high unemployment and rising inflation—then the only other remedy, heaven help us, is the natural remedy of a currency collapse, and we all hope that that won't happen.

I was interested to read an article which indicated the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has done a study, asking I suppose whether or not there would be any cost benefit from pumping of more money into the provincial economy, and hence going further in debt. The study, I gather, according to the Globe and Mail of yesterday, indicated that this approach would be counter-productive; that the circumstances now are quite different than they have been before, during the post-war years, and that the only thing that would happen would be that the unemployment insurance payouts would be cut. But other than that, there would be no dramatic turn-around and no direct cost benefit to the economy in terms of additional employment opportunities or reduced inflation.

The Keynes method of stimulating the economy in a depression was known as pump-priming and it increased the money in circulation.

Mr. Conway: I thought John Maynard Keynes was dead.

Mr. Gaunt: He's dead, but some of his theories still live.

Mr. Conway: On to a new life.

Mr. Gaunt: But in any event, I think the conventional wisdom in this regard is now being substantially altered by some of the economists who feel, as I've said before, that that would certainly be counter-productive. The fact is that if one does that, then almost all of the money which goes into the system comes into existence as debt requiring interest; and this is the prime cause of inflation so we just go around the hoop once again.

I think what the government has to do is stop treating this problem in the traditional way and use some new approaches. I think the new approaches the government can use in this respect are many and varied.

One of the things that seems to me to be fairly obvious is that the government should abandon all of the, what I would term "choking taxes" which we have in place today. I think that's one method of treating the problem.

Another method is to stress and have a major emphasis with respect to conservation and renewable energy development. Just let me deal with one point in that particular matter, renewable energy. Let me deal with solar energy specifically, because yesterday I went over the Royal Commission on Electric Power planning and I got a publication called Legislative and Governmental Action Bearing on the Development of a Solar Heating Alternative. I found it most interesting.

[9:00]

For instance, they say here: "The purpose of this study is to examine the legislative and governmental barriers to the rapid development and implementation of solar energy as a viable alternative to conventional energy resources for space and water heating. Taken over all, about one-third of all energy used in Canada goes to heating, another third to transportation and the balance to other uses, including industrial and public utility power generation.

"In the past 15 years residential space heating in Ontario provided by electricity has increased from one per cent to 25 per cent in all newly constructed homes. Of the alternative energy resources available, solar energy appears to offer the best prospects for rapid development. An adequate technology exists, and the economics in terms of life-cycle cost are near the balance point with fossil fuels and electrical alternatives. The utilization of solar energy is presently controlled by laws and regulations that were written at a time when the potential for solar heating was not fully recognized."

I think this is the point at which the government should now move in and make our laws and regulations more attractive for the development of this kind of renewable energy. For instance, I think one of the alternatives that is put forward in this publication is the fact that the incentive most likely to have the most beneficial impact over the lifetime of a solar heating system is a property tax exemption from all equipment included in the system.

It mentions here that in order to improve the front-end costs other incentives must also be legislated. "Some of these can be included in the tax structure in the form of tax credits or deductions; and others may be outside the tax system as guaranteed loans, low cost loans, and direct government subsidies."

There are many things we can do in this respect. There are things that can be done. The most obvious is to remove the solar heating system from property tax assessment. As it stands now, anyone who puts in a solar heating system in a residence has that assessed and the value of the property goes up accordingly. I think that is a disincentive for people to install this kind of system. At a time when we are trying to emphasize conservation and at a time when we are trying to encourage movement on the part of the general public toward conservation and toward renewable energy resources, it certainly behoves the government to move in and try to develop not only solar energy but wind energy and other forms of technology in this particular area.

There are great opportunities, for instance, for solar and wind generation on the farms across this province. Farmers could cut their hydro bill by at least 50 per cent if they were encouraged to get into this kind of technology and generate part of their own electrical power right on their own farm. It is a decentralized system; it is a system where the technology is already available. It just needs encouragement and development. The role of government should be to remove all of the existing barriers, where such a move could be politically and publicly acceptable, and legislate incentives insofar as it is able to put solar energy and all forms of renewable energy in a favourable position.

I think I have taken long enough, but I did want to put a few of these observations on the record tonight.

Mr. Davison: May I add my congratulations, Mr. Speaker, to those of the other members of the House on the fine job you are doing as Speaker and say you are a very good example of what a worker can do when he is put in charge of the store.

Mr. Conway: Tell me why is it a worker can't become leader of the NDP?

Mr. Davison: The member for Renfrew North is the last person who should ask.

Mr. Conway: He can answer that one later.

Mr. Samis: Do you have to be a lawyer to be a federal Liberal?

Mr. Lewis: What in God's name do you know about the meaning of work, you academic hotshot you?

Interjections.

Mr. Conway: I don't profess to be any different.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come off it.

Mr. Samis: You are not.

Mr. Lewis: You are not. You are a hustling prima donna, you are. You dare to talk about the working classes.

Mr. Speaker: Meanwhile, back to the debate.

Mr. Lewis: An elitist over here who harasses the virtue of this side of the House.

Mr. Conway: You called someone else a hustler.

Mr. Lewis: I did not. That's just your own sense of yourself coming to the fore.

Mr. Conway: What a hustling huckster you are.

Mr. G. I. Miller: He's learning fast.

Mr. Davison: You really should be on the back bench. While we are here—

An hon. member: What do you want to say?

Mr. Ruston: Good speech. You can sit down now.

Mr. Davison: —to discuss the Throne Speech tonight, I'll try to be a little less controversial—

Mr. Lewis: Go back and read about Sir Sanfield Macdonald or whatever his name was.

Mr. Conway: Another Deans man unhappy.

Mr. Davidson: —and simply extend my empathy to the Lieutenant Governor, because I suspect there are a few people in the province who think that she is the one responsible for this speech that was read on February 21. Personally, I think it was in very poor taste of the government to embarrass the Lieutenant Governor in such a way by giving her such a speech to read.

The speech, on the first page, says that the most crucial challenges are of an economic nature. Then it goes on to spend 25 pages saying that the government has no idea as to how we are to meet these challenges in the future; and that is indeed an embarrassment to which the Lieutenant Governor shouldn't have been put.

It would be bad enough if the government simply failed to create enough jobs to match the rising rate of unemployment, and it would be bad enough if the government just simply sat in a corner sucking its thumb waiting for things to fix themselves; but the government has actually gone out of its way to create unemployment.

I think the latest word from the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) is a pretty good example of that policy of creating unemployment. I am referring to the health cost restraint program he has instituted. The Minister of Health, acting in his capacity as lap dog for the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), has put forward a proposal for a 4.5 per cent increase, as he calls it, in hospital operating budgets. Then he has gone on to adopt the Treasurer's rather bizarre logic to prove that an increase on paper of 4.5 per cent at a time when inflation is running at nine per cent is a real increase. It is about time the Treasurer realized he can't fool the people so easily and that no matter how much paper the government heaps on this issue it can't hide the reality of the fact that we are currently facing major cutbacks in the health area.

From 60 to 80 per cent of those costs for the operating budgets of a hospital go for wages and salaries. When one adds these cutbacks in real dollars to the rapidly rising costs of energy and other services and goods needed in the hospital, there is only one answer and that is layoffs. If the Treasurer, the Minister of Health and the government think there is another answer, then they are terribly wrong and they are living in a mostly fantasy world. It would be the kind of world where on March 7 the Treasurer would walk in here in the evening on budget night and prove on paper that in Ontario we do have full employment, that there is no inflation and that there is a budgetary surplus; and that is not real.

In Hamilton, look at the effects that are going to be caused. The Chedoke Hospital in Hamilton has received one of the government's more generous alleged increases of 5.3 per cent. Today the hospital's administrator of finance said that staff would definitely be reduced as a result of that cutback. The executive director of McMaster University medical centre has said that as a result of their 4.31 per cent purported increase the public would have to expect somewhat less in the way of service. The situation of other hospitals in Hamilton and in Ontario is not any better. This program is not an oddity, off by itself in a corner; unfortunately, it is a common example of what the government is doing. I would say to them that I would hope they would reconsider their current policy in this field; if they can't move themselves to find real solutions to the problem of unemployment, at least they should stop making the problem worse. If you can't be part of the solution, at least you could quit causing part of the problem.

Another of the promises in the Throne Speech that rather interested me was the commitment of the government to bring compulsory auto insurance into Ontario by December 1979. There are a lot of serious problems involved in the whole area of auto insurance in Ontario. One of those, of course, is the fact that currently in Ontario it's possible to purchase a valid licence plate and to drive a car without insurance. You don't have to show proof of insurance when you're getting your licence plate in Ontario. You simply need to put down $100 and take the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund route, which provides absolutely no insurance protection to the driver; however, he can legally drive on the road.

Under this scheme, the problem is that not only do the uninsured driver and his or her victim suffer injuries and hardships as a result of any accident, but they also suffer real financial consequences. Those consequences are not only faced by the uninsured driver, whose life could well be ruined by causing or by being responsible for a major accident, but they also affect the insured victim of such an accident because our auto insurance companies, being what they are in Ontario, frequently use such an excuse to justify increases in that person's insurance rates.

Over the years, a number of people have made a very strong case for compulsory auto insurance in Ontario. The government, after years of an inexcusable if masterly course of ignoring the situation and being totally inactive, has finally come to promise that we're going to have compulsory auto insurance in Ontario by December 1979. I suppose it's better late than never. It seems to me that's about the most common form of praise offered the government, not only by the opposition but by anybody in Ontario, and in this case it's the best we can do.

However, compulsory auto insurance in Ontario will present new problems for the consumers, because if the only step that's taken is the introduction of compulsory auto insurance, consumers in Ontario will be at the mercy of the auto insurance companies. Frankly, mercy is not the quality that jumps to mind when I think of automobile insurance.

I think all the members of the House will remember that it was just last year that the AIB ordered Allstate Insurance to pay back $15 million that it had ripped the consumers off for. Allstate, in its usual sensitive fashion, said: "No, we're not going to do that—unless, of course, these people that we've ripped off will renew their policies." I don't see how any member of the House could have a great deal of faith in Allstate Insurance. If members of the government think that simply by the introduction of compulsory auto insurance the consumers of Ontario will be in safe hands, they have another think coming.

It is readily apparent to me that there's a need for more than just compulsory auto insurance in Ontario. If the consumers of Ontario are going to have adequate and affordable auto insurance, then in Ontario we have to adopt a public auto insurance scheme. The select committee on company law recently had a report submitted to it by Woods, Gordon and Company. It shows that such a public auto insurance scheme in Ontario would save the consumers $50 million.

[9:15]

The reason is very simple. Public auto insurance is more efficient. Conservatives and Liberals have an almost Pavlovian reaction to the question of public auto insurance; the reaction is that government cannot do anything efficiently, they cannot do anything more efficiently than the private sector. Perhaps that is a bit of an over-simplification on my part, it is a bit more complex than that.

The Liberals say that the provincial Conservative government cannot do anything efficiently and the Conservatives say that the federal Liberal government cannot do anything efficiently. I suspect there is more than a little truth to both sides of the story, as an impartial observer I would say that they are both right. Neither the Liberal Party nor the Conservative Party can do it efficiently and neither of them should be running either of those stores.

Fortunately, more and more people, it seems, are beginning to agree with that position. It was the New Democratic Party, of course, that brought public auto insurance to Canada, that instituted the three public auto insurance schemes in western Canada, in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Because those plans are more efficient and because those plans save consumers money, they were well received and are still well received in those three provinces. It is rather interesting to note that even when the New Democratic Party has been temporarily out of power in those provinces, neither the Conservative government in Manitoba, the Liberal government in Saskatchewan, or the Liberal-Conservative coalition that masquerades as the Social Credit in BC have dared to remove those schemes, because the public likes them.

I think that speaks very loudly in favour of public auto insurance. Public auto insurance is so superior to private insurance because it is more efficient. For example, excessive commissions paid to agents, duplication of services, complex rating systems, useless advertising expenditures, legal costs resulting from conflicts between insurance companies—not to mention pure greed—all contribute to the very high administrative costs in the private sector, whereas public auto insurance reduces the costs in all of these areas.

The high-volume sales reduce the selling cost of the policy; claims adjustment can be done more efficiently in centres that arrange for repairs in less than an hour, compared with days and even weeks in Ontario; the rating categories are simplified; wasteful competitive advertising of identical policies is eliminated; and because everyone has the same insurance company legal costs resulting from intra-industry conflicts are reduced.

In Manitoba, for example, in 1975, the overhead in the Manitoba plan was 17.7 per cent. At the same time in Ontario, according to the figures for the private sector—which, if anything, I suspect, are low—the average overhead figure was 31 per cent. That means, when allowances were made for taking a profit and for premium returns to the plan, in Ontario for $100 of actual insurance coverage the consumer had to pay $148.55, while in Manitoba for $100 of actual coverage the consumer had to pay $116.28. That's a cost saving on $100 of actual insurance of $32.27 or 21.7 per cent compared with Ontario. Or if we invert the statistics, the coverage is 27.8 per cent more expensive in Ontario than it is in Manitoba. The cost figures alone justify public auto insurance.

The New Democratic Party, like most people in Ontario, thinks it is time that we, the consumer, stop paying so much money for auto insurance. The waste, the fat, the inefficiency in this system have to be done away with. That's why this party is committed today, as it has been for many years, to bringing about in Ontario a public auto insurance plan, and I would hope that the government would finally rid itself—

Hon. Mr. Snow: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Davison: I won't hold my breath, but I would hope that the government would finally get out of its fundamentalist doctrinaire approach on the issue of public auto insurance and bring in the kind of scheme we need in Ontario. If you don't, then the hon. members have to accept the responsibility for the giant rip-off that is taking place in the private auto insurance sector in Ontario. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry.

Mr. Cassidy: An historic event; bravo.

Mr. Villeneuve: Mr. Speaker, my thanks to you for the courtesy you have shown to all segments of this Legislature, in your fair-mindedness and approach in presiding over this assembly. Also I want to add the same sentiments to the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Germa: Flattery will get you nowhere.

Mr. Villeneuve: Mr. Speaker, the initiatives outlined in the Speech from the Throne clearly show this government's commitment to the mood of Ontario citizens with respect to less government expenditures—

Mr. Cooke: More unemployment.

Mr. Villeneuve: —and less interference with people's day-to-day lives.

This government has accomplished a great deal in the province and will continue to do so. Our commitment to limiting the growth of government bureaucracy and to initiating policies and programs which provide for the basic needs of the citizens of Ontario, while keeping in mind the ability of the taxpayers to pay, will continue to provide the foundation of our policies as they always have been.

At present, we in the Ontario government are going through a process which will ultimately benefit the future development of this province. It is a process which entails coming to grips with the serious economic problems facing Ontario and the western world, and more clearly defining what type of society we want to evolve. It is a process in which there is a growing recognition that government and society as a whole must live within its means and learn to adjust expectations to our changing social and economic environment if we are to resolve problems of inflation and unemployment.

This government's commitment to a standard of excellence in the delivery of health care, education and social services will not alter. Currently, almost half of the provincial budget is spent on these three areas. Within the last several years, Ontario's program of health care has undergone remarkable growth. I don't think anyone here could deny that Ontario has one of the best health care systems in the world today. But in keeping with a policy of affordable expenditures in a growing health system, priorities must be established as to the relative cost and merit of any new program.

Alternatives have to be found to see where savings can be achieved. I don't suggest that hospitals aren't a necessity, of course they are, but do we really need to detain patients in a costly environment, when such alternatives as day surgery, out-patient treatment—

Mr. Davison: You don't offer those, Osie.

Mr. Villeneuve: —home care for people with acute illness, and extended care in nursing homes are available at a less expensive rate. These alternative forms of care offer psychological as well as financial advantages. I bet a lot of you know someone who after a long time in the hospital was much happier and more comfortable when they were able to manage without hospital confinement and received treatment right at home or in their own community.

Thus, hospitalization is not the only answer in the event of illness or injury, and this is what the general public should be made aware of. I think the establishment of district health councils was a step forward in allowing communities to assess their own health care resources. Although these councils act at present in an advisory capacity, they are invaluable in making sure that a community has the health care facilities it needs without excess capacity or unnecessary duplication. Thus, they are an important mechanism for getting the best possible value for every dollar spent on health care. The principle of assisting people to be as independent as possible and remain in their community is also being followed in the development of community-based services for the mentally retarded.

The Throne Speech mentions that legislation will be reintroduced for interim improvements to the Mental Health Act, which I am confident will serve well as interim reforms until the Ontario Council of Health provides the basis for a major overhaul of the Act.

With respect to education, the government's first priority is always to the children under its care, and all its endeavours must be directed to this single end: to create the best possible conditions that will stimulate and encourage children to grow and develop.

I feel the government's plan to increase emphasis on special education in our elementary and secondary schools is proof of its continuing commitment to all youngsters enrolled in the system, whether they be exceptional students or those who have a particular learning disability.

If the government cannot respond to the individual needs of students, if it cannot develop a system which builds on the individual capability and strength of each student, whether these be academic, religious, cultural or whatever, then we will be forced to accept defeat, as well, in building a nation which recognizes and develops the essential elements of unity to be found in the individual differences.

Speaking of the province's children brings me to my next point: renewed focus on the family in Ontario. There is little doubt the family is changing. Those of us who grew up in the first half of this century had the benefit of growing up in gentler times when families stayed not only in the same town but often in the same house for a great length of time. As the Minister of Community and Social Services once stated, government and society must put emphasis on services which encourage and strengthen family ties rather than focusing on the individual and his or her needs in isolation.

Many people are becoming concerned that governments intervene too frequently in family affairs. Many feel that government policies, programmes and services may often do more harm than good by creating a dependency on government rather than self-reliance or finding solutions within the family relationship. If governments continue to assume more and more social responsibilities, would this lead to unstable families finding it easier to abandon themselves to personal helplessness and rely on institutionalized support?

In many instances, governments tend to focus on a special, specific family problem, whether it be the troubled teenager, the senile grandparent or the single parent, without considering how the family as a whole could come into play. Families don't always have the resources to care for their members and this is when services should be made available, services such as protection as recommended by the consultation paper on children's services relating to child abuse, improved licensing of group homes for children and additional protection of rights of children in residential care facilities.

I could go on at length and relate many other initiatives which we in the Ontario government have undertaken in response to the many social challenges which face Ontario today. The office of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) is in the process of bringing in several important reforms to the legal system, and the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) is currently assessing the role of his ministry in finding new ways to make it both effective and efficient in assisting prisoners to readjust to society. Further, he is attempting to make it more affordable to the taxpayers.

[9:30]

Mr. Nixon: He has been closing first-rate institutions.

Mr. Villeneuve: We, in the Ontario government, are currently assessing our priorities so that we can maximize the use of resources available to us—

Mr. Kerrio: You can get that in Hansard.

Mr. Villeneuve: —and at the same time restraining the growth of government and the burden which it places on the economy. But the whole process of restraint and redefining priorities is not an end in itself. Rather, it is the means through which we can assume Ontario's future economic strength that provides a financial foundation upon which our high standard of living and social programs are dependent.

I do not want to sound parochial but I do want to speak on agriculture; and representing an agricultural constituency, I am pleased that the South Nation River drainage program which has been under discussion for many years is to be considered by the government in the form of co-operating with the federal authorities, through DREE grants, to pay 90 per cent of the funding for improved channelling and water conservation during dry periods. This will directly affect the riding I represent and that of the hon. member for Prescott and Russell (Mr. Belanger) in preserving valuable agricultural land by affording proper drainage so that it may be as productive as any area of land that we possess in the province of Ontario.

The bulk of agricultural income in my riding comes through dairy farming, and the sale of dairy cattle to other countries with the outbreak of brucellosis in Ontario has deprived us of a very valuable export market mainly to the USA in the last three years and which we had enjoyed prior to that for 45 years. This gave the dairy farmer the opportunity to sell off surplus animals in his dairy herd to the USA but because of the brucellosis outbreak and other matters, this market has been lost for the past three years.

I do want to point out to the Minister of Agriculture and Food for Ontario (Mr. W. Newman) that in testing of cattle for export to the few markets that are available to us, somehow the facilities east of Toronto to the Quebec border and the services we are now obtaining are anything but satisfactory. I know of cattle that were blood tested in the Port Hope area. The charts were mailed to the laboratories in Hull, and it took eight days in transportation due to the mail service we have.

Very often sales are made, subject to receiving these reports back if they are of a negative nature; these blood samples and the charts are prepared for export. Recently, within the last six weeks, a transport plane left Montreal with 83 stalls for cattle available; yet it went 10 short of filling that plane because the buyer who was exporting these cattle did not receive these charts for 10 cattle until two days after the plane had left; and at a cost of $530 a stall, I can only repeat that because of the limited markets we have for export cattle, and especially when we have a surplus of milk, it's essential that we get the best service possible to meet these dates in order to get the cattle out of the country.

This delay of three to four weeks and sometimes longer is not helping the export business. Certainly it is not helping the farmer who has too many dairy cattle. He cannot sell his surplus milk and he is not afforded the opportunity to sell his surplus cattle.

I think it is something that the Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa is not aware of, and I bring it to the attention of our own minister to make him aware of it, because better service can at least assist many of these situations.

Mr. Nixon: Gene Whelan is the farmers' best friend.

Mr. Villeneuve: I appreciate that. But on the other hand, under this Canadian Dairy Commission production quota, as of the end of January, there were 2,951 producers of milk who had to market in this province of Ontario. Not one pound of powder that was manufactured from Toronto to the Quebec border was sold to the Dairy Commission this year.

I have in my own constituency two plants that are importing 40 million pounds, during the scarce period from November to the beginning of March, from the province of Quebec, and yet I have 400 farmers within the five counties that have no market for their milk. They have either got to spill it out or feed it to animals on the farm.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Gene Whelan bought all the eggs.

Mr. Villeneuve: Now, it's quite all right to joke, but this is a very serious problem as far as I am concerned. In the county of Glengarry—that's my own backyard, I can speak with authority, I know the people—58 farmers as at the end of November ran out of quota. When they received their milk cheques, the average shortage was $858.60 and they did not receive any pay for that milk.

In all seriousness, most of these men—90 per cent of them—have mortgages. They went into debt because the Canadian farm loan agents advised them to expand, renovate their buildings. We, in the province of Ontario, told them to go into the IMPIP program—

Mr. Nixon: That's right, we lent them money to buy cattle.

Mr. Villeneuve:—build milkhouses and put in modern milking equipment—bulk tanks—and many of them who started with the thoughts of spending $20,000 to $25,000, when they started to renovate old buildings, it ended up costing them $45,000 to $50,000.

They milked—and I am talking about family farm operators—about 30 cows. They fed well and they produced anywhere from 350,000 to 400,000 pounds of milk yearly. Since they were encouraged by both governments they hoped to increase their herds to pay for this indebtedness, perhaps to 50 head. But instead of that, they were cut back 15 per cent, which meant three or four head less, and yet they had to meet this heavy mortgage debt they had incurred.

I have spoken to many Milk Marketing Board men and I can understand they are well-established farmers; I realize they have a very difficult job. I can understand the federal government paying a heavy subsidy—it has to have control over production. But the farmers run four and five months and they have no place to sell milk, and they are in the dairy industry, and yet there is a demand in my own area not only for that 40 million pounds of milk they have taken in from Quebec, but another 40 million pounds of which they could process and sell every pound in the province of Ontario. That is the situation that exists. They come to me, irrespective of partisan politics, and they say: "You're our member. What can you do for us?" It's beyond the stage of making an excuse and apologizing for their problem. I've got no answers; and if I've got no answers, I don't deserve to be here to represent them.

Mr. Nixon: What does the minister say to you?

Mr. Villeneuve: The minister has taken it up with my friend's authorities in Ottawa.

Mr. Nixon: What do they say?

Mr. Villeneuve: Our Milk Marketing Board has opened its books here to show the way it operates and has invited any type of an audit, but we are not given that reciprocal treatment in the rest of Canada. That is something I would like to have clarified, because—

Mr. Nixon: You mean Quebec, don't you?

Mr. Villeneuve: Yes. I don't want to stir up any problems; there are enough hornets' nests or whatever one wants to call them without stirring that up, but in reality this is the problem. We've got to find out the facts. If Ontario abides 100 per cent by the Canadian Dairy Commission's guidelines, I agree with that. But I want the rest of the country to be the same way. If we offer the inspection of the way things are being done here by any type of audit, we should have the reciprocal opportunity in other provinces.

The situation is such that it's not creating any better feeling. It doesn't matter whether it involves the French, Irish, Scottish, Dutch or anyone else, when dollars are taken from their pockets, bitterness builds up. I don't like to see this and I don't think it's necessary. I have made it my business during the last six weeks to visit every plant in the three counties that process milk, and I have found that the 40 million pounds, plus another 40 million pounds, means that at least the number I have given out that have no quota—and I got that just the other day from the Milk Marketing Board—is such that they would all have at least two months of a market for milk. That's in two plants in my constituency, I'm not speaking for the rest of Ontario.

Most of the people in the dairy business are a little better protected because they have urbanized areas in central Ontario and, naturally, they have the protection of the fluid milk market or pool number one. The only time our people, pool number two people, can get in here is when there's a shortage of milk—and that happens very rarely, particularly at this time of year when there is so little of it produced. However, Mr. Deputy Speaker, your own county, Perth, and the counties of Huron, Bruce and Oxford in western Ontario, are somewhat similar to the extreme eastern portion of Ontario because they have a great number of industrial shippers. But today we have a uniform quality of milk; everybody has had to improve his standards. The time has come when not only the shipper of industrial milk should be affected when the butterfat quota is cut in this province; not only he should suffer and have quota taken from him but, in fairness, I think the whole dairy industry should be appraised carefully.

Another thing: I think the time has come, whether we like it or not, that the Milk Marketing Board or somebody has got to put restrictions on those people who are going from 100 to 200 milking cows and leaving the small farmer to starve slowly. If the situation does not change for the better for those farmers, I predict more bankruptcies—and I am sorry to have to say this, but it is the truth—than we have ever had, even in the years of the depression.

[9:45]

Ms. Gigantes: You need some policy.

Mr. Villeneuve: Because they are in this business and in a bind with mortgages, and they have to produce.

Mr. Warner: Start with an agricultural policy.

Mr. Cassidy: You don't have one.

Mr. Villeneuve: But what I want answers for is the question raised by the processing plants. They tell me, and are willing to say it anywhere, that they can accept all this milk produced in that area—every pound of it—and find sales for every pound in this province. Yet these people are being deprived of that market.

Mr. Kerrio: Isn't your minister responsible?

Mr. Villeneuve: No, because the Canadian Dairy Commission sets quotas. The federal government pays a subsidy of $2.66 a hundredweight on industrial milk. They control the production in each province. When we have hit that quota, that is it.

I realize that in administering an overall natural program, any government that has to subsidize has a right to ask for curtailment of production when it goes beyond the consumption necessary. But I am speaking of these people who are not interested in acquiring this $2.66 per hundredweight federal subsidy for surplus milk. They are quite willing to abandon that. But to take home $1.80 per hundredweight for milk that the processor has to pay $9.35 per hundredweight for, no matter in what language I know—English or French—I can't make them understand that that is not justice. And I am not going to try.

But I do say there are problems that I think with goodwill and understanding we can resolve. We talk about unemployment—and I have every sympathy for those people.

But when people are working 16 hours a day and they can't meet their obligations—they are in debt—it is little wonder so many turn against society. I am fearful, because a lot of good sound people are becoming discouraged with the situation confronting them. I have an office in my riding, and I do find that every weekend I meet 15 or 20 of these people, and they just want to pour their hearts out because they have a real problem and are looking for a solution.

I just felt I should say something in this House about it. I am very much concerned. I am not blaming any particular body or any government. But I do say, when processors tell me that they can use the milk, every pound of it, and sell it in this province, we have to take stock somewhere.

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Stormont should speak more often.

Mr. Swart: Make him Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure for me to rise and speak in the Throne Speech debate as representative for Haldimand-Norfolk.

I would like also to congratulate the new leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Cassidy). I don't want to wish him too well, but I know he has taken on a big job and a lot of responsibility. I know he is contributing to the democratic system and we appreciate that.

Mr. Bounsall: Great person.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I share the concerns of the hon. member who just spoke, as a dairy farmer myself. I have two boys who are carrying on while I am here at the Legislature, and I would hope they would be able to exist in the farming industry, and particularly in the dairy industry, because I think it is a great life and agriculture is basic to our economy. I would like to point out I don't even see one word mentioned in the Throne Speech as far as agriculture is concerned.

Mr. Nixon: Not a word.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Not one word. As my friend and colleague on the opposite side of the House was stating, the milk industry is perhaps in trouble; I think the Ontario Milk Marketing Board and the control of production is a must, but unfortunately it has put us in a bad position at this time. I think you have to understand how we got to that position.

I was a member of the Milk Marketing Board when it was formed and I know we did have milk coming out of our ears at that time, getting $2 to $2.25 a hundred. We couldn't find markets for it and consequently the government set up the legislation.

I think it has been good for the industry but in the last couple of years we have run into difficulty. As the member suggests, Quebec has taken over our quota. Because we had excess quotas when we first established the Milk Marketing Board and we weren't filling those quotas. They were sitting around. Consequently—again I have to give credit to the Quebec government; they provided more incentives, they provide better facilities for manufacturing—we lost quotas at that time to Quebec. Now we suddenly realize that we could utilize it and it is not there.

I was in Ottawa last week when the Federation of Agriculture had their get-together and discussed agricultural problems. I will agree the problems are severe, as the former speaker indicated. I think income in agriculture has dropped something like 25 per cent in the last two years and again this year we are looking for another decrease of six per cent in income while all the time our costs have increased by something like 17 per cent, so I can sympathize.

I think we need strong spokesmen and I am certainly glad my colleague on the opposite side of the House spoke on behalf of agriculture tonight, because I think we have to have spokesmen in our Legislature, on behalf of the farmers of the province of Ontario, because if we don't speak, nobody is going to speak for the farmer. I still say that agriculture is the backbone of our economy and we do not recognize it.

I can relate a story from the past month about a farm in my area. A retired farmer who has farmed all his life sold his farm to somebody in Hamilton—123 acres. He made a good living from it over the years. But those folks are paying for that farm—two or three of them in the family are working—and they intend to retire on that farm.

I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, what is that land going to produce for the economy of our country? Not one cent. At the present time they come out on weekends. They enjoy the country air. They have a little garden. But otherwise that farm is sitting there growing weeds. It has a woodlot which could be worked. It could be contributing something but it is not. That is another concern of mine.

Again, I think this provincial government has to show some leadership and I will point my finger, not at the present Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) but at the programs that have been provided over the last 10 years and maybe longer. There hasn't been enough attention focused on the agricultural industry.

I don't think a farmer wants to be given handouts. All he wants is a fair return. A farmer doesn't want to organize but again, as I suggested, we did meet in Ottawa last week—I think there were 1,200 to 1,500 people there under the leadership of Peter Hannon. The Federation of Agriculture—and I suppose I shouldn't single out one farm organization. There's the Christian Farmers Union and the Farm Union. But I think the farming industry has to organize to compete in today's economy. It has to have some support from this Legislature because we are the spokesmen for Ontario. We are the largest province and, if we don't indicate that we care, then they'll walk all over us.

I'd like to point out that we've always been the top producer of hogs in Canada, but this year Quebec has caught up to us. They are outproducing us. We can produce, we can grow our own grain and we have all the resources, but we have to have some leadership. I think it has come from the Minister of Agriculture and Food and this government.

It has been pointed out many times too with regard to the peach industry in the Niagara Peninsula that we're importing 80 per cent of the peaches that are eaten here in Ontario. We have a fine growing area there and we're only producing 20 per cent. I think that has to be ridiculous, and again there has to be some leadership from this Legislature.

I brought to the attention of the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) only last week the situation in the Glendale training school, where they indicated to me they were using off-shore beef. They had a little trouble understanding that but it was really Australian beef. I could have further pointed out that they're bringing in Danish fish and French flour, and that is a provincial institution. I don't want to get anybody in trouble over this but I want to make sure that this Legislature is aware where this food is coming from. If we don't show some leadership there too, then how can we expect the hotels and the other people around the province to follow suit?

Before minority government came in in 1975, it has been pointed out that at the Legislature one couldn't buy Ontario wine. It wasn't here. Because of the minority situation and the fact that we brought it to attention, it's been changed.

Mr. Ruston: That's right. It's here now.

Mr. G. I. Miller: We are not showing enough emphasis and are not proud enough of the fact that we can produce here. I know we have to be competitive in the world market. That brings up another area of criticism and concern, as far as the Throne Speech debate is concerned, namely the economic situation we are in at this time. I noticed in the news today that CCM, which produces bicycles and skates, a firm that's been in existence for many generations, has been in financial difficulty. We can't expect the agricultural industry to take these cut-backs. We can't expect the industry to stay alive unless labour and everyone accepts some responsibility in keeping our economy alive and making us competitive.

Last night I met with a group of people from my riding concerned about employment. They were young school workers who have so much energy and could provide a work force for us to harvest our crops. They indicated they would like to see school open one or maybe two weeks later, which is being done now by some school boards, so that they can help harvest the crops in the fall. There was very much concern by them about employment.

I know we do have a program for providing employment for youth. The youth program pays $1 an hour, but they indicated to me that last year in order to qualify for a new job, particularly in the agricultural industry, they had almost to lie in order to qualify.

[10:00]

The young people are there and the jobs are there. It seems to me, with the need for employment and the need to harvest our crop, that it would be a good education to make these young people aware—I think it should be part of our system—of where their food comes from. I don't think there is any healthier working atmosphere than to get out in a rural area and to take part in that. It's a matter of how it is perceived and I think our educators are in a position to sell this to our young people.

I think the Liberal Party has criticized the education system for not providing the basics over the last many years and I think gradually, again under minority government, they are beginning to listen and I can see changes taking place slowly.

Mr. Conway: Nixon lives.

Mr. G. I. Miller: For example, in my riding, in the township of Norfolk, the board of education has extended the school term by one week—two weeks if necessary—to harvest the tobacco crop. As members are aware, we produce tobacco, apples and many cash crops, tomatoes and strawberries, and it's all labour-intensive outdoor work. I know people have been bringing in offshore labour and I know they have been happy with that offshore labour. They are concerned that they do have to utilize our own Ontario students, and the fact is they cannot depend on them. They can depend on offshore labour. They know they are going to be there in the morning and they know they can provide a day's work. I think our young people can rise to the challenge if given the opportunity.

Mr. Conway: Evelyn and I are going to the farm.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Another concern and another area I think could provide work and jobs is our woodlots. I know the Ministry of Natural Resources has always supported the north as the area producing wood and wood products, but there are a lot of good areas in southern Ontario too. I would like to point out that last year one producer in my riding sold 920 cords of wood for use as auxiliary heat in Franklin stoves or wood stoves. Wood does provide energy. Every time I look at a tree, to me that is energy. We do not grow these trees overnight; it takes 70 to 80 years.

Now is the time we should be working our woodlots and I know that can provide a lot of employment. Again, in the Throne Speech it indicated a lot of employment opportunities for our young people, but the ones between the ages of 24 and 60 are the ones who provide for the family and we have to have programs and permanent jobs so that they can contribute to our economy.

Mr. Conway: Tell them they've been at the public trough too long.

Mr. Nixon: You never worked a day in your life.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Another area of concern mentioned in the Speech from the Throne was the environment. The former Environment minister (Mr. Kerr) indicated to me one time last year, when we were discussing putting industrial waste in a lagoon in my riding, that I was playing politics and he would like to put that pollution in my swimming pool.

Mr. Nixon: George wouldn't say a thing like that. You mean the man who is swimming across Hamilton Bay?

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would not suggest that we put it in his swimming pool. I would not have the nerve to do that, but I do think that we can recycle.

Mr. Nixon: I think that would be a great idea. I'm going to do that on my way home.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would hope our new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) would give it further consideration because I think we can recycle waste. There are other alternatives, and I firmly believe industry should be responsible for its own waste, the same as the agricultural industry is responsible for disposing of its own waste. I would hope the Minister of the Environment would give serious consideration to recycling.

A couple of incidents have taken place in my riding in the last three or four months that have been of concern, and I would hope that this government is not playing politics because there happens to be here a Liberal member from the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk.

Mr. Conway: And a great one at that.

Mr. Nixon: Long may he reign.

Mr. G. I. Miller: We had a jail in the town of Simcoe which provided a service for that area. I would like to give maybe a little more background; there's a courthouse in Simcoe, there's a court house in Cayuga and a small jail attached to the new administration building for the new town hall for Simcoe.

Incidentally, Simcoe is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year. They had an official opening and the Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour Pauline McGibbon, went down to do the honours.

But getting back to the jail—it was providing a service for 30 inmates. I had an opportunity to tour that jail and it wasn't fancy, but it was adequate.

Mr. Conway: Any customers from St. George?

Mr. G. I. Miller: They came along and closed it with the excuse that the council requested that it be closed Well, actually that was not the fact. Simcoe council had provided a letter to say that if they were going to dispose of it, they wanted to make sure they had the rights to it; but it was providing some income to the town and it was adequate for the present time.

Mr. Wildman: What about the inmates?

Mr. G. I. Miller: When I walked in, I just went down the hall and one guy said "Hi, Gord." I was really surprised—a good friend, yes.

Mr. Davidson: Are you talking about the jail or the ATC?

An hon. member: The General wasn't there. He was in another jail.

Mr. Nixon: There were hardly any NDP members there at all.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I'll tell you one thing, they had a television, they had blankets, they were warm, and the food was good. What else can you have? Do you want a jail that is better than your own home?

Mr. Wildman: What about freedom?

Mr. G. I. Miller: Freedom? They're not there for a holiday. Well, anyway, the jail was closed and the inmates were taken to the London Detention Centre.

Mr. Davidson: How can you relate those remarks to the comments on the ATC?

Mr. G. I. Miller: I haven't got to that yet.

Mr. Davidson: I know you haven't. I'm saying, you would think you were there for a holiday.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I think they are taking the inmates to London and to Thorold. The courts are in Cayuga and Simcoe and if that is the economy—that you have to transport these inmates back and forth to deal with them in the courts—it is not efficient, in my opinion. As a matter of fact, the law society for the county of Haldimand has given full support that it was a mistake. Again, it is the basic philosophy of the Conservative government that bigness is best, such as regional government, a centralized school board and now they are trying to put the institutions in centralized areas.

Mr. Wildman: We don't want to centralize the inmates.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I just hope the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) will give us some consideration and perhaps provide a facility in our area, so that it could deal with the courts and the inmates more efficiently.

Getting back to the Glendale Training School program: Again, as I brought to your attention the other day, there was a citizens' committee to retain the Glendale program. Again, we have had an opportunity of visiting that institution, and it seems to me that they are providing the service. It was only established three years ago and it is providing a service that the minister was suggesting is required in Ontario; it was broken down into four houses with a capacity of approximately 100. It provided an educational system for these young boys from 16 to 24 in a wide field and many of these inmates are coming in with only grade eight education.

I would suggest that, with the support it received from the community, this ministry again is making a mistake by closing a facility that has got the trust of the community. First of all, you have to have trust to bring an institution into a community—and you don't get that overnight. I was watching television last Tuesday night, and I saw that they're changing the school at Oakville and the public is rising against it; the mayor is speaking against it.

It takes time to acquire trust. They had achieved that trust. The inmates have worked in industry in Simcoe and they have gone out into the agricultural field and worked. Yet this government would not sit down to listen to the citizens' group and debate it with them. They wouldn't give us that privilege. They wouldn't give us that right.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: That's not true. They met with the minister more than two hours.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I asked the minister to come down and meet with me at Glendale, and he was never able to do it. I'm not finding fault with the minister, because I think he is trying to do a job. I think it had to be the people behind him.

Mr. Nixon: The policy people behind him.

Mr. G. I. Miller: When they set up a committee to deal with the closing of these schools, there was nobody on that committee from Glendale school. There were people on the committee from the Ministry of Community and Social Services, from the Sprucedale training program. I don't think they used the people there fairly. There are 100 people involved.

In my opinion, what brought this all about was an incident last summer when a girl committed suicide. Maybe that triggered it. That is only my opinion, but when I had an opportunity to tour the institution, it was brought to my attention. When they closed the Burwash school some time ago and the staff came down to Simcoe, one of the workers in that changeover committed suicide because she couldn't stand the pressure and because of the uncertainty involved. I also met with the inmates, and I'm concerned about those young men; I want to see that they get back on the right track or I wouldn't be standing up here tonight and speaking on their behalf. The government is wiping out a program that has been working effectively, one that met the budget that was suggested to them; they indicated they could still bring it in line financially if given the opportunity, but they weren't given that opportunity.

I feel the government has made a mistake by not letting us, the opposition parties, debate it along with the citizens' group to make sure they had a fair hearing. I criticize the government for that. Perhaps it is not too late yet to give the government that opportunity but if they don't accept it, I will have nothing to do but to go back to my people and say, "It's too bad. They wouldn't listen."

These are the areas I'm concerned about in the Throne Speech. I am pleased to have had the opportunity of expressing my feelings about them at this time. I would like to close by saying that in order to have a strong Ontario, the government has to listen to the majority side of the House. It is a minority government, Mr. Speaker. We are the opposition parties and we want to be constructive. We want a better Ontario and by working together I think we can achieve that.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, it is customary, I believe, the first time one speaks during a session, to extend congratulations to the Speaker and, through you, to the Deputy Speaker (Mr. Edighoffer). I do this with warmth. I think you complement one another in that position, and I immediately want to pledge my co-operation and say to you, as you know, that there will never be anybody from this corner of the House who will be causing you any discomfort in that chair.

Mr. Nixon: That is certainly going to be a reform.

Mr. Elgie: Can you live with that one?

[10:15]

Mr. Swart: In the Throne Speech, I guess the majority of the members speak on one or all of three things. They speak about the general philosophy of the party to which they belong, and endeavour to sell that. I am not going to do that in my remarks because it has been done by my new leader and done well. I congratulate him for doing it and publicly congratulate him for securing the very important office that he holds. It will undoubtedly go on to an even more important office in the not too distant future.

It's often customary also to speak on the subject of the portfolio which you hold in your caucus. Of course mine is municipal affairs. I don't intend to do that this evening because there is going to be plenty of opportunity during the session to discuss municipal matters, with the so-called property tax reforms that come forward and with the new Licensing Act—

Mr. Nixon: You are supporting the government in that, aren't you?

Mr. Swart: —and with the new Planning Act.

The other matter that is very often covered by members when they are speaking on the Throne Speech is to speak about their own riding and make complimentary remarks about it. In my case that's unnecessary. Everybody knows Welland and Thorold, the riding I represent. They know it's tops in the province and it speaks for itself.

My participation in the Throne Speech debate is going to be to make some comments about the procedures and the functioning of this House. Like many other members of this House, my political background is a municipal one. For me it was of 21 years' duration and it included all the elected positions in the township council, county warden and regional councillor. Also I had a rather deep involvement in municipal associations both at the provincial and at the federal level.

I say this not, I hope, in an immodest manner but because I want to point out that it's almost impossible for me to refrain from making contrasts, at least mental ones, between the operation of local governments and this provincial House. When I make those mental contrasts, I have to say that municipal government clearly gets the highest marks for its procedures in the handling of the business for the people it represents. Today I want to give voice to those mental observations—those contrasts that I make. Although the Camp commission and the Morrow committee dealt at length with the procedures in this House, I am going to be presumptuous enough to make some comments which may be at rather sharp variance with those recommendations.

I think we all know that, apart from the question period and perhaps votes in this House and certain other events which are separated usually by rather lengthy periods of time, the attendance is pretty dismal. Less than 20 per cent of the members are in their seats during 80 per cent of the time that this House is sitting. No municipal councils, I suggest, anywhere in this province or this nation, perhaps in the world, function in that manner. I am aware of course that MPPs who are not in the House usually are working at other aspects of their elective responsibilities.

Mr. Nixon: You can rest assured that is true tonight.

Mr. Swart: I know enough about them from all parties that most of them put in extremely long hours in their legislative duties and in their constituent responsibilities. Those things often seem more important, and I guess frequently they are more important than what is taking place in this House and—

Mr. Nixon: No, you don't believe that.

Mr. Swart: I don't believe it. I am just going to say I don't.

Mr. Nixon: I don't believe it either.

Mr. Swart: What concerns me is that that is prevalent—priority is given to that, and I think it should concern everyone in this House. House business should be of the order to command the priority of members' time.

Mr. Nixon: Your former leader said that the House was irrelevant.

Mr. Hall: I'm beginning to agree with him.

Mr. Swart: If it's not, then it shouldn't be taking place in this chamber. Debate on the Throne Speech, apart perhaps from the leaders' comments, seems to serve little use in the functioning of the business of this province. Even the Throne Speech itself, when it has as little content and is as vague as the one made last week, could be almost dispensed with. The mayor of any council in his inaugural address would be laughed at by his colleagues if there was no more substance in his remarks than appeared in that Throne Speech.

Mr. Kerrio: Why did you change places, Mel?

Mr. Swart: They know me too well back there, Vince.

Mr. Kerrio: What are you doing here, Mel?

Mr. Nixon: Is it true they all worked for your election to the Legislature?

Mr. Swart: Besides, if I did, I would have to displace a Liberal or a Conservative if I went back there, and you know how you would take that.

Mr. Kerrio: We wouldn't buy that for a minute, be our guest.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mel, we always have full attendance when the Lieutenant Governor is here.

Mr. Nixon: And on pay day.

Mr. Swart: Yet basically the mayor speaks only for himself, while the Throne Speech comes from the government. How much more reason for the government to provide real meat in its inaugural statement, which of course is the Throne Speech. I am aware that Throne Speeches give the opportunity for members to raise issues, local or otherwise, of concern to them. But there is no route towards solutions, so the exercise, whether it's the speeches made here tonight, as good as they are, is largely meaningless. To spend a minimum of eight days on speeches which lead nowhere is not good use of the House's time and gets no attention from anyone.

I suggest that except for the leaders, and perhaps one or two other people, there will be no coverage in any media about the speakers or the speeches in the debate on the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Kerrio: Correct, Mel; there's nobody in the press gallery.

Mr. Swart: Of course, it may be, but it is a good thing, I suggest, that if it is not worth carrying in the news media then perhaps it is not worth doing. Of course, there must be the opportunity to determine no confidence in the government's general policies, but there are ways of accomplishing that without this kind of waste of House time.

In short, I believe the Throne Speech should be expected to have substance, but debate which by necessity deals only in generalities should be more limited than the eight days.

Budget debate fits much the same category as the Throne Speech, and it too should be severely limited. After all every item of the budget gets detailed scrutiny in the estimates consideration. It is my view that the time should be used on dealing with the real issues and giving life to the Legislature.

There is little doubt that the lengthy budget and Throne Speech debates are anachronisms. They are a carry-over from the time when there was little legislation to deal with in the House. It was then an opportunity to debate political philosophy, with the press recording it, really for lack of other news.

Those circumstances no longer exist, and we should move to procedures that meet the times.

Ms. Gigantes: We should move to a new government.

Mr. Swart: Another new procedure that needs to be implemented is that all estimates be done in committees outside of the House. To carry on with one minister's estimates in the House under different procedural rules from the other committees outside the House makes no sense, but I suggest it also demeans this assembly.

Mr. Nixon: I agree.

Mr. Swart: There are adequate rooms, even if we had to move over to the Macdonald Block, and the informality and pursuit of questions to the ministers and to their officials must be freely permitted to members dealing with all estimates. There must be no restriction on them.

All estimates should be dealt with early in the year. There is something a bit unreal about debating estimates in November or December when the money has been mostly spent or all of it committed.

Mr. Nixon: We can solve that problem.

Mr. Swart: Let me say also that there should be a firm rule that no committees sit while the House is in session. I have yet to see any municipal council any place in Ontario set committee meetings, or permit them to be set, for a time when the council would also be sitting.

If all this means, and it does, is that the Legislature sits a day or two less in the week, then in balance it is desirable. We wouldn't be alone in this. The New York State Assembly follows that practice where it only meets on two days a week and the work is done out of the House in the committee.

Mr. Nixon: You people don't even want committees to meet on committee days.

Mr. Renwick: Why do you make these cheap points all the time?

Mr. Conway: That's a very poor example, New York State. Try Idaho.

Mr. Renwick: You're cheap. You always have been.

Mr. Swart: I submit many states in the United States follow those procedures—and I'm not terribly enamoured with all of their procedures.

Mr. Ruston: You don't want to do what the Yankees do, do you, Mel?

Mr. Swart: I submit that business would be handled more appropriately, more thoroughly and that House sessions would be more meaningful if that procedure was followed.

Mr. Conway: What about $50 a day?

Mr. Swart: Another anachronism is the system of sessions as we know them.

Mr. Mackenzie: You're not getting any brighter, Sean.

Mr. Swart: There are the spring sittings and the fall sittings, with the gaps between them being almost as long as the sittings. It is impossible for it to be a good way of conducting public business. Orders in council or other forms of government action on the most fundamental issues are used between sessions. Witness the placement of provincial employees under the federal AIB by order in council two years ago. The hospital closing program was initiated without a single word of discussion beforehand in the House. And, of course, the $8 billion Hydro contracts for the uranium from Denison and Preston were signed by order in council rather than by action of the House while the House was in session.

This is an outdated policy and pattern being followed by an outdated government, where the use of orders in council, spurred by the long down-time of the House, has become a normal practice.

Mr. Kerrio: We should change the whole thing.

Mr. Swart: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what meaning does a Legislature have if it doesn't vote or even have the right to vote on the most important decisions being made by the government, such as that made on the contract on uranium?

Mr. Ruston: Tell them to resign.

Mr. Swart: It is my belief that this Legislature should sit every month, as even the smallest councils do. The monthly session would last from one to three weeks, depending on the volume of business.

Mr. Kerrio: The councils only sit one evening.

Mr. Swart: The July and August sessions might last only a day or two, but there would be no excuse ever for the government to enact policy without approval of the Legislature. There would be other plusses to the monthly session system, too.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: He wants to change the whole system.

Mr. Swart: MPPs could get back to their constituents for a week or two each month—and it's not a bad idea to find out what our constituents are thinking. There would be time to work in committee hearings which would not conflict with the House sittings. Government and members' staffs, as well as the members themselves, could plan and execute their duties in a much more orderly fashion.

The session system is a carry-over from the days when transportation was difficult and time-consuming, when many of the members of this House had to drive a horse and buggy several miles, perhaps 10 or 20 miles, to the station, then take a train to come here; and once they were here they stayed until the business was over.

Mr. Conway: Ellis did write this speech.

Mr. Swart: That philosophy still exists with the government which sits across the House.

Mr. Conway: Morningstar wrote this.

Mr. Swart: You know, it was the same on the county council level too, Mr. Speaker. When I first went to county council, almost 30 years ago, all county council sessions were held for a week and only four times a year. We eventually changed that in Welland; it was one of the first, then other counties followed suit. But in this Legislature it has never changed. We still have the same sort of sessions as they had 50 and 100 years ago.

I only have about five minutes left, but if it's your wish, Mr. Speaker, I'll move adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Swart moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mrs. Birch the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

CONTENTS

Thursday, March 2, 1978

Throne Speech debate, continued, Mr. Bounsall, Mr. Elgie, Mr. Gaunt, Mr. Davison, Mr. Villeneuve, Mr. G. I. Miller, Mr. Swart	301
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Swart, agreed to	324
Motion to adjourn, Mrs. Birch, agreed to	324

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Birch, Hon. M.; Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Scarborough East PC)
Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
Davidson, M. (Cambridge NDP)
Davison, M. (Hamilton Centre NDP)
Elgie, R. (York East PC)
Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
Gigantes, E. (Oakwood NDP)
Hall, R. (Lincoln L)
Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General
(Burlington South PC)
Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
Maack, Hon. L.; Minister of Revenue (Parry Sound PC)
Miller, G. I. (Haldimand-Norfolk L)
Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
Renwick, J. A. (Riverdale NDP)
Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
Samis, G. (Cornwall NDP)
Snow, Hon. J. W.; Minister of Transportation and Communications (Oakville PC)
Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)
Villeneuve, O. F. (Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry PC)
Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)
Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)

No. 10

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament
Friday, March 3, 1978

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 3, 1978

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

Mrs. Campbell: In view of the fact that at this point in time there are no ministers in this House, I would move the adjournment of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sweeney: I wonder if the House leader will second that motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the hon. member for St. George that it is in the standing orders that I cannot accept a motion to adjourn the House before the orders of the day.

Mr. Conway: All the heavyweights are here now anyway.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. Ruston: Slim pickings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Better late than never.

Mr. Sweeney: That is what they call mulligan stew.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: I'll reserve my questions until a little later.

Mr. Deans: We will reserve ours too.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In the absence of the leader of the third party.

DOW CHEMICAL

Mrs. Campbell: I have a question, if I may, for the Attorney General. In view of the fact that the Attorney General advised this House last November that the suit—or should I call it the “sweet” settlement—between the provincial government and Dow Chemical was about to be settled and that he would have some statement within a few weeks, is he prepared to advise us as to the terms of the settlement today?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, the matter has not been settled. I indicated that I had some reason to feel optimistic about an impending settlement, but I have to state at this moment that the matter has not been settled.

I want to advise the House that it's not just a matter between the government and the Dow Chemical Company. There are a number of commercial fishermen who are represented by counsel. They are very much a part of the process. There are certain issues outstanding between the individual commercial fishermen and Dow Chemical which have not been resolved, and until we're satisfied that the fishermen's interests have been resolved we will not be concluding any settlement.

Mrs. Campbell: A supplementary: Is the Attorney General doing anything to try to protect the estates of these fishermen in view of the lengthy and protracted dealings in this matter?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm not so sure that I understand the question.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, I'm so sorry. I will spell it out.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Margaret, you're not sorry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any further questions? The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm not sure I can ask further questions until I begin to ask questions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kerrio: We were asking questions about things while you were out in the hall.

AUTO PACT

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Premier. Can the Premier indicate what specific steps the government of Ontario has taken, either alone or in conjunction with the government of Canada, to secure the location in this province of at least some of the three or four automobile parts plants for which Canada is apparently competing with various states in the United States, according to yesterday's statement in Parliament by the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of discussions.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: Can the Premier be more specific, in light of his insistence at the first ministers' conference that we must have action by government on the problems of the automobile industry? Can he say whether Ontario has made any specific initiatives to counter the apparently lucrative offers which are being put before the automobile manufacturers by some of the southern states?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the hon. member that we have been communicating with both the government of Canada and the automotive industry. We are continuing these discussions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Hamilton West has a supplementary.

Mr. S. Smith: Has the Premier personally called in the heads of the big four auto makers in this province, sat down with them and told them that we, in Ontario, want to have a fairer balance in terms of the auto parts manufacturing that supplies their large assembly operations? Has he called them in and told them that, as a matter of public policy in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, they haven't been called in but they know as a matter of public policy that we do. I would point out to the Leader of the Opposition that what the member for Ottawa Centre has been asking about is not the parts section of the industry; it is the potential of the new capital plant that is being planned by the industry. I can't say by the big four, really—to our knowledge it is the big three, although I would add that the fourth is a very important part of the automotive industry. It is geographically located in one of the finest areas of the province of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: I am aware of that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's a very fine plant, it's a great product. We have really been dealing with the question, at this moment, of possible capital plant expansion in the province of Ontario, at a time when the industry is receiving a great deal of attention, not only from the northern states but two or three of the southern states as well.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: In view of the enormous importance of the automobile industry in this province, and in view of the suggestions that have been made that one of these automobile parts plants might go into the Sudbury area, and in view of the fact that we now have an enormous deficit in our automobile parts trade which is costing tens of thousands of jobs to this province, has the Premier had any specific and direct contact with the parts industry, or with the "big three," in relation to these particular plants; and can he give details to this House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate once again we have had rather extensive discussions with the parts industry. In fact, as part of our submission to the first ministers' conference we used some of the material provided by the industry itself, represented by Mr. Lavelle as a matter of fact, and this is a very important part of the discussion obviously.

I think what the member was really asking about was the potential of these four or five major plant expansions that relate to the companies themselves, not to the parts section of it, which as I say is part of the pact but it is also the area that is somewhat independent of the four major producers of automobiles. We have made our views known to the government of Canada. There have been discussions with the industry and there will be further discussions over the next two or three weeks. I can't give the members any indication of the time-frame involved but I will keep the House informed to the extent I can during this period of discussion.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: I wonder if the Premier might have some information as to what kind of competition we might be having in other jurisdictions, or what considerations might be given to the companies to locate in some of those other jurisdictions?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is a very difficult question to answer. I can't tell the member of the proposals being made by some states to the industry. Some of it is public knowledge obviously. We have been reluctant, and we still have a concern as to what extent tax dollars should be used, particularly as it relates to three large companies which are not without financial resources. This does create a problem in terms of using taxpayers' money for any of the "big three" to locate here in the province of Ontario.

At the same time, we are concerned about the competition that obviously is emerging. I think the ground rules in this area changed somewhat with the decision, I guess it was by the state of Pennsylvania, with respect to Volkswagen; I think that started this sort of bidding war in terms of just what inducements or incentives would be offered. There's no question that some states of the union are presenting fairly attractive proposals to the automotive industry.

We want our share here and we are working very hard to obtain that share, but I can't tell the members of the House what measure of success we may have and what proposals will be made to the automotive companies. I do present the concern that we feel as a government as to whether or not tax dollars should be paid to General Motors and Ford and Chrysler, who, in terms of access to resources, aren't what one might describe as impoverished.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Final supplementary, the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I defer to the member for Hamilton East, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary to the Premier: While I share his concern about incentives to, say, General Motors, can I ask the Premier why he worries about the tax dollars as a concession in this case, where we would definitely have additional plants and additional employees, and the government's general policy of giving tax concessions with the argument that they will provide jobs and it's across the board and we never see any evidence of it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we hear some of the inducements being offered by competing jurisdictions that go beyond, shall we say, any tax situation; I think there is a difference between offering tax incentives and outright grants to attract industry. There is a distinction. This government has provided incentives to industry generally—

Mr. Deans: What are you talking about?

Ms. Gigantes: Dancing girls, or what is it?

Mr. Wildman: That is semantics.

[10:15]

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, it is not semantics. There is a difference between having a general tax incentive and giving an outright dollar grant to a major corporation—

Ms. Gigantes: You do it to Denison.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and I say with respect that even the member's new leader will understand that distinction.

Mr. Deans: I'd just like to know what you are talking about.

Mr. Turner: You wouldn't understand anyway.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am delighted to know the member is prepared to give tax credits to the "big three."

BURNING OF PCBs

Mr. Cassidy: A question to the Minister of the Environment: Could the minister explain why St. Lawrence Cement is still burning material with PCBs in it when the minister informed us there would be no more burned until after the public hearing, which is scheduled for late this summer?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The withdrawal of the order to burn PCBs, the member well understands, was the order that allowed for the burning of high-level PCBs. As far as I am personally concerned, I was not aware there were PCBs being burned there. When we found there were PCBs in the oils that were being spread on roads I asked that a check be taken of the oils in storage for burning at St. Lawrence Cement; and we did find that there were 15 parts per million in the sample taken.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Now that the minister has discovered there are PCBs in the waste oil that is being burned at St. Lawrence Cement, what does he intend to do about it; and specifically, does he intend to stop that burning?

Hon. Mr. McCague: At the moment, I don't intend to order the burning to stop. As the member will know, we were burning PCBs there previously on an experimental basis at the rate of 250,000 parts per million and we were satisfied there were none escaping into the atmosphere. The present 15 parts per million is very insignificant as far as we are concerned; we are told by the occupational health people in the Ministry of Labour that this does not pose any danger to health. We must get rid of these waste oils somehow; if we are not going to be able to put them on the road, burning is a safe method, in the ministry's opinion.

We do not at this time intend to stop the burning, but we do intend to monitor the situation very closely. Members will have noted in the press that we have purchased a machine that will give on-the-spot, instantaneous results. The problem is that we are not going to have this for six months. The federal Department of National Defence has one that is not of as high a quality as the one we are purchasing; we are attempting now to get that from them to do tests at St. Lawrence Cement.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Would the minister check further with the operation at St. Lawrence Cement to ensure that tests are being fully made at the hood, or the firing end of that apparatus? It is my information that no tests are being made for leakage of PCBs at that end of the operation, which because of the tumbling action of the feed-in can cause real problems. Secondly, would the minister investigate companies like Rollins Environmental Services which appear to have at this point the most advanced technology for the burning of PCBs, where they have assimilators—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Question.

Mr. Bounsall:—that have very steady state conditions and have extensive back-up systems. They are, therefore, much safer than any kiln operation for burning anything that contains PCBs.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I will be glad to check into those matters the member has brought to my attention.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister why he would continue to allow this type of material to be burned, when he admits he hasn't purchased the monitoring devices—they are on order—and I don't know how he can say it's safe. Second, does this procedure not make a mockery of the assessment hearings he's going to be having this summer? Third, how in the heck does he expect his ministry to get any credibility when we are dealing with this type of material when he didn't even know that PCBs were being burned? This is the second time this type of thing has happened.

Mr. Gregory: Do you know what they are?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I think it goes without saying. We burned PCBs at levels up to 250,000 parts per million and the ministry and the occupational health people were satisfied that the burning was satisfactory, that the PCBs were destroyed. At 15 parts per million we don't see any problem, and until we—

Mr. Cooke: Why is the minister having the assessments then? Why is he having environmental assessments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Because the public asked for the assessment, we are holding those hearings.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, not because you wanted them or thought they were necessary.

Hon. Mr. Drea: We respond to the public.

Mr. Cooke: So the minister is just making a mockery of it and the assessment is a joke; what a joke.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: Is the minister aware of the report submitted by Mr. L. S. Romano, the director of pollution control for the city of Windsor, concerning the burning of PCBs in the complex in Mississauga? If he isn't, would he make himself aware of that? Because the concerns of Mr. Romano are very, very explicit and lead one to believe that facility should not be used in its present state.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I'm not aware of that specific report but I will read it.

Some hon. members: Make yourself aware.

SPADINA EXPRESSWAY

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Can he confirm that he was accurate in his letter to the Cedarvale Ratepayers Association? I'm speaking now of the use of the Spadina expressway lands which he says in his letter "will be leased back to Metropolitan Toronto in accordance with the provincial commitment noted above."

He says, with regard to that commitment: "These properties will be leased to Metro Toronto on a long-term lease of 99 years for use by Metro in its housing program. The lease will stipulate the lands cannot be used for road purposes."

Is there any aspect of the eventual dedication of these properties which is still in some doubt in the minister's mind, or has he by now made himself quite clear as to exactly what dedication these lands are to have and precisely what the province wishes to sign with Metro?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think it's very explicit in that letter that the hon. Leader of the Opposition was quoting from. I think that letter is exactly in accord with statements made by the Premier (Mr. Davis) that the land, the housing units owned by Metropolitan Toronto, would be taken over by the province.

I listened with interest yesterday or the day before to the member's questions to the Premier, which were somewhat confusing to me in that the lands are not going to be turned over to Metro. They're to remain in provincial ownership but be leased to Metro for administration by the Metropolitan Toronto Housing Authority.

There were three commitments at that time, as I recall. One was the taking over of these properties and the leasing back. The second was that the road allowances in the area involved would be assumed by the province. This has been done; we have assumed those road allowances. The third was the three-foot dedication, and I think that was well explained by the Premier a few days ago. There have been several suggestions and my legal staff have been working with the legal staff of the city now for several months in trying to come up with the exact location of that three-foot lease to the city, which I hope will be finalized in the near future.

Mr. Kerrio: Do you qualify for Legal Aid?

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: If then, as the minister says, he is quite explicit and totally clear as to exactly what the eventual dedication of those lands is to be, can he explain to us the letter he wrote on November 18, 1977, to the borough of York saying: "When the province takes title to these properties, discussions will be commenced immediately to determine their eventual dedication."

These discussions will involve the borough of York and the city of Toronto and Metropolitan Toronto"? Can he explain why neither the borough of York nor the city of Toronto has heard the faintest thing about this, nor have they been involved in any such negotiations?

Hon. Mr. Snow: First of all, we have not been successful in finalizing the arrangements for the provincial assumption of those lands.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister just said he did.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I did not.

Mr. S. Smith: He can read it from Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I said we had assumed the unopened road allowance. We have not yet been successful in negotiating the takeover of the Metropolitan-owned housing units. It is part of the arrangement that we would take title to the housing units and lease them back, so that they would be in provincial ownership. I did not say we had provincial ownership of them at this time.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the obvious dedication of the land has been determined by the minister and since he admitted in his first answer to me that he knew explicitly what the dedication was to be, what remains to be discussed with the borough of York and the city of Toronto and why has the minister not negotiated and consulted with them up to now?

Hon. Mr. Snow: One of the things we have been considering with the borough of York, as I recall, is that a three-foot strip would also be offered—and it has been offered as I understand—to the borough of York as well as to the city of Toronto.

Mr. MacDonald: Sort of a mini-Magint line.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That was not part of the original statement but there was the offer of a three-foot strip to each.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will draw a map for the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister didn't consult York and the city.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: Since the minister has decided that the borough of York and the city of Toronto have no input whatsoever into the negotiations as to what to do with the lands and properties south of Eglinton, and since the minister has taken title to those lands and is leasing them to Metro for 99 years, would he entertain the proposal that some of those houses, which the tenants themselves want to buy, will be placed on the private market?

Mr. S. Smith: The member is treading a thin line. That's not the New Democrat way. His party doesn't like private ownership.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am very surprised that a member of that party would want anybody to own anything.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a silly comment.

Mr. Foulds: Don't be an ass. We would like the people to own the resources.

Mr. Cassidy: You take that choice away from too many people across the province.

Mr. S. Smith: People can own houses but not lots.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I will have to check the specific remarks of the hon. member in Hansard. As I heard them, he said, "Since the minister has taken title to the properties." I just told the Leader of the Opposition that we have not yet taken title to the housing properties.

Mr. Germa: Make up your mind.

Mr. Grande: When the minister does it then.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It is our intention to do so, and it is our intention, as part of the original announcement, that when we do so we will lease those properties to Metropolitan Toronto.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: In view of the fact that in the letter written to the rate-payers the minister has expressed his appreciation of the fact that housing will be available because of the Metro commitment of housing, and in view of the fact that the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto has recently been recorded in the newspapers as being desirous of getting out of the housing business, what protection is the minister building in that those properties will be housing properties?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't monitor everything the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto says, and I wasn't aware of that particular statement.

Mr. Foulds: You should. He monitors everything you say.

[10:30]

Hon. Mr. Snow: But I think it has been quite definite that title to the housing units would be taken by the province and would be leased to Metropolitan Toronto for housing purposes only.

Mrs. Campbell: A point of clarification, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very briefly.

Mrs. Campbell: In view of the fact that the province has tried to get out of housing and in view of the fact that Metro is trying to get out of housing, wouldn't it be a good idea to look into it and to ascertain the status of those units at this time?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that either Metro or the province is trying to get out of housing.

Mrs. Campbell: You are wrong.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't accept that statement.

Mr. S. Smith: You haven't been watching what's happening.

Mr. Warner: The government has given up on housing. You do nothing.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As I understand it, a number of houses are being used for housing now. They are being leased.

Mrs. Campbell: Those are the ones.

Hon. Mr. Snow: They are being leased by Metropolitan Toronto to people to reside in and it is our intention when we take title to those houses that they be leased back, as has been stated before, very explicitly, for very long-term periods, to be used for housing.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of the Environment: Can he tell us what action he has taken with regard to the remarks made by the solicitor for the ministry, a Mrs. Linda McCaffrey, in addressing the matter in Nanticoke, when in those hearings she made the following comment? Her comments were in response to an approach by a Mr. Lee in front of that committee asking for more information to be made public and I quote her answer: "This approach is viable if one assumes that the public is a leisured class enjoying a high standard of education, open-minded and judicious in all of its judgements and extraordinarily diligent in applying itself to the resolution of complex scientific issues."

She went on to reject the notion that this type of information should be made public inasmuch as I assume she feels, since in her opinion the public is neither a leisured class nor enjoying a high standard of education nor open-minded and judicious in its resolution of complex issues, it has no need for such information. What has the minister done about those comments? Has he talked to his solicitor? Does this represent the point of view of his ministry?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition wrote me about this matter in late January. I responded to him but he wasn't satisfied with one particular part of the answer.

Mr. Lawlor: It's a matter of immediate public importance.

Hon. Mr. McCague: He has asked me to look into the matter again, which I am presently doing. Yes, I have discussed it with the ministry's solicitor.

Mr. S. Smith: Well, I thank the minister for that constructive approach to my letter to him. Would he share with this House the nature of his discussion with the solicitor and would he assure the House that this does not represent the policy of the ministry?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, yes, I am always concerned about those kinds of remarks and I am sure they have to be taken in the situation in which they were given. I guess I can't do anything more than say that I don't like those things being said and I am looking into the matter.

UNIVERSITY FUNDING

Mr. Cooke: A question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities: Would the minister agree that the proposal by the University of Toronto as reported in yesterday's Globe and Mail is a direct result of the serious problems with the present method of funding universities and in particular the problems that will arise out of his announcement last week whereby university grants will be increased for 1978 by only 5.8 per cent, far short of the increase in the cost of living?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No.

Mr. Cooke: Maybe the minister could offer an explanation. I would like to ask a further supplementary. Would the minister also agree that the declining enrolment problem which the universities are experiencing is a result of the student grants program whereby students will now be eligible for grants for only four years, thereby making graduate education and university education available on the basis of wealth instead of academic ability?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Bunk; absolute bunk.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Nothing could be further from the truth and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. Foulds: Nonsense.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, what he just said is nonsense. Absolute nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is a very foolish statement to have made.

Mr. Warner: That's the way the system works.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Indeed, the new grant program for student assistance will make it a far more equitable system, especially for those from low income families.

Mr. Foulds: Nonsense. To say that is nonsense.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Does this ministry provide any guidelines to the universities as to how far down the scale they should go in changing their admission standards? Is there any limit at all to it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it's known that the universities are to accept only those who are qualified entrants to the system as judged by the standards established in the secondary system, and that has been in effect for very many long years.

Mr. Conway: What about my student loan, Harry?

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the minister's categorical denial to the question of the member for Windsor-Riverside, can the minister then bring this House into his confidence as to what the income cutoffs will be under the student assistance program so that this House, and not just he personally, can assess whether or not students from low and modest income families will continue to be able to attend university?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, we'll be very pleased to supply that information in complete detail on Thursday, March 9—next Thursday.

Mr. Foulds: As part of the budget?

Mr. Cassidy: You have sure delayed as long as possible.

TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

Mr. Kerrio: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. First, I would like to thank the minister for his answer to my question regarding the moving of hazardous substances. In his answer, he stated that it will be the responsibility of the federal government to introduce legislation because of this transportation problem.

I wonder if the minister could answer a question in regard to his ministry: Is his ministry involved in formulating the regulations, and would he consider some of the regulations that are being instituted in the United States as regards new tank cars carrying dangerous cargoes being built with special shielding to prevent puncturing in case of derailment, which seems to be the major cause of really serious accidents with some substances that are toxic and dangerous?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, yes.

Mr. Kerrio: Could the minister elaborate? Is he involved with the ministry in formulating the regulations?

Hon. Mr. Davis: One day you complain the answers are too long, and then you get a short one and you want elaboration.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes.

Mr. Kerrio: The minister is involved? If he is, is he dealing with the matters that I've suggested because of the concern of the US shortcut through southern Ontario, and would we be guaranteed that we would have regulations as diligent and safe as the ones that are being formulated in the United States for the safety of their citizens?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry that I didn't answer the hon. member's question more properly the first time. Our House leader went walking by saying something to me at the same time as the hon. member was speaking.

Mr. Cunningham: How could you see him?

Mr. Conway: You could hear him but not see him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And the House leader is more important.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I'll speak to him about that later.

However, we are working with the federal government on the regulations and my answer, "Yes," was to confirm that yes, we'd be glad to look at anything they're doing in the US.

Mr. Foulds: You're not involved in formulating regulations?

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: May I ask the minister if he is considering suggesting to the federal government that these tank cars and other cars that are carrying such toxic chemicals be readily identifiable, so that fire department forces and other forces in municipalities would know the proper method of fighting any dangerous spillage or accident that may occur to the tank car?

Hon. Mr. McCague: It's my understanding that the cars carrying these cargoes are very well identified at this point. The problem is that if one goes on fire or explodes it's then very hard to locate the directions. So what we have done is we have sent out to all municipalities a very large volume of information. I had intended to have a volume of that information here for each of the opposition parties and I will do that on Monday.

BURNING OF PCBs

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, this seems to be the Minister of the Environment's day.

Mr. Foulds: That's why it's so dull.

Ms. Bryden: I have some new questions on the St. Lawrence Cement burnings. Since the certificate of approval under which the experimental burnings were being carried on has been returned to the ministry—it was not cancelled but, according to the press release, it was returned—will the minister table the certificate of approval under which the present burnings of waste oil are going on and will he indicate whether the certificate includes any reference to oil with PCBs possibly in it?

Secondly, is he asking the company to carry on compatibility tests, which the reports that the city of Windsor has just given us on PCB burnings in the United States shows are essential—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member come to the question mark?

Ms. Bryden: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I just would like to quote one sentence from this report. It says they must be tested for compatibility because "oils can severely react to each other when mixed, sometimes to the point of causing an explosion. Most times the waste oils can liberate gases which are up to 100 times more toxic than PCBs." Will the minister comment on whether such compatibility tests are being carried on in the St. Lawrence Cement burnings?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before the minister answers, could the private conversations be toned down a bit, please?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the kind of information that the member is requesting as a result of the quote she read, was part of the experimentation that went on at St. Lawrence some months ago.

When she mentioned the mixing of two types of PCBs, of oils or whatever it may be, just recently we did random tests of crankcase oil from three cars and found that two of them contained no PCBs at all and one contained 17 parts per million. So I think the hon. member can appreciate that we have got a lot of research to do on this matter yet.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Are compatibility tests being carried on in connection with the present burnings to see whether they may react in a dangerous manner with what is going into the burnings?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I don't have the answer to that question today.

Mr. B. Newman: Since the minister made mention that he had tested the oil from crankcases of certain vehicles, has the minister tested any of the new synthetic oils that are being used to see that there are no PCBs involved in them?

Hon. Mr. McCague: There are an awful lot of things we have not tested yet, but we will be glad to do that one.

Mr. Foulds: Would the minister answer the first part of the question from my colleague the member for Beaches-Woodbine, i.e., will he table the certificate under which the burnings have taken place?

Hon. Mr. McCague: We will table the certificate that St. Lawrence now has.

Mr. Foulds: And the previous one that was returned, please?

TAX INEQUITIES IN WATERLOO REGION

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: My question deals with tax inequities in Waterloo region and the Premier's letter of February 7. Could the Premier please explain—

Hon. Mr. Davis: No.

Mr. Sweeney: He had better explain, because no one else knows what he is talking about. Could the Premier please explain this one sentence: "However, it is my understanding that a number of mechanisms are available to the municipalities in the region to mitigate or remove tax inequities for 1978." What does the Premier mean by that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I assume I meant by that that there are a number of mechanisms available to the municipalities to mitigate the mill rates in 1978.

[10:45]

Mr. Cunningham: Has the Premier ever wondered why his government doesn't have any seats there?

Hon. Mr. Davis: You know why? Because those who represent it are more conservative than Conservatives.

Mr. Breithaupt: Certainly they're more successful than Conservatives.

Mr. Sweeney: If what the Premier says is true, could he explain why no official in the municipality knows what he is talking about?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member is suggesting that no official in that municipality understands that very—I think—understandable sentence. I will review that sentence and see if I can draft it in a way that would be more understandable and communicative to the municipality.

Mr. Reed: I don't think the Premier knows what he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member doesn't know whether I know or not.

Mr. Sweaney: That's what we are worried about.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is inscrutable.

CLOSURE OF HILLTOP ACRES

Mr. McClellan: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. At a meeting in early December, I believe, the minister met with members of Metro Toronto Social Services Committee regarding the social service restraints and, as I understand it, the minister agreed to the closure of Hilltop Acres Home for the Aged. I want to ask the minister, whether there had been previous discussions earlier in 1977 between his ministry and officials from Metro social services regarding the closing or phasing out of Hilltop Acres. If so, what was the nature of those discussions?

Hon. Mr. Norton: First of all, I would like to correct one part of the preliminary statement the hon. member made. To the best of my knowledge, my agreement was not necessary for the closure of Hilltop Acres.

Mr. McClellan: I didn't say it was.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Well, the suggestion was that at that time I had agreed to the closure of Hilltop.

What, in fact, I did agree to at that time was to assist Metropolitan Toronto in providing for alternative accommodation and relocation of those residents should they decide to close Hilltop. I was not party to that decision. In fact, at that time, they had a rather comprehensive report from the Toronto inspection department indicating certain deficiencies in the building. I, personally, had not been party to any discussions.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, would the Premier and the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) cease and desist?

Mr. Foulds: The Speaker would have said "decease."

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, I was going to observe that you are much more moderate than one of the other hon. gentlemen who occupies your chair. He occasionally asks people to "decease".

Mr. Conway: The Liberals are always more moderate.

Mr. Deans: More wishy-washy.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You are in the radical middle.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The questions was, if I recall correctly, had there been earlier discussions. I had not been party to any earlier discussions. Whether there had been discussions specifically relating to Hilltop or not, involving my officials, I don't know; but I will find out for the member, if he wishes.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: I want to ask the minister whether he is aware that at the Metro council meeting on February 28, Bruce Sinclair, chairman of Metro Social Services Committee, indicated that some time in the late spring of 1977, Metro had consulted with his ministry, and the province encouraged Metro, according to Mr. Sinclair, to phase out and demolish Hilltop Acres. This was the basis of my question, and I would like to ask the minister if he would review that matter and report back to us as to whether or not that is accurate.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I will undertake to do so, but I can tell the hon. member at this time that it was certainly never the policy of my ministry, as expressed by me or agreed to by me, to particularly encourage the closing, except perhaps insofar as the question of safety was involved. At some point—and I am not sure of the precise time during the year—Metro had received from the Toronto inspection department a list of deficiencies; and the figure that sticks in my mind is the potential cost of $168,000 to remedy those.

Should we have been in a position to assist with the financial cost at that time, we would, of course, have had a report from the Ontario fire marshal and chances are that the cost would be much greater even than that. Insofar as the cost element was involved, we might have encouraged that something be done about the safety of the building, but I don't think it was ever our policy to encourage specifically the closing.

Mr. McClellan: That is very strange. I will wait for the minister's report.

STATUS OF CIVIL SERVANT

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in this morning's Globe and Mail, there is a story about Mr. Peter Branch, a civil servant who has been getting $25,000 a year. I'd like to ask a question of the Premier. First of all, is it true that most of his day is spent browsing through the newspapers and contemplating his personal affairs? Secondly, how many members of the civil service—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am glad you asked that one.

Mr. Epp: How many members of the civil service in both TEIGA and each of the other ministries are red-circled?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can't answer the latter question. I'm sure the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld) would be delighted to give the member that figure. What was the first part of the question?

Mr. Epp: The first part, Mr. Speaker, is whether it's true whether this person is permitted—

Hon. Mr. Davis: To read the newspaper?

Mr. Epp: —to read newspapers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sure there is no prohibition on him reading the newspapers.

Mr. Epp: Most of the day?

Mr. S. Smith: Is he permitted to do anything else?

Mr. Foulds: It depends on which paper he reads.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sure he's permitted to do many other things.

However, Mr. Speaker, I read the story and am familiar with some of the details. I understand the Treasurer is going to make some observations on the subject Monday afternoon.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Premier confirm that the civil servant in question, Mr. Branch, was formerly very much involved with regional planning and that his apparent idleness in recent years reflects the complete lack of commitment by this government to any meaningful planning for the various regions of the province?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You know, you are like a vitamin—one a day. You dump one a day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: They call him little black Cassidy in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: It is "blackout" Cassidy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was so intrigued by the question I forget what it was. Would the member mind repeating it for me?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it was a good question so I will be happy to repeat it. Can the Premier confirm that the apparent idleness of Mr. Branch, at government orders, reflects the lack of commitment of this government to the whole area of regional planning in which Mr. Branch was formerly occupied?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have two choices here. I can say "no," which is the simple, very accurate answer which would not be satisfactory to the hon. member. Or I can take the balance of the question period explaining the extent of regional planning that has gone on in this province—

Mr. MacDonald: But you wouldn't do that.

Mr. Deans: Please don't do that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —some of it supported by members opposite and a lot of it not supported by members opposite—

Ms. Gigantes: You couldn't last out the balance of the question period explaining that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —depending how it affected their own particular constituencies. However, if the member wishes me to go through the litany of the Niagara Escarpment, the Toronto-centred region, all of those great programs, in terms of regional planning for the public of this province, I would be delighted to do so.

Mr. Kerrio: Dispense.

Mr. Warner: Don't explain disasters.

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, I would say that Mr. Branch's present activities do not reflect the commitment of this government towards regional planning.

Mr. Cunningham: While the Premier is asking the Chairman of Management Board to involve himself in a study of how many people have been, in fact, red-circled in the government, would he also ask him to find out how many people in the executive council have, in fact, been red-circled?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the very important nature of that very important question from the hon. member, which really reflects the general tenor of most important questions he asks in this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Were you standing up Eric?

Hon. B. Stephenson: They are inane.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In fact, I could go one step further. It really reflects the depth of his intellectual capacity in terms of statements he makes outside this Legislature.

Ms. Gigantes: You are insufferable.

Mr. Lewis: Boy, he certainly got to the Premier. He is relatively harmless.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In view of the fact that the Premier said that a statement would be made on the original question, and it seems to be spreading out from there, I'll now ask for a new question.

RETIREMENT HOMES

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development—I think. It may be for the Minister of Community and Social Services and I would appreciate it if he would listen to it too, because I'm not positive.

There is an advertisement in the business section of the Hamilton Spectator which has appeared now on at least two occasions which says, and I quote: "Dollars roll in, 25-bed retirement home, $10,000 per bed, 45 minutes from Hamilton, gross income over $100,000, low expenses." I find it most offensive.

Mr. Lewis: It is what you call a gross ad.

Mr. Deans: I think that if it is possible in Ontario to do that, it should be stopped. I would appreciate it if either one of the ministers would take a look at the whole matter of retirement homes and the incomes derived from them and the way that people are being gouged, and take some action to put an end to it.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member, if he will send me that information, I will certainly make sure that it's included in a study that we are anticipating on accommodation for senior citizens.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Correctional Services has a reply to a question previously asked.

GLENDALE TRAINING CENTRE

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on February 22, the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) asked me if offshore beef was being used at the Glendale Adult Training Centre.

In reply to the hon. member's question, I wish to inform the House that all tenders for beef to be used in correctional institutions operated by my ministry specify that the meat supplied must be Canadian beef. We have had no written reports from the Glendale Adult Training Centre to indicate that other than Canadian beef was supplied to that facility. However, there have been verbal reports to this effect from kitchen staff following the member's question.

In view of the question by the hon. member and these verbal reports, I have asked the Ontario provincial police anti-rackets squad to undertake an investigation of the matter involving both the suppliers and the staff who receive, prepare and serve meat at Glendale.

I want to make it very clear that the government will not tolerate abuse by suppliers of government tenders which call for the supply of Canadian beef—

Mr. Lewis: Okay, now this is what's called going one step too far.

Hon. Mr. Drea:—nor will we allow negligence or lack of action by staff in reporting cases of abuse.

Mr. Lewis: Don't ask a supplementary. Leave it. Sit down.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, in view of the answer that has been given by the minister this morning—

Mr. S. Smith: We demand the militia as well.

Mr. G. I. Miller:—would he not only look into Glendale, but would he look into all the institutions in Ontario to make sure that they are all using the same products?

Mr. Lewis: You take that anti-rackets squad and you wheel from institution to institution.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In the month of November 1977 I put out written instructions throughout the ministry that the practice of accepting substitutions—that is, products not Canadian in origin—was to be discontinued. I brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) and to a number of marketing boards that apparently there had been developing a trade practice whereby—and I wish to remind the House that when one tenders on the basis of Canadian prices, one pays much higher prices than one pays perhaps for dumped commodities—there were sudden shortages of Canadian products at the time of delivery.

In the month of November I put out written instructions throughout the ministry and all suppliers were notified that no substitutions would be accepted at any time. A second instruction was that if a supplier twice showed up with substitutions, his tender was automatically null and void. Furthermore, I said I would go to the combines branch of the federal government regarding that type of trade practice.

Ms. Gigantes: Do it for hospitals too.

Mr. MacDonald: You want to watch out. He will clean you all out.

Mr. Lewis: Is this a matter of national security?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, it is a matter of honest business.

Mr. Lewis: I just wondered how high we would elevate it.

Mr. Foulds: Were we a little short of tomato juice in November?

CONSPIRACY TRIAL

Mr. Lawlor: Would the Attorney General make a brief and searching statement about the recent abortive conspiracies trial at Woodstock?

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There is an ongoing investigation in relation to that aborted trial, as described by the member for Lakeshore, and until that investigation has been completed I will not be in a position to make any statement.

GLENDALE TRAINING CENTRE

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. When members of the opposition party met last Monday in the minister's office to discuss the closing of Glendale Adult Training Centre, the minister indicated he would consider the brief presented by the citizens' committee and bring the matter to the attention of his House leader for referral to the Justice committee. Can the minister inform me if this has been done, and if, in fact, the matter will go before the Justice committee?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I pointed out last Monday that I would refer the matter to my House leader, and, as I indicated to the House leader of the opposition on Tuesday, the House leader of the government party would be replying directly. It is my understanding that yesterday the House leader did inform the House leader of the opposition that this matter was not going before any standing committee of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Industry and Tourism has an answer to a question asked earlier.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Niagara Falls—

Mr. Foulds: Are you still a closet Liberal? (Applause).

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I can't believe I finally got the deserved applause.

Mr. Foulds: John, they didn't even wait for your answer.

TOURISM ADVERTISING

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) inquired of me earlier this week about the problems being faced by small tourist operators in advertising in the United States, as a result of not being allowed the exemption from taxation. We have discussed this privately, but I would like to put it on the record that any advertising on a United States radio or television station that is directed primarily to a market in the United States is a deductible expense for federal and Ontario purposes.

The relevant provision, section 19(1) of the Income Tax Act disallows the expense only if the advertisement is directed primarily to a market in Canada. In the case in question, as raised by the hon. member, the expenses would be deductible if the advertisements were placed on US radio and TV stations and were intended primarily to attract US tourists to Canadian tourist attractions.

I would comment that the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) did make that point, and was quite correct, the day the question was asked.

AIR POLLUTION

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the Minister of the Environment: Would the minister let it be known in no uncertain terms to Governor Milliken of Michigan that Ontario and his ministry will not tolerate any relaxation or even temporary suspension of environmental controls on electrical power generating stations using coal, inasmuch as that is now being considered in Michigan, just as Ohio did; it is counter-productive, since one saves fuel with the controls that are there rather than uses more; and because the effect of that would cause the Detroit-Edison generating plant to pour out yet even more pollution over the west end of the city of Windsor?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I will take that matter under consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

REPORTS

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INCO AND FALCONBRIDGE LAYOFFS

Mr. Handleman: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the final report of the select committee on Inco and Falconbridge layoffs. Copies have been placed in the mail boxes of all members of the House.

Under the provisional orders I am permitted, and I believe am expected, to make a brief statement as chairman of the committee. Initially, I would like to point out that, simultaneously with the presentation of this report to the House, copies are being distributed to interested parties in Sudbury, Port Colborne and Ottawa.

The select committee on Inco and Falconbridge layoffs was asked to inquire, within a very limited time-frame, into the factors and considerations leading to the layoffs; to examine the future plans of Inco and Falconbridge in relation to their effects on the Canadian operations and to make appropriate recommendations.

On February 8, 1978, the committee's interim report was published. Contained in that report was the recommendation for a 60-day moratorium on the layoffs in the hope that the two senior levels of government could use the time to develop a program to alleviate the impact of the layoffs.

In the light of the responses of the two governments to the recommendation in the interim report, the select committee reluctantly acknowledges that it has no additional specific recommendations to make to avert the pending Falconbridge layoff scheduled for April 1, 1978.

The final report, which I am tabling today, contains a series of specific recommendations aimed at reducing the long-range impact of the layoffs in the Sudbury and Port Colborne communities. In addition, the report contains recommendations designed to improve the stability of the Canadian mining industry and to prevent future mass layoffs.

The committee was fortunate in having the services of a very competent staff. In particular I would like to thank our counsel, Mr. John Clement, QC, and his associate, Mr. Peter Williams, as well as the mining consultant to the committee, Mr. Geddes Webster. It was only with their help that the committee was able to cope with such a complex subject in so short a time.

In addition, I would like to thank Mr. John Holtby, first clerk assistant to the Legislature and clerk to the committee, for his faithful service. I would also like to extend my gratitude to the panel of committee chairmen of this Legislature who graciously permitted the Inco committee to take priority over all other committee work, even at the price of some dislocation in their own committee activities.

In conclusion, I'd like to congratulate the members of the committee for their ability to work together under great stress and to thank them for making the position of chairman a very rewarding experience.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(continued)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Swart: You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that last evening I had not quite finished my remarks by adjournment time. I had dealt with the matter of procedures of this House and presented some perhaps rather radical proposals for changes in those procedures and operations. Those included the proposal that there should be monthly sittings whereby we would eliminate the need for the government to use orders in council as it does so frequently between sittings and even during sittings.

I suggested there should be no committees sitting while the House is in session, that we should eliminate less meaningful debate from this chamber, such as the estimates, and that we should shorten the time for debate on the Throne Speech and the budget speech. I suggested that budget estimates should be dealt with early in the year rather than letting them carry over till November and December when the money has either already been spent or has been committed. There is really something unreal about discussing those estimates at that time.

On these items I suggested that the result could be less House time, therefore better attendance in this House and more efficient and democratic conduct of the business of this province. I guess when talking about the effective workings of this Legislature and the dignity of the House, one cannot omit the question of decorum during the question period. About two years ago, more than 100 students from one of the secondary schools in Welland visited this Legislature. I invited them to write me about their impressions of the Legislature. Their teachers made it a class project, and I got letters from them all.

I want to state that 75 per cent of them stated as their first comment that they deplored our conduct during the question period. Every member here has heard the same comment from visitors whom they know. I guess it has to say something to us here in the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The problem is over there.

Mr. Swart: In no sense do I say this in condemnation of the quality of the MPPs on either side of the House. My colleagues here and I personally are as guilty as anyone. It is understandable; feelings run high. We don't hold our views lightly. We don't accept arguments, contradictions or evasions. But I am convinced that we hurt the public perspective of democracy by our boisterous actions.

I am not sure that it can be curbed. But I say to you, Mr. Acting Speaker, and through you to the Speaker, that there may be some merit in calling the House leaders or party leaders together to make it clear that you are going to enforce order more rigidly and to win some sort of voluntary agreement on more appropriate conduct by us, the MPPs.

Finally, I want to mention one other sort of non-issue, but it is a matter of concern. It is the designation MPP—Member of Provincial Parliament—by which we are known.

My standing orders tell me this is the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. I am a member of that as is everyone else here. We are not members of the provincial Parliament. My designation, and everyone else's therefore should be MLA, not MPP. We do not need to aspire to the status of the federal members—if that is any sort of an aspiration—or the equivalent of the National Assembly of Quebec. If that was the reason for the MPP title—as I understand that it was—to give a bit more prestige, if MLA sounds a bit more lowly, so be it. But I think Ontario is a pretty good place and I no more want to copy the designation of those people in Ottawa, particularly the majority that is there now, than I would want to be associated politically with those on the other side of the House here. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule that we should be known for what we are—MLAs, not MPPs.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I disagree.

Mr. Swart: You will note, Mr. Speaker, that I have not dealt with any of the subject matter in the Throne Speech. I couldn't; there was so little there.

When we come to budget matters I will have my say about the deplorable failure of this government to deal with the economic and social issues in this province.

I simply hope that my comments today may improve in some small measure the machinery for dealing with those issues. It just may be, by more committee work instead of dealing with vague and minor items in the House, by not permitting committees to sit while the House is in session, by monthly sessions and by less being done by order in council, that the House attendance will improve greatly and business will be carried out more efficiently. Add to these things better conduct in this House and we will enhance our respect by the public and the press.

I am, of course, a relative newcomer to this House. I have only been here two and a half years. But all my adult life I have been a staunch, and perhaps I should say almost a fanatic, supporter of and believer in the system of parliamentary democracy.

I must say that I wince a bit when I read accusations of a political party receiving $25,000 at the same time a request is made for a government permit, or that committee members of this House were vacationing in Florida at the expense of the Ontario taxpayers. These things frequently are groundless or blown out of proportion. But, I say, surely we as politicians cannot risk even the appearance of self-serving actions by our decisions. Public cynicism is the greatest enemy of democracy and it feeds and thrives on such things. I look forward to greater dedication, consecration and idealism by the MPPs in this House and I hope that I too may conduct myself in that manner when that is the case. [11:15]

Mr. Williams: I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the response to the Speech from the Throne. In so doing, I found it difficult in assessing this blueprint for constructive government actions to single out any one particular area in which I would have the opportunity to speak at length because there are so many positive initiatives set out in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Reed: How about the five Liberal policies?

Mr. Williams: One can identify a number of the important issues which have been spoken on at length by a number of members in the Legislature, including the economy and jobs which are probably the salient concern today. We have the speech outlining the initiatives in the private sector that this government suggests are the appropriate initiatives to be taken along with continuing constraint in the public sector.

The speech outlined a program for energy conservation and security of supply of energy. The latter part of that was very significantly resolved earlier in the week when the government took a responsible action in signing the Hydro contracts that have received so much debate and consideration in committee and House in recent days.

Mr. Reed: Only time will show up the mistake.

Mr. Wildman: A sellout.

Mr. Williams: Then too the matter of compulsory auto insurance is one that will receive a great deal of attention in the government legislative program in the coming weeks. Reference has been made to refinements and new directions in health care with a particular emphasis on assumption of more personal responsibility in this field. This is an area on which I was thinking of speaking at some length. There is also the very genuine concern this government has with regard to cultural and language privileges and services, which is a matter that has been spoken to by many members of the House.

It's to none of these that I will be speaking today because, while I understood I had the luxury of speaking for the balance of today's session, I find that I am going to be limited to approximately a half-hour of time. The topic I will address myself to is going to be difficult because it's hard to find out how I can condense the many things I want to discuss on an extremely important issue that has received very little consideration in the debate on the Throne Speech but yet which is an important and significant new government involvement, direction and initiative, and that is the announced intention of the government to take a leading part in the supporting and strengthening of the family in Ontario.

Last December I expressed my open concern as to the status of the family in our society and what government was or was not doing with regard to giving support and recognition to the stance of the family in our current society. I did this by introducing into the House an Act respecting Family Day which was introduced for the purpose of setting aside a specific public holiday during which the families of our province could celebrate and pay due respect to family life. At that time, I think it received a certain amount of shouts and derision and ridicule by some members of the House as they yelled "motherhood" and "apple pie".

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the strength and security of the family in today's society is no longer an assured thing that can be taken for granted. In fact, I think one of the omissions of governments at all levels has been this assumption which has led government not in any way to endeavour to assist family life in our society. I said at the time I introduced my family day legislation into the Legislature, which I will again be reintroducing to complement this significant new government initiative, that we must now take stock and reassess the importance of the family in our society. I felt that a public attitude seems to have evolved in recent times that emphasizes and commends other lifestyles while minimizing, or even treating as irrelevant, the basic worth and importance of the family unit.

Our society seems to have developed a fixation on self-indulgence of the individual, devoid of legal or social responsibilities to anyone or anything. As a result, I say with conviction that the traditional role and importance of the family as the cornerstone of our society has been severely shaken. So it was with great delight that this new initiative and concern of government and involvement has been displayed in the Speech from the Throne. I'm looking forward in the coming weeks when the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) will be upholding the new initiatives in the form of ongoing government administrative and policy actions that will be presented to this House.

The basic moral and social values which are intrinsically woven into the family structure and conscience, it would appear, are no longer revered or honoured as a matter of course. Rather they are being challenged, questioned, ridiculed and even rejected as being out of step with the dawning of a new era of liberalization of the individual. It seems to me that governments and society as a whole have been caught up with the over-indulgence of the individual at the expense of all other segments of society.

Of course, it's the social heritage that is found in the family unit that has made our society what it is today. But the security that's found in the family unit, the communal association that exists between parents and children, is being challenged by outside influences today that didn't exist 20, 10, even five years ago. But still the valid concepts of the family unit remains as sound today as they did in the first half of this century and centuries before.

The growing individual has to find within the family his or her first involvement in a communal fashion, the first experience of social living with members of the family. It's within the family structure that we find the primary place for establishment of morals and values. It is from these we develop, as well, a knowledge and understanding and appreciation of our culture, both past, present, and hopefully into the future.

There is within the family both individuality and yet interdependence, and in this potential conflict there is a unification factor. People are strengthened in their own character by developing their own personalities, yet knowing how to work with and care for people within their family. It is not only a matter of self-help but also a question of helping others, not only within the family but as they grow and mature, learning to work and care and work with others in the broader community.

There are those of us today in and out of government who are obsessed totally and fully with social innovation to the point of rejecting and putting aside social heritage and discounting the validity of the family unit and its strength. I suggest that is going to excess and extreme that cannot be justified when examined.

The public attitude that is eroding the paramount importance of the family unit today, I suggest is threefold. Firstly, there appears to be an irreverence shown towards the traditional or conventional marriage institution. There is indeed an irreverence being shown towards the traditional religions upon which most family concepts are grounded. In fact, there is a diminishing respect for human life itself being displayed in various sectors of our society today.

If I might, I would like to identify some of the negative influencing factors to which I have alluded, because they are with us and they are significant influencing factors that do impact upon the family, particularly the younger members, so that they do start questioning and challenging basic values. It is not that they shouldn't be questioned and challenged; it is a question as to whether some of the new influences in fact are intended to replace the foundation of the family unit.

One of the common social trends today has been associated with the alternative to the marriage institution, which is the common-law union. New family law legislation will be introduced in this Legislature in the coming weeks which will give to that type of union some sense of legality that heretofore has not existed. It seems to me that here is an example of where men and women have an infatuation or a love for each other, yet have a concern or fear of assuming a permanent form of responsibility that would exist in entering into a marriage union. So they feel they will experiment with all of the benefits and traditions that flow with marriage without entering into any legal or moral responsibility that one normally would identify with the marriage ritual. Of course, without that type of responsibility, you do not find the development of the family concept nor the growth and nurturing of our society through procreation to the extent and degree that you will find within the normal family unit.

[11:30]

Perhaps some of this has developed because the family setting has changed so dramatically in recent times. This may have arisen largely out of the urbanization that has taken place and the mobility of our society whereby the younger members of the family voluntarily, but in any event, have left the family home, have moved to other communities to seek employment or to seek out a new life. We no longer have the predominant rural setting where the family life was the focal point of our daily activities from morning to night. Even during the working hours one might be working on the homestead or the farm, so that the continuing influence of the senior members of the family who tried to develop a sense of morality and values within the family is perhaps removed at an earlier age than it was in the past.

It is not uncommon to find members of families living in all corners of the nation and coming together infrequently to talk and to meet and to review their interrelationships. Along with this dramatic new social upheaval, if you will, as far as the effect on the family is concerned, is the accelerated materialistic self-indulgent society that has evolved in the last half of this century, greater than at any other time in our history.

I am not sure but I think a lot of it can be attributed, not only to this matter of urbanization wherein we have closer contact and greater outside involvement with people within a heavily populated area, but also perhaps to a more sophisticated communication and news media; also within the entertainment industry we find a great deal of emphasis being given to those elements and undertakings in our society which appear to be in conflict with the family concepts and values.

I refer, as only one example, to an article that appeared in a Canadian publication last fall, authored by a professor at the University of Toronto in the faculty of social work, Dr. Benjamin Schlesinger, when he was commenting on where the family is today. He pointed out, if I could quote: "The increasing emphasis of 'me' in families has also taken its toll. Once 'me' takes precedence over 'us,' the family is in trouble. Relentlessly doing your own thing is just not compatible with being part of a family."

I might extract just one other observation from his article which pertains to the media, and I think it is an interesting observation. Dr. Schlesinger was commenting that we really haven't found a viable substitute for the family in the past 100 years. We have abused it; we have said it was boring or that it stunts our development as human beings. Maybe we expect too much from the family and we are disappointed so we want to reject it.

Then Dr. Schlesinger goes on to say: "Part of this, sad to say, goes back to the usual whipping boy—the media. In examining television and newspapers, especially, we see that family issues are false and distorted. Most so-called family programs deal with single parents, which have helped to convince us that the Canadian family is falling apart in record numbers. This negative view of family life makes headlines all right, but the positive aspects don't. The brutality within the family is what's emphasized, not the health and sanity of most of our five million Canadian families.

"I would put the percentage of families that come into the attention of social agencies, police and hospitals at between 10 and 25 per cent. The majority of Canadian families manage to lead a satisfactory life, unheralded and without fanfare. I sometimes think that the image-makers on TV really project their own negative lives on to the screen and think this is a true reflection of family life today."

I close the quotes but add one from further along in the article which ties in with those observations. Dr. Schlesinger says: "It's interesting, but in this country there is not a single study that has examined what makes a sane and healthy Canadian family tick."

There are people expressing concern in our society about the well-being and the security of our families. I think it is imperative that government take some initiative and show some sensitivity to, and support for, the families.

I spoke earlier about three considerations that I felt were challenging the family setting. I made reference to the marriage institution. Even our traditional religions, not only the Judaeo-Christian religions, but all major traditional religions today, seem to be challenged, questioned and even ridiculed. There is an interwoven allegiance between the family concept and the traditional religions of today.

Then, too, there was the third area of great concern, and that is the diminishing respect for human life itself. There are many well-meaning groups and vested-interest organizations today that are showing a concern for our society and for the environment but which perhaps unknowingly are working at odds with the well-being of the family. Perhaps I might briefly identify one or two of the types of organizations that I think are having this negative influence.

First of all, we have that group in society which calls itself the zero population association or organization. I think it is composed of a lot of responsible well-meaning people but it seems to be taking to the extreme the concept of responsible family planning. It suggests that society, somehow, as it exists today, should remain exclusive and prevent future generations from coming into existence.

It's interesting that some of the social environmentalists seem to show greater concern today for the lower forms of life than for what we assume to be the highest form of life, namely, homo sapiens. While great concern is being expressed with regard to the imbalance of nature because of the use of pesticides or other artificial means so that the balance of nature is being interfered with and disrupted, interestingly enough it now has come home to roost within that highest form of human life, our own, and it has been reflected in our diminishing population.

We find that the teaching profession has been probably the first to feel the impact of it because they have found they no longer have the children to teach for which they were trained several years ago. We are closing schools because the population of children that was there after the war years has diminished to the point where we are now at a no-growth stance. This is not only impacting on that particular type of situation but other areas too. It has disrupted the economy and is affecting it in an adverse way. There are many products that are being manufactured that were designed to appeal to a certain age level which is no longer coming into existence in the numbers that it was years ago.

Even within our area, there is an imbalance that is being created by an extreme measure which is being taken. The zero population concept is perhaps a selfish approach to take, arising again perhaps out of the concept of self-interest. The other ends of the life spectrum too, are ones that are receiving considerable attention these days, whether it be a growing concern in the States, or I should say a growing initiative by some organizations that have been developed in the States towards terminating life in its later stages. Here we have been reading about, and there has been debate in the past about the activities by some of the organizations in the States asking for laws that deal with euthanasia.

At the other end of the life spectrum, we have that perhaps most controversial social issue that rages today, the matter of abortion, which deals in fact with the taking of human lives before they are fully developed. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the greatest human tragedy in the latter half of this century is the public attitude that has been developed towards human life at the earliest part of the human life spectrum.

In this province during the past two or three years, lives that could have been nourished and brought to fulfilment have been extinguished in growing numbers because of the existing laws that we have today. Within the province of Ontario alone abortions approaching the 20,000 mark are occurring on an annual basis. This indeed is a human tragedy and it has to be in conflict with the family concept of nurturing and building future generations. It is one with which this government and this society have to come to grips.

These are some of the important social issues that this government is prepared to address itself to.

Mr. di Santo: This government? What are you talking about?

Mr. Wildman: Abortion is a federal matter.

Mr. Williams: While one of the members from another party spoke earlier today about the importance of dignity and decorum in the legislative chamber, I think the ridicule and the shouts of derision are only passing expressions of frustration that really don't have the importance of dealing with the actual issues and debating them fully and freely in this House.

[11:45]

I am pleased that this government will be unfolding in the weeks to come a program that will indeed enhance the role and the authority of the family unit and will again continue to give support throughout the communities to the family by giving traditional support to family unity month, which is the month of May, and a matter which I had referred to at the time I introduced my Family Day Act.

There has been long discussion and a request for a Heritage Day Act, but this seems to have become stalled at the federal level. It seems to me that perhaps, while the concept of a Family Day Act received some ridicule and criticism, it might, in fact, with critical scrutiny, be a better substitute and more sound than even a national heritage day bill, because the greater part of our heritage is, in fact, found within the family.

In concluding my remarks on this aspect of the Throne Speech, I look forward to the days and weeks ahead when the initiative will be taken by this government—as I think it is being taken by no other government in recent times—

Mr. Haggerty: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Williams: —to address itself to the primacy of the family and the ordering of this primacy within our social priorities. I look forward to working with the Provincial Secretary for Social Development and the other members of the government party to give meaning to this blueprint for social concern and involvement by government.

One of the initiatives that will be dealt with, of course, will be that pertaining to alcohol abuse in our society. That will be debated at length in coming weeks. One of the difficulties that we find in our society today probably has to do with the accelerated majority rights that have been given to younger people in our society when the age of majority laws were introduced some years ago. I think these are deserving of reassessment and reappraisal, but these are all matters which will undoubtedly be looked at and discussed in the coming weeks.

Mr. Speaker, it has been with a great deal of pleasure that I have had the opportunity to address myself to this all-important aspect of the Speech from the Throne. I look forward, with you, in anticipation to seeing the government program in this area unfold in the weeks ahead.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for this opportunity to reply to the Speech from the Throne on behalf of the good citizens of my riding of Kent-Elgin and also on behalf of the people of Ontario.

I have spoken on a number of occasions since being granted the privilege of attending this historic chamber, but this is my first opportunity to reply to the Speech from the Throne. No doubt my predecessor, Jack Spence, during his 22 years of office performed this privilege many times, and I am sure more effectively than I. Jack was and is a singular fellow. His mind was possessed of a great storehouse of good sense. Daily, I meet people who tell me of his great storehouse of anecdotes and stories of good humour gained during those years as a member of the Kent county council, as warden in 1949, I think, and as a member here for some 22 years.

During the election campaign, and many times since, people have told me of the many acts of kindness that he performed as a neighbour and that he extended to them as their member. I might say that during the course of the election he advised me on the best way to conduct my campaign. He always had a unique ending to his advice: "Of course, I'm not always right." I looked at his record and decided he was always right; so I followed his advice.

He had his feet planted firmly in the Oxford township soil and he had his head held high in the clear Kent county air. He was dreaming at times of a better world and he acted to make this a better world. It has been a great privilege to follow in—not to fill—his footsteps, as no one can take his unique place in Kent-Elgin history. I am happy to report that Jack is enjoying his retirement. He especially appreciated the Jack Spence night held in his honour last fall and he shortly will be taking a trip overseas, a gift from the constituency.

I applaud the platitudes in the Speech from the Throne and I hope they become more than platitudes; I hope they become facts. I am especially pleased that the government has recognized the need to encourage manufacturing. Several small towns in my riding depend upon manufacturing to supply employment. Many of these plants are parts plants and fabricators, and in some cases they're assemblers. We hope they are able to expand their economic activities.

Our riding is known primarily as agricultural riding, and yet I recognize that we need a healthy industrial sector to bring a balance to our economy. My riding, as part of Kent and Elgin, has a great capacity for agricultural production, blessed as it is with good soils that are drained either naturally or on an engineering basis by well-skilled people. It is a warmer climate than most parts of Canada, and the population are aggressive people who know how to make use of those soils and the climate.

I believe that many members will be disappointed by the fact that the speech gives only two lines—13 words, actually—to an agricultural orientation. I quote: "New initiatives will be developed to sell more of our food commodities abroad." I acknowledge that reference was made to the fact that Ontario participates in a buy-Canadian campaign to support domestic products in manufacturing and agriculture. But surely the industry that represents 20 per cent of the economic activity of this province deserves more than 13 words of direct concern and a passing reference in a 25-page document.

I would like to make some suggestions to the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) that he could carry to the Ontario Food Council and to his ministry for study and action. My thoughts are based on the realization that we will probably be faced with low grain prices for the next several years. I acknowledge that we have in place, both in the federal and provincial governments, stabilization programs—Liberal programs, I would remind you, Mr. Speaker—that are going to enhance the agricultural producers of grain. Yet I believe we have to face the fact that we have to face low grain prices for the immediate future, the reason being that grain prices are established in the United States.

That country is currently spending $45 billion a year for offshore oil. That is $45 billion spent for consumption—it does not go into construction, highways, bridges, public buildings and so on—and it is paid for by printing money. The consequences are massive deficits and a deterioration of the US dollar versus most other world currencies.

To try at least to partially offset this, the United States is committed to high grain production and low prices for grain. Foreign governments can only buy grain for livestock feed if it is low-priced, and these foreign governments, in nearly every case, are struggling themselves to pay for high-priced oil, having less money therefore left over for grain.

The US Congress has not been able to pass comprehensive energy legislation and so the situation will not change until the OPEC countries refuse to exchange oil for paper. The result is that the best opportunities for Ontario farmers are right here at home. One of the head officials of the marketing section of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food agrees in a recent speech to the Ontario Crop Improvement Association.

I would point out that the greatest gains in Ontario agriculture can be made in the specialty crops—fruits and vegetables. This is an area where we have a deficit in our trade—the production of vegetables for processing—and the processing plants themselves are quite modern and highly mechanized. They can compete with producers anywhere in the world where the terms of competition are equal.

I believe the most neglected area is the production of fruits and vegetables for fresh consumption. The area that I represent in southwestern Ontario has all of the requisites for this production. If we had proper nutrition in this country we would double our per capita consumption, and we would accomplish some of the goals the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) is promoting in his media campaign.

When you look specifically at this area of production you find an industry that has copied the packaging practices of shippers from such distant points as Mexico, California, Texas, Arizona, Florida and Washington state. We did this because we wanted to present as attractive and acceptable a package as these distant, cheaper shippers. We wanted to get rid of the dirty and broken wooden crates that once spoiled our wholesale markets.

I was part of that movement, and I acknowledge my participation. But I now recognize that Ontario products shipped to nearby markets are overpackaged. As an example, a four-quart basket of fresh fruit or vegetables is packaged in a 17-cent consumer package and is shipped to market. Four of these units go in a master container—a disposable carton that costs approximately an additional 17 cents per four-quart unit. Many of these master containers do not even get into the retail store. The consumer units are taken out of the master container at the receiving dock. The units are placed on portable display racks and the empty master container is thrown into the waste container.

Our industry needs to attack this problem. We need a master container—probably of fibreglass, but there may be other materials that are available—that would carry a monetary deposit, and a system of collecting these for re-use, a system of sanitizing them, and a system for financing them.

Retailers would not voluntarily support such a system. They are concerned only with making a profit on the movement of the product from the receiving dock to the checkout point. They are not in the business of reducing farmer-to-consumer costs. They measure their profits in terms of markup percentage and in terms of dollars of sales per hour of employee labour. As long as their profits are on a par with, or above industry averages, by these measurements they are satisfied.

[12:00]

I submit a far better measurement for all of us would be a measurement of net profit. However, they go by these other terms. There have been examples of returnable deposit containers in the industry in the past—the returnable deposit wooden banana box; and the returnable wooden Owossa, an apple crate used in the state of Michigan, the use of which died out there because there was no orderly system to guard this system.

Growers who put out a new container usually got back a used or broken container. These problems could be overcome with a little imagination and I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) that we are long overdue for the recognition of the opportunities. These are opportunities that really had their turning point in the escalation of oil prices in 1973, which ended cheap packaging and cheap transportation.

I have attended many conferences of fruit and vegetable marketing people in the United States and I can assure this House from my observations that whatever practices we develop here would be a distinct advantage. In that very free enterprise country they are not about to adopt any such methods. In fact, they have laws that would prevent them adopting such methods.

I would point out to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) that the development of a deposit container for fruits and vegetables would have benefits in reducing the solid waste load of our towns and cities. The foregoing comments also apply to the 40 by 48 inch wooden pallet. Surely we can devise returnable deposit containers that would be compatible with a returnable deposit pallet. No doubt the measurements would be metric, and our industry has already begun conversion of our packages to metric sizes and weights.

I live on a road leading to a landfill site and quite frequently see semi-trailer loads of perfectly good pallets worth about $8 apiece sent out to the dump, where they are buried. The reason this happens is that the goods are unloaded on a dock and since the stores have a policy of having a very small receiving area there is no place to store that pallet to be picked up and returned to its point of origin.

They are thrown down on the ground and this means the next time an empty truck which might pick these up comes by the driver of the truck has to lift about a 90-pound pallet up to a height of six or seven feet, a rather impossible task. So the pallets go to the dump. I would suggest that if we had a comprehensive study and legislation to cover this, these could be returned and used over and over again.

The Throne Speech also mentioned de-regulation in the trucking industry, and I believe there are savings here for both agricultural producers and for consumers. Agricultural products are trucked to Toronto, which is our greatest concentration of consumers and our most important port in Ontario. Bulk goods come to Toronto by way of ships and these could be trucked back to our small towns and our smaller cities if we had a backhaul system allowing these trucks to take the backhaul.

It would seem like a natural system; agricultural goods to Toronto, bulk and manufactured goods by return. We all pay for this inefficiency in terms of higher costs and wastage of energy. I know my colleague, the transportation critic, the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham) would not support free-for-all trucking, nor do I. That policy amongst exempt haulers in the USA has bankrupted thousands of independent truckers and has resulted in serious shortages of trucks in certain shipping areas and surpluses in others, but as a society we in Ontario are not as opposed to using the wise and judicious hand of government in the marketplace as our friends to the south. Surely with our successful experiences of more than 40 years in the marketing board field we could find ways of facilitating backhauls without creating chaos in the industry.

Mr. Speaker, I've addressed myself to a narrow field of agriculture. I've confined my remarks to this field not because of any lack of understanding of grain and livestock production, indeed I was in the grain and livestock business for many years and I still remain a producer of grain. I've confined my suggestions to this narrow field because it is where great strides can be made, where jobs can be created, where foreign exchange can be saved, and where we can find confidence in our ability to do a great deal more.

I hope the government and the Minister of Agriculture and Food, the hon. member for Durham-York, and the Minister of the Environment, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, will take note of these suggestions.

Thank you.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to participate in the Throne Speech debate and to try in my own limited way to speak to some of the issues and concerns of the people of Hamilton East and, as I see them, of working people throughout the province of Ontario. I think I would be remiss if I didn't at the start congratulate the Speaker of the House and the Deputy and Acting Speakers for the job they're doing.

Commenting on my riding, as some others have done, I'd like to make one comment only. There are probably two or three members in this House who will remember my predecessor who sat here for 20 years; and I'm talking about Reg Gisborn. I think most of the hon. members would be pleased to know that while he has, I think, had a real rough five years, he is still hanging on, still showing an interest in what goes on in this House and reading at least two or three newspapers a day and following up on the key debates. I get constant demands from Reg for copies of bills or particular speeches that are made by members of the House. So he has not lost his interest in what's going on in the Legislature.

One of the reasons I wanted to speak on this Throne Speech is simply that the government, in my honest opinion, is not responding to the needs and concerns of the people in this province. I get the feeling, I've had it for a long time—and I know others disagree with me—that this government seems to shudder at the idea of breaking any new ground or looking at any new initiatives, particularly in the economic field. If this government hasn't tried something before, quite often seven or eight times, it's no good. That principle seems to apply even if the thing that they've tried seven or eight times has failed seven or eight times.

I think the classic example is the Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. McKeough) and his tax concessions to industry which we've seen in several consecutive budgets; and with the same results every time, more unemployment. Unfortunately, it looks like we haven't put enough people out of work in this province, because I get the feeling that he's going to try it once again in the coming budget for the province of Ontario.

He should take a look, not necessarily at some of the things we're saying, but at some of the comments of other people around the province. I thought a comment was well made by a columnist—I believe he operates out of our gallery but I'm not sure I've ever met him personally—John Belanger in the Sun, on March 1. He makes a pretty good point of the fact that the tax concessions, whether at the federal level or provincial level, simply haven't worked in terms of producing jobs in this province of ours. Another comment in that same day's paper really wonders how concessions to industry are going to work when we have our industrial establishment in the province of Ontario today working at considerably less than 85 per cent of capacity. I don't know how the concessions improve this situation when we're not currently using the full capacity that we have.

If we have to go the business incentive route, I wonder what is so wrong with making the concessions that we give to industry conditional on actual new job production, a point New Democrats have been making for a long time. Just to say that we think we're going to get the jobs as a result of these concessions hasn't worked; it hasn't worked, consistently, and I don't think it's going to work; and it's open to all kinds of abuses. The Treasurer and the Premier (Mr. Davis), when they talk about this, say that's the purpose of the incentives to industries we've seen so far in various budgets. Why not drop the rhetoric and substitute some positive actions? That is why, in the question period today, I referred to the Premier's comments about what he was going to do, or what this province was trying to do, in terms of the new automobile parts plants that are going to be built. We're apparently in competition with some of the lower wage areas in the southern United States for these plants. We have some concern because one of them at least got discussed at some length in our Inco committee as to the possibility of locating that plant in the city of Sudbury. The Premier made the point that he was very reluctant to use public funds as an incentive in this kind of game of trying to get these particular companies. In spite of events in the House today, I cannot understand how to rationalize his statements that he refuses, or doesn't think it is a good idea or has reservations about using tax dollars for this kind of incentive. I had them as well when we were dealing with some of the big companies, but how does he rationalize that with the position we hear all the time in this House, that we are giving across-the-board concessions to industry to produce jobs?

The one thing about a little help in this particular field is that it almost certainly would have produced a job. It seems to me there is some kind of a double standard that the government is applying here.

It seems to me also that when we have unemployment in Ontario at a level of 316,000—and that's the highest since the Depression—it's got to be a matter of government concern. So help me, looking through that Throne Speech, I really don't see anything other than a few Band-Aids or temporary make-work projects. I see nothing that is going to lead to producing an economic policy that will give us more employment in the province.

If the government has a concern, up until now we have seen it in words only; I think it is time that we replaced the words with some action. It sure as blazes hasn't shown positive action up until now. We have been promising 100,000 new jobs for the last couple of years. Apart from the charters, I have heard statements from the Treasurer and from the Premier that we have had serious concern for at least the last couple of years over the deteriorating employment situation in the province.

And what happened? Last year, we saw an increase of 79,000—say 80,000 jobs in the province. To me, that's far short of 100,000 new jobs. We saw an increase in employment in the province from 3,720,000 in January to 3.8 million at the end of December last year. That's an increase of 80,000 jobs in the province of Ontario.

I think that there should be concern that we didn't reach the target of 100,000. It should have been a lot higher. During the same period, the work force in the province of Ontario increased by 123,000. My limited ability in arithmetic tells me that's a deficit of some 43,000 workers between the new jobs that were created and the larger number of people who entered the work force. It's one of the reasons we have an even worse situation this year.

I don't think that should be just political rhetoric. It is one thing to miss a target in normal times, but in my honest opinion an entirely different thing to miss a target when your back is against the wall and when you are dealing with unemployment at record levels. This demands action and not a continuing policy that has been a failure for the last several years. That policy—the best way I can put it—is a policy of government freebies to the corporate sector.

The unemployed do come from all segments of our society but the young people or those with some form of handicap seem to be hit hardest of all.

The situation concerning women in the work force has not improved. Figures show that clearly. They still get paid less for similar jobs done by men, and they have much less chance for advancement to higher positions. I think it is interesting, but I cannot help but feel it underlines this government's thinking when we see the miserly increase we saw in the minimum wage and then realize it excluded any increase at all for waitresses or those who might be serving alcoholic beverages. That would cover a majority of them, and most of those people are at the very bottom of our income level.

Another group that was frozen at the $2.15 level were the young people—students under 18. I am wondering if this is because this government doesn't consider them equal as workers to the rest and therefore not entitled to at least the small increase that was given to other people covered by the minimum wage.

Maybe it is just a question of if you don't have too much power, or aren't too well organized, or are too young to vote, you don't really count with this government.

I wonder, when we take a look at the situation in the building trades—31,000 members in Metro Toronto and 9,000 of them unemployed, better than 27 per cent—why we didn't see more positive recommendations in the Throne Speech concerning the building trades people.

[12:15]

I suggest that another area we have really fallen down on for a long time—we are now seeing maybe the first discussion of it—is the whole area of apprentices and a program of industrial planning—taking a look at where we are going to need the apprentices and what kind of trades people we are going to need. One aspect of this that has been in the paper recently and has stood out for an awful long time is a program for qualified tool and die makers, and you know the policy we have had in this province, and unfortunately in Canada as a whole, up until now has been that as long as we can cannibalize in Europe or other nations, and other places and bring them over here, then fine and dandy, we were not going to go to the cost of setting up the programs. When that overseas market dries up, we're all of a sudden caught in a bind and we now have to react or try to react. As usual, the reaction of this government seems to be extremely slow.

Even more tragic as a root cause of some of the increasing unemployment in the province of Ontario is the increasing imbalance of income in Ontario. In this province those families and individuals earning over $20,000, jumped from a total of 25.4 per cent of the work force in 1975 to almost 32 per cent in 1976, and unfortunately a big part of that jump was at the top end of the income or salary level. Those in the less than $20,000 income bracket saw little change in their disposable incomes.

It seems to verify another long-time truth in our society and one which everything the Conservatives do underlines. To use a couple of words from an old song that I have always thought really told the true story: "It's the rich what get the gravy, and it's the poor what gets the blame" in this province.

One can't help but be struck by the fact that while government freebies are prescribed for business, government cutbacks zero right in on the poor, the disadvantaged, children, the old, widows, widowers and pensioners.

Particularly dangerous are the health service cuts or restrictions. They invariably hurt the less well-to-do the most. The constant renegeing on municipal grants means a transfer of costs to the municipalities and the resulting tax increases hurt homeowners, but particularly those on low or fixed incomes are hurt the most.

The cuts that are coming in the hospital field are having effects: I'm constantly getting letters. I had a couple just the other day from ward attendants at the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital telling me on some shifts there is now one single attendant on the entire ward, or at the most two, and they just simply can't handle it. In many cases they have to dress or undress some of the patients and they can't back up one another as well in terms of some of the patients who may be a little bit dangerous to work with. This is an area where we need to put people to work and it is an area where we're cutting jobs and cutting employment.

Yesterday's Hamilton Spectator had a couple of very interesting comments on the new budget the provincial government is allowing. I notice that Don Willard, the administrator of finance at Chedoke Hospital, says that cutbacks will be implemented. They are going to have to cut back in staff and they are also going to have to cut back in services. Mr. Walker at the McMaster medical centre says much the same thing. These are unavoidable costs. He was dealing with the costs they have to deal with, such as salaries—and the increases in the salaries of the workers have not been very large in this field over the last year—and various energy costs. He said where there is less money there is less service. It's all part of the tightening-up process.

Once again we're zeroing in on those who are least able to help themselves in our society and in the province of Ontario. I really can't understand why the party that forms the government in this province, which is honest enough, I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, to admit its total dedication to private enterprise, cannot find a social conscience that at least accepts the rights of people to some of the basic necessities.

That used to be one thing one expected from the Conservative Party. I find it changing; I find it changing rather rapidly and it bothers me. I keep wondering what are the leaders of this party, the Premier and the Treasurer, trying to prove. Why do they have to be so blind as to refuse to look at anything but the most orthodox, and conservative approach to an issue?

It seems to me that common sense tells all of us that if we put a little more income into the hands of those who are most in need—and we have some tragic examples—they are going to spend every cent they get. They are going to spend it buying needed goods and services. That helps to create some small additional demand for goods; and when we have to produce, that usually means employment, I always understood and I still believe that.

It seems to me also that large numbers of workers don't want to work extended shifts and overtime. The Ford plant is the best example I could give of this. Incidentally, I'm still waiting for an answer to a couple of questions about this issue from the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson). When they don't want to work these extended hours we should be working to eliminate the overtime hours at a plant like this and thereby putting a few hundred more of our unemployed people to work.

I can't miss the opportunity of saying that this government had put before it concrete proposals to share work and to keep people employed and off UIC and welfare rolls in the Sudbury basin. It rejected them out of hand. They moved so fast, as a matter of fact, with their rejection, that they saved the small Inco corporation the embarrassment of having to reject their part of the proposals themselves.

Dollars will still get you doughnuts, though; the government will offer Inco retraining incentives and Inco will grab that particular portion of it very quickly. This seems to be the pattern of this particular province.

Why, also, are we not coming up with programs that employ large numbers of people in our forest industry—in terms of renewing our forests in particular? The experts tell us this is crucial to our future. We are a province based on our natural resources and we have a problem in this field. Most people admit that. We haven't done a particularly good job here, and yet I don't see any real initiatives in this area.

Why, as well as requiring the actual production of additional jobs to qualify for tax incentives, do we not purchase equity when we advance governments funds, particularly on tax incentives, grants, and low-interest loans? Why does the government of Ontario not demand, what any good businessman in the province of Ontario would, and that's a piece of the action if you're going to help pay for it, particularly in our resource sector?

Why does this government not consider a suggestion made by the member for York East (Mr. Elgie) on regional tax incentives in problem areas? I think it's a good idea. It's a good idea providing the other side of the coin is considered.

In other words, possibly we should borrow some of the Swedish approach and increase taxes in these areas when times are good and the profits are high. That might give us some flexibility in terms of what we can spend when we hit a downturn and might allow us to use the incentive route in particular areas or professions when we hit a rough period.

I've looked through the Throne Speech and can't find a help for our handicapped citizens. Epileptics still can't find jobs and don't qualify for help even from the Human Rights department of this government. They are discriminated against because of their handicaps.

I don't always like to raise individual cases, but where I have the permission I do. I know of a young chap, Randy McMann, and I've raised this in this House before. He's 21 or 22 years of age. He has a very mild form of epilepsy; the shaking of the hand, not the seizures of which some people think. He has been looking for a job for almost two years and has had a couple of three-month periods in that time. In one period of three months he brought into my office 84 particular job searches.

I talked over his case with some of the people at Manpower. There are a number of times when, from the phone conversations and some of the calls in which I got involved, we know the reason he didn't get a particular job was because he was honest enough to report that he does suffer from epilepsy.

I've noticed lately that there's a bit of deterioration in Randy's attitude and condition, usually at the end of a day looking for work. The other day he came into the office after having gone down to the welfare people. He said: "Look, I must qualify for something. I don't really want anything; I don't qualify for an automobile licence to help me in that particular area, I can't go into the armed forces. I don't qualify for a number of things. I can't get a job. My bills for pills have now gone up to $40 a month."

I think the pressure is getting to him after the couple of years he has gone through. "I'm paying only $20 a week with some good people I'm staying with, fortunately. But if I don't qualify for any of these other things, maybe I can qualify for some kind of assistance or disability pension, or something."

He didn't get to first base. He couldn't even get a drug card. And one of the reasons was because he had been an energetic and saving young chap whenever he had a job. He was down to about $900. That was goodbye. There just doesn't seem to be any way to assist people in this category, and I don't see the incentives for these kinds of people in the Throne Speech.

Where is the justice in the province of Ontario when a person who is on a GAINS or other disability type pension, or any type of limited fixed income, is set a budget by his worker, and has his GAINS payment from the province of Ontario reduced every time he gets a cost of living increase through CPP or a private pension plan? The cost of living goes up. The increase usually doesn't come anywhere near to what the actual cost of living increase was, so they get an extra three or four or five dollars on their CPP and what happens? Their GAINS payment goes down that amount. Are we not trying to give some incentives to these people, let alone help them to keep up with rising costs? But they don't come close to keeping up with the cost of living.

And where is the justice in the case of an unemployable widow who is between the ages of 60 and 65 and who gets a maximum of $270 a month income, but suddenly when she becomes 65—and you know $270 is nothing to live on—it increases to $299.94. Is it any less expensive for her to live from 60 to 65 than it is at 65 when she jumps an extra $24.94?

I have sent a number of letters—and it seems to be very slow to get a response from this government—to the minister involved, the Minister of Community and Social Services

(Mr. Norton). The lady was so desperate that she said: "What can you do, Mr. Mackenzie? Use my case if you can." And I want to put it on the record. I will read just a small portion of the letter I sent to the minister a couple of weeks ago, on February 15. Once again, this is how I headed the letter, because I have a number of them:

"I would like to bring to your attention another example of real hardship being worked on some of our Ontario citizens in the 60 to 65-year age bracket. I am referring to a widow who is not as yet entitled to full OAS pension and who is existing on CPP and GAINS. The specific example I am referring to is a Mrs. DiMascio of the Centre Apartments on Ottawa Street North in Hamilton. Mrs. DiMascio came to my office to voice her frustration and made a very strong plea for some justice.

She has a total income of $270 a month. Because she had a brief period when she earned a few dollars and went slightly over, she is now paying back an overpayment of $10 a month, so her actual income at the moment is $260 a month. She is 62 years of age and is paying $152 a month rent, plus hydro, telephone and cable for her television which she is going to have to cut off, although that's about the only luxury she has at home."

Her rent incidentally—I am having a meeting with some of the tenants in this apartment—is going up $20 a month, effective March 1, so that $152 will come to $172 out of the income she's trying to live on. One of the few suggestions that were made to her by the ministry people was to enter into senior citizens housing where she could get in at a cheaper rent than she is now paying. This lady has a lovely streak of independence in her and says, "Look, I have lived for almost 14 years in this location. I know the people. The Dominion and Loblaw's stores are just around the corner. That's where I do my shopping and watch for the bargains and I can walk to the Centre Mall and that's the only recreation I have got. I don't want to move. This is my life."

Obviously, she is going to have to move at some point very shortly unless we do something about a case like this and I am simply asking, as I asked the minister, why don't we take a look at those who really are in need? Why aren't we doing something about these kinds of people in the budget?

I want to start to wind down but probably in doing it come to the crux of what I really want to say to this House, and that is why we need to take a closer look at the government's blind faith in private enterprise and its concessions to the corporate sector.

I think first of all that we have to understand that we have to sort of split the private enterprise sector and understand that many small businesses and individual entrepreneurs are also having a difficult time. They don't have a heck of a lot of bargaining power. They are themselves looking for help and—because it seems to be the philosophy of private enterprisers—while they decry government involvement, they go to the government, as we have seen, for some assistance. What they are really only looking for, as I see it—and I do understand it—is the ability to compete in our society.

This area, I guess, in both of the two old parties does disturb me because it seems to me that they give a lot of support, at least in words, to this idea of assisting small businesses. But, you know, the problems of the small business people are really the same as the problems of the workers and, I think, the problems of this government; but this government hasn't, as yet, recognized it. And that problem in a large part is the size and the power of the corporate world that we are now dealing with.

[12:30]

We have, in this country, simply lost control of many of the huge companies that operate in our country. In many cases, they are multinational and they have no national loyalties whatsoever. They have no responsibility to governments or to the people of the province of Ontario. In many cases, I feel they are also not even responsible to the shareholders of the company involved; they are too impersonal. The shares, in many cases, are blocks of shares held by large banks or trust companies for pension funds. I fear the responsibility, in all too many cases, is to the board itself or to the corporate entity and that their interest is in expanding their own power. That is something that is not necessarily for the good of the province of Ontario.

There are examples every day of the week of what I am talking about. Companies large and small, all of them, in effect, are thumbing their noses at the government of the province of Ontario and, in many cases, at our federal government. We have recently had the situation of the Johns-Manville plant in North Bay. I had a letter from the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) today extolling the virtues of the company that bought the plant and really looking at it as in the best interests of the workers. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, in this House he said there was no way he would be willing to intervene on behalf of the employees who were trying to set up an organization through Tembec to purchase that particular company.

It may be—and I sincerely hope so—that the company that has won out and has bought that plant will continue to operate it and try to employ the people. But they have already moved out most of the supply of coal. They have fired the plant manager, as I understand it. They have cut back further on the work force. Most of us have a very sinking feeling of suspicion that what really is at stake is the very valuable property right in downtown North Bay, and that it is a real estate deal we are going to see a number of months down the road. In fact, the people involved have had a record in at least four other cases of doing just that, of purchasing and closing down small plants in northern Ontario.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why shouldn't we at least take a look at the offer of the employees in that plant? One thing you can be doggone sure of is that with the kind of seniority and involvement those employees had, that plant would continue to operate, were they given a chance to purchase it.

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you do something for a change?

Mr. Mackenzie: We had the case, which I raised, of Shepherd Boats, I think that would bear a lot more investigation than we have had. We have cases where a Canadian consortium takes a look at the situation. If some of the members, including the federal member from down in the Peninsula hadn't jumped on it, we might have had a Canadian consortium given another substantial loan—they were talking about $150 million from EDC—to put up a stainless steel rolling mill in Cuba, a mill that would have been in direct competition with the kind of steel we are rolling at Tracy, Quebec, and at the Atlas plant in Welland. I ask whether that's in the best interest of this province of ours.

We have the case of Anaconda. There were a couple of curious little twists about that. I understand there may now be a purchaser for that. I hope so. That is an example where this government should have used every effort it could to make sure that we did have a purchaser there. One of the interesting things I found out in talking to some of the workers in that plant was that it wasn't just a case of the 825 workers there and the loss of another plant through being shut down because of a multinational decision in the States by the huge Anaconda chain. If one knows a little bit about them, he will know that, like Noranda, they are not averse to doing this and doing it quickly.

One of the interesting things was that about half the production of that plant was automotive trim and larger-than-four-inch copper pipe. We already have a serious trade deficit in terms of our auto pact industry. The only other plant producing that particular trim is in Buffalo and we would have been forced into importing that product for our automotive industry if that plant did shut down. The other thing I found out was that that is the only plant, as near as I can find, in all of Canada that produces larger-than-four-inch copper pipe. Once again, what we are facing, apart from the closure without so much as a by-your-leave of a large plant with 825 employees in the province of Ontario, is having to purchase any and all of the larger-than-four-inch copper pipe from the plant in Buffalo, New York, which that same Anaconda corporation owns. It seems to me, in my simple grasp of economics, that that's another drain on our balance of dollar payments in this particular province. I can't understand this.

The clincher to me is Sudbury and the Inco corporation. If nothing else came through it was that there was no responsibility. We had a great time for a number of days on that committee trying to dig into whether or not there had been any serious consideration, either presented to the board or done in the form of studies, about the effect on the community and the cost to the community, to the workers and to the province of Ontario.

While they skated—I guess that is the best word—without giving us a clear answer, after we finished the hearings, we finally got a letter from the company. I should have brought it with me today, but I didn't. It's in our addendum to the Inco report which some members will have had a chance to read. It clearly stated that they had done no research whatsoever. No documents were filed and they had no idea of the impact on the community. It stated that they had had some in-house discussions, and that was the extent of it.

Yet what we have here is a corporation—to save itself $45 million to $50 million in salaries plus additional related costs—willing to transfer millions to the province of Ontario, to the people of Ontario, to the people of Canada. We never could get a proper figure put on it, but it's millions of dollars in costs. I really wonder, is that in our best interest, when this corporation can do that without, once again, so much as a by-your-leave? They didn't even talk to the Premier (Mr. Davis), as near as we can tell, unless it was the night before the press release actually went out. It seems to me that that's not corporate responsibility.

I have to raise one other matter, because I think it's as important as anything else I've raised. If you ask us why we have some doubts about this constant blind faith on the incentives and that they're going to do the right thing by the people of Ontario—and I'm talking about the corporate sector now—it is because of the comment that came out without our asking in the Inco committee hearings when we had before us officials from Ottawa from the EDC. And we certainly jumped on it once the comment came out.

We were questioning them as to the usefulness, the justice, or what the $77 million that they got in loans from the Indonesian and Guatemalan projects was going to do or was meant to do. The EDC officials—because I guess that's what their department was justified in doing—made a tremendous case for the fact that we were exporting some jobs, some material, some technology, that this did produce $77 million worth of orders in Canada.

That we can understand. It produced 4,000 man-years of work, 4,000 jobs. If we ever start doing some kind of a balance statement, I don't think that one year of 4,000 jobs comes anywhere near to what we may lose—and lose for a lot of years to come—from the Sudbury basin.

Nevertheless, they made the case very strongly that, "Look, the loans were successful." I found it very interesting to find out that Inco has no responsibility to pay any of those loans back. They're actually made, through the EDC, with the governments involved; and really they could thumb their nose at any form of repayment. Nevertheless, this was successful because it had done this. So I asked—I guess rather innocently—what would Inco have done anyhow?

It's a $1 billion project in Indonesia and Guatemala—$1 billion. And Inco is, I think—at least they claimed they were—a Canadian corporation, a Canadian company. The majority of the directors were Canadian. Most of their wealth came out of the Sudbury basin, out of Canada. And what did they let drop? The rather amazing statement that they had been talking for a lot of months before they finalized those two loans and that Inco was not prepared to spend any more than $1.5 million in Canada.

They made that very clear in the testimony before the committee. A $1 billion overseas project financed to a large extent with profits out of this country, and they were going to purchase goods and services totalling $1.5 million. That's not the price of one of the generators that hauls up a mine cage in one of the major mines built in my own town of Hamilton.

Mr. McClellan: These are Leo's friends.

Mr. Mackenzie: You have to wonder—even the most avid fans of private enterprise have to wonder—what kind of a corporate responsibility there is when that's exactly what we face. What, in effect, happened was a gentle little bit of blackmail—and they didn't like it in the committee. If we hadn't gone to them with this freebie again where they could pick up $77 million, we wouldn't have got any jobs whatsoever. We only got those jobs because we gave them this kind of loan, and heaven only knows if it will ever be repaid.

Surely this government, if it has any self-respect left, has got to realize that the game—the free or private enterprise game—has changed. We're going to have it with us—or parts of it with us—for a long time to come. But the multinationals—the huge corporations with no loyalty to anything but the balance sheet and not our country or any other country, as near as I can tell—mean that we're playing by a completely new set of rules. We've got to understand that. It's no longer our company and the resources they're using in development are no longer ours. We don't have the control of them, or at least we have not been willing to exert any kind of control or have any major input in how they're going to use them and what they're going to do with them.

Mr. Foulds: Not under this government.

Mr. Mackenzie: It seems to me that the old game of government incentive, when we really have no say in what their policies are going to be or whom they're going to help, simply can't continue any longer. They really consider it one more tap to the public purse. I always thought the Conservatives and members of the Liberal Party were against this kind of misuse of the public purse.

I suggest that if this government doesn't decide to reassert some kind of control and responsibility over these major companies—which have in some cases become bigger than government themselves—and that was very clear in some of those hearings with Inco—I have serious reservations about the future.

One of the speakers a few minutes ago was expressing concern about youth, and why they were becoming so cynical. I can tell you why. When they see the kind of games we are playing with our own resources and the lack of control we have over our own economic future then they have a right to be cynical. I predict that if we are not going to come to grips with this problem we are going to be damned by our children in the not too distant future.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, may I first express to you, sir, and through you to the member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes), my pleasure in being able to participate in the Throne Speech debate. This is the first opportunity I have had since the election of your counterpart—the member for Lake Nipigon—to congratulate him and commend him on the way he is discharging his particular duties in regulating and controlling the affairs of this Legislature.

I think those of us who have known him over the years—a fellow member from northern Ontario—have come to recognize his leadership qualities, which he displays on a very regular basis. He has certainly given excellent leadership, and I think he is setting a good example for those who come after him in that position.

To you, sir, I extend also my congratulations for your excellent handling of the affairs of this Legislature. I hope you are in that position for some considerable time to come.

As a northerner, I am sure that the Speaker, the member for Lake Nipigon, would join me in expressing pleasure in the progress that has been made in the past year with the new Ministry of Northern Affairs. We are not only alive and thriving—largely I might say in northern Ontario—but I believe that we are focusing more thoughtful attention on northern Ontario than it received at any time before this new ministry was formed.

It is true, sir, that circumstances beyond our control have contributed a great deal to everyone's appreciation of the enormous economic impact of northern Ontario on the lives of everyone in Canada. Excluding the automotive industry, almost half of Ontario's exports are generated by the mineral and the forest industries which are mainly located in the north. In other words, our ability to earn foreign exchange rests to a significant degree on the industrial activity of northern Ontario. This is one of several important considerations to keep in mind as we continue to carry out this government's long term strategy to further the development of northern Ontario, and thereby increase the well-being and the prosperity of the people who live and work in that great area.

While the decline in the value of the dollar has had its drawbacks, there are advantages. And it could hardly have come at a more welcome time, as far as northern Ontario's export industries are concerned. The dollar devaluation certainly offers more than welcome prospects this year in the tourist business in the north. Having been through one season recently in which a great many Americans decided to stay home in the celebration of their country's bicentennial celebrations, our tourist operators in the north are looking hopefully for a resurgence in business—especially since the American dollar now has a relatively greater buying power in Canada.

I do hope that the tourist operators throughout the north, and for that matter throughout the rest of the province, will fully honour the present premium on the US dollar, now that this premium is large enough to make a substantial difference in each visitor's purchasing power while in Canada. The proper recognition of the premium can do much to reaffirm the excellent value of a Canadian vacation and generate a lasting impression of goodwill on our part towards our neighbours to the south. [12:45]

Mr. di Santo: That is why Davis goes to Florida.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Before I leave the subject of tourism, I should mention that I have been particularly impressed by the interest which communities in the north are showing towards developing tourist programs on a regional basis. For instance, I had a very worthwhile meeting not long ago with the members of the James Bay Frontier Tourist Association in Timmins. They have been anxious to take a greater advantage of the potential of the Polar Bear Express operated by the Ontario Northland Railway Transportation Commission to bring visitors to the entire northeastern Ontario corridor.

My colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle), and I were able to respond to a number of their suggestions for joint programs to bring tourists to the area and make their stay more enjoyable. We would like to develop similar programs for other areas of the north and I can guarantee that any local initiative in this area can expect the complete co-operation of this government.

Northern Ontario's major export industries are also showing some good results. We are living in a period when there is plenty of good news but its very nature makes it less dramatic than the bad news which so often makes the headlines.

Mr. McClellan: Give us some good news.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Everyone knows about the layoffs that have occurred in Sudbury. The member previous to me made mention of it. I am sure most people are aware of the sluggish condition of the mining industry in general.

Mr. McClellan: What's the good news?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This kind of bad news travels fast. It also leaves a strong impression in people's minds. I wonder how many people know that Ontario's forest-based industries are on the other hand enjoying a real boom. After a three-year period of expansion that began in 1973, the largest expansion since 1950—

Mr. McClellan: Two trees for one.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—Ontario's forest industry is just completing a fiscal year in which the harvest of Crown timber is expected to reach 560 million cubic feet.

Mr. McClellan: What about the reforestation program?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You can't stand good news, can you?

Mr. Foulds: It's a little below expectations though.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just listen to it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This will be the largest harvest of its kind in the past 60 years. This forecast is based on a 20 per cent increase in the volume of Crown timber harvested by licensed operators in the first 10 months of this current fiscal year compared to the amount cut in the same period a year earlier. As most members would suppose, the major reason for this dramatic increase is the additional demand for wood caused by new and expanded pulp and paper facilities in northern Ontario.

Late in 1976, the Great Lakes Pulp and Paper Company started up a new Kraft mill with a capacity of 250,000 tons a year plus facilities for making particleboard and waferboard. Soon after that Kimberly-Clark expanded the capacity of its kraft pulp mill at Terrace Bay by 315,000 tons a year. The increased harvest in Crown timber can also be attributed in part to buoyant market conditions for lumber, plywood particleboard and to the increased use of domestic fuel-wood.

A moment ago in the context of good news and bad news, I mentioned the recent layoffs in Sudbury. I believe this is an appropriate moment to draw to the members' attention the part which the Ministry of Northern Affairs has played in reducing the impact of those layoffs on the people of the Sudbury area.

Mr. di Santo: What did you do?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As one short-term measure to provide employment and income for the area, my ministry and the Ministry of Natural Resources have each budgeted a share of the $1.2 million necessary to construct the Nickeldale conservation dam in the current year. Other immediate measures include speedups of construction on municipal water projects in the Sudbury area. The real challenge in the Sudbury area lies in the community's need to advance from its—

Mr. McClellan: You should go up to Sudbury and give them the good news.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—present economic base of mining and metal processing to a more diversified and thus more stable economy. Such an achievement demands a great deal of careful thought and planning. With the help of a grant of $190,000 from the Ministry of Northern Affairs, the regional municipality of Sudbury is embarking on studies to import substitution and the diversification of agriculture in the Sudbury area. I think most members would agree that import substitution is a timely strategy to consider right now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If we could substitute their members we'd be in good shape.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That will come next. With the purchasing power of Canadian dollars having declined in the foreign marketplace and with mining equipment and machinery representing $500 million a year in imports, the substitution of Canadian-made equipment and machinery to any extent whatever could provide an enormous two-way advantage.

Mr. McClellan: Is it going to happen or not?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Since the responsibility of setting the priorities for highway development in northern Ontario is now among my ministry's responsibilities—

Mr. McClellan: I suppose that's good news.

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—I must also mention with regard to Sudbury that extra road work is being undertaken to help minimize the consequences of dislocation and to bolster the commercial activities now established in Sudbury. Increased production in the Elliot Lake area will require 2,870 additional mine-related employees between now and 1984. Many of these jobs will be filled by miners and others who have been laid off in the Sudbury area.

Mr. McClellan: They'll all be back at work by 1984.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Since many of those who find new jobs in Elliot Lake will no doubt maintain family or other ties in Sudbury, we have felt special and immediate concern about highway facilities in the general area.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Their local member's in Florida.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In this fiscal year, we have spent $2.5 million on improvements to Highway 108, which forms part of the highway between Sudbury and Elliot Lake. This expenditure completes a $3.1 million program of improvements. Also in this same fiscal year, we have committed $7.4 million in three projects on Highway 17, between Sudbury and Elliot Lake, and in the next fiscal year we intend to spend further funds on this same section of highway.

I believe it is indicative of our government's economic strategy for the north that I have the support—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I want to repeat that. I believe that it is indicative of our government's economic strategy for the north that I have the support to spend $13 million of the coming year's expenditures on resource roads in northern Ontario.

Mr. McClellan: You should ask Peter Branch.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: But then virtually every major expenditure in our budget for this past year has been for some type of project to provide the north with the broader, more solid economic base it needs.

This philosophy underlies the government funding of our ministry. In our first year, we had a 20 per cent increase in the funds available for roads and highways, local and regional priorities, remote and community airports, and all other activities which contribute to improved community life and greater economic opportunities for the people of northern Ontario.

I am pleased to admit to this House that much of our success has been the result of the encouragement and the co-operation of the people of northern Ontario who are demonstrating their support for this new ministry.

Mr. di Santo: Especially the miners in Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are seeing this in a much expanded role in the use of our community service offices which have done so much to bring the services of government to the communities of the north. We opened a new office in Rainy River this fall and I will be going to Chapleau next week for the opening of a new office there.

Mr. Foulds: Hope you invited the local member.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We have opened our new office at Ignace and we have found accommodation and will be appointing officers very shortly in Iroquois Falls and in Hearst. This involvement of the people of the north is so very important because we all recognize that the government alone can do very little to ensure the successful development of the north and the provisions for new jobs.

Here we need the help of the private sector. I was very interested in the comments of the member who preceded me about the involvement of the private sector.

Mr. McClellan: About the multinationals. Tell us about the multinationals.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would like to take a moment to inform the House of a rather unique example of this type of endeavour, which is currently in the development stages, relating to the construction of a town centre in Hornepayne in northeastern Ontario. I regret that the member for that particular area left earlier.

Mr. Foulds: He really worked hard for that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm sure he would be interested in this and I hope that the members opposite will bring it to his attention.

Mr. McClellan: Absolutely.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And accurately.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Plans have been put together to build a mall-type community town centre comprised of residential, commercial and public-service facilities, all enclosed within one structure.

As the hon. members are aware, Hornepayne is a key railroad community on the main line of the CNR. Because of its geographic location, the centre has become a key divisional point for crew changes on the transcontinental operation of the CNR. The community town centre is to be built and operated by Hallmark Hotels Limited. It will include approximately 100 bachelorette apartments for railroad employees. Commercial facilities will include a department store, a grocereria, a hotel, post office, and other small retail operations.

Mr. McClellan: Tourism paradise.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Public sector facilities to be enclosed within the project will consist of a high school, a recreational centre, senior citizens' residence, a health centre, as well as quarters for the Ontario Provincial Police. The total project will be approximately 160,000 square feet and it will cost in the order of $10 million. Tenders have been called in the last several weeks and it is hoped that the project will proceed to construction this spring, subject of course to acceptable bids being received.

Because of the complexities of the project and the number of parties involved, putting the town centre concept together has been a major undertaking. The benefits to the residents of Hornepayne will of course make the efforts on the part of all parties very worthwhile. In turn, the experience that will be gained in working with the private sector on this undertaking will be most valuable in trying to find new ways of meeting the needs of the citizens of northern Ontario communities faced with problems of growth regarding the expansion of resource industry operation.

These are just some of the issues and some of the problems and some of the prospects that are uppermost in our minds these days in the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

I would just like to close by recognizing that this month marks the first year of the creation of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. Certainly the accomplishments that we have been able to achieve in the past 12 months have been most encouraging and they are being recognized by the enthusiasm and the full co-operation of all those who live in that area north of the French River.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that time does not permit one to partake fully in the Throne Speech debate. However, I would like to put on record that the windup will be on Monday and, as a result, there will be only the three windup speakers allowed and everyone else will be prevented from speaking. I would like at the outset to join with my colleagues from the Windsor area in their comments concerning the unemployment situation as well as the auto trade pact and some of the ramifications of it.

In addition to that, we have all been fairly well united when it comes to the PCB problems, especially in relation to the Peerless Cement company in Detroit. We just dread the thought that Peerless Cement might be given a permit to burn PCBs and seriously affect the health of the residents in the Windsor area.

The grant equalization program was one that was originally brought to the attention of the government back in 1975 when the mayor of the city of Windsor met with the cabinet in the city of London and pointed out the inequities of the grant. He showed to the Premier and the cabinet that Windsor's assessment figures were far more recent than those of other municipalities and, as a result, we looked as if we were a wealthier municipality and we were denied any resource equalization grants.

The treasury department in the city of Windsor pointed out to the Premier and the cabinet that because of using such modern figures and the other municipalities using outdated figures that the city of Windsor was denied some $8.5 million annually over an extended period of time.

The solution to the problem now is that a transitional grant of that amount be given to the community so that at least while the province decides just exactly how to phase in a market value assessment with tax reform, the city of Windsor is not penalized, because that penalty does discourage industry from coming into the community. It means an increased tax burden to the industry. Rather than settle in the city of Windsor they will go to other areas or maybe even go into the southern parts of the United States.

The only other issue that I was going to raise at some length was the CPR railroad tracks in my riding and the fact that the Ministry of the Environment has not taken an active part in protecting the environment in that vicinity of the tracks. I think it is a shame that the province of Ontario would disregard this simply because it happens to be a federal emanation; that is, the federal emanation is the railroad tracks. I will have an opportunity to make comments on some of these other things in the budget debate and I will take that opportunity.

There are other issues that I would have liked to have raised but it is 1 o'clock and it is time to adjourn the House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

On motion by Mr. di Santo the debate was adjourned.

Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, if I may. The member for Downsview adjourned the debate; does this mean that he speaks on Monday?

Mr. B. Newman: No.

Mr. Gregory: This was not the agreement that was made.

Mr. di Santo: I don't know what the agreement was.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion has been made and agreed to by the House, and I believe the matter can be handled when the House resumes sitting.

On motion by Hon. Mrs. Birch, the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

CONTENTS

Friday, March 3, 1978

Dow Chemical, questions of Mr. McMurtry: Mrs. Campbell	329
Auto pact, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Kerrio, Mr. Mackenzie	329
Burning of PCBs, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Bounsall, Mr. Cooke, Mr. B. Newman	331
Spadina expressway, questions of Mr. Snow: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Grande, Mrs. Campbell	332
Waste disposal, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. S. Smith	334
University funding, questions of Mr. Parrott: Mr. Cooke, Mr. Sweeney, Mr. Cassidy	334
Transportation of hazardous substances, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Kerrio, Mr. B. Newman	335
Burning of PCBs, questions of Mr. McCague: Ms. Bryden, Mr. B. Newman, Mr. Foulds	335
Tax inequities in Waterloo region, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Sweeney	336
Closure of Hilltop Acres, questions of Mr. Norton: Mr. McClellan	337
Status of civil servant, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Epp, Mr. Cassidy, Mr. Cunningham	337
Retirement homes, question of Mrs. Birch: Mr. Deans	338
Glendale Training Centre, question of Mr. Drea: Mr. G. I. Miller	339
Conspiracy trial, question of Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Lawlor	339
Glendale Training Centre, question of Mr. Drea: Mr. G. I. Miller	340
Tourism advertising, question of Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Kerrio	340
Air pollution, question of Mr. McCague: Mr. Bounsall	340
Report, select committee on Inco and Falconbridge layoffs, Mr. Handleman	340
Throne Speech debate, continued, Mr. Swart, Mr. Williams, Mr. McGuigan, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Bernier, Mr. B. Newman	341
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. di Santo, agreed to	359
Motion to adjourn, Mrs. Birch, agreed to	359

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Bernier, Hon. L.; Minister of Northern Affairs (Kenora PC)
 Birch, Hon. M.; Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Scarborough East PC)
 Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
 Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
 Bryden, M. (Beaches-Woodbine NDP)
 Campbell, M. (St. George L)
 Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
 Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
 Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
 Cunningham, E. (Wentworth L)
 Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
 Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
 di Santo, O. (Downsview NDP)
 Drea, Hon. F.; Minister of Correctional Services (Scarborough Centre PC)
 Edighoffer, H.; Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
 Epp, H. (Waterloo North L)
 Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
 Germa, M. C. (Sudbury NDP)
 Gigantes, E. (Carleton East NDP)
 Grande, A. (Oakwood NDP)
 Gregory, M. E. C. (Mississauga East PC)
 Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (St. Andrew-St. Patrick PC)
 Haggerty, R. (Erie L)
 Handleman, S. B. (Carleton PC)
 Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General (Burlington South PC)
 Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
 Lawlor, P. D. (Lakeshore NDP)
 Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
 MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
 Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
 McCague, Hon. G.; Minister of the Environment (Dufferin-Simcoe PC)
 McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
 McGuigan, J. (Kent-Elgin L)
 McMurtry, Hon. R.; Attorney General (Eglinton PC)
 Miller, G. I. (Haldiman-Norfolk L)
 Newman, B. (Windsor-Walkerville L)
 Norton, Hon. K.; Minister of Community and Social Services (Kingston and the Islands PC)
 Parrott, Hon. H. C.; Minister of Colleges and Universities (Oxford PC)
 Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
 Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
 Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
 Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
 Snow, Hon. J. W.; Minister of Transportation and Communications (Oakville PC)
 Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
 Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)
 Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)
 Turner, J. (Peterborough PC)
 Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)
 Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)
 Williams, J. (Oriole PC)

No. 11

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament
Monday, March 6, 1978

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 6, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By her own hand, P. M. McGibbon, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1978, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, March 6, 1978.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INCO AND FALCONBRIDGE LAYOFFS

Mr. Kennedy: I rise on a point of personal privilege. On Friday last, the select committee report on the Inco-Falconbridge layoffs was tabled. A statement made by four members of the third party contained in the final report of the select committee into Inco and Falconbridge layoffs stated as follows:

In appendix A of the report, there are some additional comments by Messrs. Laughren, Mackenzie, Martel and Wildman. On page 28 they wrote: "In September 1974 a select committee of the Ontario Legislature tabled a document entitled, Interim Report of the Select Committee on Economic and Cultural Nationalism: National Resources, Foreign Ownership and Economic Development, which was signed by members of all parties in this House. Some 23 major recommendations were made by this committee, one of them calling for public ownership of the resource industries. Again this government failed to act."

As a member of that committee I know of no recommendation which calls for public ownership of the resource industry.

Mr. Warner: Reread the report.

Mr. Kennedy: There was a recommendation on page 63 of this interim report which called for 75 per cent Canadian ownership of equity after 15 years, but that does not mean public, government or state ownership.

Mr. Davidson: It does. You have controlling interest.

Mr. Kennedy: Further, on page 74 of the interim report, there is a recommendation that says that the government should be empowered to take up to 50 per cent of the equity in new ventures in the non-renewable natural resources sector.

Mr. Warner: It should be public ownership.

Mr. Kennedy: But neither myself nor the member for London South (Mr. Walker) agreed to that recommendation. In any event, a recommendation stating that the government should be empowered to take an equity position is not the same as calling for public ownership of the resource industries.

The additional comments of the four members of the third party implied that members of the select committee and members of this party were in favour of public ownership of the resource industry. That is not a factual statement, Mr. Speaker, and I wish the record corrected.

Mr. Nixon: Can't you see the record being recorrected all over the province?

Mr. Martel: I wish the hon. member would read the select committee's report that he signed. What does number 20 say?

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HIGHWAY SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Snow: Today, as government spokesman on highway safety, I would like to say a few words about the status of the government's response to the report of the select committee on highway safety. As I was unable to be present at the original debate on the committee's report, my parliamentary assistant, the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane) spoke on my behalf. His statement indicated our initial reaction to the individual recommendations and pointed out steps that had already been taken to implement some of the recommendations reported in the report.

Since then, my ministry has started work on various projects related to the recommendations and continued work on a number of others which were already underway.

This afternoon I will be introducing bills relating to photographs on drivers' licences and a probationary licensing system for new drivers, as recommended by the select committee report. These bills will provide enabling legislation allowing us to proceed with these programs as resources become available.

I would like to point out that since that debate, other ministries and interministerial groups have been at work on those recommendations that fall outside my ministry's direct responsibilities. Many of the committee's recommendations dealt with enforcement, health and other matters. As co-ordinator, I will maintain an overview of the progress on highway safety in general, and implementation of the committee's recommendations in particular. My cabinet colleagues will report to members on the progress of those recommendations which deal with matters directly within their responsibilities.

I will not repeat all of what was said in the earlier statement on the select committee report, nor will I touch on the report's 52 recommendations at this time—a compendium will be distributed today, a compendium indicating the current status of the response to each of those recommendations—but I will speak briefly on progress in various areas.

In the field of driver instruction, we will be coming forward with a comprehensive white paper for tabling in the House later in this session. As the committee recommended, we are taking a more active role in determining the effectiveness and uniformity of driver instruction in the province, both within the high school driver education program and commercial driving schools.

In the testing and licensing of drivers, we are bringing in both bills previously mentioned, photos on licences and probationary licences.

As for impaired drivers, an interministerial group has examined the committee's recommendations and is providing us with their advice. Progress, of course, will be dependent upon developing a new level of co-ordination and co-operation between the concerned jurisdictions.

On enforcement, analysis of recommendations is continuing within the responsible ministries. Some of the recommendations are costly and may take time to implement, particularly in this period of fiscal restraint. Radar detection devices have been banned, as the committee recommended.

In the matter of automobile safety standards, we are holding discussions with the responsible federal authorities on items relating to new vehicles, and MTC will conduct a benefit-cost study of periodic motor vehicle inspections for both passenger and commercial vehicles.

Steps have been taken to increase enforcement of the seatbelt law and promote further voluntary compliance. Charges laid for seatbelt violations in 1977 were up more than 400 per cent over 1976, while occupant fatalities were down a further 10.3 per cent compared with the first 11 months of last year. Through 1976, the first year of the seatbelt law and reduced speed limits, there were 16 per cent fewer fatalities than in 1975, proving we are now experiencing very substantial reductions in numbers of deaths compared to the pre-1976 levels. In fact, I believe that over the two years we have about a 25 per cent reduction in numbers of deaths on our roads.

We have implemented regulation changes and improved inspection of school buses along the lines suggested by the select committee, and we are co-ordinating research on school bus stop arms. Such information will be made available to school boards as recommended.

In the truck area, we have a project on rear collision protection, including under-rides and rear visibility; and the co-ordinator of highway safety has been meeting with the trucking industry and others prior to bringing in specific recommendations to reduce truck accidents.

In the highway area, MTC is carrying on intensive research aimed at improved and safer highway construction. It is extending its use of concrete median barriers in new construction and reconstruction projects. A new variable warning sign for motorists is being erected on a trial basis on the QEW, consistent with the select committee's recommendation.

We have appointed a co-ordinator of road safety activities in Ontario, Mr. Robert Humphries, MTC's assistant deputy minister for drivers and vehicles, and he is centralizing contacts with other Ontario agencies, provinces, the federal government and private organizations. As the committee recommended, the co-ordinator will be leading an investigation into the rescue of crash victims. As well, I have talked with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr) about the possibility of supplying the London-Woodstock region of the OPP, as a demonstration project, with heavy-duty tracked snow vehicles for use in rescuing motorists stranded because of severe storms. Should it prove successful, such a rescue service could be established in other Ontario snow belt districts.

We are also in the process of planning a five-year federal-provincial co-operative road safety program which will include input from RTAC and the CCMTA. As a starter, I brought the select committee's report to the attention of responsible ministers in all the other provinces, as well as the federal minister. In fact, I personally forwarded them copies of the report. The reaction has been extremely favourable and reflects great credit on both the Legislature and the province. I would like to add that I feel the report offers many sound contributions to the improvement of highway safety. It is to the committee's credit that it recognizes that progress will be made through orderly changes, scientifically developed, prudently managed and objectively evaluated.

In discussing highway safety programs, two major issues overshadow all others. The first is the terrible suffering and loss that accidents produce. The second is the enormous scale of the highway transportation system and the necessarily limited resources with which we attempt to service it. The question of resources is particularly important at this time, but I am not discouraged. The instant application of large sums of money cannot solve our problems anyway. The measured pace of systematic development can be frustrating, but evaluating each proposed step and using resources where they will do the most good must surely lead to better results.

While one of this government's major objectives is to reduce red tape and eliminate unnecessary regulation, safety remains a paramount concern and cannot be compromised. In closing, I would point out that we have already made progress under the guidance of the select committee report, and I am confident that highway safety in Ontario will continue to improve.

STATUS OF CIVIL SERVANT

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, on Friday, March 3, the Globe and Mail reported on interviews they had had with Peter Branch, a civil servant employed in my ministry. In response to a question to the Premier (Mr. Davis) on Friday and in fairness to other civil servants, I believe I should clarify the circumstances surrounding Mr. Branch's employment in the public service.

[2:15]

Mr. Branch was hired by the then Department of Trade and Development in 1964 as a regional development officer to work in support of the regional development councils that were part of the program for promoting and co-ordinating development at a regional level. He was promoted and became head of his section over the next few years when the function was moved to Treasury and Economics. But with the ending of the regional development councils in 1973, the supporting branch became redundant and was discontinued. This was an early example of the government winding up programs when they had served their purpose and redeploying the resources.

Mr. Cassidy: Nonsense. You killed those councils. Why don't you wind up the government?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Branch and his four associates were given new responsibilities in the regional development branch and since their old classifications no longer existed they were classified as economists 3. Under the regulations of the Civil Service Commission their salaries were held at their prior level in their new positions despite the somewhat lower salary level of the new assignment—the process known as “red circling.”

Mr. Branch requested and was given opportunity for development in his career, and it was arranged that he be assigned to a position in the program analysis branch of the ministry in the fall of 1973 at the same salary. This did not prove to be satisfactory, and to assist Mr. Branch in the pursuit of his career he was seconded to the Niagara Escarpment Commission in the spring of 1974 as the manager of the administration unit.

All of these moves were developed and arranged by the ministry in consultation with Mr. Branch, because he was a satisfactory employee in his previous position and he wished to remain in the public service. The moves were made to responsible positions to give him an opportunity to maintain his employment in the service and in positions where he would earn his salary.

As the ministry reorganized to better use its resources within new constraints in 1975, the complement position in the ministry from which he had been seconded was, like many others in the ministry, considered to be no longer essential in the future. We notified the Niagara Escarpment Commission to this effect so that it might assume responsibility for the salary and position of Mr. Branch in its own budget. But being faced with similar constraints it had to tighten its belt, and in consolidating it could not continue that position after March 31, 1977.

Yet again the ministry provided Mr. Branch with a transfer, in April of 1977, to the central statistical services in the ministry where there was a vacancy for a person of his capabilities in the client services section.

And this is where Mr. Branch really began to share the necessity to recognize that this government is maintaining service while cutting the costs. The division to which he was transferred is a good example. In reviewing its function in detail it was concluded that some functions were redundant.

Mr. Warner: Like the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Others could be obtained elsewhere and the balance could be refined so that savings could be made. Since 1974-75, complement positions in the central statistical services have been reduced from 88 to 46, or by 48 per cent. Two director positions also have been eliminated, thus focusing the division on those duties and services that are presently required.

Mr. Branch, therefore, has been working in an area that has been dedicated to doing its job with less. It has the minimum level of funding to meet its priority services for 1978-79 and has reduced its budget by over 21 per cent, or $421,000. In addition, the division will be expecting to recover from the users of its services, public and private, approximately $500,000. If there is no demand for these services they will be discontinued with further savings.

In this process, Mr. Branch's position was thought to be redundant, and he was so advised last fall; but as the reorganization developed it was recommended that the function of that position be retained and that was accepted in the constrained program.

It would seem from the comments attributed to Mr. Branch that perhaps the first decision of his supervisors was the correct one, and indeed his position is redundant.

The deputy minister has ordered an immediate review of his position, and any others which may be in the same category. Obviously the need to treat long-term and otherwise satisfactory employees fairly, even when redundant, cannot be an excuse for creating a continuing position where an honest day's work will not be forthcoming. But, Mr. Speaker, the statements in these articles, whether from Mr. Branch or the writers, which imply that people in my ministry are not working hard, are most unfair to the public servants in my ministry.

Mr. Warner: It speaks to your leadership, or lack of it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Between April 1, 1975, and April 1, 1978, the staff of the ministry has in fact been reduced from 1,026 to 777, of which 57 were transfers of positions to other ministries, while 192 were actually positions eliminated from the ministry operations. These reductions include civil service as well as contract positions; and the positions of two assistant deputy ministers, two executive directors and eight directors.

While reducing manpower by almost a fifth, the ministry has been doing more and doing it well at a time when never before has there been more stress on the areas of economics, finance and inter-governmental affairs.

Mr. Davidson: You guys created the monster.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: All this arises from an unhappy civil servant—

Mr. Warner: There are thousands more.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —who has sought to present his concerns over his future pension benefits. He has had the opportunity to discuss his problems with all of his supervisors, including the deputy minister, and on three occasions has filed grievances which were subsequently resolved. We have gone just about as far as we can go to help Mr. Branch and we have done so with all consideration. I cannot, however, accept his aspersions on the integrity of my associates in the Treasury ministry.

ORAL QUESTIONS

COUNCIL FOR TROUBLED CHILDREN AND YOUTH

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Treasurer: Can the Treasurer confirm that there is a certain Mr. Peter Wiseman listed in the February 1978 directory as "chairman of the Council for Troubled Children and Youth"; can he confirm that his salary, as last reported in the Public Accounts 1976-77, was over $35,000 annually, and is he aware that Mr. Wiseman said last week that in fact the council was actually disbanded in September 1977, that in fact we have not yet seen an annual review of this council since the one dated July 1976, and that in fact the data from the only questionnaire they did of any particular merit are now missing or destroyed and are not available to the children's services branch which might otherwise use them?

Mr. Nixon: More lean budgeting.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer to all four questions would be no.

Mr. S. Smith: Could the Treasurer undertake to consult with his colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), to find out how it happens that a person continues in the position, as announced in February 1978, despite a council that was disbanded months and months earlier; and will he undertake as well to consult with that particular colleague, or with the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), under which ministry this wonderful council allegedly reported, to make available to this House all the reports that that council ever came up with during the time it was in existence?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, that question might be redirected to my colleague the Minister of Education.

Mr. Conway: Give Elmer Bell a call.

Mr. S. Smith: I would so redirect. Would the minister care for me to repeat the question?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I cannot answer all parts of the question except to tell the member that Mr. Peter Wiseman is a very hard-working and energetic education officer in the Ministry of Education who has been seconded to, and is working for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development on the interco-ordination of problems related to troubled children and youth.

Some of the reports and some of the details that came out of his committee were part of what led to the establishment of the children's services branch and they are now operating as an ongoing body to help consult and bring the other ministries into the operations of the children's services branch. I'm not sure what my friend is getting at. If he is wondering whether Peter Wiseman is still working for us and is working hard and earning his money, the answer is yes.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, there is no attempt to cast an aspersion on the gentleman. The question is whether in fact he is continuing to be listed as a chairman of a council in February 1978 when in fact the council was allegedly disbanded in September 1977, and whether in fact the data which allegedly would help children's services be reorganized in the Ministry of Community and Social Services are missing or have been destroyed? Those are the questions. And why has there been no annual report since July 1976 from this council?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'll be glad to look into some of those last things that my friend, the Leader of the Opposition, has indicated. It's my recollection that while the council as such in its terms of reference and in its designation as a council may not still operate, the function that it served is still performed. Peter Wiseman's role as a chairman of an interministerial group is still in operation and Peter is still offering advice to other government departments and drawing together their people, but he's also working for the Ministry of Education and he still is an education officer in our ministry.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of final supplementary, if I might, would the minister be good enough, please, to detail not only Mr. Wiseman's duties, but would he be good enough to tell us the nature of this new interministerial group that the minister says may have replaced the council to which I was referring earlier? Would the minister in fact give us the membership of that interministerial group and would he answer my question about whether or not the data which Mr. Wiseman obtained as chairman of the council regarding children's services in Ontario are missing or destroyed?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, I'd be glad to look into that. I would doubt very much that it's missing or destroyed. I'm sure that my friend, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), can tell the hon. member that all the data that council has put together have been used by the government.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't be so sure.

Mr. Lewis: One fizzle, strike two.

Mr. Conway: The Minister of Community and Social Services has an awful lot of reading to do these days.

CATALOGUE OF STATISTICAL FILES

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Treasurer, given his well-known commitment to open government: Can he explain why his ministry publishes two versions of its catalogue of statistical files, one for government use only and one for public use, which is somewhat smaller? Can he explain why one version would not do for everyone, provided it simply identified those files which were to be kept confidential? I might point out that his own ministry actually does give the same information virtually to the two, so why can't all the ministries do that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. Smith: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Breithaupt: He can't explain it.

Mr. Swart: The question was "why?"

Mr. S. Smith: He can't explain it?

I take it the answer is no, he cannot explain it.

Mr. Reid: He's practising up for tomorrow night.

Mr. S. Smith: If I might, by way of supplementary, I would ask the Treasurer whether he would undertake to inform himself in this matter so that at some future time he might be able to explain the need for two separate publications.

While he's doing it, could he make note of and explain to us 33 or more different descriptions—varying types of confidentiality—listed under accessibility of these documents? I'll just read a few of them to him so he'll know what I'm speaking about.

Some of these titles are: "Confidential"; "Not available to public"; "Not confidential within the government"; "Strictly confidential"; "Not available"—

Mr. Bolan: "For your eyes only."

Mr. S. Smith:—"Interoffice confidential"; "Classified"; "Discretion of branch head"; "Confidential except within government"; "Not confidential within ministry"; "Restricted"; "Not confidential within government"; "Strictly confidential until released by government"; "Not confidential within branch"; "Confidential except within branch"; and "Not confidential, statistics are sparingly examined"—this is from Environment—"before release to public to avoid misinterpretation of their significance."

Can the Treasurer look into all these titles and tell us what this says to his commitment to open government?

Interjections.

Mr. Breithaupt: He's got everything in there except "Burn before reading."

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The answer to the earth-shattering question asked by the Leader of the Opposition is yes.

Mr. Makarchuk: What's the penalty for offenders?

Mr. MacDonald: Would the provincial Treasurer undertake to submit these documents to the royal commission on freedom of information, because I'm sure there are a lot of new categories and confidentialities they've never heard of and they should take a look at?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It's not clear to me that all these documents are in fact Treasury. As I gather, they were other documents. For some reason or another, the Leader of—

Mr. MacDonald: They're government documents.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well then I would not make that decision. It would be up to my colleagues, obviously, to decide whether they should be submitted or not.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Passing the buck, eh?

Mr. Martel: Pretty tough decision to make, Darcy.

Mr. Conway: Is there a category, "for Darcy's eyes only"?

[2:30]

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Colleges and Universities, who is responsible for apprenticeships. Given that International Women's Day is taking place on March 8—Wednesday of this week—and given the references in the Throne Speech to the shortages of skilled tradesmen which the government intends to do something about, can the minister explain why it is that in the apprenticeship programs run by his ministry, there is only one woman involved in auto body compared to 1,573 men as apprentices; and only one woman involved in electrical construction and maintenance apprenticeship compared with 4,255 men?

Mr. Kerrio: Because of the restrictions in the body shop.

Mr. Cassidy: Can he explain why there are only three women involved as apprentices in motor vehicle maintenance compared with 7,109 men; there were only three women involved as apprentices in carpentry compared with 2,026 men; and why overall, for all of the apprenticeship programs run by his ministry, only 1.7 per cent of those people involved are women?

Mr. Kerrio: Maybe they don't want to go.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I would not be able to give the leader of the third party that information, for this reason: I suspect it primarily reflects the customs of our society in the last many, many years.

I think what is far more important is what the ministry is doing about it. I can assure the member that we are placing a great deal of emphasis on apprenticeship training, not the least of which is the breaking down of those roles that he has identified. I find no conflict with our ministry and what he would have done in this regard. We are as keen to see that the women of this province are given opportunity in the apprenticeship program as much as males.

I think the member will find, if he looked at more of the details, that in some of the other programs it's all women or significantly so. What I am trying to say is, if the member is expressing a concern that an apprenticeship program be open to males and females alike, I share that concern. Not only that, we are doing something about it.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Before the minister's colleagues and supporters get too excited, is the minister aware that in such areas where it might be more traditional for women, as in hairdressing, that women are outnumbered five to one? In barbering they are outnumbered four to one, and in cooking by more than 10 to one.

Is he aware that those are the only three apprentice trades where there are more than a dozen women involved in all of the programs run by his ministry? Can the minister say what specific steps he is taking as a minister to ensure equality of access to all apprenticeships for women, and not just the one or two that are sex typed?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The equality is there now as far as the opportunity is concerned, and that is the essential thing. In May of this year we hope to lay before the public of Ontario a very extensive program for upgrading our apprenticeship system in Ontario. Last October, there was a symposium that I think stirred the enthusiasm and the imagination of the workplace on the apprenticeship program.

I think it is only a start, that's all it was intended to be. But there is no doubt of the depth of commitment that my ministry has undertaken to improve the apprenticeship program in the immediate future.

We cannot by ourselves change the customs of the last century. We can only attempt to make the climate such that they will change tomorrow.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister not agree that the equality of access that he talks about in apprenticeship programs is nothing but a joke when less than two per cent of the apprentices are women?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No.

Mr. Havrot: What would the member do about it?

Mr. Cassidy: Will the minister tell this House what steps his government is taking in order to ensure that young women across the province are aware of apprenticeships and are enabled to overcome any institutional barriers that may exist to their taking apprenticeship programs?

Hon. B. Stephenson: They choose not to.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I would not agree. I think that if the leader would like to look at the latest brochure on apprenticeship training he will see that great importance is put on the place of women in our apprenticeship program.

Mr. Davidson: It took you 20 years to get around to it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have a film that's depicting it from both the male and the female role. I cannot accept for a moment the member's suggestion that we are inactive in this area. I know of no area in which we have more concern than the one in which he is expressing interest.

Mr. Cassidy: I think the figures speak for themselves, but we will come back to that question in the future.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. In the light of the recent study that was published by the ministry a couple of weeks ago, Reassessing the Scope for Fiscal Policy in Canada, which states that the increase in unemployment in this province is due largely to increased participation of women and teenagers in the labour force, and which concludes that total unemployment in the province cannot be significantly reduced unless new job opportunities are provided for these particular groups, what is the Treasurer going to do to assist job creation for women in particular?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that my friend just hangs in until tomorrow night and he will find out.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He doesn't mean that literally.

Mr. Martel: If it's like the Throne Speech, it won't be much.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on, Elie; it was a great speech.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Just try hanging.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister state why Ontario has set a target unemployment rate of 5.7 per cent for women aged 25 or over when this is close to double the target unemployment rate it has set for men of the same age; and when it is also a higher unemployment rate than it anticipates for Canada as a whole?

Mr. Warner: The Treasurer thinks they are secondary workers.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would be very interested in knowing where the ministry, as opposed to the minister—or the minister—sets a target rate in that staff paper.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the minister's apparent lack of familiarity with the statistics, which are so offensive and which were published by his ministry just two weeks ago, may I read from the figures that were published on page 6 of that study?

Mr. Speaker: Can you do it in the form of a question?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, sir. Is the minister aware that in the study, which was prepared for his ministry and for which he is apparently responsible, it states that the “technical high employment rate” of unemployment for prime-age males in Ontario is estimated at three per cent, for prime-age females at 5.7 per cent; and that compares with a rate for the rest of Canada for prime-age females of 5.1 per cent? Can the minister explain why it is, if his government is committed to equality for women, that it anticipates that unemployment among women will be almost double the rate for men?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member can play around with words all he wants but he will not find on page 6, page 7 or anywhere else in this document the word “target,” which he used. He played that little game last year with 5.3 per cent and he was found out.

Mr. Swart: The Treasurer is the one who was found out.

Mr. Warner: The Treasurer is getting too old for this.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is no target in this document. I have not used the word “target.” If the member is going to use figures, then let him use the words we use, rather than making up his own little words. He is not impressing anybody over here with the way he is twisting words around.

Mr. Grande: No answer.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: If the minister says this is not a target will he then agree, with this House, to stop using these kinds of figures which have been put forward as an excuse for the failure of his government to come up with adequate job creation programs for women and for men in this province?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I would pride myself on making available to myself and my staff the best figures we can have, the best opinions that we can find, from a whole variety of sources in an attempt to understand the Canadian, the Ontario and indeed the world economies, whether they pertain to employment rates, to unemployment rates, to participation or whatever it may be.

I will not give the undertaking to the member that we will stop using these kinds of studies and this kind of thinking—all kinds of thinking and studies—and we will not resort to some sort of socialist dogma in our pursuit of trying to find out what the truth is.

Mr. Grande: The inverse also is correct.

Mr. Cassidy: A final supplementary: Since the Treasury's own findings are that no further improvement beyond these high rates of unemployment can be achieved, they say, “without major structural changes in the economy,” and since the government apparently is not prepared to make any major structural changes in the economy, will the minister agree that he is therefore condemning the women of this province to endure an unemployment rate at least twice as high as that for prime-age males and will he also agree that that is unacceptable in this province in this age?

Mr. Martel: We might get rid of some of the Treasurer's dogma.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will agree that it is unacceptable. I will not agree that I am accepting the words that the member tries to put in my mouth.

Mr. MacDonald: It may not be a target but it is a reality.

GRAY COACH-GREYHOUND BUS SERVICES

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Is the minister aware that Greyhound has failed to meet with Gray Coach and other lines to establish schedules due to come into effect April 30 of this year and thereby failed to make the selection of runs with Gray Coach which are essential to the implementation of order in council?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I'm not aware of that problem. I know that certain meetings have been held. I'm not sure whether the total schedules have been sorted out yet or not.

Mr. Cunningham: A supplementary: Is the minister aware that Greyhound are holding out for a separate agreement with Gray Coach, thus second-guessing the cabinet decision and the agreement reached by the deputy minister and the other parties concerned?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, I'm not aware of that. A week ago I received copies of some correspondence between the two parties. I have not met personally with either one; there has been no meeting beyond the meeting that my deputy minister held with them. But I shall look into the matter.

STUDENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Cooke: I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. Now that the details of the student grant program have been made available before the date when the minister was going to announce them, I would like to ask him why he decided to dramatically increase the responsibility of middle-income families in financing their children's post-secondary education? Does he not agree that this is going to have a dramatic effect on enrolment in our universities?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that there was a release of that information prior to the stated time that I thought it was going to be made public. I'm sorry that that occurred.

Mr. Cooke: I'm sure you are.

Mr. Cassidy: So are the students and parents.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that it's a bad day when those people in our democracy will not accept the full responsibility of making sure that system works as well as it possibly can.

There would be no advantage in my replying at this time to the hon. member's question on those details until, indeed, all of the people of the province have had an opportunity to see and to assess for themselves the new terms of reference for the student assistance programme. Therefore, with some regret, I think that I would rather not answer at this time.

Mr. McClellan: See no evil.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the member so wishes I will take that question as notice. When all the people of Ontario, particularly the students, have had an opportunity to see the information and assess it for themselves, then I think that I would be in a much better position to attempt to reply to the member's question.

Mr. Cooke: A supplementary: Because it has taken the minister so long to announce the details, would he not agree that part of the implications of delaying the announcement is the great decline in applications to universities that was announced in the Globe and Mail today, whereby one university in particular, Trent University, has had a decrease of 27 per cent in applications for universities? It would appear that the government is almost attempting to do away with some of our small universities in the way that they are handling this entire situation?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That, Mr. Speaker, has to be the most irresponsible statement I've heard in a long time.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Right; absolutely.

Mr. Warner: They're trying to close the door on Trent. Try answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would like to say to the member opposite, as we said on Friday, that I believe the plan will give a great deal of equity to the system. If he wants me to suggest to the people of Ontario that free money should be an enticement for any student to go to a college or a university, he'll have to wait a long time. I would hope—and I believe—

Mr. Cooke: We're not talking about free money, we're talking about accessibility.

Hon. Mr. Parrott:—that the students of this province have the opportunity to go to a college or university of their choice; and that they can do so without the concern of being able to find the money to do so; and I would hope they would never abuse a program. I'm sure they do not consider the only enticement to be free money. That is not the way it is designed to work. It isn't working that way, and I think the member makes an error in judgement if he says anything to the contrary.

Mr. McClellan: The minister is like an ostrich—not a parrot.

Mr. Cooke: Would the minister answer the question?

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you make a statement?

Mr. Speaker: We'll have one final supplementary. The hon. member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

[2:45]

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that the additional penalty of $800 to a family whose gross income is $13,000 a year will assist the already growing problem of closing the doors of some of the smaller universities in this province, and that this may very well be the principle that the government is trying to achieve—closing the doors of places like Trent and other smaller universities in this province?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Tell us which doors have been closed.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the students aren't going.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that's absolutely a very foolish statement to make and I do not agree.

PCB HAZARD

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, on February 27, the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) raised several questions regarding the use of PCBs at the Ferranti-Packard plant in St. Catharines.

At that time, I said I understood that there were no PCBs being used in either the construction or repair of those pieces of machinery at that plant, but I did indicate I would determine whether the workers in that plant were being exposed to PCBs and would in-investigate the medical records of the employees.

Members of my staff have advised me that there are indeed some pieces of machinery there in which PCBs are being installed and some in which the content of PCBs is a part of the repair process, but they have advised me there is absolutely no risk of unacceptable exposure to PCBs at the Ferranti-Packard plant as a result of the design of the industrial process itself in that plant and the company's work practices. The filling process takes about 20 minutes and is done within a vacuum. In other words, the risk has been engineered out.

The plant was visited by a member of the industrial health and safety branch in May 1977, at which time a direction was issued requiring the use of personal protective equipment, such as rubber gloves and overalls, as a precautionary measure in addition. The company has complied totally with this direction. Therefore, I am confident that adequate precautions have been taken to protect the health of the workers from exposure to PCBs.

Of course, the most acceptable solution is to avoid the use of PCBs completely, which I had understood was in fact the position, but I am now informed that the company will eliminate the risk of PCB exposure totally by eliminating the use of the chemical. A senior official of the company has told a member of my staff that the construction of five transformers using PCBs is now in progress. Once those five are completed on March 31 of this year, no further orders for PCB-filled transformers will be accepted by that company. Further, any equipment which Ferranti-Packard repairs will be drained of PCBs and refilled with alternative fluids.

On the second question regarding medical records, I am advised that there is no specific medical surveillance program relating to PCBs in effect at the plant. However, inquiries are being made at the Workmen's Compensation Board and when I have further information, I shall be pleased to report to the House.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us or refresh the memory of this House as to whether or not the government outlawed the sale and distribution of PCBs over a year ago? Did the previous Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) not outlaw the distribution?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that the consumers of transformers had made the decision in 1972 or 1973 that no further transformers containing PCBs would be utilized. This company is in fact producing on contract, for export only, these five transformers which are at present being constructed and which contain PCBs. There have been none constructed, apparently, for use in Canada or in Ontario at that plant within the past year.

Mr. Davidson: Supplementary: Given that the minister's original answer to the original question was such that she was not aware that PCBs were being used, does she not feel that shows a lack of communication between her staff members and herself? Getting to the second part of the question on medical records, does she not think it is incumbent upon herself as the Minister of Labour to ensure that the people who were working with the PCBs do have medical tests upon themselves? Does she not feel it's incumbent upon her to see that this directive is given to that company, and make that company responsible for seeing those tests are carried out?

Hon. B. Stephenson: As I reported, much fuller information will be available to me in terms of the medical records of the individuals who have worked in that company. When I have had an opportunity to see all those records, I shall be pleased to report to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Chairman of Management Board has the answer to a question previously asked.

RED-CIRCLING OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, on Friday, the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) asked the Premier for the number of red-circled employees in the civil service. I have found that information. I'd like to say first of all that, actually, the proper term is "salary protection for employees," and it applies to employees when there has been a re-organization, the employee's job has disappeared and the employee is placed in another.

An hon. member: Like the parliamentary assistants.

Mr. Reid: Does that apply to ex-cabinet ministers?

Mr. Warner: It applies to the present ones. Red-circle the whole cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We've been red-circled for quite a while.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As of February 25, there were 439 people red-circled, and that included nine from the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. Of those 439, 64 are 65 years of age, and another 48 are within five years of being able to retire without penalty. I expect the great majority of the remainder are applying for other positions in their previous categories.

I might say that there is always change and reorganization in government. There has been a great deal in the last three years and it's continuing, and I would say that to have .69 per cent of the civil service red-circled shows the mark of a good employer and indicates clearly that we have only separated those people for whom there were no positions available.

Mr. Kerrio: In the private sector if they were doing a great job they wouldn't circle them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Don't talk to me about the private sector.

RENTAL OF SPACE FOR GOVERNMENT OFFICES

Mr. O'Neil: I have a question for the Minister of Government Services. When the ministry is looking for rental accommodation for government agencies, does it always do so by public tender?

Mr. Nixon: You can put this in your Christmas card.

Mr. Reid: Horatio Alger Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: When we're looking for accommodation for government offices there is an ad placed in the local paper for any suppliers interested in renting the space.

Mr. Reid: Tories only may apply.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Not a bad thought.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: Considering that I had been told by the ministry that any space under 5,000 square feet may not be by public tender, and considering a circumstance which I recently encountered in my riding where space which was originally estimated at approximately 4,000 square feet but was enlarged to approximately 8,000 square feet and never put out for a public tender until I raised the question pertaining to it, could the minister give us his comments on whether he feels all space required for Ontario government agencies should be by public tender?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In reply to the question, any space that has been required since I became member has been put out for tender.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Minister.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Became minister.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, that's different.

Mr. O'Neil: From what I understand, this case happens to have taken place since the minister was appointed. I wonder if maybe

I could give him the details and get this clarified.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you quit, Lorne? I think you are getting into trouble.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I'd be very happy to receive those details, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. In the monitoring of—he's not here.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes he is; there he is. He's having trouble. He's under fire today.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Look at the suit.

Mr. Martel: I rented it. I want to listen to the budget tomorrow night, there might be something in it.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: He looks like Sir John A. Macdonald.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is that for when you become president of Inco?

Mr. Martel: I have higher aspirations. They don't make enough money.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You have to retire as leader of the third party to make money.

UNIVERSITY HIRING PRACTICES

Mr. Martel: To the Minister of Colleges and Universities. In the ministry's monitoring of the hiring practices of the various universities in the last year, for this academic year, have all the universities complied with the memorandum the minister sent out about a year ago indicating what he expected from them? If not, would he name those universities which haven't complied?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that all of the presidents have complied with the memorandum and by and large there has been an excellent response. I think I could supply for the member, if he so wished, the results of hiring practices last year. There is a significant improvement, in my opinion, in the number of persons hired, as I am sure the member would wish. The percentage has gone up well.

I would be happy to supply that information.

Mr. Martel: Are there any of the universities which, let's say haven't quite reached what the minister anticipated they would reach in respect to their hiring practices for this year?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it is difficult to say one has and one hasn't, for several reasons. Perhaps the most important one is that a university that may have had a high percentage last year may have gone down this year. I think what we have to do is look at it on a broader base than one year. I would propose that perhaps the member himself might be able to judge that when he has the information that I am prepared to supply.

To do it on a one-year basis is a little difficult for a single institution. There are particular factors that might have affected their employment opportunities that year that are not operative the next. So I think we must look at it over not less than a three-year period, and I'll supply that information to the member.

CATALOGUE OF STATISTICAL FILES

Mr. Sweeney: A new question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities, Mr. Speaker. My question refers to the catalogue of statistical files for the government of Ontario, which we referred to a little earlier.

Given the widespread public concern about the confidentiality of their personal files within the government, and specifically given the new requirement that parental income tax must be available in student award files, can the minister explain why student award files in the catalogue are defined as "Not confidential within the government"? Does this not mean that any government official could have access to those files?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I feel like the Hon. John Clement did one night: It is my turn in the barrel this afternoon.

Mr. Reid: In fact he didn't know what he meant.

Mr. Makarchuk: Darcy is on the outside.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Not at the time he said it. That is the trouble, you grow on these experiences and they are no fun.

Mr. Reid: Relax Harry and enjoy it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think I would like to answer that without giving that question some considerable thought and research. I would therefore ask the member to permit me to reply in the next two or three days.

Mr. Sweeney: While the minister is examining that, could he also look into this question, because I think it really ties in?

Could the minister explain why one of his top officials in the data systems section has admitted that no standard definitions of confidentiality guide officials in the ministry in designating the accessibility of files and, further, that definitions used by the ministry are arbitrary and vague by intention?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, I will be glad to do that, but I think I should point out to the member even before I look at it that I am sure that each member of the civil service is sworn to an oath of confidentiality; and I am sure—I think it is important—that we can accept that that is a statement made in good faith.

I don't recall an incident as long as I have been minister, in two and a half years, where there has been a breach of that confidence. I don't know whether the member has reference to a specific case or not where there has been such a breach.

[3:00]

In the new program we will not have in our possession the income tax data from the parents. I think, as I have said in estimates, we will try to cross-reference them to see whether the information fits, but we will not ask for the specific income tax file or to seek them from the federal government. We don't need that much information. I think with three or four macro indicators we can give a certainty to the people of Ontario that their tax dollars are being protected and the confidentiality of the records maintained. But I would like to respond in more detail as I promised in my first answer.

SAULT STE. MARIE CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Correctional Services. In view of the comments contained in the Ombudsman's report on the Sault Ste. Marie jail, pointing out the present overcrowding at the current official level of 64 inmate beds and the outdated facilities there, and the recommendation that an 80-bed centre be constructed, as well as the minister's comments in the Sault Star last month that he couldn't think of a single coherent logical argument why he should oppose that report, can the minister indicate when construction will begin, or failing that, can he indicate when an inmate work program with MNR in the Thessalon area will begin?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, first of all, that statement is taken out of context. That statement was made about the Ombudsman's report as a whole. If I recall specifically, I referred to the Sault situation and I said we were not in a position to build there, that the same solution would be applied to the overcrowding in the Sault Ste. Marie jail as would be applied in the Sudbury district jail—that is a forestry camp.

We are now negotiating in two directions for such a camp north of Thessalon. One proposal is being advanced and spearheaded by the community, in conjunction with members of the Ontario Public Service Employees Union stationed at the institution. The other one is being discussed between senior officials of the Ministry of Natural Resources and my regional director for northern Ontario, Mr. Tegman.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate whether or not such a work program would be centred on a specific camp or is he thinking of some other kind of setup?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, it would be centred on the former operations done for the Ministry of Natural Resources in conjunction with a defunct camp called McCreight's Camp. I want to make it quite plain that we cannot refuse McCreight's Camp because it has deteriorated rapidly in the last two or three years. However, the work project—which will be forestry, access roads, environmental development and conservation protection—will include and be adjacent to the work done in years past at McCreight's Camp north of Thessalon.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: I have a question of the same minister. Can the minister indicate what he is going to do about the overcrowding in the Brantford jail?

Mr. Speaker: That's not supplementary.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well, he was talking about overcrowding.

Mr. Speaker: That's not supplementary. It was a specific question about Sault Ste. Marie.

STAFF LEVEL

Mr. Reed: I have a question of the Treasurer referring to his statement today regarding one Peter Branch. Included in that statement was a statement regarding the reduction in the number of employees in his ministry. Did he mean to indicate that the workload that is in his ministry now is redistributed over fewer people and that each one of those employees is now taking on a greater share than he or she was before?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I think that is correct, other than the transfer of certain responsibilities from my ministry to other ministries.

Mr. Reed: Supplementary: Would it be fair to gain the impression that if this reduction could take place and still maintain the level of services, that actually before these efficiency measures were introduced, there was indeed a relatively low workload or low challenge load for these employees?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I wouldn't say that. Obviously that may be part of it, we attempt to make sure that everyone is doing what I refer to as an honest day's work.

What also has happened is that there has been a better organization of time, perhaps just better organization generally—perhaps in some instances more supervision; in other areas there may well be less supervision. There's been some of that as well—less committing to paper and less hierarchical control, if there is such a word.

Also there has certainly been a reduction in things which we have decided and the statistical services branch is an area in particular which I would single out as an example where we have decided that some things we have been doing simply aren't as necessary as they once were and we have discontinued them.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. Young: A question of the hon. Minister of Transportation and Communications: First of all, might I offer on behalf of the select committee on highway safety our appreciation for the statement of the minister this afternoon and for the status report which he gave us, indicating the very significant work that has been done here.

I would like to ask the minister, however, in view of the measures which are going to be introduced and the very large amount of matter which is under consideration, whether he has in mind any time-frame when further legislation might come and when some of the matters under consideration might be resolved one way or the other? Is there a time-frame in the mind of the minister, because in my mind this is a matter of very great urgency.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As I said in the statement, many of the recommendations of the committee fall under other jurisdictions. We are following those up with consultation with the other jurisdictions—other ministries and in some cases the federal government, railroads and so on.

The one that comes to mind immediately, and perhaps it is the one the hon. member is thinking of, is the one on driver education. As far as I am concerned personally this has a very high priority. As I said in the statement, we are preparing a white paper which I hope to table in the House during this spring session. There will then be an opportunity for the next few months for members of the House and the public to consider it. I hope to get their comments with a view to having legislation in the fall.

That's the only recommendation I can think of at the moment that I've set a time schedule for in my own mind. We will be continuing to work on others and as we have legislative action to take, if that is necessary, we'll be bringing forward further amendments. But I want to give a high priority to the driver education matter during this summer.

SOUTH NATION RIVER WATERSHED PROJECT

Mr. Conway: My question is to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and relates to that portion of the Speech from the Throne which makes reference to the fact that: "Work will be started on . . . a large-scale drainage, reclamation and resource development project covering the 1,500-square-mile South Nation River watershed. This will enhance the economic productivity of 900,000 acres of agricultural and forest land in eastern Ontario."

I would ask the provincial secretary if he can at this time indicate whether or not any of that project will, in the first or later stages, bear upon that portion of the South Nation River watershed which is part of or related to the Edwardsburgh land assembly?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I think so, Mr. Speaker, but I'll be pleased to look further into it and give the hon. member additional information.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Can the provincial secretary then comment upon remarks made in this chamber last week by the government member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling), who said: "Part of the Edwardsburgh land site is located in the South Nation watershed and no doubt will become part of this overall program"? I would like the provincial secretary to comment upon that when he gives us a report and I would be appreciative at that time also if he could give us an indication as to what kind of staging there will be for this major project for the benefit of eastern Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: One poplar tree at a time.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I'd be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy: I would like to ask a supplementary on that. I would like to ask the minister whether in his plans for that site he is consulting with the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett) because that member originally said to him when he first got involved that one had to have rocks in his head to get involved in that in the first place.

Mr. Stong: He still says so.

MASSEY-FERGUSON

Mr. Makarchuk: I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Can she indicate if she has had any discussions with the Massey-Ferguson operation in Brantford regarding the possibility of some large layoffs at this time or in the near future?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there have been no discussions with Massey-Ferguson about this, nor have I received any information at this time.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Does the minister have some understanding with the corporate sector in this province that she would be notified of major impending layoffs at any time, or is this left to chance?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is not left to chance at all. As the hon. member knows, the employment standards legislation in this province requires specific length of notice for layoffs of various sizes. I must say that employers of this province have been extremely co-operative. In most instances we have been informed shortly before the required time, but usually before any public announcement is made or any discussion is held.

Mr. Wildman: Would the minister comment on the recommendation from the select committee on Inco and Falconbridge layoffs that there be a system worked out whereby the emergency team could deal with the question of mass layoffs so that we can avoid the similar situation that occurred in Sudbury?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The system which has been developed, I think, has been reasonably effective. It has worked in a number of instances in rather discouraging circumstances this year, and it worked to the benefit of employees specifically within this province. I think the program which is established, whereby there is immediate consultation between the ministry which is informed and the Ministry of Labour or the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, and in which there are ongoing discussions and activities, has been particularly effective. I do not think there is any need to replace that system with any other at this time.

NICKEL INVENTORIES

Mr. Haggerty: Some questions for the Minister of Labour: Could the minister advise what steps the government is taking now to monitor the huge inventory stock of Inco, and perhaps even Falconbridge? Is the government going to monitor it now so that we will have some indication of what we may look forward to in the industry?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I think it is entirely possible that either the Ministry of Industry and Tourism or the Ministry of Natural Resources may do such monitoring. The Ministry of Labour is not monitoring the amount of stock which is presently available, but we are monitoring the situation of the employees in that area who have moved or are considering moving.

EQUAL PAY

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. Does she realize that there are many of us in this House awaiting her statement on the matter of equal pay for work of equal value—a study which I believe was undertaken some time ago? Is she not yet prepared to give a statement to this House as to the policy of this government on that issue?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the information which was developed as a result of a conference on equal pay and equal opportunity, which was held in the middle of January of this year, is being compiled at this time. When it has been entirely collated then I shall be pleased to make some relatively more definitive statement than that which I have made today.

Mrs. Campbell: I am glad the minister referred to that conference. Could we understand why the ministry indicated so little interest in this conference that the minister herself was not able to be there to hear what the women were saying and that her deputy was only there for a very short period?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The deputy minister was there for at least one-third of the conference, to my knowledge. Certainly Ms. Marnie Clarke, who is probably the most knowledgeable individual in this province—in fact in this country—on the subject of equal pay for work of equal value, was the major co-ordinator of the conference. I shall be very pleased to tell the hon. member that it was as a result of the insistence of one of her kissing cousins that I had to be in Victoria on those dates. I had already explained that the two dates that I could not be available for federal-provincial meetings of Ministers of Labour and ministers with responsibility for manpower, were January 23 and 24 and January 16 and 17. But of course, my colleagues in the federal departments arranged both the conferences for those two dates and insisted that I attend the one on the subject of manpower.

[3:15]

Mr. S. Smith: It's a plot.

Mr. Nixon: You shouldn't be such a shrinking violet, Bette. You've got to build up your confidence.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am sorry that my responsibilities did in fact remove me from Toronto at that time, because we had spent a great deal of time arranging the conference on equal pay and equal opportunity, a subject about which I have a great deal of interest and a good deal of concern.

Mr. Peterson: You can't hide yourself under a bushel, when a pork barrel will do.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the unanimous recommendation of that conference on equal pay and equal opportunity, is the minister prepared now to announce a date for the introduction of legislation which would guarantee equal pay for work of equal value?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I am not.

Some hon. members: Why not?

Mr. Cassidy: The minister's excuse about Victoria doesn't carry water.

TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION FUND

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Treasurer, before he leaves, Mr. Speaker. Is it not true that the additional $107 million paid into the teachers' superannuation fund, as announced by the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), will be deducted from the transfer payments to local government, whether it is next year or the year after, and therefore the slip-year payment for superannuation is being eliminated at the expense of assistance to local government. Is that not true?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Tell us about your slipshod financing.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Welland-Thorold gets the first supplementary.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, is it not true that a supplementary estimate of $102 million for payment into the superannuation fund was approved last fall? Is that not considered as part of the superannuation payments which are to be deducted from municipalities? Would that not be in the same situation as the $107 million and, in fact, be deducted?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Peterson: In view of the fact that the Treasurer promised at the PMLC meetings last fall to deduct superannuation payments to the extent of about $331 million from next year's budget, is it not fair to increase that in terms of grants this year, because he has abandoned slip-year financing and in fact put that money into 1977; and, in fact, if the Treasurer doesn't do that, isn't he taking advantage of the municipalities?

Mr. Nixon: Again.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the Treasurer explain how the municipalities will raise the $107 million, for which they now will have to be responsible in view of the fact that this money is being put into teachers' superannuation payments rather than into grants to municipalities, and is it not correct that the municipalities in fact will have to raise property taxes by that amount of money in view of the way the Treasurer has been handling this in the past?

Mr. Grande: There is no other way.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: What the members are suggesting is that, had the change not been made, the money might have been added to the general legislative grants. General legislative grants have been increased by more than $90 million or roughly five per cent. If the members are suggesting that the general legislative grants should have been increased by another $102 million or roughly 10 per cent, instead of five per cent, that was never in the works; that was never in the cards.

We had no intention of increasing the general legislative grants by that amount. Therefore, the fact that we have taken the teachers' superannuation commission money into account in the amount that we transferred to the municipalities makes no difference to the local taxpayer in this year or in the year beginning April 1 next. In terms of subsequent years, those are matters which we have given an undertaking will be discussed when we are through the exercise of market value assessment, property tax reform and grant reform.

Mr. Cassidy: That's the shell game you've always played.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is it not a fact that the Treasurer told the municipalities at the PMLC meeting that the teachers' superannuation fund for 1978-79 would amount to $331 million and that this would be taken into account when the government calculated the amount of money they're going to get; and that assumed, at the time, slip-year financing? And since the government did without it, and had to put into this year's budget $107 million, which obviously it now doesn't have to meet next year, why doesn't the Treasurer recalculate the amount of money that the government owes to the municipalities next year, taking that into account?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the amount will have to be met next year, the year beginning April 1. A similar amount is in the minister's estimates.

Mr. Martel: It's not there to help you.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Let me state as clearly as I can, whether two payments were made into the teachers' superannuation fund during fiscal 1977-78, or one or none, does not change the amount which cabinet determined for the general legislative grants for 1977-78 or in the year beginning April 1 next.

Mr. Cassidy: You're playing games, you know.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Only you play games.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We are not playing games. We feel that with declining enrolments, a $90-odd million increase in general legislative grants is what the taxpayers of this province can afford. If the members opposite want to put in more, let them say so. Let them go right out and say, "Let's give the school boards another $100 million." That's what the members opposite are saying.

Mr. Warner: You're the one who created the huge debt, not us.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has just expired.

Mr. Makarchuk: Saved by the bell.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 22, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 23, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution No. 5. (Reading dispensed with).

(See Votes and Proceedings).

Motion agreed to.

SCHEDULE FOR COMMITTEES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution No. 6.

(Reading dispensed with).

(See Votes and Proceedings).

Motion agreed to.

STANDING MEMBERS'
SERVICES COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution No. 7.

(Reading dispensed with).

(See Votes and Proceedings).

Motion agreed to.

SUBSTITUTION ON
STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution No. 8.

(Reading dispensed with).

(See Votes and Proceedings).

Motion agreed to.

SUBSTITUTIONS ON PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, would the House agree to this at this time? We have some substitution on procedural affairs.

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox) replace Mr. Rollins, Mrs. Scrivener replace Mr. G. Taylor (Simcoe Centre) and Mr. Sterling replace Mr. Turner on the procedural affairs committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, with respect to those government motions that have been placed before the House, is it the intention that even though they have not been read they will be formally printed in Hansard so we would have that record? I would think it would be most useful if such, in fact, occurred.

Hon. Mr. Welch: They will appear in Votes and Proceedings, as a matter of fact.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Haggerty: The mayor of Hamilton.

Mr. Nixon: How about the federal member?

Mr. Deans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have made a number of these speeches. Perhaps the next time someone else might do it.

Mr. Nixon: Just run over one of the old ones again.

Mr. Deans: I thought I might just run one of the old ones through again, since most of the members don't listen to them, in any event. Nevertheless, there are two or three things I want to say about the budget and a couple of things I want to say about the province of Ontario.

Before I do so, I want to say, as is traditional but as it is felt by me and by many others in the House, that we are certainly pleased with the way that you, Mr. Speaker, conduct the office of the Speaker. We feel very proud in this party that the Speaker comes from the NDP and is representative of all the things that we would like to see happen in the government of the province of Ontario and in the way the government ought to handle the affairs of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: If the NDP were a little more like the Speaker, it might happen.

Mr. Deans: I can't help feeling that the government would benefit immensely if the province of Ontario were ever to decide to elect a New Democratic Party government because they could therefore then have the benefit of an entire government that acts in such a fair way towards the affairs of people, as does the Speaker representing this party.

Mr. Nixon: There's only one Jack Stokes.

Mr. Deans: I want to take a few moments—and luckily enough I have a few moments this afternoon—to talk about the way I feel about the province of Ontario, and what I think about the Throne Speech.

I want to start off by saying to the House that I think today's Star headlines—the red banner headline—probably best describes all of the things that I think are wrong with the province of Ontario; not only with the province of Ontario but all of the things that I think—

Mr. Nixon: NDP has 16 per cent federally?

Mr. Deans: —are wrong with the system in which we live, the system in this country, the way in which the North American continent is changing its emphasis and its focus. The headline pays some reference to the fact that a not bad, I suppose, not particularly brilliant individual, a football player is going to sign to play football for a quarter of a million dollars a year—plus. When I look back over the last few months and I think—

Mr. Nixon: Play for Hamilton?

Mr. Deans:—of all the furore that was raised, all the comment that was made in the province of Ontario when this party spoke about the need to pay people $4 an hour for a job of work. Then I pick up the newspaper and I find a football player who contributes absolutely nothing to Canada, who contributes absolutely nothing to the economy, who has done nothing yet for us or for anyone else, who is lining his own pockets. We find that somehow or other our system has become so twisted that we are prepared to pay that individual a quarter of a million dollars a year for some 16 football games in the year, to run up and down a field, to be applauded for running 100 yards if he makes 100 yards, yet we can't afford to pay working people in this province $4 an hour.

I have got to ask myself just exactly where are our priorities? I look around me and I see 900,000 people unemployed in this country—900,000 people unemployed; and I see a football player going to be paid a quarter of a million dollars a year—a quarter of a million dollars a year to do something that, in fact, contributes absolutely nothing to the economic well-being of the province of Ontario or of the whole of the Dominion of Canada.

I am not blaming the government for that, not for the fact that he's getting the quarter of a million bucks. But I have got to think, as I look at it, that there's something perverse about the system in which we live, that there's something terribly wrong with the system in which we live, when you have acceptance by the general public of that kind of payment. It's not only in that isolated case. There are a number of other instances where that is occurring, where people with some God-given talent who are able to produce something physically are able to get that kind of remuneration when we can't afford to spend money to produce employment for the average person trying to raise his or her family in this province.

[3:30]

I start my speech in that way because it's about that that I want to talk. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk to you for a little while this afternoon about what's wrong with this province.

What is wrong with this province? I don't intend to pretend for one minute that it's all the fault of the members sitting on the other side, because it isn't, although they have the wherewithal to change it, they have the capacity to change it, they have the mandate to change it. But what is wrong with this province is a sense—a sense among people—a sense of futility; a sense of greed in some instances; a sense of a lack of purpose, an inability to recognize the goals or to set goals and to recognize what those goals are and to strive to achieve them.

I think a great deal of what has gone on in this province over the last few years and the deterioration of people's ideals and the fact that they accept that headline and many other headlines similar to it all across this province, all across this country, is a reflection. It's a reflection on the lack of political leadership. It's a reflection on an educational system which places unfair, undue emphasis on that kind of achievement over and against the achievement that can be derived from working together to create a better society on behalf of people now and people in the future. It's the inability of the population at large to be able to see, here in the Legislature, the honest efforts of people trying to come to grips with very difficult, very complex problems in a fast-changing society.

As I look at that, I can't help feeling that what we are seeing has to be detrimental to whatever it is we hope to accomplish over the long haul—over the period of many years and through a number of generations. We've got to stop it.

It's the signing of Tiger Williams for $100,000. It's the same kind of thing. It's the Jimmy Edwardses of the world who come to Canada to produce some kind of entertainment and then who demand from the consumer of Canada far more than we can afford. You've got to wonder at the ability of people to meet that kind of commitment, about the sense that they rave about what's right and what's wrong in a society like ours.

In any event, I want to take a moment or two. I've made a number of speeches in the Legislature over the last 10 or more years, sometimes winding up debates, sometimes just simply making comments in the midst of debates. I can recall a number of years ago in a windup speech speaking about the cabinet—talking about them individually, their strengths, their weaknesses, and it wouldn't be difficult to talk about them individually right now given that there is but one in the House.

Mr. Haggerty: Pretty weak.

Mr. Deans: In fact, the only one I hadn't intended to speak about.

Mr. Lewis: Because there was nothing to say.

Mr. Martel: Nice fellow.

Mr. Makarchuk: Talk about his haberdasher.

Mr. Deans: It's unfortunate, but I was thinking to myself, I look back over the last five or six years, the years in which the present Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has been at the helm of the expenditures and revenue of the province of Ontario. I was thinking back. I thought, well, back in 1967 when I was first elected I recall the budget of the province of Ontario was $2.6 billion. I remember us standing here in 1968 and suggesting a number of areas into which we could go to expend some money in order to meet the legitimate needs of a number of people in the province and how the government held their hands up in horror that we would want to spend any more money. How could they ever raise any more money? After all, $2.6 billion was the absolute maximum that we could afford. That was back in 1968 and 1969.

Lo and behold, the years go by, and as the years go by, elections come up. As the elections come up and you find you're beginning to lose a bit at the polls, Mr. Speaker, you have to look for ways to spend more money in order to get yourself back in again. So the budget has risen over that 10 years from the $2.6 billion of 1967 to the almost $14 billion of 1977.

Mr. Makarchuk: The deficit is almost as large.

Mr. Deans: The deficit in 1977 was almost as large as the budget in 1967. I listen to the Treasurer speaking. He travels across the province and makes speech after speech in which he talks about the terrible condition of the economy of the province of Ontario and how we have to make cutbacks. We can't afford this high level of expenditure after all, he says, and we don't raise the money that we need in order to spend at the level we are spending it, and we simply have to come to grips with this fiscal mismanagement that we are now faced with. There is no doubt about it—he said it again today—the taxpayers of the province can't afford to spend any more money. They are going to have to tighten their belts, he says. You would swear to God, Mr. Speaker, that somebody else had done the spending. You would swear that we on this side of the House or somebody outside had taken on the job and had decided the budget, and decided that tax rate and had decided the distribution of taxes, that somebody other than the Treasurer had been the person or the people responsible for the current state of affairs in the province of Ontario. In comes the Treasurer and, by God, he is going to solve it.

Mr. Haggerty: Four years of forecasting.

Mr. Deans: You can hear him, Mr. Speaker, as he charges in, sabres rattling as he goes through there cutting and chopping.

Mr. Makarchuk: Frothing at the mouth.

Mr. Deans: "Here I am, Darcy McKeough, the saviour of the economy of the province of Ontario," he says. You have to ask yourself as you applaud, how can he save us from that which he inflicted upon us?

Mr. Martel: He is the architect.

Mr. Deans: How can it be that this man who has spent the better part of 10 years undermining the economy of the province of Ontario now thinks he can save us from his own mistakes—

Mr. Makarchuk: It boggles the mind.

Mr. Deans: —and all of these errors he has made? Tomorrow night he is going to stand up, he is going to posture, he is going to puff and he is going to tell us about his slipshod budgeting method—I mean slip-year budgeting method.

Mr. Swart: You were right the first time.

Mr. Deans: He is going to tell us how he has now devised new and better ways of saving us money. The best way he could have saved us money was to get the devil out of there because as long as he is at the helm we will continue to expend funds in the province of Ontario in exactly the wrong ways. We will never come to grips with the need for economic planning.

Mr. Martel: He is too doctrinaire.

Mr. Deans: We will never come to grips with the value of the resources of the province of Ontario and utilize them wisely. We will never be able to understand the function of government. We will never be able to come to grips with what it is that a government should be doing at a time when there is some severe economic dislocation, where there is unemployment, when there are major problems in our manufacturing sector, when there are major layoffs in our resource sector and when the public sector is under pressure. The reason for all of those things is that the Treasurer of Ontario, having had the opportunity over 10 years—and that particular Treasurer personally having had the opportunity over at least six of those years—has been the architect of our destruction.

Mr. Makarchuk: He is the Dracula in charge of the blood bank.

Mr. Deans: That is why it is very difficult for me to sit and listen to a Throne Speech such as the one that was brought forward, because the Throne Speech that was brought in the other day was one of those political documents aimed at touching all bases. They wanted to make sure that anything that moved or breathed in the province or anything that might have had some political significance in the province was at least mentioned, just in case the group that was most concerned with it happened to read the Throne Speech and was looking for some indication from the government that they knew they existed.

The problem is that the Throne Speech doesn't speak about any new initiatives. It doesn't speak about the province of Ontario as it now exists. It doesn't talk about it in terms of how we are going to remould it. It doesn't talk about how we are going to deal with that economy that is in some considerable difficulty, although even yet very strong in spite of the government but still in difficulty. It doesn't talk about how we are going to take that economy and how we are going to get a handle on it and use it in the best interests of people now and in the future.

Therefore when you look at the most recent Throne Speech, you can't help feeling that it is simply a lot of idle rhetoric. It has no substance; it has no direction; it has no meaning; it has nothing of any consequence within it; it doesn't speak to reality; it doesn't talk about the problems; it doesn't begin to set out new paths or new directions; it doesn't even recognize that the reason we are in this mess is because of the doctrinaire, hidebound attitudes of the Conservative Party of Ontario. That's what is wrong with it.

Any idiot could have written such a Throne Speech because it was simply a recognition of problems. It wasn't a new definition of goals and ideas and ways of meeting those problems. So you have the Treasurer, who I happen to believe is incapable of bringing us out of the mess, simply because he is so doctrinaire, so ideological—

Mr. Martel: It goes with the help.

Mr. Deans: —that he firmly believes—

Mr. Makarchuk: He is the mess.

Mr. Deans: —that somehow the private sector in itself, by itself, left to its own devices, will be able to solve the problems of Ontario and Canada.

For the better of 1,960 years the private sector was left to its own devices. There was poverty the likes of which you've never seen. There were people who were deprived, taken advantage of, who were made to work in conditions that are almost unmentionable, who were given absolutely nothing, whose stake in society was unrecognized. That's what the private sector did for 1,960 years.

It's only since the government became involved in trying to do some planning, it's only since the trade union movement became involved in trying to bring about some equity, that the average person working for a living had the opportunity to gain some kind of economic return that would enable him to live at a reasonable level.

Now we are going to go back to the private sector. We are going to say to the private sector, "It's up to you, it's your responsibility. You do the job." That's Darcy McKeough's economics. Back out; back out; back out. If you have to give money away, give it to the private sector. If you find people in need, hope that they will find jobs. If you find people who don't have an income sufficient to meet their needs, as with the Ministry of Labour and the Workmen's Compensation Board, send them to welfare. That's the attitude that prevails throughout the front benches of the government and it is an attitude that is destructive. It is destructive of all of the worthwhile things that people in society have to have and that people are prepared to work for.

Then, of course, when you mention the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) you can't help feeling the frustration of putting a doctor in charge of health and safety. Doctors by their very nature are interested in making people well, not keeping them from getting ill. How often do you find them out there in the forefront beating the bushes trying to help preventive medicine programs develop? Very rarely. So you shouldn't have a doctor in charge of health and safety in the workplace.

What we need is someone in charge of health and safety who believes it is better to keep people from becoming ill, better to keep people from getting injured, than it is to find ways to pay them after they become ill and injured. Yet that is not the attitude within the Ministry of Labour. The attitude that sort of leaks out of the Ministry of Labour is one of, "We'll do as little as we can." When I read that the Minister of Labour is reported to have said she is considering abandoning the health and safety bill because she doesn't like the amendments brought in by the opposition, I've got to think to myself that certainly is—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, that's right.

Mr. Deans: —a clear indication of the attitude of that ministry and that minister towards a democratic system.

Mr. Lewis: And towards the labour movement.

Mr. Martel: Towards working people.

Mr. Deans: Here is a minister who doesn't even understand that in a minority government the majority rules just as in a majority government. Just as we have had, for the better part of 30 years, to put up with inadequate legislation from majority Tory governments, now that the shoe is on the other foot and people who have at least an equal sense of what's wrong in the workplace and want to make it different and better, the minister says that she'd rather withdraw the bill. Then go ahead.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I did not.

Mr. Martel: You were quoted as saying that.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I did not say that.

Mr. Deans: She is reported to have said she would rather withdraw the bill.

Mr. Lewis: Is this another misquote of the week? That's three in a row in the last 10 days.

Mr. Deans: One has to wonder whether it mightn't be better if she were the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Swart: Or on the backbench.

Mr. Lewis: She didn't say she might abandon the bill?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I said that was one of the alternatives we would have to consider.

Mr. Lewis: She is too much.

Mr. Deans: There are only two alternatives. One is to abandon it and one is to go ahead with it.

Mr. Warner: The worm is wriggling on the hook.

Mr. Deans: Since we assume automatically that a bill introduced will be gone ahead with, when the minister says one of the two alternatives is withdraw it, we've got to assume she's thinking seriously about it.

Mr. Lewis: The only person who moves from S to U in the alphabet for fear that T will mean "truth."

Mr. Deans: I feel very strongly that when the Minister of Labour says she may be prepared to withdraw that legislation because there have been amendments brought about that resulted from discussion with people in the workplace, representatives of those people, and people in the Legislature, when she says, "It isn't what I wanted as a health and safety bill, and therefore we might not go ahead with it," it's a clear recognition by her of the fact that she does not believe in the democratic process.

Hon. B. Stephenson: What absolute balderdash!

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Deans: That's exactly what she said.

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) defends farmers. When does this minister defend workers?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Constantly.

Mr. Deans: If she believed in it, she would have made the commitment when she took the bill to committee that whatever that committee determined should be done with the bill would be what she would bring forward in the House.

Mr. Haggerty: She can always resign.

Mr. Deans: That's the clear implication of saying she wants the bill to go to committee, that she wants it to have public discussion and that she wants to afford the opportunity to people who are concerned to bring forward their objections and their changes.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am more concerned about the health and safety of workers than with the political process.

Mr. Martel: Oh, yes, right.

Mr. Lewis: That's why she talks about possibly withdrawing the bill.

Mr. Martel: Then she should allow the bill to go through.

Mr. Makarchuk: When did she become a private consulting firm?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. McClellan: Let her open her own firm.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: As a minister of management, she'd be comfortable in the consulting field.

Mr. Deans: We have a minister who frankly does not think that health and safety in the workplace is the responsibility of the people in the workplace.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is a prevarication.

Mr. Deans: That is true. She may call it that. Why doesn't she call it what she really thinks?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: It's a big lie.

Mr. Deans: There you are. It happens to be a reflection—

Mr. Lewis: That's what "prevarication" means.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: He doesn't understand that.

Mr. Deans: I understood. I just wanted to get it out.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not only wrong. It's unparliamentary.

Mr. Deans: It happens to be true.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is not true.

Mr. Deans: Her difficulty is that she cannot see past her medical doctor's degree.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's terribly wrong.

Mr. Lewis: It's good to hear it said.

Mr. Deans: She is so tied up in solving ill health that she can't see the need to prevent the accident from occurring or the health problem from occurring in the workplace. And that's the difficulty.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: What privilege?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is your point of privilege?

Hon. B. Stephenson: My point of privilege is that as a family physician for 30 years, I practised preventive medicine the entire time.

Mr. Lewis: So?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I was much more concerned with preventing illness than with curing it.

Mr. Lewis: That doesn't mean she can see past her nose.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I still am, in spite of the allegations of that individual.

Mr. McClellan: What's the point of privilege?

Mr. Makarchuk: What's the point of privilege?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the member continue?

Mr. Deans: I always feel, Mr. Speaker, that the minister's statements are measured by her actions.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Deans: Her actions of the last few days are that she's not prepared to accept what the people themselves want. That seems to be what she is saying.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That is your interjection only.

Mr. Lewis: Minimum wage, workmen's compensation and welfare, one after the other.

Mr. Deans: As my colleague says, it's evidenced in everything that the minister does.

Interjection.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's exactly what he meant.

Mr. Lewis: It's so much balderdash I am surprised that the minister would believe that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: That's the Minister of Industry and Tourism there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Wentworth has the floor. Would he please direct his remarks to the Chair?

Mr. Johnson: Why doesn't he make a speech then?

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you go back to sleep?

Mr. Deans: I want to tell the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, I'm always happy to get advice. That's one of the benefits of being on this side of the House. One can accept advice.

Mr. Haggerty: Good sound advice, though.

Mr. Deans: In any event, I want to tell the minister that when she's got to reach to those depths in order to try to find means for aborting the bill then there's something perverse about her thinking.

Mr. Martel: Right on.

Mr. Deans: And I suggest to her that she rethink it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: If you think I've been abrasive so far, just wait, Buster.

Mr. Deans: No, you haven't been abrasive. You have been very pleasant.

Mr. Martel: My friend's name is Ian; it's not Buster.

Mr. Deans: The fact that the minister has been pleasant does not take away from the fact that she also has been destructive.

Mr. Lewis: And wrong.

Mr. McClellan: And incompetent.

Mr. Deans: And that's the difficulty with it. I said some weeks ago that one of the most useful things the Premier (Mr. Davis) could have done in his cabinet shuffle was to have moved that minister. She could probably have done an excellent job in one of the other portfolios.

Mr. Martel: Government Services.

Mr. Makarchuk: Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Deans: She might have done a better job in one of the other portfolios. I am firmly of the belief that no matter what she may claim her background makes it extremely difficult for her to deal with the problems that confront the people of the workplace.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I've been in the workplace all my life.

Mr. Deans: I have listened to the minister's explanations of how she attempts to seek out the medical information required and you see, Mr. Speaker, the problem with being a doctor is that it doesn't take into account the human element. It doesn't and I will tell her the reason why.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Such maligning.

Mr. Deans: I deal with physicians every day in workmen's compensation cases and every single day they say to me that that man or that woman is fit to return to light or modified work, and they haven't the faintest idea what is going on in the workplace.

Mr. McClellan: Absolutely right.

Mr. Deans: And the minister, unfortunately, has the same problem. And that's what's difficult about it. I don't suppose it's anything intentional. I suspect it is something to do with 20 years of practice and being removed from coming to grips with having to go into that kind of environment.

Mr. Rotenberg: Bette, at least you're popular over there.

Mr. Deans: In any event, enough said about the Ministry of Labour since the Minister of Labour obviously doesn't understand what it is that is being said.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Did you land on your head when you came down the pole once in a while?

Mr. Lewis: That was positively un-nice.

Mr. Rotenberg: Look who started to be un-nice.

Mr. Philip: If he had, he wouldn't collect any compensation from your ministry.

Mr. Deans: I'm talking about things that are real, though. I'm not talking about her in herself. I'm talking about real things.

When it comes time to judge between whether the worker in the workplace deserves to have the final say and whether the say should be made by the employer, the Ministry of Labour will inevitably come down on the side of the employer.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Hogwash.

Mr. Deans: That is true.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Hogwash.

Mr. Deans: True. There is evidence in the bill, evidence in the fact that the minister is going to withdraw it; evidence in the fact that she has not been able to change the Workmen's Compensation Board payments; evidence in the fact she can't deal with the inadequate level of minimum wage—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Hogwash.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Deans:—evidence in the fact that, she, even at this point, still says that if someone is on pension from workmen's compensation and can't make ends meet, it is not her responsibility to solve it now because she is studying it and so therefore they should go to welfare.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Deans: It's a clear indication of a lack of understanding—unfortunately.

Mr. Lewis: And why do you have to correct every statement that is attributed to you? You are always doing that. Always.

Mr. McClellan: Doesn't that strike you as odd?

Mr. Lewis: More than any other minister, you are always having to do this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe she should ask herself why she is always misinterpreted.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Well then, I won't correct them any more.

Mr. Deans: In any event, Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech didn't deal with that in any detail. Unfortunately for us it didn't.

Let me return for a moment or two to some things that the Throne Speech might have said and didn't. To begin with the Throne Speech might have dealt with the state of the economy. It might have dealt with national unity and the problems that we are faced with in Quebec. It might have said something more intelligent about the way in which we in the province of Ontario are going to try to deal with the difficulties confronting the people of Ontario.

The Throne Speech speaks about the advisory committee on the quality of working life that has on it a number of very eminent people. The purpose of the committee is supposed to be to identify and study and evaluate innovations in the working environment in Ontario. We called the ministry to ask them what's happened. We called to ask if they could give us an update on what they have been doing. They couldn't provide for us one single detail of anything that committee has done since the day it was formed. Not one detail.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I shall be pleased to.

Mr. Deans: Yes, the minister should be pleased to because she could make it up, but they couldn't.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I can't make it up. I can only give you factual information.

Mr. Deans: We called the Ministry of Labour and we said to them, "We read in your Throne Speech that there is going to be a labour market information program. Tell us about it."

"Well, it was given cabinet approval last fall but nothing has been done yet." Nothing has been done yet.

Not one single thing could they tell us about that had been done by this labour market information program. Let the minister tell us about that when she is on her feet in a moment. Let her tell us what she has done in the field of trying to evaluate the jobs, trying to evaluate the training requirements, trying to evaluate the capacities of people who are unemployed in the province of Ontario, trying to make some judgements about what training is necessary in order to bring them up to standards that would enable them to enter the workplace and become useful, productive citizens, because while the Throne Speech speaks about the establishment of this committee, the fact of the matter is that the committee is in place in name only—and in no other place.

The Throne Speech speaks about buy-Canadian and adjustment for industries program—a buy-Canadian program. All it is talking about is the—

Mr. Warner: Always for sale.

Mr. Deans:—final communique from the first ministers' conference. Let me tell the House what the final communique from the first ministers' conference said. It deals with two items in particular, item one and item five. Item one says: "Trade and industry policy." This is what we signed and this is what is in the Throne Speech and this is what we're talking about in terms of trying to provide some economic stimulus for the province of Ontario. First: "Canadians should be encouraged to buy Canadian-produced goods where quality and price are comparable to imports. A joint federal-provincial advisory committee campaign based on the slogan 'Create A Job—Buy Canadian' should be developed in an overall program of import replacement."

Where are the initiatives? What good does it do, in heaven's name, to put out a slogan? We have had slogans—Buy Canada, Buy Canadian—for the better part of the last 20 years. They've been on stickers, they've been in the newspapers—

Mr. Haggerty: On every lunch pail.

Mr. Deans:—they've been on the radio. What good, in heaven's name, has that done? Absolutely none. When the government had the opportunity to do something useful, something productive, something that Canadians could have seen as being an initiative on the part of this government to guarantee that there would be jobs in Canada, to guarantee that there would be the opportunity to buy Canadian, to move into and to make very strong representation on behalf of Canadian manufacturers in all of those things related directly to the production of the pipeline, where was it? Absolutely nowhere. Nowhere.

It can't produce a single paper, it can't produce a single initiative, it can't produce a single thing that was done by the government of the province of Ontario, on behalf of the steelworkers of Ontario, on behalf of the electrical workers of Ontario, on behalf of the producers of all of the other subsidiary products in the province of Ontario, to say to the federal government that there should be, in fact, a clause contained within the pipeline agreement which says that Canadians are entitled to receive first consideration. That could have been a positive action. That would have been an action on behalf of Canadians, on behalf of our economy, which would have produced many hundreds of thousands of man-years of work.

That's an initiative that could produce, here in Ontario, many tens of millions of dollars in value. That's an initiative upon which we could have built the changing economy in the province of Ontario. That's the kind of initiative which would have reaped for the province of Ontario the benefits in the long and short term which would have made us much more productive in world terms.

But where was the province of Ontario? Sitting nodding its head. Sitting, saying: "Well we think the Canadian industry can be competitive." How can we tell if we're being competitive? How do we know what kind of subsidies are being afforded to the many other steel industries in other parts of the world? How do we know whether or not they are being provided with assistance from the governments? And even after we find out, what kind of action do we have available to us in order to bring about the change necessary in order to afford our economy the protection that it deserves?

Where is this government speaking on behalf of the many tens of thousands of people who work in those industries, whose families are directly dependent upon the capacity of the industry to produce? Why is it that we don't feel the urgency, the necessity in the province of Ontario to say clearly and without any equivocation that we believe that since the United States stands substantially to gain economically from being able to get that natural gas at rates that are considerably cheaper than they could otherwise get it from any other source, that we surely are entitled to consideration, given, incidentally, that we are prepared to run the environmental risks associated with having that particular pipeline go through our country?

Why is it that we can't say, on behalf of Ontarians, that we think that, consistent with those two things, we are entitled to priority consideration in the production of the materials necessary to build that pipeline in order to assist our economy at a time when it desperately needs it? Why is it that that can't be done, yet we sign a communique that talks about "buy Canadian" and adjustment for industries affected by GATT?

[4:00]

What kind of adjustment can we make after we find out we've been bilked? What kind of adjustment can we make after we discover the companies producing the steel and the pipe outside of Canada have been subsidized in one form or another by the governments of their countries? How do we hope to recover? How do we produce jobs for them? What do we say to those people who are unemployed and who can't afford to keep their families?

What kind of government is it that, having right within its boundaries the major portion of the steel industry, doesn't stand up on a day-to-day basis and speak to Ottawa and say:

"It's time you listened to us. It's time you heard what we're saying. We're speaking on behalf of our people in our jurisdiction. We're talking about something that will be beneficial not only to Ontario but to the rest of Canada. We're talking about making sure that that which will benefit another nation, from which we can derive considerable detrimental effect, will at least be offset by economic benefits which are set out in the contract that is signed between the two countries."

Where is this government? Where is this government in its Throne Speech? Where is this government in its actions in trying to bring about that kind of guarantee for the people of Ontario?

Then, of course, there is the fifth item. The fifth item in the trade and industry policy signed by the first ministers is an interesting one: "There was a general agreement that new arrangements resulting from trade negotiations will require some adjustment for particular industries. Government should move with dispatch to indicate the type of assistance for such adjustment which will be available. The process will be facilitated if changes in the tariff policies were announced gradually."

What in heaven's name is the government talking about when it signs these kinds of things? What kind of assistance does it mean? What kind of rationalization is it prepared to see? What kind of destruction is it prepared to reign over in the province of Ontario? How much of Ontario's manufacturing sector has to go down the drain before the government understands that we're already faced with an uncompetitive situation?

What kind of destruction has to be throughout the Ontario manufacturing sector before the government of the province of Ontario appreciates with action the fact that we are dictated to by the parent companies outside of this country and that the very thing which has created the problem for us, the branch plant economy, is the very thing which these kinds of agreements help to shore up?

For heaven's sake, is there no one in the government who understands that the very nature of the economy in Canada, and in Ontario in particular, is so branch plant that as we eliminate the tariffs—and I recall the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) talking about their gradual reduction to the point of elimination—we allow the parent company outside of this country to attach on to its productive capacity the needs of Canada and that it will be able to produce for our needs in the end run of its main production schedule? Does no one in the government realize that then there will be no need for those companies to have any manufacturing here in this province or this country; and that the very things the government is doing and the things it is signing and the agreements it is making are, in fact, in the long run destructive? They're destructive to the very economy that everyone else is talking about trying to build up.

I can't help feeling, as I read this kind of ridiculous statement in the Throne Speech and then read what the trade and industry policy is that this government attached its name to, that it doesn't understand the nature of the branch plant economy and the nature of manufacturing in the province of Ontario. And, in fact, it doesn't really care to understand it. And that its interest is simply in getting through the next election and that its long-term interest has nothing to do with the best interests of the province of Ontario.

That is evidenced, incidentally, by the actions of the government that were taken some years ago. The Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) sits and shakes her head. I don't blame her for shaking her head. I understand that she disagrees with everything I've said but that's their goal. That's what makes her wrong.

The interesting thing is to look back over the last seven years and remember the statement of the Premier (Mr. Davis) as he spoke about the machinery tax rebate and how we were going to give this rebate and how it was going to help build up the industry and how it was going to create jobs in the province of Ontario and then take a look at what really happened. What we have seen is, of course, the expenditure of at least $100 million a year of taxpayers' money that could have been used for other means and that has been used simply for the purpose of providing for increased profits for many of the companies that are involved in claiming it.

There hasn't been a new machinery manufacturing plant set up. The production levels in all of those companies have risen but they haven't been able to find markets for their products. They employ fewer people today than they ever employed and the reason is simply because this government doesn't understand what happens when you begin a program of subsidizing as they did back in 1970.

I think what we are saying really is this, that the mismanagement of this economy has been clearly evident over the entire last seven years; that the mismanagement, begun with a misunderstanding, has been compounded by the simple pure inadequacy on the part of the Treasurer and the Treasury; that the Treasurer and the Treasury have never stopped to measure the impact of their programs in the long run, and that even their giveaway programs—their new car tax rebate, their home building rebate—all of those were so hastily conceived and so ill thought out that in the long run they were destructive.

They were aimed at garnering votes at election time without any consideration for the impact on the economy, the capacity of the province to generate wealth, or the purchasing power of the people involved. Now we have people who took advantage of the home ownership program, who took advantage of the subsidized mortgage program, and who now find themselves, at the end of five years, in a position where they can no longer afford to pay the mortgage. The subsidy has run out and they can't afford to live in the economic conditions that this government encouraged them to get into.

In any event, I think what we have got happening in this province is a clear indication by the government that it doesn't have the will to come up with some new and more innovative programs. It doesn't understand its responsibility. It doesn't appreciate, for example, that the province of Ontario's future depends to a great extent on the way in which we: (1) Develop our energy program; (2) develop our natural resource program; and

(3) use those programs to develop our manufacturing sector.

If we are not prepared now to see clearly that energy and natural resources are the two tools available to us that can be used in order to develop a manufacturing sector that will have the capacity to deal in world terms, then there is something drastically wrong with the advisers to the government.

It is clear to me, and I think to most other people, that the future of this province and this country depends almost entirely on whether or not we are able, firstly, to have an integrated energy program, one that speaks about conservation, that speaks about the need to utilize resources in the way they are best fitted to be used, that doesn't allow for waste and discourages it in every single aspect, and that talks about making sure that energy is used to the optimum; and secondly, that takes the natural resources while we still have them in the province and while they are still valuable worldwide, and uses them as the catalyst or the lever for the secondary manufacturing that must be developed if we are going to maintain an economic presence in the world.

We will not be able, within the next 50 years, to develop secondary manufacturing in this province—simply because our consumer market is too small—we will not be able to develop the secondary manufacturing necessary unless we utilize the resources while they are still valuable, while we still have them, while they can still be used as that lever for secondary manufacturing and the development of secondary manufacturing and the diversity that must take place right across the province.

That's not happening. That hasn't happened under this government. This speech has been made a dozen times before. It doesn't happen under this government. This government doesn't realize the degree to which you must be involved as a government in order to bring about rational planning, that planning cannot be something that is done in the corporate boardrooms and there alone, that planning cannot be simply who can get access to whatever it is that's available as cheaply as possible, use it for their own ends and then walk away and leave us with the dregs.

That's what's been happening right across this province for the better part of the last 30 years at least and appears to be what this government is bound on doing over the course of the next 30 years, given that they were given the opportunity to do so.

I want to suggest to the government that the very fact—and this is a personal opinion—that it would sign away to Denison the resources of this province at such exorbitantly high rates is clear evidence to me that the government doesn't intend to use that resource as a catalyst for development. It's clear to me from the very fact that the government would sign the Onakawana coal contract over for, I think it was, $1 an acre. For $1 an acre we signed over the rights to develop that coal. The payment per year was $12,800 for the lease of 12,800 acres in the province of Ontario. The contract was signed without any consideration for the use to which that coal can be put; without any consideration for the future needs of the province of Ontario; without recognition of the fact that Ontario Hydro said quite clearly they did not require it at the moment and therefore there was no need to develop it right now; without any consideration for the fact that the companies involved, once they have the thing under way, undoubtedly will sell it outside of the borders of Ontario and probably outside of the borders of Canada; without any consideration for the economic impact on the communities in the area; and without giving the Hartt commission the opportunity to complete its study. Without any understanding of the future needs of the province, to turn around for $1 an acre and allow someone the right to develop that resource at that ridiculously low price is a clear reflection of the incapacity of this government to be able to understand what is going on in the province and what the future holds.

Most of us feel frustrated and angry that the government seems to feel, for some reason or other, that this is a never-ending well and that we can go there continually, as we have done over the past 50 years, and draw out of it whatever we wish or give it away in whatever way we please. That may well have been true back in the days of Leslie Frost, but in today's highly competitive society, with the needs growing as dramatically and rapidly as they now are, to alienate both the uranium and the coal from public sector planning really doesn't make good sense—and good sense is what we're talking about. If we were in business to make money, and if we wanted to guarantee our sources of supply, the first thing we would look at would be acquisition. The trouble here is that the government already had acquisition within its grasp. The government owns the Onakawana situation; it could have had the Denison situation within its grasp.

Mr. Warner: The member for Prince Edward-Lennox knows that. He understands that. No wonder he quit.

Mr. Deans: The government refused to come to grips with that and recognize it as one of the major planning tools for the development of the province of Ontario in the future.

What I'm saying, to be quite frank, is that I don't think the government has any great concern in the long run for what will happen to the province of Ontario. The government speaks about it as if, somehow or other, it was a bottomless pit from which everything could be taken and nothing must be given back. The government seems to feel that the need to plan as a government function is non-existent.

The government's job surely is to co-ordinate that planning. The government's job surely is to make the kind of careful analysis of future needs that will guarantee future generations that they will have available to them that which they will require in order to provide for the lifestyle that we've thrust upon them.

Surely there is the need on the part of government to assume its rightful function—and it has changed over the years. There was a time when the Conservative brand of do-nothing government was the right brand. That was back in 1920 and 1930. That was the brand of government that people needed. The problem has been that instead of keeping pace with the change, instead of recognizing that government now must be the single primary body responsible for planning purposes, instead of recognizing that that's what government ought to be doing, the government is still trying to play the shell game and hoping that all these individual plans of all these individual groups in society somehow or other will mesh at the end and produce a lifestyle that people can live in. That doesn't happen any more.

That's what's wrong with the government and that's what's wrong with the Throne Speech. The Throne Speech doesn't speak about anything that matters in the province of Ontario in the long run. It doesn't address itself to any of the major problems in the province of Ontario. It doesn't even begin to talk about what people have the right to expect. One of the reasons, I suspect, is that probably—and this is probably true of most, if not all, of us—we have been too long out of the workplace. Most of us here, most in the cabinet, most in the Legislature, haven't been down a mine, haven't had to work in a blast furnace.

[4:15]

Mr. Lewis: That's true; that's the problem.

Mr. Deans: We haven't had to go down and stand on the edge of a dock and unload a ship; haven't had to go and plow a furrow. Most of us in the Legislature have been politicians too long and we have long forgotten what it is like not to have that personal experience that enables us to bring reality into the debate.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Deans: The Minister of Labour, for example, has never worked in a coke oven; has never been in a place where there was a fire; has never seen what it is like to work where you can't see your nose in front of your face—

Hon. B. Stephenson: But I have.

Mr. Deans: —no matter how short it is.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I have.

Mr. Deans: No you haven't; not in the last 30 years you haven't.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes I have.

Mr. Deans: And there is not one of your colleagues in the front benches—Darcy McKeough doesn't have to give a damn where his next dollar comes from to pay his taxes.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You'd better not be too loud on that—

Mr. Deans: Well, it is true.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —because I have been in places you have never even heard of.

Mr. Deans: Have you? I don't doubt that for a moment. I wouldn't be seen dead there.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You wouldn't be let in the place. Don't talk about who worked where.

Mr. Deans: I want to tell you that I said by far the vast majority.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That group over there should never talk about working in the real world. Not one of them. Teachers; social workers.

Mr. Deans: By far the vast majority of people in this Legislature—and I am not talking only of the government—have not been in the circumstances of the people for whom they must make decisions and about whose future they must decide.

Mr. Lewis: The whole front bench with one possible exception.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You don't know what working is all about.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: No possible exceptions.

Mr. Deans: It is true; and there is no point in denying it for heaven's sake; it is a fact of life.

Mr. Rotenberg: It is the same with you guys.

Mr. Lewis: That's quite true of me.

Mr. Deans: And that is one of the difficulties with being in politics. It is one of the difficulties with being enclosed in this place for such long periods of time.

Mr. Rotenberg: You should resign.

Mr. Hodgson: Why don't you try a new country for a change?

Mr. Deans: I suggest it may be useful if we could cut down on some of the debates, and some of the discussion that goes on here in isolation from everything that is happening outside; and maybe, as members of the Legislature, we should spend some time out in the province of Ontario. Not walking door-to-door asking for votes, not walking door-to-door trying to show what great people we are; but going into the plants of the province of Ontario; going and working in the factories of the province of Ontario; going down the mines—not for a visit, with an expensive lunch afterwards; but to go down and spend a week or two working beside the people involved in order to try to come to grips with what is happening in those places. Maybe then—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I have done that.

Mr. Deans: I am talking about everyone. Maybe then when we came back, we would understand why the health and safety bill is not adequate; maybe then we would understand why the Workmen's Compensation Board doesn't meet needs; why the housing problems of the province of Ontario are so terrible.

Because as the former Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes) would know, we build a lot of houses, but they are not at the prices people can afford; those are difficulties that we in this Legislature—most of us in this Legislature—no longer encounter personally. So therefore it is difficult to see clearly, and to feel for yourself, the kind of agony you go through when you find you can't make your payments because the government program when it was put in place didn't take into account that your income won't rise rapidly enough in order to absorb the additional payments if, as and when the government program ends.

Those are the kinds of things we have to do. You have to go out and attempt to raise a family by yourself to see what it means to be on mother's allowance, and not just simply to get the odd call at two in the morning. You have to try to take a look at these people and live with them; look them squarely in the eye and hear what they have got to say and stop listening to Darcy McKeough.

If we do those kinds of things—all of us—then maybe this place would be a damn sight more relevant; because at the moment it is not terribly relevant. And that is what is wrong with the Legislature; it is not terribly relevant to the people of the province of Ontario. They don't know what we do, because much of what we do doesn't relate to anything they understand. And when they do come and give us some first-hand experience we are too stubborn to listen.

When the people of Ontario said: "We don't want the additional cost of regional government," we were too stubborn to listen. When the people of the province of Ontario say that the health and safety bill is not adequate, you are too stubborn to listen.

Mr. Rotenberg: When they say they don't want the NDP, we listen.

Mr. Deans: I'm talking about us all. I'm talking about the Legislature. I don't know how often I have to say it to you. You are obviously deaf as well as dumb.

The problem is that unless we can see our way clearly to bringing about a great deal more relevance to this place, then there is no question that the view people have of politicians is a view that they should rightfully hold—that they don't serve the public of the province very well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I participate with a great deal of pride and pleasure in the closing of this Throne Speech debate—if I can call it that. I look at the Minister of Industry and Tourism and—I guess we got here at the same time, back in 1971—

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Yes, but I spend more time here.

Mr. Roy: You spend more time here? I wouldn't be too sure.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am sure.

Mr. Roy: But you make a lot more money than I do.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am worth more.

Mr. Conway: He had a change of heart along the way, Albert.

Mr. Reed: It's a good thing we don't tell you what you are worth.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We couldn't afford it.

An hon. member: If you were paid what you were worth, you would starve.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I am not prosecuting drug cases in Ottawa.

Mr. Roy: I have heard over this period of time a variety of closing comments. I suppose the best ones are usually in the evening after the dinner hour. I don't know—

Mr. Hodgson: That's when you make a better speech, Albert.

Mr. Roy: —if that has to do with the attendance here or with the consumption between the dinner hour and the time of the speech, but some of the better ones have certainly been at that time.

But in any event, coming down from Ottawa today in the bright sunshine I thought, what the heck, it's a good day for making speeches. It's nice out. There's no use being overly negative. One must be positive and have some optimism about the future. It's remarkable what the sun will do to one's disposition, and this is the disposition I have this afternoon.

First of all, as is traditional, I want to say I feel that you are performing your task extremely well and I hope, through the methods of communication that we have available, that thought will be conveyed to the Speaker.

I want to say to him as well that in my years here, since 1971, I have the perception that this Speaker, more than any other that we have had here—and I don't want to detract at all from his predecessors—but I clearly have the evidence I think, and the impression, that he truly understands his role as the servant of the Legislature, of the members and not of the government. As long as we proceed in that fashion I think the members of this Legislature will be given an opportunity to perform their role adequately, which is of course the purpose for which they were elected.

I always found a great difference between the roles performed by the Speaker in the federal House and the Speaker here. I have always felt that some of this Speaker's predecessors were a bit more apprehensive about getting a frown from the Premier. My colleague from Brant, I think, used to tell me that in bygone days it was even worse; a frown from Leslie Frost or George Drew meant instantaneous banging of the gavel with dissolution of the House, or whatever, on the part of the Speaker.

But I do want to take this opportunity to say to the Speaker that I think he is moving in the right direction. We on this side are very grateful for it. We have our moments of disagreement, of course. I think he will understand, because sometimes it is difficult for us in our exuberance to be curtailed by certain rules and regulations.

Mr. Conway: He misses the Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. Roy: But aside from that, we think that his rulings are fair. With a bit more co-operation, at least on this side of the House, from our House leader, I think we'll get on with our questions fine.

While I am commenting on various individuals, it struck me as well, in discussions with some of my colleagues around here, that the Premier (Mr. Davis) has changed a lot, and especially since the minority government of 1975.

It always amazed me that between 1971 and 1975 the Premier, for a man who had been in the House all that long, didn't seem to be comfortable in this place at that point. His speeches, his comments and his interjections in the give and take across the floor of the House were not evidence of one who was at ease in this place or who was familiar with the surroundings.

I must say to him, however, in a friendly and hands-across-the-floor gesture, that since 1975 he seems to be a bit more at home. I don't know whether it's the fact of minority government or what, but certainly with age, as he is getting greyer, his performance keeps improving—and it is noticed on this side.

In fact, the Premier's performance runs contrary to that of most athletes, whose physical fitness seems to deteriorate with age. The Premier seems to be able to get more sentences, and even paragraphs, into the same breath—something he was not able to do in his first years, at least as Premier in this House.

Mr. Nixon: Sometimes he doesn't get a verb in there.

Mr. S. Smith: And he leaves out the punctuation.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Now, teacher.

Mr. Roy: But he gets it all across. That performance has been noticed, as have some of the other performances that are characteristic of this Premier. His cabinet shuffles, for example, are done with a lot of fanfare and make for interesting comment. For instance, I see the Minister of Industry and Tourism here. I don't know if it's through luck or competence—

Mr. Nixon: Mismanagement.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Give me the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Roy: I'll give the minister the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Breithaupt: You're going to choose one, are you?

Mr. Roy: He has managed to put out many fires. I must say in all candour to that minister that accepting that portfolio and taking the place of the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett), I think will be a helpful step even in the area of Canadian unity because of some of that member's comments. In fact, I must say to my colleague from Ottawa South that he should be thankful to us in the opposition for having taken most of the other seats around Ottawa, because if the Premier had any choice out of Ottawa, the member probably wouldn't be in the cabinet any more. So he should be more sympathetic—

Mr. Nixon: You don't think that was a promotion?

Mr. Roy: No, and there will be disappointments, I'm sure, in the family of the member for Ottawa South—

Mr. Conway: He may end up being sheriff yet.

Mr. Nixon: The sheriff of Carleton county.

Mr. Roy: That could be. I don't think his former campaign manager is about to give up that job.

But the disappointment I refer to, when I talk about my colleague from Ottawa South, is that I can recall that his wife went out to meet the constituents in the riding after their wedding; she was quoted in one of the Ottawa papers as saying that she wanted to be married to the Premier in five years.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, oh. Aren't the Davises getting along?

Mr. Kerrio: Did she tell Bill's wife?

Mr. Roy: With the last cabinet shuffle, that may be difficult.

Mr. Hodgson: Maybe Trudeau's looking at her.

Mr. Breithaupt: Does it matter who the Premier might be?

Mr. Nixon: She may have to be a Liberal.

Mr. S. Smith: What if Bette's Premier by then?

Mr. Roy: I want to say that, apart from this cabinet change, which I certainly welcome, it is interesting to note some of the bodies that have been shifting around. As you see different ministers changing positions—they're the same faces but in different portfolios—it brings to mind a story told by my colleague from Niagara Falls. He says the cabinet shuffle reminds him of the army general who faced all his men after a long and arduous campaign. He looked at them and he said, "Things have been tough, men, but I have some good news for you. There's going to be a change of underwear. Company A, you change with Company B, B with C, and so on." There's some similarity there—

Mr. Nixon: Very similar in more ways than one.

Mr. Roy: —with the cabinet changes that we've noticed.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: You guys have changed a little dirty laundry over there too, I noticed.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, they just keep washing it.

Mr. Nixon: We wash all our laundry in public, you know that.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm afraid Hansard will lose some of your timing, Albert.

[4:30]

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, we on this side, my colleagues and I, feel that one of the most interesting and encouraging prospects for us in Ontario has been what has happened to our left.

This is unbelievable but I am sure the Minister of Industry and Tourism will fully understand.

I must comment a bit and congratulate the new leader of the third party—I shouldn't miss the occasion for saying that; I've never used that word before, the third party—at any rate, I wish him well.

I know him well. We were elected here at the same time—in 1971. We have neighbouring ridings. We know each other very well. We don't associate that often but we know each other extremely well.

Mr. Reid: No intimate dinners.

Mr. Roy: When the leadership race started, I said publicly and privately and on every occasion I had that I was a strong supporter of Michael Cassidy for the leadership; and I said that I would even be quite prepared to contribute to his campaign. I didn't want to take it further than that, because I felt it may have had counter effects, so I kept relatively quiet. But as I watched the leadership campaign unfold and saw the results, well I have to tell you that it was more than I could have hoped for; more, I think, than most of us could have hoped for. This is really too good to be true. It's beyond our wildest expectations; we sit here and we say it could not have happened; the inevitable did happen; and, I am sure, to the great concern of that party.

Mr. Conway: They're now called the "new demolition party."

Mr. Roy: You recall the support that he had originally from the caucus. The member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) was originally one of the supporters, and of course I think he was banking on a long shot to try to get closer to the leader. His horse came in, and he has moved off now over there; to our pleasure and great satisfaction actually, because we felt he was awfully loud next to us.

And then, of course, I think he had the support of the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor).

Mr. S. Smith: That's because he's quitting.

Mr. Roy: I suppose the old philosopher was entitled to one last moment of folly before he retired and went on to his books, his Thomas Aquinas.

So there was his support.

Mr. Bradley: There is a third one.

Mr. Roy: Was there a third one?

Mr. Bradley: Oh, there was.

Mr. Roy: Who would that be, pray tell? Who would that be?

Mr. Nixon: The member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra).

Mr. Roy: Well I suspect that he wanted to stay close to the member for Lakeshore because of his legal experience. I don't know.

Mr. Reid: The question was—why would the member for Lakeshore want to stay close to Mr. Ziembra?

Mr. Roy: I won't comment any further. I don't want to be nasty. But one thing that strikes me—and I find it most encouraging—is that now they say the caucus is behind him; he's got full support. All I can think of is that if that caucus gives the same support to Cassidy in his quest to become Premier of the province as they gave to Deans to become leader of the party, we have nothing to worry about.

Mr. Nixon: Not much room for Ian.

Mr. Conway: Why do you think your colleague the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) didn't support him?

Mr. Roy: Well I don't know, especially as he got her to run. But I don't want to get into petty details with this. All I can say is that it was beyond my expectations. I am pleased, and I think that when the people of the province look for an alternative there won't be any problem.

Cassidy—the leader of the NDP—has not in fact disappointed us. His performance is true to form. His first statement, in fact, as leader of the party, was that the Premier was nuts.

Mr. Nixon: Good start.

Mr. Roy: Well, Billy Davis is a lot of things, but nuts he's not.

And then his latest pronouncement; my God, that's been something; when he attacked Hydro as being strikebreakers. That's something that has an awful lot of depth, and it's something that is becoming of a future Premier of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon. Heaven help us.

Mr. Roy: I just wonder where it is going to lead us. What's going to come next? Is he going to tell us that by using the phone and not writing letters, we will hurt the postal workers? Maybe this is what is next. Who knows? I feel somewhat vulnerable myself. I'm one who likes to keep fit and active and that sort of thing. By so doing, am I going to be hurting the hospital workers?

What's next? He's probably going to tell us—I shouldn't say this—but he may go as far as saying that mothers who are nursing their babies are hurting the dairy industry. I don't know, it may go that far.

Mr. Nixon: We dairy farmers provide some quality stuff actually.

Mr. Roy: Is it any wonder, with the support which he originally had, that with this type of pronouncement the former leader, the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), wants to head for the back benches. One can't blame him for that.

They have brought forward a no-confidence motion. I want to say, apart from the posturing and all that's involved in making it easy for us to vote against it, there is some strategic significance in our vote because it is important that we allow the province to get to know the new leader of that party as we know him here and as we know him in Ottawa. The public of the province should not be given an opportunity to vote without knowing who this individual is. That makes it easier for us not to have an election at this time. We'll give him a year or so to let the people of the province get to know him. Then we'll take him up on it if he wants to bring forward some no-confidence motion.

Mr. Davidson: We'll hold you to that.

Mr. Roy: We wouldn't want to give him too long.

Mr. Nixon: He might get out if we gave him two years.

Mr. Roy: Given the proper circumstance, we would oblige.

I want to say that fact is encouraging to us, but the most encouraging aspect is the performance given in this House since the election in 1977 by our leader. They should be concerned across the way because it is going to become exceedingly obvious to this province and the people of Ontario, when the old scene comes around for this tired old government which again has failed to give leadership in the Throne Speech, when people are looking for a responsible alternative, the responsible alternative will be obvious this time. It will be right here on this side of the House.

Is the Minister of Labour saying something?

Hon. B. Stephenson: The member was saying nasty things about his former leader and I don't think he should.

Mr. Roy: Our former leader? No, not at all.

Mr. Conway: Did the Minister of Labour have some kind of informal political courtship here with the Liberals?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No.

Mr. Roy: I watched some of her interchanges with the member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) earlier and I think she is annoyed about something today. I suspect that it is because Manthorpe—did you read the Saturday Star?—said she was elected in 1971. Did she read that?

Mr. Nixon: And that you're four years older.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I am not. No, I didn't see it.

Mr. Roy: I hope she will get up and make a statement in the House and correct it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I shall be pleased to correct him.

Mr. Roy: He was saying something about the fact that the minister looked tired and weary; didn't have near the spunk and was edgy. He said that about her. Maybe she should bring her couch.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I don't have one. Only the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) has one. I just go around and see people.

Mr. Roy: No, he's leading the province. If the minister brings her own couch, she will get free service here.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, thanks. I don't need it.

Mr. Roy: All we need is her OHIP number.

Mr. Sweeney: We provide the advice, but not the couch.

Mr. Roy: There is another significant aspect. Apart from the performance of our leader, there is the performance, the hard work and dedication given by my colleagues. I want to say since 1971 this reformer-line party has been attacked repeatedly as being fractious, as being lazy, as not working and all sorts of things.

Mr. Nixon: Poor attendance, et cetera.

Mr. Roy: I won't talk about some of the more recent trips or anything of this nature. I don't want to get into that. When things are working well, I suppose the best evidence of how effective this caucus is under the leadership of Stuart Smith is the fact that the press aren't talking about it any more. The press used to love to write stories about how they were fighting and how they weren't working and things of that nature. But with the quality of the members that we have now, which was proven in the 1977 election, these people have the confidence of their constituents in all of their ridings. With the effort that they're putting here, we have a base, certainly, to build on. That's not to say we don't miss some of our colleagues—the Singers, Bullbrooks, Spences; I'll leave it at that.

The people who have come into this House in 1975 and in 1977 have made a tremendous contribution and will continue to make a tremendous contribution. The NDP often likes to pontificate about how they're the opposition, but in many, many instances the responsible opposition rests right here.

I'd like to deal briefly with—

Mr. Nixon: The issues.

Mr. Roy: God help us, my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said the issues. I don't want to talk about issues now.

This is something a bit parochial: a school problem in Ottawa. I thought you would be interested to know of some recent headlines in the papers. In fact, Manthorpe—was it Manthorpe who talked about the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) as Mr. Clean?

Mr. Conway: The man from Glad.

Mr. Roy: Yes, I'm sorry, the man from Glad.

We've had a traditional problem in Ottawa, as many large urban centres have had, where the enrolment is decreasing in Ottawa proper and at the same time it's increasing in Carleton, in the outside riding. We have a situation where the Ministry of Education says, "No, we won't give you any money to build schools. Carleton and Ottawa must get together and you must share school space and so on."

But it's not been exactly that easy. For the last five or seven years, we have not been able to reach an agreement. The parents in Carleton, in many instances, are in a situation where their children are going to school in Ottawa and yet they have no say to the trustees as to what happens to their children in school. Anyway, they've finally thrown up their hands and said to the Minister of Education, "Come on over. We need some help. We want you to solve this problem."

He did come over, and I want to read to you some of the headlines that were in the Ottawa papers: "Wells gives school but little else to the boards." That was on the front page. Then it states: "Wells angers, frustrates, disgusts the board trustees." It goes on to say: "Parents barred from meeting"; and "Wells' suggestion irks school officials." He left then.

The editorial in the Ottawa Citizen is great when it talked about this. It stated: "He came, he saw, he collapsed."

Mr. Reid: Which minister was that?

Mr. Roy: The Minister of Education. "Ontario Education Minister Thomas Wells came to Ottawa-Carleton this week. He came, he saw, he collapsed."

"The minister failed miserably in his mission to resolve the tenacious problem of housing of school populations within the respective jurisdictions of Ottawa and Carleton boards of education."

What he said, in effect, was "resolve it yourself." That's basically it. He was going to come down and solve this long-standing problem. He came down and I was at the meeting. He sat there and put his foot up on the desk—the whole bit—and said: "Okay, how do we solve it? What are you going to tell me as to how to solve this problem?" You've got the four boards there who have not been able to reach agreements for five to seven years, and the minister is not prepared to accept his responsibility under the guise that he believes in local autonomy.

When I hear that from this government, which has so trampled on local autonomy for so many years—when there's a serious problem in Ottawa-Carleton and they're not prepared to face it, they talk about local autonomy—I want to put on the record that I think that sort of performance is not conducive to the type of leadership and the type of government that the people of Ontario expect.

[4:45]

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, and most board trustees—and as one of the parents who got up said to him: "Why don't you show a bit of gut?"—that's what is needed in this province. In fact, he was given suggestions by the Mayo report as to how he might be able to resolve these problems. One of the suggestions put at that time was about having a homogeneous French language system in Ottawa-Carleton. He could then look at establishing one board for the English separate schools and one board for the English public schools as well, or it could have two boards, as Mayo suggested.

But the minister is not prepared to grapple with and solve that particular problem. In the meantime it's the taxpayers and the parents of Ottawa who are suffering.

I think the member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) got up the other day to laud his performance in Ottawa-Carleton. I want to put on the record that that type of leadership or that type of abdication of leadership is not what is needed in this province at this time. What in fact we do need is somebody who is going to make a decision, especially when you are dealing with the taxpayers of this province.

Of course, that whole performance was indicative of what we have seen in the Throne Speech: a lot of pious statements on every conceivable topic. Some of my colleagues here have dealt at length with some of these topics and I just want to deal with a couple of topics I found interesting, because I certainly can't cover all of them at this time.

I wondered what one of these statements was doing in there. The statement about the family and about the children in this province. There was mention made at that time that they are working in the direction of the emphasis of the family unit in Bill 59, which hopefully will be passed shortly in this House. Typical of this government was the fact that here we have these pious statements and yet if you look at Bill 59 there is a contradiction in the bill of these statements in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Conway: The member for Oriole (Mr. Williams) winced.

Mr. Roy: It seems to me—and that member will understand this—that when you are talking about enhancing the family unit the way you do it is by having a type of partnership and equality within marriage. Marriage is really the way. When I talk about a fair and equitable partnership within marriage, that is the most effective environment in which a family can prosper. But we have more than this in Bill 59 and it seems to run contrary to the Throne Speech.

In Bill 59 they are talking about giving status to another type of relationship which I am sure is not the most conducive to maintaining the family unit. That's the common law relationship.

I have said this in committee and I have said this in the House before, but I personally have concern about this, especially when people in the common law relationships don't want any legal status or obligation or whatever. Of course, that's not affecting the children because the question of children is already dealt with under our present law, but it seems to me contradictory that the government talks in such fashion about the family unit and yet it is giving status under Bill 59 to the common law relationship and in fact it is allowing them to have contracts. That concerns me and I find that somewhat contradictory.

Mr. Conway: Typical Tory double-talk.

Mr. Roy: But it seems to me that when Ontario is facing an uncertain future—and I am sure some of my colleagues have seen some of the programs on TV Ontario about Ontario's economic future; it has been on in French and English and we have had much discussion about it—but there's no doubt that Ontario faces an uncertain future in the area of manufacturing, which has always been our base, in the area of resource industry, in the area of farming, in the area of jobs for our young people—and where is the response? As my leader said, where is the vision? Where is the leadership in this Throne Speech?

We can't rely on the government saying, "Although we have our problems new manufacturing concerns will be set up here and there." Unfortunately that is not the case. Unfortunately what has been happening is that much of the manufacturing sector has not been locating here but has been locating in the US, because of the environment that's been created by this government. The finding of new mines or new mineral resources is not something that is automatically open to us as well. A lot of these companies are going into other areas to do their exploration and so on. In the field of competition we have problems as well.

In other words, we have always had the luxury in this province and in this country of saying that if we have a problem, we'll just have to sell more oil, more wheat, more uranium, more this or more that. This is not a luxury that more competitive nations, like the United States, Japan, Taiwan, Germany and others, have had; so they have put their emphasis on people. Surely this is the greatest resource that Ontario has.

Mr. Wildman: You'd better talk to your friends in Ottawa.

Mr. Roy: We've drawn from all over the world. Our greatest resource, in fact, is people. But to motivate people we need leadership and vision, and we're not getting it in this Throne Speech.

Mr. Wildman: Tell that to Trudeau.

Mr. Roy: It seems to me the Throne Speech is most lacking in reference to the unity of this country itself. At a time when the separatist government has been in power since 1976, at a time when there is great dissatisfaction in the west—I was just reading in today's Globe and Mail about Prince Peter, as they call him out there in Alberta, and what he may want or what sorts of conditions or changes or transfers of power he would like to see in Alberta—at a time when even the eastern provinces feel they're not getting a fair share out of Confederation, and especially at a time when Ontario has so much to lose out of all this, again there is the lack of leadership.

I'm not the only one saying this. For instance, in today's Star there is talk of this: "Ontario may be losing Constitution game," reads a headline. No less an authority than a former Premier of this province is quoted in this article as saying he "won't say what constitutional changes he plans to recommend, but even he agrees that Ontario's ability to shape policies in Ottawa probably will be cut back.

"I wouldn't be at all surprised if Ontario lost some of its pre-eminent position. It's an historical development and it doesn't much matter whether Ontario is willing to lose power or not. It's what's going to happen."

These are some of the challenges facing us in the future. This is John Robarts, a former Premier of the province, who is talking in this fashion. It's not some wild-eyed radical.

Where is the leadership, especially in the area of our relationship with the province of Quebec and the leadership that could be given there? I've said in this House before, and I'll repeat it again, that I feel terrible about the lack of English leadership that is given in this debate in this country.

I don't limit my comments to what happens in this province. At the federal level there is a lack of leadership. I have said to my colleagues up there, "Where is the leadership?" I get told that the English-speaking cabinet ministers do make speeches occasionally but they're not reported. I'm not so sure. But there is a vacuum there; and there is a tremendous opportunity for the Premier of the leading province to fill that vacuum and to give leadership in that area.

There is the perception—and you can just feel it in this province—that this squabble is between Trudeau and Levesque. The unity of the country itself is more important than two individuals, as capable as these two are, and the debate about the future of our country shouldn't be limited to two personalities. It seems to me that the Premier of this province is missing an opportunity to give leadership in this area.

I want to clear up certain wrong assumptions which people make about this province. A lot of people say—and it has been the approach traditionally taken by this government—that time will solve many of their problems; they hope that, with time, things will work themselves out. I say to those people that is an option or a luxury that is not open on this occasion, if for nothing else than that the majority of Quebecers—and I'm not talking about the separatists; I'm talking about the majority of the people from Quebec—are not satisfied with the status quo. The separatists have given another option; they want to separate completely. But the fact is that the majority are not satisfied with the status quo. The people in the west are not satisfied with the status quo. And this is not a problem that is going to go away with time.

Some people feel if the separatists are beaten, if the referendum is defeated, there will be no further problems. They feel we will just go back and it will be the ball game as usual, the same old way of operating. That again is a fallacy. If some people look at the options offered by some of those running for the leadership of the Quebec Liberal Party, which is the alternative in the province of Quebec, they are likely to get an awful surprise because these candidates are not satisfied with the status quo either. Even though the referendum were defeated in Quebec, there would still be pressures from the west about changing some of the power and about changing some of the rules of the game that presently exist here.

It seems to me that the response of Ontario has been totally inadequate. It has been inadequate because the Premier—and I see him coming in now—seems to put a certain emphasis on things. He has been down to the Quebec Carnival on two occasions. I'll read a little clip from a paper of February 2, 1978, where it said: "Ontario Premier William Davis plans a return visit to the Quebec City Carnival. Davis, a guest of honour last year, said he would make a goodwill visit to Quebec City on February 10 and 11. The Premier promised last year Ontario would have a float in this year's parade for the first time. He said: 'I thought at the time that a float from Ontario would be one way of demonstrating the affection the people of Ontario have for their neighbours in Quebec.'"

I think that is great too. We should go to the Quebec Carnival and we should have a float. But surely our response must have more depth. It has to be more meaningful than that.

What has concerned me is the response or the strategy of late on the part of the Premier and certain cabinet ministers. I am being cautious here because I don't really understand what is going on. All I know is that there has been a serious attack on the bilingualism policies of the federal government.

I have his speech to the Canadian Club here. I won't refer to it because of the time constraint. But on so many occasions he refers to the bilingualism policy of the federal government. I will only say, because this policy has been referred to by other cabinet ministers here, that they should read Webster's column in the Globe and Mail this morning so that this whole question be not taken out of perspective. I agree that in some of its policies the federal government has made mistakes and that it has been divisive on some occasions. But to write it off and say it has been a divisive program and that it hasn't accomplished anything is distorting the facts.

What has concerned me is the Premier's approach towards the francophones in this province. I have here his letter of December 15, 1977 to the Franco-Ontarian Association. I apologize that I only have the French copy of this document. I'll just read an extract here and I'll translate afterwards. It says: "Le gouvernement de l'Ontario n'a cependant pas l'intention à ce moment de prendre la moindre mesure visant à faire du français une langue officielle dans la province."

Basically, what he is saying is that the government of Ontario has no intention of taking the slightest step in making French an official language in this province. That in itself is somewhat misleading because in the Throne Speech that we have just had there is a step forward. We're talking about changing the Judicature Act, and that is a step that we applaud and think is in the right direction.

Mr. Nixon: It's certainly official.

[5:00]

Mr. Roy: That is something. The minute the government has a law it is giving some status. I am just trying to understand the strategy. Why did the Premier's response have to be so categorical and in a sense brutal? The reason I say this is that there is some complaint that although we have had progress in this province—we have had tremendous progress—often people don't know about the progress; they don't talk about it. Surely when he takes an approach like this, this is what makes the headlines. This is what makes the headlines in the province of Quebec. This type of approach is what makes the separatists in the province of Quebec pleased indeed, because their whole strategy is to say that there is no hope left for negotiation.

Some people in this province say, and I can understand this, "Why should we be moving one way when Quebec is in fact moving the other way?" I say, "Careful! It's the separatists who are moving the other way, not the majority of the people of the province of Quebec." The separatist strategy, and my leader has talked about this before, is one of frustration and annoyance. If they can annoy and frustrate the anglophone majority in the rest of the country so that they will throw up their hands and say, "Well, hell, let them go," that's what they would like. It is important that we keep our cool and that we not let the radicals, be it on the one side or the other, win the day, that they not be perceived as being in fact the majority.

The reason I am concerned about this situation is that a lot of the people who could be strong allies in the cause of Canadian unity are starting to act in sort of a funny way. I just mention, for instance, that last week a francophone association from outside Quebec made representation to the Quebec government. Some of the things they said were about the separatists in Quebec, or the government in Quebec—the PQ government, a separatist government—which was to them a natural ally. One starts saying, "Well look, careful here." But there is a perception on their part that they have only been able to accomplish or make strides for their rights in other areas of Canada when the Quebec government or when the separatists started shaking the bushes a little bit. That's what they perceive as a natural ally.

It's a policy or it's a brief—I will read some of the comments here. They are frustrated and there's a feeling of desperation for many of these minorities across the country. That's why they are taking this approach. They talk about the fact that they want some money, they want some help from the government in Quebec. They talk about the fact that they don't want to play what they call the unity game.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker—and Norm Webster in the Globe and Mail commented about his concerns about this—that as Webster said, it's a self-defeating policy. Obviously for the francophone minority outside of the province of Quebec, their hope lies not with the separatists. As Webster said, once they separate, the only thing protecting them would be the game laws. It's not quite that way. That is what I want to make clear.

They are going on the basis—and Levesque has not been afraid to play that game—that there would still be a minority of anglophones in the province of Quebec. Levesque has talked about reciprocal agreements and things of this nature. So they are working on the basis that even though they separate, because Levesque can bargain with the anglophone minority in the province of Quebec, the minority outside of the province of Quebec will have better bargaining power. I wouldn't want to get into that game.

I want to say publicly that I disagree with that approach. When they say that the federation of francophones has no intention of playing the game of Canadian unity, I say I disagree with that. And I'll continue playing the game of Canadian unity if that is what they want to call it. But it gives you some idea, Mr. Speaker, that these people who should be natural allies are expressing some desperation and in fact some frustration.

It brings us to the suggestion that has been made by my leader as to how we can resolve this problem. I say to the Premier, we want to co-operate in this. Why doesn't he accept the suggestion made by my leader about having a select committee of all members of the Legislature to look at this problem? Why doesn't he accept our suggestion made in good faith, because I think the minorities of this province will not benefit by some shouting match—the leader of the NDP calling the Premier nuts and then some people saying the government has changed its policies—that's not going to advance anything. Surely this is something that is more important than policy. And surely the resources, the good will that exists in this Legislature, could be channelled into that select committee that's been talked about by my colleague.

I mention, for instance, the editorial which appeared on March 1 in the Globe and Mail, saying how "its mandate should be to review such programs as now exist, assemble the information gathered in a clear statement of services now available in French, decide what further services should be provided and propose a timetable for getting them in motion." Surely that is reasonable. Surely we have sufficient goodwill, sufficient talent and sufficient resources here to have a common front for this. And I think this is something the Premier should give strong consideration to.

For instance, my leader has asked me to take on responsibility for federal-provincial relations and I have accepted with enthusiasm and willingness, because I see, for instance, as I understand it, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development has that role to play. I have here a bulletin from the Franco-Ontarian Council which states that the member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle), the minister in charge of bilingualism—I'm surprised they are using that word, "bilingualism," knowing the shots that have been taken recently by the government on this—

Mr. Conway: The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) wrote it.

Mr. Roy: —discussed his mandate and that of the cabinet committee on Confederation, for which he is responsible. And so I have accepted willingly and with enthusiasm the challenge offered by my leader in the field of federal-provincial relations. And I want to say that it is going to make it a lot easier if we clean up our act here, if we take a cohesive approach, for people like myself to go into the province of Quebec and prove to them that I, as a francophone, can benefit. There's a certain amount of pride in being a member here, in having the rights and the privileges of my colleagues. I'm living evidence that Levesque is not absolutely right in what he's talking about. And we should say that to Quebecers.

It seems to me that the message that can be taken to the majority in the province of Quebec is simply this: "We in Ontario are prepared to understand the threat to your language and culture—we understand that—or the lack of economic opportunities that have existed in the past; we understand that. But we in Ontario are in fact prepared to fight for that."

Having said that, it seems to me that separation at that point becomes a negative force. I think that the people of Quebec realize more and more that separation, or that a separate Quebec, will not be a Camelot, that separation will not automatically make everything right in that province. We can show them that as an equal partner with the rest of Canada that it is to their advantage, that they need a stronger partner and a buffer against the larger anglophone mass existing here in North America.

We can say to them that once they have certain guarantees, why should they not benefit from all the economic aspects of this great country, whether you're talking about the oil and gas in Alberta or you're talking about the wheat out in the prairies or the ore or the minerals in BC and Ontario and so on? Certainly these are some of the things that we can talk about.

A final thing I would say to them—and I would say it very simply to my confreres in the province of Quebec—is simply this: “Why would you abandon us like France abandoned you after the Plains of Abraham?” Which in fact did happen. It was Voltaire who after the Plains of Abraham said simply, “Well, why should we fight for a few acres of snow?” They abandoned their colony of 50,000 or 60,000 people and they’re prepared to do the same to us.

I think it’s important that they know how we feel. I think the majority can be made to understand once they know that goodwill exists in this sister province here in Ontario. That is the type of message and the new role that some of us would like to take to the province of Quebec. We want to be active participants in this. I’m sure that each of us has a message to take to his constituency in this area.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is—

Mr. Eakins: Where are the troops?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh listen, they’re busy.

Mr. Conway: You don’t mean they have better things to do?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As a matter of fact, in terms of ultimate government productivity, the answer to that probably is yes.

However, it is a privilege to rise and speak in support of the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, and also to express once again my congratulations to you for the very objective manner in which you handle the affairs of this House.

Both the leaders of the opposition parties spoke rather directly and forthrightly against much of the program contained in that excellent speech, but in fairness also associated themselves with certain initiatives which the government has put forward. It is their responsibility, under our system as we know it, to point out what they consider to be poor judgement, miscalculation on occasion, weakness or, in few instances, failure. I say with neither rancour nor sarcasm that they both served the system well with their remarks on that particular occasion. I have reviewed their comments with some care. It wasn’t all easy reading. They were in fact good critical speeches which the government will study and assess.

First, I must admit that in looking over Hansard, I was moved by the metaphorical and textual citations that bolstered some of the remarks of both my colleagues opposite. The Leader of the Opposition said in the midst of a careful but, I think it is fair to state, an opinionated assessment of Ontario’s economic prospects, and I quote, “No wind blows in favour of a ship that has no destination.” I hope I am quoting him accurately. Some who are more nautically capable than I, there would be some, would probably observe for the benefit of the Leader of the Opposition in the light of some of his party’s changing positions that the quotation should be, “No wind blows in favour of a ship that tries to steer in two directions at the same time.”

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are they down to two now? That’s an improvement.

Mr. Laughren: It’s called the doldrums.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But being sometimes less than a nautical expert and wishing sincerely to be less than overtly partisan today, I wouldn’t say that sort of thing, nor would I want to say it.

Mr. Wildman: But are you wont to say it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The leader of the third party, who has just arrived, moved to cite John Stuart Mill in his rendition on profit. I want to ask what John Stuart Mill ever did to him to deserve being included in such an account, but that would be a very unfair question to ask.

I would say to the new leader of the New Democratic Party that Mill wrote his great essay on liberty in 1859. That is right in the middle of the 19th century and to me that is an appropriate source indeed for a 1978 economic critique by the leader of that particular party.

Mr. Reid: Well, he’s dealing with a 19th century government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I tell you, Mr. Speaker, as a 19th century government we don’t believe in cutting our neighbours off from food, electricity or coal.

(Applause.)

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Those people opposite want to help the Third World countries but when their next door neighbour is in trouble they want to cut him off. I will never understand that.

Mr. Renwick: What about the miners in the coal mines?

Mr. Laughren: While you cut off the residents of Ontario.

Mr. Conway: The question is are you really nuts?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that’s a question for which only history will provide the answer. I have my own point of view on that but I really am not prepared to share it with the rest of the members.

Mr. Nixon: Don’t go out on a limb.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are some days in here when I really think perhaps I am. I am not sure.

I was prepared to admit though, after reading that particular quotation and after some extensive coaxing, that the previous leader of the New Democratic Party had brought that organization beyond the tired and doctrinaire perceptives of the thirties. I think he did. I now realize—and I want to warn all of us, including members of that particular party—that we are dealing with an absolute purist who takes comfort in the analysis of bygone times and bygone ideas. He is, and I say this with both awe and respect, developing a new slot for the political spectrum of the left—a slot for pre-history.

Mr. Roy: You are going to hurt Jim Laxer's feelings if you talk like that.

Mr. Conway: Have you got anything to say about Stanley Knowles?

[5:15]

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did listen to both of those who summed up the positions of their parties in this historic debate. Would the new leader please convey to the member who wound up for his party that I can assume and understand criticism of myself—I am prepared to accept it. I am prepared to accept criticism of my cabinet colleagues, that's part of our system. But when he starts to criticize the Toronto Argonauts he's gone a shade too far, and I hope the leader will convey that message to him.

I sense something of a total lack of objectivity on his part. He may be concerned that at long last the Argonauts will do the Hamilton Tiger Cats in because of the signing as they did of—

Mr. Reid: I'll make you a wager on that one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: A dollar?—you're on—of this very able football player.

Mr. Handleman: One halfback does not a season make.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have a horrible feeling that one of my very distinguished former colleagues in cabinet, now a loyal member of caucus, is getting upset about what I am saying. But I would say to the member for Carleton, the Rough Riders had better look out too.

However, I really didn't come here to comment on that important part of his observations. He did get a little bit personal as it related to a couple of my cabinet colleagues and I don't really need to leap to the defence of either of them. The members will be hearing from one tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock and all of us are eagerly awaiting that particular event. As it relates to the Minister of Labour one might say to the member, who really should know better, that we have one of the great ministers of labour in the history of this province in our present ministry.

Mr. Grande: The kiss of death.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And the member's leader should tell him this for me, that in terms of organized labour, they have somebody who understands, somebody they can talk to, and if they're right, she will listen. They are sometimes not always right and so there will sometimes be differences of opinion. But I have to tell the House that I thought his attack on the Minister of Labour was totally unjustified and unwarranted, and that's all I will say on this subject.

Mr. McClellan: It was long overdue.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I listened with some interest to the distinguished member for Ottawa East—have I got the right geographic location—

Mr. Roy: You've got to be careful now.

Mr. S. Smith: The only distinguished member from Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say that is questionable.

I listened to him—I understand he doesn't think we should have had a float in the Carnival parade in Quebec City. I have to tell him I was there and I enjoyed it. It was really not all work, although in some respects it was fairly arduous if I can describe it in that fashion. I can tell him that for the people who were there—and I saw the reaction from a number of them when the Ontario float for the first time was in that parade—that it did have some significance. I'm not going to suggest it is going to solve a problem.

I would say to our friend who was quoting extensively from what I thought was a somewhat questionable column this morning that there are some misunderstandings. The member quoted from a letter that I wrote to AFCO in reply to a letter from them that contained a number of specific requests. One of those requests—so there is no misunderstanding on anyone's part and so we won't get into any semantic terminology—was for the declaration of this province to have French as an official language. That is a very real distinction from what I have been saying and what I now understand the member's leader shares with me—and I read that word "share" several times in his contribution in the Throne Speech debate. I would say it's great for columnists to write some of these things, but the members opposite might say something to people to whom they're much closer than we are—

Mr. Conway: I'm not so sure about that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: When federal ministers come into this province, and when they start attacking as they have, I would say, for totally partisan interests—

Some hon. members: Oh, no.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Absolutely.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure they were. If the members opposite think Marc Lalonde and Roberts et cetera, and now more recently Mr. Danson, are helping this debate and this discussion, they're wrong. And it's quite obvious from their own leader's observations—

Mr. Bradley: And the Minister of the Environment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that he disagrees with that which they were saying, and it's time the members got up and said as much. Tell these fellows from Ottawa, who are trying to really focus the attention on issues other than the economy where they know they're highly vulnerable. They know they're highly vulnerable and they'll sense it when the Prime Minister issues an election writ.

Mr. Roy: What about yourself?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps some form of communication should be made to those cabinet ministers who make those observations from time to time—

Mr. S. Smith: Look, I've made a constructive offer, and I'm waiting for an answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would just suggest that that is the place. I have rarely talked about the federal government's program in bilingualism. Perhaps I have two or three times in the past year.

Mr. Conway: Sidney ran a campaign on it in 1975.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I referred to it in the Canadian Club speech.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Renfrew North doesn't have to react to everything that's said.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I identified our position on official language which I did in my letter to ACFO. But what has been neglected by some of the media, less so now in the province of Quebec than was the case before because of the report of the Council of Ministers, was the positive things, not under any constitutional obligation, not because of any desire in terms of the law, but because the people of this province were in support of government programs to assist those citizens of this province who are francophone by birth or by whatever reason. I've explained this to the Premier of Quebec. I told the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Levesque, "We will not sign a multilateral agreement in terms of educational rights because there are some Franco-Ontarians who do not want their future educational rights in a position where they are part of an agreement with a government whose political objective is to separate from the rest of Canada."

Mr. Roy: I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's great to say these things, but I just wish those who comment on this issue and who write about this issue would really tell the whole story when they do so because no government—and I don't say that I can, in any way, help solve this problem, but I try and I do my best—but no government has been more committed—

Mr. Roy: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —no Premier has been more committed in terms of endeavouring to help resolve this problem in a way that is not going to make it further complicated than it presently is. The members opposite can disagree with some of it, although I notice that their leader has really come out in support of it, which I found encouraging.

Mr. S. Smith: Will you accept my suggestion to de-politicize it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, Mr. Speaker, I'm digressing and I'm to finish by 5:45. I'm digressing, because I intended to stick pretty much to what I wanted to say today. I hope both members opposite and my own colleagues will excuse a departure from the partisan ritual that usually dominates the tenor of Throne Speech debates in our House and in our system of government. I enjoy it as much as anyone. I guess it's, for me, the most stimulating time in the House. But today I would like to ask for the indulgence of all members in pursuing a broader concern about the shape and scope of public attitudes and anxieties in the times that we are facing together.

Some of us have been in this Legislature—I look across the House—for longer periods of time than others. We have served opposite one another on committees here in the House and we have been side by side in caucus and in the inner councils of party and government. I'm sure there are times when each and every one of us, either when we are reflecting privately or reviewing events with our families and friends, as we tend to on occasion, wonder about the nature of what we are doing, its ultimate purpose, its value and the reason that underlies it all.

Mr. Nixon: It comes with a certain age.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And you're there before I am, I've got to tell you.

Mr. Nixon: That's why I know about it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are all aware, Mr. Speaker, of the time and effort it takes to get elected or even to gain re-election in today's Ontario. We know that it is not easy to support one's fellow caucus members all the time, or to serve one's party faithfully all the time and of course, about all, to serve the people to the best of our ability. The pressures are great on all of us in this House and the risks are always high. The satisfactions, despite what some may think, often seem to be relatively few and far between. Yet we return here day after day—most of us—to battle ideas that we oppose.

Mr. Roy: It's not on camera. They don't know who you are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We advance those things that we care about and we seek the best way of both governing and serving the people of this province.

Each member probably does as I do and wonders about history and whether it will notice or care about our contribution. Sometimes we wonder about the people we serve, the parties we serve and the causes we champion. We wonder as well whether our effort and commitment as members is ever fully understood. During what I think are difficult economic and political times, the kinds of times we are currently facing as Canadians, I am sure that every thoughtful member of this House speaks inwardly about how well, in fact, he or she is serving and how effectively we are helping to shape solutions rather than to deepen problems.

On many issues, friends—and even those who are not so friendly—have called me an incorrigible optimist. That criticism is not totally out of place. I confess to that. In many respects, I cannot help myself.

Mr. Wildman: That's true.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Optimism is a part of why I am in politics, and I would submit that it is a large part of why most in this House are in politics—at least I would hope that would be the case—and yet we are often very hard-pressed to maintain that optimism. International currency fluctuations, massive transfers of wealth to Arab and other oil producers, North American economies that are out of synch with changing developments and trends—these factors combine with an older population and reduced economic output to create greater economic difficulties, to create real economic challenges in a period when governments and those who serve within them are not always able to accomplish as much as they would like.

Mr. S. Smith: What is this leading up to?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would submit that the kind of structural economic problems we face today defy either ideology or management theory. To suggest otherwise would be to expose naivete and simple-mindedness which I would hope most in this House would find embarrassing.

Mr. S. Smith: Let us have a try.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We have more concern for the province than that, Stuart.

Mr. Turner: Convince the people first.

Mr. S. Smith: Let us have a try.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition didn't think he would be better, he shouldn't be in that position. I am one of those who happens to believe that he couldn't, but I would be disappointed if he didn't.

Mr. Ruston: Arrogant as ever.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nevertheless, politicians of all persuasions are faced by many—whether they be in the bureaucracy, in the media, in the academic world or wherever—who argue for greater and more massive government intervention. These arguments are sincere. They are well-meaning and stem, I am sure, from a view of government which is progressive and humane. I believe nevertheless that they are quite overstated.

Throughout this whole continent, from the coal fields of Kentucky—which concern my friend—and West Virginia to the oil fields of Alberta, from the farms in the great region of Peel—and there still are a few—

Mr. Martel: Under asphalt.

Mr. Wildman: Not many.

Mr. Nixon: Are you going to set this to music?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —to the high-rises of our urban cities, we are facing some unalterable economic realities—realities to which government must adjust while providing basic guarantees and basic underpinnings on which people can depend.

Mr. Nixon: Amen.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Real leadership will emerge from the sensitivity that governments exhibit to the new realities and their results. Government, after all, is composed—I hope I am not criticized for this—of quite ordinary people who group together—

Mr. Makarchuk: This sounds like a swan song, Bill. Are you retiring?

An hon. member: It sounds like an obituary.

Mr. S. Smith: Be a little more modest.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I know the Leader of the Opposition doesn't consider himself as ordinary. I have no hesitation in confessing that I am.

An hon. member: Ordinarily arrogant.

Mr. Martel: Just plain Bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In fact, on a certain television program I was described as being— [5:30]

Mr. Kerrio: Just plain Bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right, that's me.

Mr. S. Smith: Since you gave up that cigar something has happened to you.

Mr. Reid: He's a working man.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I find that I consume less pipe tobacco. It's part of my restraint program.

But it is composed of ordinary people who group together at the political or administrative levels to provide service; to protect people, law and order; to combat injustice and to provide the basic framework within which a free society and free individuals can function.

In a free society, criticism of government is part of the daily appetite. So, too, is government criticism of the opposition. One can add to the diet a healthy media cynicism for politicians and public servants alike. I have to tell you people in the opposition that you don't escape that cynicism any more than do people who have the responsibility for government.

That is a form of freedom for which there is a very real price to be paid. In totalitarian countries where governments are not open to criticism, where cynicism in the media is tightly controlled and directed towards the ideological enemies of the state, where opposition parties are just so many flights of fancy, they have in fact achieved lower standards of living and far less progress for their people than we have through that form of jungle warfare that we call open democracy.

This means that every debate in this House, every question that is asked and sometimes answered—

An hon. member: That's very honest.

Mr. Reid: Name one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —every political campaign has somehow combined to help bring society in this province to where it is today in terms of its successes and in terms of its failures.

Mr. Martel: The Treasurer is responsible for that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What I am asking for today in setting our gaze firmly on the future—

Mr. Bradley: Is forgiveness.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —is a clear commitment—no, no. I would say to the very distinguished member that I never look back.

Mr. Reid: I don't blame you. There's a whole crowd chasing behind you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, if I wanted to tell you of the history of your own rate of success over the past 34 years, it is very dismal indeed, very dismal indeed.

Mr. Haggerty: That's why we look to the future.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Now who are the optimists?

Hon. Mr. Davis: So what I am suggesting today is really a clear commitment on the part of members in this House that we shall continue to advance the values of social and human progress that will in the long run see this province and this country through this present period of challenge. We should do so with both some real pride in what we've achieved and some real determination with respect to those gains that remain to be made.

Every citizen in this province is entitled to hope for personal realization and advancement, and to the extent that that citizen is prepared to do his or her fair share towards that goal—

Mr. Makarchuk: Particularly if his name is Steve Roman.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —it is the duty of government to provide the framework within which those hopes can become realities.

Mr. Peterson: Bill, you picked up the wrong speech. This is for your daughter in grade seven.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no. It's very simple. I know the member for London Centre already believes all of this and understands this; but it's the kind of thing I feel rather personally. I don't think it hurts to restate it from time to time.

Mr. S. Smith: Or to read it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Good health care is no longer a prerogative of the rich; it is something that is available to all the citizens of this province.

Mr. Martel: Thank God there is a Tommy Douglas somewhere.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That accomplishment is not negotiable and never will be. Education, economic opportunity, security in our communities—local autonomy—do you understand that phrase?—social compassion—

Mr. Nixon: I have heard you use it before.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—these are values that Ontarians want preserved, and no political party, much as we'd like to, can claim unique authorship of any of these. All political parties have a duty to advance these values in the best way they know how.

This province must always value humanity in government. It must value compassion and concern as the heart of our political and administrative body. It is what government is for, why government is here, and what government must continue to pursue. Those who would have government outbusiness the corporations, outorganize the unions or outdevelop the developers miss the point. Government is not a competitor with any corporation or any union. It does not compete with any citizen or group of citizens. It belongs, in my view, to all of them, and fairness and compassion are the only ways governments can respond to these pressures today, a fairness and compassion based on intrinsic judgments and careful assessments.

I believe that a government can have a sort of central vision providing it has no illusions about forcing that vision on a free society as some who seek simple solutions to our problems would have governments do. In a free society all are entitled to the sovereignty of their own personal views for themselves. And none in this House, I am sure, would want to challenge that.

I met recently with the 10 first ministers, each of whom obviously has his own vision for his part of Canada. Some of those are perhaps more shortsighted than others, but they have visions nonetheless. While agreement was neither total nor as spectacular as some would have liked, some common perspectives were put together, perspectives which will in and of themselves solve nothing but which will, if pursued, provide the common ground from which real solutions can emerge.

I have to admit that like most conferences I found a sense of unreality about the perceptions of that meeting, a sense that our administrations were somehow not part of the mainstream of Canadian life but just part of the political game as the politicians had chosen to play it and the media had chosen to portray it. I would submit that the mainstream of Canadian life is not really political at all. It is rather more basically to be found in the families and individuals of this country working in our mines—and I don't know that you have to work in one to understand it, but perhaps you do—

Mr. Nixon: Here comes motherhood.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and in people working in our homes, our offices, schools, hospitals and everywhere else where people are trying to build their own lives for themselves. Most people—at least I believe this—don't really come into this world asking for very much. They want things that are simple as self-respect.

Mrs. Campbell: Jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They want dignity; they want love; they want some purpose that can motivate them and something or somebody they can believe in.

Mr. S. Smith: Leadership.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They would like to avoid sickness and if they can't avoid sickness, as some of us can't on occasion, then they want to be treated. They would like to fend for themselves even when that task has become extremely hard. I have always believed that for every welfare recipient who dotes on the welfare cheque, there are thousands who would give anything and have tried everything to break away from welfare support.

Mr. Wildman: Give them jobs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: For every two people who seek unemployment insurance as easy street, there are a thousand Canadians who would do everything and anything to support themselves despite handicaps of many varieties.

Mr. Makarchuk: I am glad you recognize that fact.

Mr. Martel: All they want is a job.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the members of the New Democratic Party, I know they think they have a monopoly on concerns about people in attempting to solve problems.

Mr. Martel: You have got the power.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to tell them something and it is time they understood it, we may disagree on how these things are to be done, but they are making a fundamental political error if they ever try to tell the people of this province that their party is any more sensitive to their needs than this government on this side of the House that has done so much for so many years. They are making a great mistake.

Mr. Makarchuk: Forget the rhetoric and get the jobs.

Mr. Martel: Throw them another fish.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is why I believe we can, both as Canadians and as Ontarians, do ourselves and our country great good by letting the professional purveyors of distrust and cynicism peddle their wares unheeded—

Mr. McClellan: Do you mean like the injured workers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —while the rest of us learn to start trusting each other and have confidence in ourselves once again. The Throne Speech speaks of a crisis of confidence.

Mr. McClellan: It doesn't say anything.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would add to that that we also have a certain crisis of trust. It is everywhere and it is the basic cancer tearing at our political fibre. We would do well to begin by believing in ourselves in this Legislature. Every member of this House along with every Ontarian has a real contribution to make towards national reconciliation and economic recovery, contributions which cannot and must not be underestimated. In shaping and guiding our society, which is our responsibility to do, I would rather be counted among those who search for those who need help and who are not getting enough, than with those who would root out the small group who would take help they don't rightfully deserve or realistically need.

Mrs. Campbell: Tell that to the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would rather be associated with those who have real faith in the union leader, the corporate leader, the farmer and the storekeeper to build the economic bridges and understandings, than to submit to arbitrary government measures as a means of breaking out of economic disorder. I would rather be associated with those who would build a new Canada on respect and on trust rather than on suspicion and defensive guarantees.

Government, during tough economic times and circumstances, can sometimes tax optimists and humanitarians. Fiscal realities know very little sentimentality, I know that, but difficult times need not defeat the optimists and even the dreamers. I am one of those, and I think it is shared by my colleagues, who believe that we can sustain what is important in our society by continuing to do what is right, by continuing to do nothing more complicated or more profound than advancing the human condition. I believe in this province, because she has succeeded so beautifully in the years to date to advance the course of our people while sharing wealth with Canadians elsewhere.

It is interesting when one goes to these federal-provincial meetings that one gets some of the feelings—sometimes in jest, other times not—of how people do look at central Canada, as they describe us. They sometimes suggest that we have had more than our share, that we have been the prime recipients of the constitution and of Confederation, but I point out to them—and they not only accept it, they have endorsed the fact—that the people of this province have in fact shared in the interests of the country.

I happen to believe in this country because no nation holds more promise or justifies more faith. It is not unusual that countries have faced challenges in the past. We have been through—I have not personally—economic depressions, world wars, conscription crises, we've been through currency changes before—

Mr. Peterson: The AIB.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —we've been through high unemployment and inflation and the election of all kinds of people—we have survived that—to all kinds of public office. But we have, as a nation and as a people, not been seduced by the rhetoric of defeat. We have a duty to ourselves and to our children to resist that seduction now.

One need not be seduced by Premier Levesque, for example, to understand the depth of commitment and, I think, a genuine fear for survival that underlies some of the things he says. An open-minded Premier of one English province in a country of nine other French-speaking provinces would find himself, I suggest, with many similar concerns.

One similarly need not be seduced by the well-meaning who would respond to structural economic difficulties which beset both the private and public sectors with radical public sector intervention and involvement. One can instead provide the base for a significant leadership and an initiative within affordable and manageable limits. Above all, one must not be seduced, in my view, by those who would suggest that as Ontarians and Canadians we cannot succeed and that we will not persevere.

This province and this government and this Legislature face a future of unlimited opportunity—opportunity for innovation, for service and for accomplishment. I am asking the members opposite for the support of the Throne Speech as a basis for that opportunity and as a foundation for its achievement. What we are here to do together before we serve our parties—and I know it's not easy to accept this and it's not always easy for me to say it—

[5:45]

Mr. Reid: It's hard to disagree with what you're saying.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —is to serve our system or our ridings, and very simply and directly, to serve the people. We can, and we will, differ on how we do that; I respect those differences and, quite frankly, I relish their articulation.

Mr. MacDonald: It's a Tory opiate for the people.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I think we can be united in our common resolve to advance the human condition, the quality of life, the self-respect and the dignity of all of our people. We can co-operate in shaping openly and honestly an air of trust for Canadians.

Mr. Lewis: Why wasn't this in the Throne Speech?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am one of those who believe that our society needs that kind of trust as never before.

Mr. McClellan: He'll be glad when this session is over.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a trust I look forward to shaping together with each and every member of this House in the months, and I would say perhaps even years, ahead. It is the best reason one could ever find to be in this demanding profession of politics. It is my reason. I'm sure it is shared by all members of this Legislature.

As I said, I was nearly provoked by the member who led off for the New Democratic Party in his criticism of a certain aspect.

Mr. Speaker: I must remind the House and the hon. Premier that the debate is supposed to conclude at 5:45. Do we have unanimous consent for the Premier to complete his remarks?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I will be only two minutes.

Interjections.

Mr. Cunningham: Not as much as a semi-con.

An hon. member: More.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said that I was going to be very non-provocative and non-partisan—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: He is getting to the point now.

Mr. Peterson: Did you deliver this on one knee?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recognize it is not the typical contribution to the Throne Speech, but I thought I would share it with members. It's a very personal approach on my part.

Mr. S. Smith: He is breaking in a new speech writer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Because of these views that I have expressed, and given the pressing need for all members of this Legislature to get on with the work that is presently before us, I would ask the members of the third party who have had an opportunity to assess what I have said and the debate that has gone on to reconsider their motion for amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: After this speech, it's obvious the government is in deeper trouble than I realized.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the hon. member who does so well—I have great respect for him—I just wonder what he would have done on that select committee on uranium if it had been 6-6 and he would have been totally objective. Do you know what he would have done, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MacDonald: I know what I would have done.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He would have voted for the contract; of course, he would.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that right?

Mr. Martel: That ends any chance of avoiding the vote. The Premier just killed it.

Mr. MacDonald: This is another Tory opiate for the people.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm saying to the new leader of the New Democratic Party, it is not too late to join in these sentiments. It is not too late to reconsider—

Mr. MacDonald: Time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that questionably reasoned amendment that he has presented.

Mr. Cassidy: We thought about it for all these years and the answer is still the same.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would urge him to join the official opposition who in a moment of enlightenment—

Mr. Martel: Hallucination.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —are going to support the government on this most important vote.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier's speech is full of platitudes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recognize the Leader of the Opposition would regard them as platitudes. I regard them as truths and I tell him that they're not irrelevant in today's context. He might do well to read them sometime when he has difficulty going to sleep at night.

Mr. S. Smith: It is a valedictory address. I certainly will use it.

Mr. MacDonald: It's political sedative; enough to put you to sleep.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know the member for York South never had difficulty going to sleep. I won't say what I was going to say.

Mr. Martel: Now you are getting nasty.

Mr. Makarchuk: It's a tranquillizer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would urge the members opposite to support the government in a Throne Speech that refers to the need for confidence and the need for some economic direction in terms of national co-operation and in terms of those objectives and goals that are relevant for today's Ontario society. I say to the new leader of the New Democratic Party that this is an opportunity for him to do at last something significant in his brief political tenure in this House and make the change that is necessary—

Mr. Breithaupt: Ask not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —to support the government on the very excellent address delivered by Her Honour just a few days ago.

Mr. Makarchuk: Did the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams) write that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, The Throne Speech debate now being concluded, I shall call for the vote as follows:

Mr. McCaffrey, seconded by Mr. Taylor (Simcoe Centre) moved that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To the Honourable P. M. McGibbon, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario:

May it please Your Honour: We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. Cassidy moved, seconded by Mr. Lewis, that the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor now before the House be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"That this House regrets the failure of the government to provide leadership in rebuilding Ontario's economy and finding jobs for the province's 316,000 unemployed, its failure to bring Ontario's uranium resources into public ownership and therefore needlessly forcing the people of Ontario to pay billions of dollars in windfall profits to the mining industry, and its failure to provide leadership on the question of national unity and Franco-Ontarian rights, and therefore this House no longer has confidence in the government."

The House divided on the amendment by Mr. Cassidy, which was negatived in the following vote:

AYES	NAYS
Bounsall	Belanger
Bryden	Bennett
Cassidy	Blundy
Charlton	Bolan
Cooke	Bradley
Davidson	Breithaupt
(Cambridge)	Brunelle
Deans	Conway
di Santo	Cunningham
Grande	Davis
Laughren	Drea
Lawlor	Eakins
Lewis	Gregory
Lupusella	Grossman
MacDonald	Haggerty
Makarchuk	Hall
Martel	Handleman
McClellan	Havrot
Philip	Henderson
Renwick	Hennessy
Swart	Hodgson
Warner	Johnson
Wildman	Jones
Young—23.	Kennedy
	Kerrio
	Lane
	MacBeth
	Maeck
	McCaffrey
	McCague
	McEwen
	McKeough
	McKessock
	McNeil
	Newman, W.
	Newman, B.
	Nixon
	O'Neil
	Parrott
	Peterson
	Reed
	Reid
	Rhodes
	Rowe
	Roy Ruston
	Smith, S.
	Smith, G. E.
	Snow
	Stephenson
	Sterling
	Sweeney

NAYS

Taylor, J. A.
Taylor, G.
Turner
Van Horne
Villeneuve
Walker
Welch
Wells
Williams
Wiseman
Worton—63.

Ayes 23; nays 63.

The House divided on the original motion by Mr. McCaffrey, which was approved on the same vote reversed.

Resolved: That a humble address be presented to the Honourable P. M. McGibbon, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario.

May it please Your Honour: We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech which Your Honour has addressed to us.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 6:03 p.m.

CONTENTS

Monday, March 6, 1978

Supplementary estimates, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor	365
Point of privilege re select committee on Inco and Falconbridge layoffs, Mr. Kennedy	365
Select committee on highway safety, statement by Mr. Snow	365
Status of civil servant, statement by Mr. McKeough	367
Council for troubled children and youth, questions of Mr. McKeough and Mr. Wells: Mr. S. Smith	368
Catalogue of statistical files, questions of Mr. McKeough: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. MacDonald	369
Apprenticeship program, questions of Mr. Parrott: Mr. Cassidy	370
Job creation, questions of Mr. McKeough: Mr. Cassidy	371
Gray Coach-Greyhound bus services, questions of Mr. Snow: Mr. Cunningham	372
Student assistance, questions of Mr. Parrott: Mr. Cooke, Mr. Warner	372
PCB hazard, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Reed, Mr. Davidson	373
Red-circling of civil servants, questions of Mr. Davis and Mr. Auld: Mr. Epp	374
Rental of space for government offices, questions of Mr. Henderson: Mr. O'Neil	375
University hiring practices, questions of Mr. Parrott: Mr. Martel	375
Catalogue of statistical files, questions of Mr. Parrott: Mr. Sweeney	376
Sault Ste. Marie correctional facilities, questions of Mr. Drea: Mr. Wildman	376
Staff level, questions of Mr. McKeough: Mr. Reed	377
Select committee on highway safety, question of Mr. Snow: Mr. Young	377
South Nation River watershed project, questions of Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Conway, Mr. Roy	378
Massey-Ferguson, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Makarchuk, Mr. Wildman	378
Nickel inventories, question of B. Stephenson: Mr. Haggerty	378
Equal pay, questions of B. Stephenson: Mrs. Campbell, Mr. Cassidy	379
Teachers' superannuation fund, questions of Mr. McKeough: Mr. Swart, Mr. Peterson, Mr. Cassidy, Mr. S. Smith	379
Highway Traffic Amendment Act, Mr. Snow, first reading	380
Highway Traffic Amendment Act, Mr. Snow, first reading	380
Resolutions nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 re standing committees, Mr. Welch, motions agreed to	380
Substitutions on procedural affairs committee, Mr. Welch, motion agreed to	381
Throne Speech debate, concluded, Mr. Deans, Mr. Roy, Mr. Davis	381
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Welch, agreed to	411

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

- Auld, Hon. J. A. C., Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet (Leeds PC)
 Bolan, M. (Nipissing L)
 Bradley, J. (St. Catharines L)
 Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
 Brunelle, Hon. R.; Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Cochrane North PC)
 Campbell, M. (St. George L)
 Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
 Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
 Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
 Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
 Davidson, M. (Cambridge NDP)
 Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
 Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
 Drea, Hon. F.; Minister of Correctional Services (Scarborough Centre PC)
 Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
 Edighoffer, H.; Deputy Speaker (Perth L)
 Grande, A. (Oakwood NDP)
 Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations
 (St. Andrew-St. Patrick PC)
 Haggerty, R. (Erie L)
 Handleman, S. B. (Carleton PC)
 Havrot, E. (Timiskaming PC)
 Henderson, Hon. L. C.; Minister of Government Services and Chairman of Cabinet
 (Lambton PC)
 Hodgson, W. (York North PC)
 Johnson, J. (Wellington-Dufferin-Peel PC)
 Kennedy, R. D. (Mississauga South PC)
 Kerr, Hon. G. A.; Provincial Secretary for Justice and Solicitor General (Burlington South PC)
 Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
 Laughren, F. (Nickel Belt NDP)
 Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
 MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
 Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
 Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
 McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
 McKeough, Hon. W. D.; Treasurer; Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs
 (Chatham-Kent PC)
 Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
 O'Neil, H. (Quinte L)
 Parrott, Hon. H. C.; Minister of Colleges and Universities (Oxford PC)
 Peterson, D. (London Centre L)
 Philip, E. (Etobicoke NDP)
 Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
 Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
 Renwick, J. A. (Riverdale NDP)
 Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
 Rotenberg, D. (Wilson Heights PC)
 Roy, A. J. (Ottawa East L)
 Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
 Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
 Snow, Hon. J. W.; Minister of Transportation and Communications (Oakville PC)
 Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
 Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
 Stong, A. (Welland-Thorold NDP)

Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)

Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)

Turner, J. (Peterborough PC)

Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)

Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)

Wells, Hon. T. L.; Minister of Education (Scarborough North PC)

Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)

Young, F. (Yorkview NDP)

No. 12

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Tuesday, March 7, 1978

Afternoon Sitting

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 7, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

PANASONIC EXPANSION

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have just a very brief statement. I am pleased to inform the Legislature that Panasonic of Canada is announcing today its decision to proceed with two building projects that will cost several millions of dollars and provide new job opportunities. I am personally pleased that Mr. Lew Shoskes, vice-president of Panasonic of Canada, has stated in his announcement today that our investment and trade mission to Japan last fall was influential in bringing about the expansion program. It was my pleasure to meet with officials of the parent company when we were in Japan last fall, at which time we emphasized our confidence in the Canadian economy and the many benefits offered by our own province.

Panasonic has purchased a 10-acre site in Mississauga—I thought it might have been Brampton but it's Mississauga—where the company will build a new Canadian headquarters. Completion of the headquarters and adjoining warehouse, estimated to cost about $3 million, is expected late this year or early in 1979. Company officials suggest that further expansion could double the facilities that are being announced today.

In addition to the new headquarters, Panasonic Industries Canada, the Etobicoke manufacturing operation, has just completed an addition to its plant and is now considering an additional 50,000-foot expansion. In addition to the many jobs these undertakings will provide to the construction industry, Panasonic is hopeful that it can expand its own work force in the near future.

I believe Panasonic's announcement today is a reminder to all of us that Ontario has reason for its confidence in our ability to maintain and attract investment that will stimulate our overall economy and provide employment opportunities. I believe it also shows the type of benefit we have come to expect from our investment in trade and tourism missions.

It is difficult to put a price tag on the value of these missions but we know they have resulted in many millions of dollars in investment and sales which can only help our employment situation. For example, from a mission to Iran last year, an Ontario company dealing in forest products catalogued sales of $2 million with a further estimated order of $3.5 million for 1979. On that same mission, a manufacturing company reported sales of $1.5 million. On a similar type of mission covering Brazil and Argentina, another company reported initial orders of over $1 million.

During our mission last fall, members of the Ontario group met with executives of the Japan Automotive Parts Industry Association and, as a direct result of this, the association sent to Ontario a delegation of 63 members who are currently exploring the possibility of working relationships with Canadian automotive parts manufacturers.

We are already aware of more than $14 million in sales made by companies who sent representatives on the various trade missions during 1977 alone. We have every reason to believe these business relationships will continue, and indeed increase, in the future. That has certainly been the trend since we began these missions some years ago. We are very proud of our successes, as they show very clearly the reason for our optimism and confidence in this province and in the capacity of its people to compete in the world marketplace.

COUNCIL FOR TROUBLED CHILDREN AND YOUTH

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, since this really is the answer to a question, but assumes the proportions of a statement, I will give it now with your approval.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) asked me a question about a Mr. Peter Wiseman and the Council for Troubled Youth and Children. I would like to reply and tell him that when the children's services division of the Ministry of Community and Social Services was established last July, this section assumed many of the functions handled during the previous two years by the Council for Troubled Children and Youth.

This council had served its purpose extremely well. However, once the consolidation of children's services had been completed, there was no longer a necessity for it to continue in the form in which it had been constituted. The council was disbanded last September, and Mr. Peter Wiseman, who had been seconded to the Social Development secretariat as chairman of the council, returned to the special education branch of the Ministry of Education.

Following the formation of the children's services branch, we were most anxious to establish a close working relationship between the division and the Ministry of Education. Because of the valuable experience and the wealth of knowledge he had gained in his work with the council, and at the request of the officials in the children's services branch, Mr. Wiseman was immediately assigned the role of liaison officer between the new division and my ministry. In addition, he is also continuing to co-ordinate our ministry activities with respect to educational agreements between school boards and government-approved care and treatment facilities for troubled children.

During the past few months, some issues have arisen in the area of children's services which involve more than two ministries. It became apparent that there was still a need for some form of continuing mechanism to ensure interministerial co-operation and liaison. In response to this need, an interministerial committee on children's services was appointed in December 1977. In view of his previous experience on the council, Mr. Wiseman was asked to chair the committee this year on a part-time basis in addition to the other responsibilities that he has, which I have already mentioned. During 1978, Mr. Wiseman and the members of the committee will report directly to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch).

In addition to the chairman, the committee includes regular membership at the senior staff level from the Ministry of Education in the person of Dr. Gordon Bergman; from the Ministry of Community and Social Services by Mr. John Anderson and Dr. Clive Chamberlain, and from the Ministry of Health by Mr. Don Treasdale. Other members have been assigned on an ad hoc basis from the ministries of the Attorney General, the Solicitor General, Correctional Services, Colleges and Universities, and the Justice and Social Development secretariats.

The principal terms of reference for the next year include the following: 1. To undertake specific tasks related to children's services, at the direction of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development and cabinet committees; 2. To promote conjoint planning and to provide a focal point at the provincial level for co-ordination and liaison among all ministries in matters pertaining to policies for children's services; 3. To provide an interministerial forum for information sharing and discussion of plans and proposals of each ministry as they relate to children's services; 4. To consider the interface effects of policy and program proposals designed by individual ministries and to make recommendations regarding a co-ordinated approach to their implementation; 5. To encourage effective co-ordination and co-operation in the delivery of the total spectrum of children's services at the community level.

I would like further to assure the Leader of the Opposition that all the information gathered and the records made by the council during the past two years have been made available or given to Judge George Thomson and his staff in the children's services division.

With regard to the questionnaire referred to yesterday, it was developed two years ago as a means of gathering information requested by the members of the council concerning the variety of programs and services available to emotionally disturbed children. The data were collected and made available as a reference document for the use of the council members only. In a few cases, respondents requested that some of the information remain confidential. The data collected were not destroyed but in fact were made available to the children's services division. However, it is information that this division will of necessity need to update regularly. I understand they are involved at the present time in developing a comprehensive update survey for this purpose.

I might also add that some of the data from the original council survey were released in the form of a directory of facilities for troubled children and youth, which I'm sure my friend has seen; it has been a public document. The children's services division has taken over the responsibility for maintaining an inventory of these facilities and the production of further editions of the directory.

That forms my answer to the questions which the Leader of the Opposition raised and, in checking Hansard, I find that it conforms almost completely to the way I answered him yesterday in regard to this question.

Mr. S. Smith: Absolutely not.

ORAL QUESTIONS

COUNCIL FOR TROUBLED
CHILDREN AND YOUTH

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Education: In view of the fact that in his answer he says the council was wound up in September 1977, as I indicated, can he explain why the gentleman in question, Mr. Wiseman, is still listed in the 1978 directory as chairman of that precise council? More importantly, can he answer the question I asked yesterday as to why we have not seen a report from that council since July 1976—

Mr. Lewis: Why is he in the telephone book? Why is he in the telephone book at all?

Mr. Renwick: He should ask the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. S. Smith:—and with regard to the matter of the information from the questionnaire of all the children's services, which he says is in the hands of ComSoc, will he admit that apart from the directory with the address and so on, which is a public document, all the other information he claims needs to be confidential is not, in fact, being shown to members of this House and, furthermore, does not at present exist?

Hon. Mr. Wells: First of all, dealing with the last question, the other information does exist and it is available and in the hands of Judge Thomson and the members in Community and Social Services. My friend should know the answers to all this. I think it should be very clearly stated that one researcher—I think a Miss Oppen—has talked to Mr. Wiseman and he has informed her of all these things. Why the member persists in twisting these things around in this House, I do not know. But she has talked to Mr. Wiseman personally. Indeed, yesterday or at some past time, he informed her of all the information that I have indicated today in the House. Why my friend will not believe what Mr. Wiseman tells to his people, I don't know.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: To make sure we can all believe that those data exist, why will the minister not table them in this House—the data from the survey of children's facilities, taken under that council, which we have reason to believe are not, in fact, available and in the hands of certain people in ComSoc? If he has them, why doesn't he let us see them? What's so confidential about them?

Hon. Mr. Wells: As I recall yesterday, one of the member's colleagues was talking about the confidentiality of other government information concerning student loans.

Mr. Reid: That's income tax.

Mr. S. Smith: Income tax.

Hon. Mr. Wells: This information that was collected impinges, in some cases, upon children and the records of institutions concerned with them—

Mr. S. Smith: That's really nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Wells:—and was given to us on the basis that it was confidential. I can assure my friend that the information exists. It was taken and collected on the basis that it would be for the use of the council for troubled children and there is really no useful purpose that can be served by tabling it in the House. I suggest that my friend ask my colleague, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), if he, in fact, has the information.

Mr. Roy: He's not here.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The vital part of the information—

Mr. S. Smith: No, that's not the vital part.

Hon. Mr. Wells:—for this part and for the public is this document which will be updated and continue to be updated. If my friend has any particular part of the information that he would like to know about, if he would specifically ask me about it I would perhaps see if it's possible to get that information. But the total document was collected on the basis that it would not be made public. Some of the information was given to us from the institutions on the basis that it would remain confidential. I think he, above all, he who's always talking about protecting the confidentiality of personal information, would understand and respect that.

Mr. Conway: You sound like Tom Cossitt.
[2:15]

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the Premier yesterday made such a plea for our trust in government, would the minister at least trust the rest of the members of the Legislature and perhaps let us see the questionnaire; or is it confidential too?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am sure a copy of the questionnaire that was used two years ago could be provided to the member. I think more pertinent perhaps would be the fact that she would want to talk to the Minister of Community and Social Services, who is now engaged in an updating process with a much more involved questionnaire in the same particular area in the ongoing work of the children's services branch.

My friends don't seem to understand that this whole process has led to very significant developments on this side in the provision of services to children.

Mr. Mancini: The minister doesn't understand.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Rather than harping away and nitpicking at this, they should be concerned about the total process.

Mrs. Campbell: The minister doesn't give us any information.

ROBARTS REPORT

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Premier. In view of the fact that changes in legislation affecting polling subdivisions would have to be known in the very near future in order to be applied for as far as a municipal election in Metro Toronto would be concerned later this year, which I guess is scheduled for November 13, can the Premier tell us when his government's policy on the Robarts report will be made known before this House?

Mr. Nixon: The present mayor will be available to run, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand the present mayor probably by that time will be sitting in a cabinet position in Ottawa, and I am only presuming that.

Mr. Conway: The Premier said the same about Pierre Benoit.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said the same thing about a number of people for many years.

Mr. Foulds: The kiss of death.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have said the same thing about people opposite for a number of years, and it has proved to be correct.

Mr. O'Neil: You should hear what we say about you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know what you say about me in public. I also know what you say in private.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Premier address himself to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I certainly will, Mr. Speaker. I will address myself to the question immediately.

Mr. Makarchuk: What is it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We will have a statement on this matter at the appropriate time.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the Premier and his Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) are already on record as rejecting the boundary proposals made by the Robarts royal commission on Metro Toronto, can we assume that certain other major recommendations are still being seriously considered? Can the Premier give us some indication of when we can expect a statement regarding the rest of the Robarts report so that it can, if necessary, be implemented for the coming election with enough lead time for people to prepare their campaigns, their financing and their decisions as to whether they are going to run? What is the point in delaying at least on that aspect of the Robarts report?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition has indicated that I, along with the Treasurer, have made a decision. In fact, it was a cabinet decision with respect to boundaries, which has been made public. I would gather from the question, it is a decision with which he perhaps disagrees and his caucus really would prefer to have seen some boundaries.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier knows we agree with it. Don't be funny.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Then why doesn't the Leader of the Opposition say he agrees with it?

Mr. S. Smith: We have already agreed with it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are a number of other important recommendations in that report.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier is the one who has been announcing he is not implementing the recommendations of Mr. Robarts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Some of them are really quite complex in nature and require a great deal of assessment by the government, and this assessment is taking place. As I said in answer to the first question, we will have some statement of policy on this matter at the appropriate time.

Mr. Conway: After the next election.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary in two parts: First of all, can the Premier explain what it is that takes him so long and the government so long to come forward with the necessary legislation? Secondly, in line with the budget that we are going to see tonight, would it not make good sense to bring forward that recommendation from the report that calls for the 75 per cent level of funding for the public health units in Metro Toronto, so that it would be in keeping with the budget and the people in Metro Toronto public health units would know what kind of funding to expect?

Mr. Havrot: Resign.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the people of Metropolitan Toronto already know what level of funding they are to expect on the one issue.

With respect to the first part of the two questions the hon. member asked, we received the report some time ago. I am sure the hon. member would be the first one to say, if we introduced legislation that didn't really suit his own state of mind, that we hadn't spent long enough at it.

Mr. Nixon: He thinks you should resign.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We just want to make sure that when we bring a policy or possible legislation before this House it will be so thoroughly done that the members opposite will vote unanimously in favour of it. They want us to do it the right way, and we are attempting to do that.

Mr. Foulds: Like your own unanimity over the cottage lot sales.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

(Applause).

Mr. Martel: I'm not used to this.

LAYOFF OF NICKEL WORKERS

Mr. Martel: A question of the Premier: Because the government announced its intention not to act on the first report of the select committee considering the Inco and Falconbridge layoffs within hours of that report being tabled, can the Premier indicate which recommendations his government intends to accept from the second report, all of which recommendations deal with a long-term solution for a one-industry community? Which of those is his government going to accept?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, that report is being very carefully assessed now by the appropriate ministries.

I should explain—without infringing on the rules of the House but so the members of the gallery who are visiting us today would understand that enthusiastic outburst of applause from all members of this House—that I think this is the first time the hon. member has asked a question as House leader for his party. We not only recognize that, we recognize the three-piece blue suit and the fact that he probably wishes he had been a leadership candidate in view of the performance to date.

Mr. Martel: I might say that the opportunity presented itself to be a candidate and I bypassed it. My ego wasn't that big.

Mr. Ruston: Oh, I don't know about that.

Mr. S. Smith: What does that say about the other three?

Interjections.

Mr. Lawlor: I don't know if that was a good thing to say or not.

Mr. Martel: It was a good thing to say. It reflects on what—

Mr. Lewis: I think I am going to take over now!

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a supplementary?

Mr. Martel: There are those who need leadership, Mr. Speaker; it does them good.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you just ask your question?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, get to it.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Is the government prepared by the way of grants, loans or tax incentives to encourage or assist in the establishment of a mining equipment manufacturing industry in Sudbury, because we have a debt in Canada of about $750 million a year, I think, because of imports of that kind, an expanded mining and research development at Laurentian related to a mining equipment manufacturing industry, and an auto parts plant in Sudbury which is being discussed at the federal level at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are a number of recommendations in the report. The hon. member has referred to three ideas that he is presenting. We have looked at the whole question of import replacement for a period of time. It is something of a mystery to me why a province or a country that is so involved in the mining industry does not have a greater share in terms of the production of equipment for those particular operations.

Mr. Lewis: Bad government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But, to answer in a specific way about those suggestions, I am sure the hon. member understands it is not as simplistic as saying 'yes'. They have to be assessed carefully and we are in the process of doing it.

Mr. Martel: A final supplementary in view of the fact that the government is considering all these things: In the report we made mention of the government's failure to respond somewhat earlier. Is the Premier aware that a document was prepared for the cabinet which stated, "Unless the markets improve rapidly in the near future, it is difficult to see how cuts in the Sudbury mine output can be avoided"? What action did the government take, when that action was presented to cabinet a year ago, to alleviate the crisis that has now struck the Sudbury area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't recall any formal document. I'm not saying there wasn't one. We get a lot of documents.

Mr. Martel: Here it is.

Mr. Wildman: From MNR.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was certainly known, because the hon. member was one of those, along with two or three of his colleagues, who asked questions during that period of time about the possibility of the market situation being such that it might lead to the situation that has developed. So I think it is fair to state that while we had no specific knowledge, we certainly shared the same concern about the possibility.

I don't think the situation then was any different from now in terms of that particular industry. This government has no control over the international marketplace, and the solution as suggested by the members opposite of the nationalization of that particular industry will not affect that situation.

What we're looking for, as I'm sure the hon. member is, are other policies or concepts for the Sudbury basin. I spent some time yesterday discussing this matter with some people. The hon. member knows very well about the conference that is being convened in Sudbury in the early part of April. I told them I thought this was one of the more encouraging initiatives that had come forward for that community. It was my hope that my timetable would allow it, and I think it will. This would be on a very non-partisan basis and that, I understand, is also the ground rule for the member for Sudbury East—that he also will be a participant at that particular conference.

Mr. Martel: I hope the Premier brings a bagful of money when he comes to Sudbury. We could use it.

Mr. Havrot: We've had enough of that.

Mr. S. Smith: Is Kelly going too?

Mr. Roy: Bill Kelly has not finished his champagne yet.

EQUAL PAY

Mr. Martel: To the Minister of Labour: The report on the status of women Crown employees, 1975-76, was tabled on October 29, 1976. Can the minister indicate when we can anticipate a followup report—the 1976-77 report—on the status of women Crown employees?

Hon. B. Stephenson: During the discussion of our estimates, the director in charge of that branch informed not only myself but also the committee that this report was in the process of being developed. I had anticipated it would be ready in January, Mr. Speaker. I gather it is not ready as yet, but I will try to find out a reasonably precise date so that I can inform the hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Is the delay in tabling the 1976-77 report due probably to the conclusions in the first one which probably haven't changed some 18 months later? The first one stated: "The overall profile of men's and women's salaries has not changed substantially from 1975 . . . When average salaries by sex and ministry are compared, men's salaries exceed women's salaries in every case, and the status quo situation on salaries was the same for occupational distribution using the service-wide statistics . . . There was no significant change in the overall occupation distribution of these women in 1974-75 and 1975-76."

Is the delay not occasioned because nothing has changed?

Hon. B. Stephenson: That certainly is not any valid reason for delay and I am sure it is not the reason for the delay. The information I have is that there are certain aspects of this report which show very marked improvement. It is my wish and hope that the hon. members will be somewhat pleased with what has happened in the intervening year.

Mr. McClellan: You have the report, do you?

Mr. Martel: Final supplementary: Can the minister indicate then, whether the gaps between wages for men and women in the ministries of Energy and Industry and Tourism have come somewhat closer together? That's where the greatest gap was in the salary ranges.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I can't give that factual information today because I don't know, but it will be available to the hon. member as soon as the report is available.

Mr. Mancini: You should give back part of your minister's salary.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Oh, I would be glad to. Give me yours as well.

HOSPITAL PRIVILEGES

Mr. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of Health: Is he considering establishing a review of the Public Hospitals Act and the continuing problem of staff privileges for doctors as recommended by the Ombudsman in his letter to the minister in connection with the complaint by Dr. Claude MacDonald?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, Mr. Speaker, not at this time.

[2:30]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to comment on the Ombudsman's letter, in which I understand the phrase "improper discrimination" was used in reference to the possibility of the actions of the appeal board that was established by this House? Is he not aware, also, of the fact that the Law Reform Commission, by letter to the minister, has indicated that it too feels it is a matter of importance and that it was suggesting a referral to it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I haven't seen the material from the Law Reform Commission, Mr. Speaker. I believe the letter from the Ombudsman just arrived in the last little while, but I will take a look at that in connection with the earlier letter.

Mr. Nixon: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, the minister is no doubt aware that the matter has been written up in the public press, which is where the information was made available to me. Does he recall, in this connection, as a member of the North York council some years ago, signing a report, to the Grange committee I believe, that was looking into this some years ago, calling for a policy with regard to open public hospitals, thus easing what has become a problem of staff appointments?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It depends when it was, but I don't recall personally signing such a report. If the member is talking about such a report being signed by the clerk of the council of which I was a member, that's a possibility, but—

Mr. Nixon: No, the minister voted in favour of it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'd be glad to look at that too. That's a long time ago.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. di Santo: I have a question of the Premier. On November 17 the House passed a resolution calling for the exemption of a portion of property taxes for senior citizens and disabled persons; is the government now prepared to introduce the legislation to implement that resolution?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recall the discussion, and I would just remind the hon. member of the commitment of the government, which is that we plan progressively to relieve our senior citizens of this province from the burden of real property taxation where there is need. I would remind the hon. member that, looking at averages, we have, in fact, through the tax credit system, relieved our senior citizens of a good portion of their real property tax. One can use varying percentages, but it is probably close to 50 per cent of their property tax at the present time. As a government we are committed to extending this beyond that, and we will continue to do so.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, we don't intend to introduce a bill at this precise moment, but that is the policy to which this government is committed.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The resolution that we passed, and it was approved unanimously by this House, called for the elimination of the property taxes, the portion of the property taxes of education, for senior citizens and disabled people, and that was also a real promise in the Bramalea charter. Is the Premier saying he is dissociating himself from the vote that he made on that resolution?

Hon. Mr. Davis: All I am saying, very simply, is that it takes a period of time to accomplish these things. We set an objective—

Mr. Makarchuk: It started with George Drew.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and I would say, with respect to the educational portion, if one were to assume that roughly 50 per cent of the tax bill on residential property is for education, if one were to apply, as I think one could fairly—

Mr. Warner: Slowly, slowly; turtles climb trees faster.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—the amount now being paid to the tax credit system, that a good portion of the educational part of the senior citizens' tax load is now being absorbed through the tax credit system.

Mr. Warner: We pass a resolution and then we back off.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, to the Premier: Does he not realize that because the property tax credits have not been increased now for three years that in fact the increase in property taxation to senior citizens, those in the relatively low income group, has in fact increased more, percentage-wise, than to any other group in our society? Does he not think, because of this, that there should be some special concessions given to the senior citizens on the property tax?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Long before the hon. member became a member of this House the government recognized that with the introduction of the tax credit systems. It introduced property tax credits for our senior citizens, and my rough guess is that 68 per cent of our senior citizens are in fact receiving, by way of the property tax credit—

Mr. McClellan: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—an amount in excess of what they pay for the educational portion.

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed and will move further than that.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, the hon. member had better check his figures very carefully.

Mr. Swart: I have. The Premier should check his.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are moving ahead with it and will continue to move ahead with it.

GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Given that the textile industry in Ontario now employs 60,000 people and 38,000 of these work in the primary textile industry which is crucial to eastern Ontario's economy, and given that this industry is already suffering from serious problems in declining investments, low profit margins and the fact that Canada imported 60 per cent of its textiles and clothing in 1976—

Mr. Hall: Question?

Mr. Sterling: —and given that any cut in the tariff protection would further harm the industry and aggravate the unemployment situation in eastern Ontario—

Ms. Gigantes: What are you going to do?

Mr. Sterling: —would the minister please indicate whether he will urge the federal government to press for exemption of the textile industry, both in the primary and secondary areas, from the current round of GATT negotiations?

Mr. Cunningham: I predict the answer is yes.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, the ministry has been in continuing negotiations and discussions with the federal government as it relates to the negotiations involving the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and certainly one of the areas of concern has been the effect any changes would have on the textile industry. I might tell the hon. member and members of the House that tomorrow I will be in Ottawa to meet with four federal ministers, all of whom will be having some involvement in the GATT discussions, and that is one of the subjects we will be discussing with them, as to what sort of position they will be taking when the discussions get going again in Geneva.

Mr. Deans: Ottawa is having enough trouble, John, without you going down.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the Premier just announced today that Sanyo, or whoever it is, is putting up a warehousing operation in Bramalea or Mississauga which will provide employment for university graduates to load trucks, what is the minister going to do about ensuring that there are jobs in Canada in the electronics industry?

Mr. Speaker: That's not a supplementary.

Mr. Martel: It's a good question though.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I used to drive a truck.

Mr. Martel: What Saturday was that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: All summer.

PAPER MILL CONTROL ORDERS

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, in response to the questions of the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) regarding the status of the ministry's orders on the pulp and paper mills of Domtar Packaging Limited of Red Lake and Great Lakes Paper Company of Thunder Bay, I wish to advise that Great Lakes Paper Company has submitted a letter to the ministry prior to the March 1, 1978, deadline, in which it states that the closed cycle system on the new kraft mill has, in its opinion, been sufficiently successful to warrant proceeding with plans to install this system in the old kraft mill.

At present, the closed cycle system has not been totally closed because of technical problems still to be overcome. However, the information provided by the company suggests that, even at the present stage of incomplete closure, the effluent which might be expected from the two mills with this system installed would be at least equivalent to that which could be achieved in similar conventional mills with conventional secondary effluent treatment.

This information is being reviewed to ensure that the company's achievement, in fact, demonstrates essential compliance with the terms of the requirement and direction. If ministry staff determines the company is not in compliance, then the order indicates the company would have to provide biological treatment for both A and B mills.

With regard to the order on Domtar Limited to install a mill sanitary sewage collection system and connect it to the municipal system by March 1, 1978, this system has been installed and the connection to the municipal system was made on February 28, 1978. However, because of delays in constructing the municipal system, it has not been possible to make final internal connections which will cause the sewage to flow through the mill system into the municipal system. The municipality has advised the company that as soon as its consultant has the municipal treatment plant operating to its satisfaction, anticipated to be about March 15, it may start to complete the required internal mill connections.

Under the circumstances, the company is being required to complete all but two minor lateral connections within three weeks of advice from the municipality to proceed. The two minor lateral connections represent less than five per cent of the total wastes. These connections require outside excavations and permission has been given to delay them until ground conditions are more suitable, but not later than January 15, 1978. Domtar Packaging is in compliance with the requirement and direction.

Mr. Gaunt: I have a supplementary with respect to Great Lakes Paper in Thunder Bay. They were asked to submit a written report demonstrating that the Rapson-Reeves closed cycle water system would substantially free their discharge of any contaminants that would harm or would be likely to harm the quality of the receiving water. I presume from what the minister has said that they haven't done that. All they've said is that the effluent is no worse than it would be with conventional systems.

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Gaunt: What further steps beyond what the minister has said is the ministry going to take to make sure that this system does comply with the order?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, there is one paragraph here which says: "If the ministry staff determine that Great Lakes Paper Company Limited are not in compliance, then the order indicates that the company would have to provide biological treatment for both A and B mills."

Mr. Foulds: With regard to the answer to the question raised about the Great Lakes mill, could the minister indicate exactly what technical difficulties the company has in meeting the requirements? Can he give us an assurance that we will not have our annual pollutant fish-kill on the Kaministikwia River this summer?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I can't guarantee the second part of the question at this point. As far as the first part of the question is concerned I'll get the technical data for the member at a later date.

Mr. Gaunt: I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, does this mean that the Rapson-Reeves system is not as effective in controlling pollution as was once thought?

An hon. member: He'll check into it.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the staff are investigating this matter and will be checking on the compliance.

CABINET COMMITTEE ON CONFEDERATION

Mr. Roy: I have a question of the member for Cochrane North who is, as I read it here, the minister in charge of bilingualism in Ontario and in charge of chairing the cabinet committee on Confederation.

I would like to ask the minister, first of all, whether he is prepared to accept the suggestion made by my leader on this side of the House regarding establishing a select committee in this area? I think he heard his speech on this.

Mr. Hodgson: Not another one.

Mr. Roy: I'm sorry. I apologize if I woke up somebody over there. I didn't want to do that.

Interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It's all right, Albert. We enjoy having you once a week.

Mr. Roy: Secondly, might the minister take us into his confidence and tell us what his cabinet committee on Confederation does, or what it has done so far?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: In answer to the first question, I think the hon. member will agree that presently we have several select committees and there's quite a problem in select committees meeting when the House is sitting.

Mr. Conway: Land drainage is more important.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I think the exchange of members going to Quebec is a very good one and I'm sure this should be encouraged. I don't think much could be served by a select committee at this time.

Mr. Roy: You don't?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: With reference to the second part of the member's question, the cabinet committee met this morning with the Pepin-Robarts commission. That committee is very active. There has been, for instance, the Destiny Canada conference last June, that the hon. member is familiar with. That's an example. There have been many initiatives taken by the cabinet committee in conjunction with the advisory committee.

Mr. Roy: May I ask the minister a supplementary, Mr. Speaker? How does he rate it in order of priority that he does not see fit to have a select committee of this nature at this time? How does he rate his priorities over there? Secondly, regarding the cabinet committee on Confederation, is he going to make statements occasionally to the House about what it's doing, so that we on this side of the House can have some input in its discussions with other provinces so that we can be of assistance to the committee on this?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: In due course of time there will be a report on the cabinet committee.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: has the cabinet committee on Confederation considered the remarks ascribed to the former Premier in yesterday's Toronto Star, in which Mr. Roberts indicated that, like it or not, Ontario and presumably the Ontario government, under new arrangements within Confederation, will have to accept a markedly reduced role within the brokerage of Confederation politics? Has the minister seen those reports and has his committee considered them perhaps as late as this morning in conversations with the Pepin-Robarts group?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I haven't seen those reports.

OPP ROLE IN STRIKE

Mr. Deans: I have a question for the Minister of Labour: Does she think it appropriate that the Ontario Provincial Police should be used by a private company to undermine and destroy the collective bargaining system?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would think that is what most of my legal friends would call a very leading question. I would really like to know the circumstances of the case which the hon. member is describing.

Mr. Lewis: Answer the question.

Mr. Deans: Can I assume the answer to that was yes?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, the member can't.

Mr. Deans: Now I will go on with a supplementary. Then does the minister think it appropriate that a private company, whether the name is Fleck or otherwise, should be allowed to use plain-clothes Provincial Police to come in to lecture the workers, who are attempting to get a first contract prior to their going on strike, about the possible consequences of their actions on the picket lines? What, if anything, will constitute illegality in the minds of the police?

Secondly, does she think that that company was acting in good faith when at 7 o'clock on the first morning of the strike it brought a busload of scabs across the picket line? Does she think it appropriate that the police should arrest the union representative who was attempting to speak to the bus driver and does she think it appropriate that the justice of the peace should refuse to give that union rep bail unless he signed an agreement to stay out of the township?

Hon. B. Stephenson: These are very interesting and intriguing allegations which I have not heard before. I shall be very pleased to investigate the matter and shall report to the House.

Mr. Lewis: She is just the Minister of Labour. Why should she have heard?

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Why final?

Mr. Deans: Final supplementary: Can I ask the minister whether she believes—

Hon. B. Stephenson: I do not know whether what the member is saying is factual.

Mr. Deans: The minister wants to find out if it's factual? Let me tell her it's factual. At Fleck Manufacturing in the London area in Stephen township yesterday, plain-clothes Provincial Police arrested a staff rep who was speaking to a bus driver. How does the minister pretend to represent organized labour? She is a disgrace.

Mr. Makarchuk: It's the deep South.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The hon. member is certainly entitled to his opinion about almost anything, including his opinion of me. I have not been informed of the so-called or alleged facts of this case. I should like to be so informed. Then I shall be very pleased to comment upon the situation.

An hon. member: The minister has no communication with her staff.

Mr. Pope: The member didn't care to inform her.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's right

An hon. member: It is not up to us.

Mr. Lewis: Would you allow a supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has already indicated—

Mr. Deans: I want to find out what's going on in this matter. Using plain-clothes policemen—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister has indicated she knows nothing about the allegation.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: She has taken the question as notice and perhaps when she replies that would be the appropriate time for supplementaries.

Mr. Lewis: I have a question which relates to this.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I would like to ask the minister, can she explain to the Legislature, when an important international representative of a well-respected union in this province is arrested on a picket line at a plant in the province of Ontario and denied bail by a justice of the peace, and when the Ontario Provincial Police are involved in a series of incidents which are at best questionable, how it is humanly possible within her ministry that she as Minister of Labour wouldn't know about it? What does it say about her ministry and its staff?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I think one of the major features of the Ministry of Labour is the good, wholesome and complete communication between the staff and the minister.

An hon. member You're too busy trying to run down Bill 70.

Hon. B. Stephenson: This is one of the areas in which I think the Ministry of Labour has exceeded what perhaps has been expected of governments in other jurisdictions.

I have to confess that I have not been personally informed of this. When I have, I shall be very pleased to respond.

Mr. Lewis: That's unbelievable—incredible. What's more, he is a lovely staff rep, but it makes no sense at all. Al Seymour is one of the nicest union reps around.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

OHIP CLAIMS PROCEDURE

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Health in reference to the minister's much appreciated statement in the House last week about the problems of a Dr. Takahashi, with OHIP and some of his patients.

With respect to the last part of that statement, the minister assured hon. members that as soon as the doctor in question submits his claims cards the patients will be reimbursed accordingly. Since it is very clear that there is little or no likelihood that there will be receipts, records or any material to allow for the proper processing of those cards and, therefore, according to this statement, there is no normal way to help those patients, several of whom are out of pocket now to the extent of several hundreds of dollars, is the minister contemplating any means by which those people—assuming that does turn out to be the case—might be reimbursed for their out-of-pocket loss?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Under the law, Mr. Speaker, we cannot make a payment from the Ontario Health Insurance Plan without substantiating material to support such a claim.

I am not as pessimistic as my friend would appear to be about the outcome of this. The matter goes before the college on March 13. A number of the patients have been in touch with my office and have indicated that in their view they don't think the doctor in question is being malicious in any way but that perhaps it is just a case—I don't know how his office is organized or how he organizes himself, but the prognosis is a positive one.

At this point, I will wait for the results of the College of Physicians and Surgeons' hearing in the anticipation that at some point in the not-too-distant future we will have substantiating material with which to justify processing the claims and to waive the normal six-month period.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: In recognition of the serious time difficulties that have faced patients out of money—out-of-pocket money in this case—and going by the minister's statement that in April 1977 this matter first came to the ministry's attention, can the minister explain, to the best of his knowledge, what "the procedural problem" was that rendered the February 6 hearing essentially null and void. Does he know what that procedural problem was?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: To the best of my recollection, it had to do with the giving of notice; the proper time required for the giving of notice was not given and as a result it had to be put forward.

NOISE LEVELS

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Labour: Is the minister aware of a situation at the A. G. Simpson plant in Scarborough, a heavy-metal stamping plant, where the ministry people conducted tests? They found the noise levels too high and ordered earphones for the workers as well as moving in mobile hearing testing equipment, but a good number of the employees, who happened to be provided by the overload company, have been refused the earphones for use in the plant. Why would the ministry people not insist—inasmuch as they are working there, even though on a contract basis—that they be covered under the same situation?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, any individual who is working in an area where the noise level is above that which is permitted, is supposed to be provided with the protective equipment, whether he or she is a contract person or full-time person.

Mr. Mackenzie: Would the minister then look into this particular situation and find out why they are being denied this kind of coverage? It is bad enough that people are used to circumvent full-time employment under this method, but they should certainly have the coverage in that situation.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes.

COMMUNITY COLLEGE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Sweeney: A question to the Minister of Colleges and Universities having to do with the current negotiations with the community college teaching staff. Would the minister not agree that the 6,000 community college teachers who have not had a contract since August 1977 have a reasonable cause to be concerned by the action of the council of regents to introduce changes in the ground rules respecting workload and sick leave plans?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would have to remind the member that the negotiations are strictly between the council of regents and the faculty association bargaining union, and I think the Act very clearly spells out that if anyone should comment—particularly if he happens to be the Minister of Colleges and Universities—on how those negotiations are going that, indeed, he would be in violation of the intent of the Act, if not the exact wording of the Act.

I recall once in Sudbury when I made what I thought a rather brief and not too heavy comment about those negotiations that I was severely criticized for doing so. With that background and that history, I think it would be wrong for me to indicate in a public forum how I feel or do not feel about how the negotiations are proceeding and whether or not the two sides are acting in the way the member suggests. I think, to put it very briefly, I guess, there is really no comment that's appropriate for me to make at this time on those negotiations.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Would the minister at least be prepared to support the call for an independent arbitrator on these two issues, hopefully to avoid a province-wide strike?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The only thing I'd be prepared to support at this time is that the negotiations proceed precisely as the Act calls for them to proceed.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: If my information is correct, of the five people on the council of regents negotiating committee, two of them are from the ministry. Would the minister ensure that through those two officials at least and his influence with the other three members on that negotiating committee, a conclusion is reached in the negotiations as soon as possible, so that one is not ever contemplating in this province a strike of our community college teachers?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, I cannot assure the hon. member of a positive answer to his question.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That was the final supplementary.

Mr. Warner: I thought it was the first final supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No, it was the final supplementary. The hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich with a new question.

AIR POLLUTION

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the Minister of the Environment: I might say at this time that I appreciate the minister's communication that he sent to me indicating that Governor Milliken of Michigan will not relax the sulphur in fuel requirements or make any change on the transboundary pollution without involving the authorities of the Ministry of the Environment here in Ontario in public hearings. But is the minister aware of the International Joint Commission report released last week for the Windsor area, showing that there were increases in the maximum levels of certain air pollutants in Windsor as well as increases in the number of incidents of pollution in 1976, and that if the trend continues they can't possibly meet the requirements and objectives set for the end of this year? Will the minister make sure that all requirements on standards are stringently enforced and that there will be in no way any relaxation of surveillance in the Windsor area?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: That's short. You don't take much time, George.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: In view of the IJC report that stated the quality of air in the Windsor area had decreased, could the minister explain why he said, in a letter that he sent to me dated March 1, 1978: "With respect to the area of Windsor opposite Zug Island, I believe it is important to recognize the very significant reductions in emissions realized in recent years by US industrial sources located on or near Zug Island. This reduction in emissions has been reflected in the air quality of west Windsor area, as monitored by my ministry's monitoring network."

In other words, he is saying that the quality of air has improved according to his government's monitoring.

[3:00]

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Cooke: I am asking why the IJC is saying one thing and his ministry is saying another thing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: IJC can be wrong.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea why IJC is saying what they are saying. I believe that our report is correct.

Mr. Martel: They have been known to be wrong before.

OVERTIME PERMITS

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour. I wonder if the Minister of Labour can inform the House, if the employment standards branch is going to continue to give out overtime permits in this time of high unemployment?

Secondly, has the employment standards branch done any surveys which could be given to the House and which would tell members how many more new jobs could be created if the overtime permits were curtailed somewhat?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, we have looked very carefully at overtime permits, and I would have to report that the granting of overtime permits relates specifically to those operations in which there is a seasonal or periodical demand for the products. Rather than hiring new staff to accommodate that seasonal change or the periodic change the employees in those establishments are given the option to work overtime.

It is not done, as the hon. member knows, without the agreement of the employees; they must agree to work overtime. No employee can be made to work overtime if he does not wish to.

We have looked at the possibility of reducing overtime in certain operations; I don't know whether I can give the member factual information about those specific operations, but if we have I will be very glad to provide it.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary question: Doesn't the minister feel that at this time we need this type of factual information? Is the minister prepared to have the employment standards branch do a study so that we as legislators will know how many thousand new jobs could be created by curtailment of overtime? Doesn't the minister think that is necessary now?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I think there is probably sufficient information on hand to give a fairly reasonable estimate of the number of jobs which might be created under certain circumstances.

Mr. Mackenzie: This is a supplementary. Would the minister tell this House whether or not her answer applies to the situation at the Ford Motor Company plant in Oakville—which we raised with her in the last session, and on which I am still awaiting a response to a couple of questions?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had responded to the hon. member's questions. If I have not, I apologize. That information I shall provide for him.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary of the minister: Would the minister consider suggesting to the employer that he use, wherever possible, laid-off employees rather than giving the overtime to employees who are presently working the full week?

An hon. member: Why don't you just do what they did at Inco?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to suggest this strongly to employers, yes. I do not know whether they would accept my suggestion or not.

Mr. MacDonald: Don't give them the overtime permit.

TRUCKING LEGISLATION

Mr. Philip: A question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Is the minister now prepared to admit what he refused to admit in response to my questions on December 5, that there has been a conflict between the policies of deregulation advocated by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), and those of regulation advocated by the minister himself and by the select committee on the highway transportation of goods? Would the minister now admit that Bill 21 is a clear indication that the policies of deregulation have won out in his cabinet; and would the minister take the honourable course of action, now that his policies have been repudiated by his cabinet, and resign?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Philip: By way of supplementary, can the minister tell us how he can set up a select committee, with all of the expense that goes into that, and then go deliberately against the major thrust of that select committee's recommendations, as he has done in Bill 21?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you all going to resign because your party said you shouldn't raise the drinking age?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I don't think we have gone at all against the major thrust of that report. The major recommendation of the select committee report confirms the necessity for a regulated trucking industry in the province of Ontario—

An hon. member: Except in the north.

Hon. Mr. Snow:—and I accept that recommendation and endorse it heartily. I do think, however, that there is some room for improvement in the regulating system that would allow some greater degree of flexibility in the industry, a greater opportunity for backhauls and the saving of empty movements and the saving of energy.

Mr. Philip: One last supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Philip: Can the minister therefore assure the House that the deregulation advocated in Bill 21 is the last of the deregulations that his ministry will be advocating?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly all the deregulation that I have in mind at this time—or in the foreseeable future.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: They are your regulations; we didn't bring them in.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We've taken them out.

Mr. Martel: You've regulated everything to death.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I cannot, of course, give the hon. member a commitment that sometime in the distant future some other minister who may follow me won't decide there should be more deregulation.

I would like to say also, Mr. Speaker that within the next few days I expect to be introducing further amendments to the Public Commercial Vehicles Act. I stated when I introduced Bill 21 that there would be a further package of amendments coming forward dealing with the enforcement recommendations of the report. I think when that is introduced it will reinforce the government's intention to maintain regulation and to have a much more effective enforcement of the regulations.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. Ruston: I have a brief question of the Premier. Since the leader of the Premier's party in Ottawa has said if he is elected Prime Minister of Canada he would allow the opposition the right to review at least one or two departments of government each year and would allow the opposition to either increase or decrease that spending, would the Premier consider giving the opposition here the same privilege?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In technical terms the members opposite always have the option to reduce the expenditure of any ministry in government if they see fit—

Mr. S. Smith: Is that all Joe Clark meant?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and if they are prepared to suffer the consequences that would emerge from such a decision.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to state, when you assess the procedures of the federal House and the procedures here, that in fact our ministries probably come in for a more intensive review—far more open, with far more opportunities for questions and meaningful answers.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Four hundred and twenty hours.

Mr. S. Smith: And secret surveys of children's services.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recognize the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) doesn't agree with that. I know of her great experience with the federal House and how the system works there, but my perception is that we have a much more open system here and a much greater opportunity for asking questions and really in assisting the ministers in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Mr. S. Smith: When you take over from Clark will he come here and take over from you?

Mr. Ruston: Supplementary to the Premier: I take it then he does not in fact believe in many of the things his leader in Ottawa says.

Interjections.

An hon. member: He didn't say that.

Mr. S. Smith: He doesn't think there is a leader in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I listen to some of the members opposite, I think that I am in greater support of our federal leader than those people want to be of theirs, depending on what the polls show from day to day.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: Clark said the federal-provincial caucus was a bust, the Premier said it was great.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Ms. Gigantes: A question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister table in the Legislature the analysis that led him to claim that 12 per cent of Ontario kids are involved in special education programs? In other words, will he tell us how many children are receiving—

Interjection.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) would please be quiet and extend the same courtesy to other members that they extend to him when he is asking a question.

(Applause).

Ms. Gigantes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In other words, I'd like the minister to tell us how many children are receiving how many minutes per week of special education programs, what kind of special education programs, and under the jurisdiction of which boards in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I can tell the hon. member that about 248,000 students in this province are receiving some kind of program apart from what would be termed the normal school program. As for the other parts of her question I'll be happy to get the answer. If she'd like it in a formal manner, it probably should be put on the order paper, but it will take a while to assemble that information.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Is the minister suggesting to us that everything that is not included in what is called "the normal school program" constitutes special education?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'll be happy to give the hon. member a breakdown on that.

Mr. Reid: I think she has had one already. I don't think she needs any help.

Hon. Mr. Davis: She's not alone.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Stuart will help her to recover from it anyway.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think most of the programs that vary from what would be termed "the normal school program" would be classified as special education. Certainly that includes exceptionalities of all descriptions, including programs for the gifted.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

WRITTEN QUESTION

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before the orders of the day. On November 15, 1977, I tabled a question concerning the numbers of public relations and information officers in the Ontario government and Ontario Hydro, and the budget of each department engaged in information activities. On November 29, I was informed through an interim answer that the requested information would be available within 28 calendar days of that date.

The information concerning the government was only made available after I made several phone calls to the Chairman of Management Board's office. I have not yet received the information concerning Ontario Hydro and neither answer has been tabled in this House. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if you could give direction that the government follow the rules of the House.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing on the notice paper.

Mr. Reid: It was in the previous session.

Mr. Speaker: It wasn't carried over into this session. Perhaps the member should avail himself of the opportunity of putting it on again.

Mr. Reid: I appreciate that advice, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand then that questions that were on the order paper and were partially answered die automatically at the end of the session and all the government has to do is wait us out?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think that's an unfair comment. Certainly the answer to the first part of the question is, naturally, yes, but—

Mr. Reid: Why didn't you just answer?

Hon. Mr. Welch: —the rules with respect to the questions and the period of time during which there must be either interim or full answers still apply. The hon. member can only be actually making a comment about questions that must have been put on the order paper very late in that particular session, or else they would have been covered by the rule which provides for a specified period of time during which the answers must be tabled.

Mr. Reid: Why didn't you just answer?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. House leader might confer with the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld) and see whether he's prepared to give the rest of that answer?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

Ms. Gigantes: I have a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker. As a member of the majority group in Ontario, I'd like to take this opportunity, seeing as how we won't be sitting tomorrow in this Legislature, of wishing the members and guests in our galleries a happy International Women's Day.

ANSWERS TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, and 9 and the interim answers to questions 1 and 6 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 457.)

Mr. Lewis: Not enough.

Mr. Breithaupt: Moving right along.

[3:15]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

INCOME TAX DISCOUNTERS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 10, An Act to amend the Discounting of Income Tax Refunds Act, 1977.

Mr. Breithaupt: I am pleased to rise in support of the second reading of this particular piece of legislation. The members had the benefit of the statement given by the hon. minister on February 28, at which time he outlined certain problems that have led to the necessity of this continuing legislation. In Bill 99, which we had before us in November 1977, I recall that some eight members of both opposition parties spoke in favour of the bill. The sentiments of the House, I think, were clear at that time that the particular problem which has existed and does at present exist was something that we as legislators felt was not in the best interests of the people of Ontario.

We are informed that the average discounting that has occurred is in the nature of some 40 per cent. In the statement the minister has made he has set out certain problems that I hope he will address himself to when he responds to the comments which members have made on second reading.

The first circumstance dealt with the matter of the Ottawa-Hull situation and I would appreciate hearing from the minister whether he believes he is going to be able to resolve that problem and just what recommendations had been made to the responsible federal ministers. He also has commented upon the Borrowers and Depositors Protection Act as a piece of proposed federal legislation. I would hope he would take the opportunity of advising not only his opposite number in Ottawa in the ministry but also the opposition leaders that we in Ontario would look forward to their co-operation to ensure that that legislation is passed, in the same manner we are working together in this Legislature to protect the people of the province.

Surely we have an opportunity to deal with the responsible officials there on both sides of the House of Commons so that their inability to proceed, or their inactivity for one reason or another, is clearly shown as something which we in this Legislature have no sympathy with.

The minister has said that the federal government should move to deal with this matter and we on this side of the House certainly agree with him.

You will be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, that even in the city of Kitchener this problem has arisen. It's not only current in Metropolitan Toronto and in the downtown part of this city where we see the various signs up in shop windows and in areas that have been rented only for a few months. We have had the problem as well in the community, part of which I represent.

There was a lengthy interview and newspaper article in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record on March 2, dealing with a particular concern which had arisen. In this circumstance, a reporter went to one of these operations and was informed that he would be given about 50 per cent of the amount which would be coming back to him based upon a pro forma suggestion as to what he as an individual would be receiving as an income tax rebate.

When contacted the manager of that operation apparently denied that that was a practice. Of course, we could say that there might just have been some confusion in the circumstance and perhaps the person at the desk or in the shop was not fully aware of what the law was. However, I think all of us in the House would find that kind of explanation somewhat far-fetched.

It's clear that there have been practices which have allowed persons to flourish in tax discount business. There have been clearly abuses of the intention of the legislation. It is certainly with all the support that we can muster that we are pleased to support the minister as he prepares to close these particular loopholes.

We understand, of course, that there are some persons who may require certain funds earlier than the tax machinery can provide them, as they have rebates which are forthcoming. However, to have a group of persons living off those requirements and discounting up to a 50 per cent figure is most distasteful. Indeed, I am pleased to see it is unacceptable not only to the minister and his colleagues but to, I hope, all members of the Legislature.

We are prepared to support this bill. I hope that it can be dealt with in all stages this afternoon, and as a result the procedures which have taken place can be stopped immediately. I hope that the bill when proclaimed can deal with this problem and avoid any further difficulties which many citizens are having as the current tax rebate time draws to a close.

We certainly will support the bill and we appreciate the opportunity that the minister has given to bring this legislation in quickly and to have it proceeded with promptly.

Mr. Davison: We in the New Democratic Party will be supporting this Bill 10, An Act to amend the Discounting of Income Tax Refunds Act. The minister will recall that for some long time, for some 14 months before the introduction of this legislation, our party asked the government, over and over, time and time again, to introduce such legislation. When November 8 brought about the minister's introduction of the original Bill 99, we thanked the minister at that time and supported his efforts to bring this situation under some kind of control.

At many times during the last 14 months, my colleagues in the NDP have put forward reason after reason, case after case, and example after example, of why this kind of legislation is needed in Ontario and why these kind of practices had to be put under some kind of control. Anybody who is terribly interested can take the time and look back in Hansard and they will find it all on the record of this House on many, many occasions. The minister will be happy to know that I won't put them all back on the record again this afternoon. I just want to speak briefly on the bill.

Mr. Foulds: Don't encourage us.

Mr. Davison: Bill 10 simply, and I hope effectively, closes the major loophole that few of us—certainly not I and the minister—perceived at the time of the introduction and passing of Bill 99. That was the fact that many of these companies continue along their course of ripping off the consumers, this time by using the route of the promissory note, and they have done so quite effectively.

There are two cases in my riding which have come to my attention. In one, the individual's tax return was calculated to be $350 but the company offered only $72 in what we call instant cash. The remainder of the money was taken up either by a promissory note or by the charges for filling up the income tax form. Another example I have is for a return of $300 where the person was offered $200 in instant cash.

This amendment will close that hole and for that we should be thankful. It may be that in the next months or next year, the companies will find new ways of circumventing the principle of the legislation that this House has put forward. If that's so then we will simply have to adjust the Bill once more to meet that new reality. Hopefully it won't happen; hopefully we will have closed the loopholes today when this bill is given third reading. But if it does, we will have to adjust the bill to meet that new reality or perhaps to consider at some point in time finding the way to outlaw this practice as we now know it.

In any event, while I find that it took some long time to convince the government of the need to bring about this kind of legislation, once we had done so the government moved quickly and effectively through the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and with very good consultation with the opposition members in the House to bring about this legislation. I would like to offer my personal thanks to both the government and to the minister for their actions in that regard.

Mr. B. Newman: I rise to support Bill 10, An Act to amend the Discounting of Income Tax Refunds Act. The minister, in his visit to the city of Windsor on February 17, did make mention to the assembled gathering that he had contemplated introducing this legislation. We were very pleased when, shortly after his promise, legislation was actually introduced.

One of the things that does worry me is that this may not stop the practice. Living as we do in a border community, I just wonder if some of the unscrupulous income tax individuals would not simply transfer their operations to the city of Detroit and be able to carry on that same type of operation from the city of Detroit. There would be no problem for them in bringing the mail over to Windsor and then sending it through to Ottawa for the income tax refund and then having the refund sent to some postal box in the city of Windsor. I'm just wondering if there is some way of preventing an operation like that from ever taking hold.

Mr. Renwick: I want to speak very briefly on the bill. I was not in the assembly at the time Bill 99 was debated and passed, but I do feel, on the initiative made by my colleague, that the government did move to close up this particular fraudulent operation that's been carried on.

I do want to say to the minister that if he watches the kind of bill that is before us now, he's going to see, over a period of time, a constant battle between the administration and those who are misusing this method of carrying on a financial business; and there will always be loopholes. There is no way in which he can close this kind of operation because it operates at a level at which it is not possible for the ministry ever to cope with the administrative problems of enforcement. This kind of so-called white-collar fraudulent operation which is legitimized by Bill 99 is a trap into which the government has walked because it believed there was a social need for this kind of discounting operation.

I want to say to the minister that I think he should be engaged in drafting legislation to outlaw, in the province of Ontario, this particular kind of operation.

I want to make a suggestion; I did make it in a short note to the minister a few days ago: There is a kind of a fundamental principle of constitutional law that all institutions in Ontario, regardless of their origin—federal, provincial or extraterritorial—must comply with laws of general application. I think, therefore, it would be possible to outlaw—except through recognized financial institutions—such a practice by any citizen who has a liquidated claim in money against the government or who has money or a debt owing by the government, which, in fact, is a liquidated claim; that all those transactions cannot be discounted by anybody in the province except through a recognized financial institution.

When you select 95 per cent, Mr. Speaker, you can be certain that the void in the law which permitted this operation to take place was not gauged upon making that kind of minimal financial reward out of the system which has evolved. But I do think it is quite possible, through the good offices of the government, to persuade the chartered banks that they can, in fact engage in this kind of discounting operation if for no other reason than to provide an additional banking service to people who require this kind of assistance. We also know that it may well be that we would see an operation through the banks which would be of some value. I don't know whether or not the loan and trust corporations would be able to engage in it, nor do I know whether or not the finance companies would be able to engage in it as a legitimate operation; but it is not beyond the wit of this government to devise legislation to outlaw this kind of operation and to provide for it being carried on only through recognized financial institutions.

I want to speak to one other point only. I listened to the minister's statement when he introduced Bill 10. I was particularly interested in the comment he made with respect to the border problem. He used, as an example, the border between the province of Ontario and Quebec. The member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) has referred to the border between Ontario and the state of Michigan.

[3:30]

It does seem to me, certainly, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, that it would be possible for the minister to deal directly with his counterpart in the government of Quebec—perhaps with the co-operation of the federal government if that's necessary, but in any event on a mutual basis with his counterpart in Quebec—to work out a reciprocal enforcement operation that would be effective in preventing the kind of across-the-river operation that I understand the minister referred to in his statement to the House.

Perhaps the same kind of reciprocal arrangements could be made with the state of Michigan, which is an alert state, and certainly with some other states, such as the state of New York bordering on the province of Ontario, because I am quite certain that the same social problem exists in all of those jurisdictions.

I do not think it is beyond the wit of the ministry both to devise a bill to outlaw this form of transaction and, by co-operation with the adjoining states and with the adjoining provinces, to make the enforcement effective.

If the minister is going to pursue this route, the route set out in Bill 99, I cannot criticize the bill, and the amendment to close this particular gap is one method of doing it. But I would say to the minister that if there continue to be gaps appearing, and ways to circumvent, and difficulties in enforcement of the intention of this bill, he should be prepared, without any undue delay, to move to outlaw them. If they want to hire constitutional lawyers to argue the case, that's fine. The minister can always find his own lawyers to counter it or he can refer its constitutionality under the Constitutional Questions Act and find out whether or not, in fact, he can outlaw it.

Mr. Breihaupt: In his reply could the minister also perhaps enlighten the House as to what publicity he intends to give so that the people of the province will know that this legislation is clearly going to be in place and that the 95 per cent figure is a common expectation throughout the province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the member for Kitchener has raised some direct questions which I would like to deal with directly in view of the fact that I will be visiting his fair city this Thursday.

Mr. Haggerty: Don't spoil it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not going to check on the tax discounters there—and I now have their address in front of me, I might add—but to do other good works in that fair city.

I would like to address immediately the efforts on the BDPA. Already I have used the occasion of a dinner meeting I arranged with Mr. Allmand to impress upon him our desire that the BDPA either go forward or die so that the various provinces will know whether we have to move into some of those voids or that the voids will be filled immediately.

I would be happy to express, certainly to the leaders of the two opposition parties in Ottawa, our desire to see that that bill comes forward quickly, although I suspect Mr. Allmand and others have other plans in the meantime which may prohibit the BDPA from coming on stream certainly for this tax season.

I think it's fair to anticipate that the new government next fall will proceed with the BDPA with our encouragement. It may be a better Act, in fact.

In any case, we have impressed that urgency on them. In fact, next week I will have the privilege of attending my first federal-provincial meeting of consumer ministers. At that time the matter of both the standing of the BDPA—is it going forward, is it dying and what changes are being made?—will be discussed, I might add, at our initiative.

Secondly, we will have some informal talks with Mr. Allmand once again about some other ways in which we may grapple with the Ottawa-Hull situation in the meantime. As well, I will avail myself of that opportunity to discuss with my counterpart from Quebec the very matters that the member for Riverdale raised with regard to seeing if some joint co-operation can't be worked out with Quebec. All that will be done literally nine days from today when we all assemble in the great city of Victoria to chat about consumer matters for a couple of days.

Mr. Haggerty: The Victoria charter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Hamilton Centre has quite properly noted the haste with which we moved last fall, for which we don't apologize. I suppose I am not a clever enough lawyer to have anticipated all the devious moves that the tax discounters have thought of to circumvent the legislation that was passed with the co-operation of all parties last fall. Perhaps if the member for Riverdale had been with us at that time, he would have been clever enough to have spotted them.

I might add that obviously the member for Riverdale did miss a couple of matters when he went over Hansard last fall—

Mr. Foulds: Not many.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —or else he would have realized that the initiative came from this government, not from his colleague from Hamilton Centre. However, in the interests of time we won't cover that territory.

Mr. Foulds: That's uncalled for.

Mr. Warner: It was pressure here, and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We'll discuss it when I'm back with the next series of amendments.

Mr. Bounsall: You sounded like your father.

Mr. Warner: He may not be complimented.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Thank you very much. I appreciate that. In any case, actually, I don't terribly disagree with the remarks made by the member for Riverdale. I do have some very real concern that I am either going to have to come back here and find a way to constitutionally outlaw the tax discounters, or I'm going to be back here regularly closing some more loopholes that they have found. I am quite aware of that problem.

I would hope that federal legislation would solve the problem in such a fashion that that might not be necessary. Unless they go the route of outlawing them, then I might be back here at a later time with such legislation. I have some hope, however. The tax discounters are in business in other provinces. In fact, the head office of the major operator is in Alberta. If we can just make it difficult enough for them to operate in Ontario, perhaps they will pack up and go somewhere else without our having to outlaw them. They have hired a very fancy, excellent constitutional lawyer. They have put us on notice—

Mr. Renwick: He used to be with the government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is correct.

Mr. Kerrio: Who's the fancy lawyer?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It shows how excellent his credentials are, and we will no doubt be hearing from him in the next period of time. I think we should be fair to the House, however. As the lawyers here will attest, passing this today does not mean they are going to close up tomorrow. As soon as we go out and start laying the charges, the people are going to presume themselves innocent, as they ought to and as they are entitled to do under our laws, and continue to operate through this tax season until the trials and appeals that are certainly going to occur are finished. They are going to be in business through this tax season, unfortunately.

What we are going to do—and this addresses some of the remarks made latterly by the member for Kitchener—is immediately upon passage of this bill to get out in the field and make sure we cover each and every tax discounter that is in the field. Where we catch the slightest violation of our legislation, we are going to lay charges immediately.

I would hope the laying of those charges will go a long way towards alerting the public of this province to the existence of the legislation. I also would have hoped some of the sections of Bill 99, which we passed last fall, would at least have been followed by the tax discounters who were staying in business and which required some notices to be posted—I believe it is in section 8 of that legislation—in the offices of the tax discounters. They didn't obey that.

In any case, prior to spending any great amount of government funds on advertisements in newspapers and so on, we are going to go the route of laying charges immediately, pressing them rather severely and hoping the ultimate publicity does it.

Mr. Nixon: You are not going to go into all the weeklies?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A few, on special request. Where we have closed an LCBO outlet, we will advertise in that local weekly.

Mr. Nixon: Good. You have got to keep up that flow of money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case, I want to express my appreciation to the members of the assembly for their support of this initiative. I can in turn assure the members of the assembly we are going to prosecute immediately and quickly. If there are new loopholes developed, we are going to be back here. I hope it doesn't happen, but we are going to chase them and chase them until effectively they are going to stick to the 95 per cent requirement or they are going to get out of this province.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

FAMILY LAW REFORM ACT

House in committee of the whole on Bill 59, An Act to reform the Law respecting Property Rights and Support Obligations between Married Persons and in other Family Relationships.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If it would be in order, perhaps the committee could record some agreement with respect to how we would handle the consideration and final determination of proposed amendments under the bill. It was hoped that, indeed, following the detailed discussion in committee we could stack all the necessary votes with respect to amendments and have a vote on these amendments at the end of the consideration of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that following the detailed discussion in committee all the necessary votes with respect to amendments be stacked and a vote be taken on these amendments at the end of the consideration of the bill.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any comments or amendments on this bill?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to amendments, let me just congratulate the chairman of the justice committee and the members—all parties—who worked so hard in committee on this legislation, and record my appreciation for their efforts and the extent to which we in the Ministry of the Attorney General benefited from their efforts.

On section 1:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Ms. Gigantes moves that section 1, clause f, be amended by adding thereto the following subclause: "(iv) is a widower or a widow."

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Chairman, as you will recall, this Legislature in the fall dealt with two other bills in the family law reform package which the government has introduced. The amendment I am making is an amendment that changes Bill 59 so as to permit a widow or a widower to receive the same treatment under the legislation now before us as would a separated person or a divorced person. As Bill 59 now stands, this is not true. In effect, there is an element of discrimination within the bill because of that.

It is my feeling that Bill 60, which was the bill which we considered and passed earlier in this session, does not adequately cover the situation of a widow or a widower, either in the intestate or the testate situation. I will attempt to explain that, Mr. Chairman. In Bill 60, section 46, there were provisions that a widow or widower, where a will was for an amount less than $75,000, would be eligible for the total amount of the will; a property of $75,000. Where a property was more than $75,000, the widow or widower would be eligible to receive $75,000 plus a fraction—depending on the number of children—of the value of the rest of the property. [3:45]

Our feeling is that in Bill 59 the person who is a widow or a widower is being discriminated against if the value of the property involved in the will is more, for example, in the assets section, than $150,000. If, for example, 20 years ago a couple purchased a home which has increased in value until the year 1978 when the home is now worth more than $150,000, under this bill the surviving spouse would not be automatically eligible to the matrimonial home, if this bill is taken in conjunction with Bill 60. We feel this must be changed and this is one reason for the amendment.

This is the case without a will, the first case I mentioned. In the second case, where there is a will, the surviving spouse can apply for support under the terms of Bill 59, but there is no right under Bill 59 for a sharing of assets in the case of a widow or a widower. This discrimination leaves us in the kind of insane situation where Bill 59 would provide more protection to a spouse who has separated or divorced than it would provide to a widow or a widower.

We will be dealing later with a second amendment to section 4 which follows very much from the same kind of principle as is being introduced in this amendment. We feel strongly that this clause added to section 1 is necessary if we wish to remove discrimination against married people whose marriage is terminated due to death.

Mrs. Campbell: I would like to join in the debate with reference to this proposed amendment. I have to say that from the start it has given me one of my greatest problems with this legislation. There is no doubt that the bill which is referred to as the succession law reform bill carries out a completely different approach to the marriage and to the property rights from the theme of the bill which is before us now.

The problem that I have, of course, is if we add this particular clause to this bill, what is the effect then on the scheme of the other legislation which is also already in law? I have a very real concern that in the succession law reform bill we have faltered along, and I, as much as anyone, am responsible because I was in this House when it passed. We did falter along with the old principle basically of the Dependents' Relief Act. We haven't really changed the principle.

It is true that under this particular legislation, on an application, a judge may award a division of property—he may do, or she may do, many things—but nevertheless it would have to be by way of an application for support, as I say, in the philosophy of the Dependents' Relief Act. I would have hoped that someone in the ministry could have seen the difficulties with these two bills, and the different approach. It seems to me that the economic partnership to which we address ourselves in the bill before us is a matter which arises ab initio and not at the end of a marriage broken by death.

I personally would ask the Attorney General if he would look at this particularly strange combination. I would, I must confess, rather see him make a commitment to this House to bring forward an amendment to the Succession Law Reform Act which would bring it into the economic partnership philosophy of this bill, because I really don't know what effect this amendment would have, particularly in the face of an intestacy.

I want to accept the amendment, I really do. But I am at a loss as to how that can achieve anything other than confusion and chaos as it relates to the Succession Law Reform Act. I suppose at this point, and having in mind that we will be voting later, I would like to hear from the Attorney General. I am sure he would acknowledge that there are two basic things which have a certain dichotomy as they relate to the economic partnership ideology of this bill. Therefore, at this point I am simply going to ask him to comment and then I can make my decisions at a later time.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment because I think it is very important that we do establish this principle that a survivor of a marriage should be on the same basis as a person who is involved in a marriage breakup. The legislation as it is before us clearly discriminates against spouses whose marriage is dissolved by death and it puts them in a worse position in some cases than under the existing law, since dower is abolished—

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, don't mention dower.

Ms. Bryden: —and also puts them in a worse position than people who suffer a marriage breakup.

There seems to be a feeling abroad that this failure to have the present law apply in the case of death was possibly an oversight on the part of the government. But it is really quite clear, if you look at the original pamphlet which the government brought out at the time it brought out its position paper on the legislation, that it never at any time intended to cover the case of death.

The pamphlet states, "The family asset system would apply only as long as both husband and wife are living and only when their marriage breaks down." Also, the parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General, in a letter to the Ottawa Citizen replying to some other letters written on the legislation, stated quite clearly—the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling)—that, "It was never intended that the Family Law Reform Act deal with the disposal of assets on death."

I don't know what the motivation of the government was in not including dissolution on death in order to avoid the discriminatory situation that has arisen. It must be that they thought that Bill 60, which is now law, the Succession Law Reform Act, covered the situation adequately, but we have discovered that it does not in any sense of the word cover the situation adequately or provide equality between people who suffer marriage breakup and people whose marriage ends on death.

Therefore, I think we must amend one or the other Act and I really think that the suggestion of the member for St. George that we amend the Succession Law Reform Act is incorrect in that it is really replacing the old Dependents' Relief Act and providing for the situation where there is intestacy and things of that sort. What it provides is not equivalent to what is provided under Bill 59, and therefore it seems to me that Bill 59 is the bill that must be amended to produce this equality.

It is true that spouses who feel they have not got their equal share of the assets can go to court, but I submit that they should not have to go to court to establish that, because under Bill 59 it is provided that in cases of marriage breakup the equal sharing of assets is automatic unless it is set aside by a court or by a marriage contract. We all know the expense of going to court, the long delays and the fact that in most cases it is the women who will be affected by this lack of provision in the law and that they will be expected then to use up some of their slim resources when they are the survivors of marriages in trying to establish what should be their right.

The preamble to Bill 59 says that this legislation recognizes that marriage is a partnership and recognizes the equality of the spouses. It seems to me that a marriage which ends in death must have that recognition attached to it if this government is going to indicate to the women of this province that it really believes in those principles in the preamble. It seems to me the failure to put in this clause that we are recommending will mean it does not really believe that marriage is a partnership and does not really believe the spouses should be treated as equals.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to concur with the Attorney General in his earlier comments about the work that's been put into this legislation, for a period of two years now we've been discussing the bill and we've had submissions from a variety of groups. I think basically my comments are directed to the ministry and to all my colleagues on all sides of the House who have deliberately attempted to try to make the bill as workable and as balanced as possible. I think we've approached this basically on a non-partisan basis and hopefully this debate here in the House can continue in that fashion.

The proposed amendment arises because of the technicalities of the legislation that was part of the family law package. We passed legislation here in that package dealing with marriage. We passed legislation dealing with children. We passed legislation dealing with Bill 60, An Act to reform the Law respecting Succession to the Estates of Deceased Persons. As in each of these areas, this legislation was intended to deal with specific problems within a specific field.

[4:00]

I think my colleague from St. George has expressed our concern and our sympathy for the amendment but it is difficult to see how, if we are going to have a workable piece of legislation, we can possibly accept this amendment to this legislation. We must clear up what Bill 59 is about. I would say to the member for Carleton East, as I read it—and somebody may correct me here—even the question of spouse did not deal with people who are divorced.

In fact, spouse is intended to deal with people who are separated. That is the definition of spouse. This bill was intended to deal with a situation where there is a breakup and the parties are not divorced. It was not intended to deal with disposition on death as well. So that aspect of it certainly has to be cleared up.

As my colleague from St. George said, there is no objection surely to doing away with dowries. Britain, where dower originated, did away with dower back in 1925. Dower was a word that was used to give women in this province some expectation of having something, but when one got down to brass tacks and dollars and cents, in many cases dollar didn't mean very much. What is one-third of a life interest worth when one gets down to calculate it?

Mrs. Campbell: There is a mortgage.

Mr. Roy: Yes, and all the complications of that. But there can't be any objection to that. I understand the purpose of the amendment but I look at Bill 60 and I ask the Attorney General whether it is not possible in section 69, of that bill, where the court is asked to look at various things, that one of the things the court could look at is the provision of the rights and obligations under Bill 59. An amendment might be included in the estates legislation. That's where the amendment should go.

I put that to the Attorney General and maybe we could discuss that. I have sympathy with the fact that we have decided to proceed on a basis of the partnership of marriage and that one of the spouses could do by will indirectly what he or she could not do directly during the period of marriage. I was wondering whether that would be too offensive to the principles, and I understand one of the principles of devolution and of wills is that there must be freedom given through a will.

My concern basically is in the area where there is a will, by the way, not where there is an intestacy because the estates bill sufficiently deals with that. I wonder whether it is not possible to put in the estates Act some provision where the court looks at a variety of things. I am looking at section 69 which deals with all sorts of criteria that the court can look at. One of the things the court could look at could be the provisions of Bill 59 and the intentions that we have in that bill.

Even with as much sympathy as we have for the amendment, I would say to the previous speaker, the member for Beaches-Woodbine, that my colleague from St. George is right on when she says it would be difficult for us to deal with that particular amendment in this legislation. We have to look elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I say at the outset that I am quite in sympathy with the motive behind the proposed amendment but, repeating what my friend, the member for Ottawa East has said, I agree with the member for St. George that this would not be the appropriate legislation in which to introduce such an amendment. In fact, if that were to be the case, it would require fundamental rewriting of the Succession Law Reform Act.

At the same time, I should hasten to add that the matter is much more complicated than what has been suggested. As members know, the freedom of testation is a very basic right and a basic principle in this province. We have to bear in mind that we are not only considering the surviving spouse; we're considering the children and other beneficiaries.

For example, if I might present an example to indicate that the matter is somewhat more complicated than has been suggested: Last night I was speaking in Mississauga and there was some interest in relation to our deliberations today. A woman, a widow, approached me; she was very concerned about our legislation because when her husband died she inherited the home—quite a valuable home in this particular case—and she is very concerned with what risk she is undertaking in remarrying. What's going to happen to that home if the marriage doesn't work out? To what extent are her rights in relation to that home going to be affected?

As she quite properly pointed out, there are probably many more widows in the province living in similar circumstances, living in the matrimonial home, and who are concerned about the extent to which their property rights will be affected by this bill as well as the rights of the children and perhaps the children of the first marriage.

I only mention this illustration to indicate that one should not lightly support a principle that leads to a substantial interference with the testator's rights, because there are going to be perhaps many other people adversely concerned.

Furthermore, I wonder to what extent there is a problem in this particular case. Obviously the issue is different when it arises as a result of a marriage breakdown as opposed to a death. For example, certain studies have been done in the judicial district of York in relation to matters related to the Dependents' Relief Act. I can state the happy fact is that where spouses lived together until death has parted them, it's in something less than one per cent of the cases that any issue has arisen in relation to Dependents' Relief Act applications. Those happen to be the hard statistics that are available, at least in the largest county in the province.

I suggest that in this particular matter we are dealing with somewhat of a non-problem. The extent to which children, for example, could be adversely affected by this, and the concerns of the widow who spoke to me last night, I think must be given considerable weight in such a matter.

I would like to correct the member for Beaches-Woodbine and point out that the Dependants' Relief Act does not necessarily require an application to court. In a case where a widow is deprived of any right in the house by reason of the will, and if an application went to court, the likelihood in those very small percentages of cases where this is a factor is that that the court would order that she at least have possession of the premises during her lifetime. But it need not go to court. As a matter of fact, the executors could settle the matter and it's quite likely that that would be the result.

Although I am in great sympathy with the spirit behind the proposed amendment, I reiterate what has been stated: This is not the appropriate legislation. While I am quite prepared to consider any useful amendments to the Succession Law Reform Act in order to enshrine in that legislation the basic principle, that is supported on all sides of the House, namely the economic partnership of the marriage, I will do so, but at the same time I say to my friends across the aisle that we have worked very usefully together in the interests of the public and one has to be cautious about the extent to which we interfere with the testator's right. In any event, that may be the subject for further discussion, but for the reasons I stated, it would be most unwise and not in the public interest to accept such an amendment.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might have some clarification. Does the Attorney General realize that in the Succession Law Reform Act there is a provision, which to me seems very sinister or capable of being sinister, and that is the right of a court to take into consideration not just the will, but any statement of the testator—and I'm using that as the masculine term—that may be made by way of a reason or explanation? Does the Attorney General really feel that that gives balance to this? The court has a unilateral statement which is not the subject of any cross-examination and this could have a very adverse effect on the right of the widow to bring forward any proposition of an economic partnership. Could the Attorney General comment on that provision?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'm not sure that this is a place to comment on Bill 60.

Mrs. Campbell: Indeed it is.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the section that deals with including any statement in writing signed by the deceased—

Mrs. Campbell: That's right.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes. Obviously the deceased is not in a position to—

Mrs. Campbell: To be cross-examined.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, he's not in the position to give evidence whereas the applicant is, so the court is faced with a written statement of the deceased, and the court can give that statement whatever weight it might choose to, which may be very little weight, and the rights of the deceased are really very limited just by reason of his or her absence, whereas the applicant is there and obviously that evidence is going to be given greater weight simply by reason of all the circumstances. But as I read all of the many subsections in relation to section 69, I think the court is invited to take in all possible circumstances that will assist the court in arriving at a just result.

Again, I did not come here today prepared to debate that particular section of the Succession Law Reform Act but I'd be quite prepared to discuss it with the hon. member opposite as we consider whether or not any amendments should be made to this legislation. That's the best explanation that I can give at this point.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one more thing? Does the Attorney General not appreciate that the woman in this case may be placed in the position of trying to prove how many people didn't get killed because we had crosswalks? Just analyse what you're asking of her.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'd like to make the point, Mr. Chairman, that I don't know that it's always necessarily going to be the woman who is the applicant.

Mrs. Campbell: I quite agree, but the concern at the moment is that.

[4:15]

Mr. Bounsell: I agree with the Attorney General in his remarks about how many people worked so long and so hard on this bill, and it's obvious some of the work is still just starting, to get family law reform properly in this province.

Your sympathy is not quite a replacement for some action in this area or some commitment to fix up—if you can do it in other Acts: the Succession Law Reform Act and Estates Act and what have you—the sections which should be cleared up that this amendment speaks to. If the Attorney General does not want to have this loose end unravelling forever—and I will agree it perhaps affects only one per cent of the marriages in this province, according to your statistics, in which a spouse becomes deceased—what is he prepared to do about it?

Are you prepared to let that unravel forever? Or are you, in this Act, going to do the very simple thing as far as property and asset portions of estates go, and ensure that the surviving spouse gets no lesser rights than a person involved in a divorce, or is separated with no contemplation of divorce, or involved in a nullified marriage, would get under this Act, where that person has been willed less?

That is what this amendment is all about and the Attorney General has not made any other sound apart from being sympathetic. That's all very well but how long do we wait for the sympathetic response from the Attorney General to become some sort of concrete legislation? We have the route here to do it, which does not in any material way affect Bill 60 or Bill 59 at all. You have not covered it properly in Bill 60 or 59 for those persons who would receive in a will, with the death of a spouse, less than what they would receive if they commenced a divorce action the day before the death of that spouse.

Would you as the Attorney General or in your capacity as a practising lawyer, to which you may hopefully soon return, or as an MPP, advise a female constituent, to be really safe, knowing that her husband has a will but not knowing exactly what's in the will, the day before her sick husband's death to institute a divorce action? That's the only way you could really be assured of the same sort of equity that occurs—where it does occur—in this bill.

Certainly in looking through what we would normally call the support sections of Bill 60, it is very clearly and carefully tied down, in that a spouse can receive support from the estate. That's done very nicely in Bill 60. What you didn't tie down was the situation, as this amendment speaks to, where they are left in a disadvantaged position by a will as it relates to property and assets.

Certainly if there is no will and if the estate does not exceed $150,000, then again the woman finds herself in no particular disadvantaged situation. But in estates of more than $150,000, where it's a single widow only and no will, again an amendment of the type in this bill would be very useful.

I don't need to remind the Attorney General of the provisions of Bill 60 when there is no will. I am sure he has them firmly engraved upon his mind. But if there is no will and the estate is $75,000 or less, then she gets what is there. If it is over $75,000, she gets $75,000. The only way under that Act that she would be in the comparable situation of a divorced person under this Act would be if the estate then exceeded $150,000. But if it does exceed $150,000, then a single person—the spouse having died—would be in a disadvantaged position in that bill, relative to this one, if he or she had entered an action for divorce the day before.

That is very definitely a loose end, which I think the Attorney General should make a commitment to fix up, and not leave it to be unravelled throughout the rest of time in this province. As I have said, sympathy is no substitute for action.

Mr. Lawlor: Surely, the point has been well made. It can't be denied that, despite the somewhat prolonged gestation of this legislation, that nub issue was not, with respect, given sufficient surveillance. The only bodies that directed their remarks to it, as I recall, were law societies and law groups; and there weren't many of them. The major brief came from the Law Society itself, and we didn't spend all that much time on it.

It is probably correct that Bill 59 is not quite the proper place; but I would like to extract from the Attorney General some kind of commitment to review Bill 60, in that very narrow dimension. We have some myth abroad that this kind of legislation, generally, has some kind of Egyptian rigidity; that when it comes into being it will remain for time memorial—if not immemorial. And it is not. Here it is; we have hardly got it passed, and we can see a defect in it.

One area of defect lies on the testacy side. On the intestacy, we can argue ad nauseam among ourselves as to the numbers game, as to whether the preferred share of $75,000, is adequate or inadequate; should it be $125,000, should it be $250,000; and do we bring it into line with the succession duty of the inter-spousal relationship? Who knows? As the Attorney General points out, there has to be some space left for other heirs, etc. In one instance, the wife would share the remaining half of the estate, or in some instances, the third. That basic setup wasn't profoundly argued, nor would I be prepared at this time to profoundly argue it.

But on the side of wills, on the side of exclusions, a weakness has appeared. Unless what can be derived through what was the Dependants' Relief Act, commensurate with the benefits that are derivable in other circumstances, then that balance must be rectified and made plain. I would ask you to give good consideration, coming into the fall, to introducing legislation precisely to do that.

Ms. Gigantes: I would like to comment on a few of the remarks that have been made around the House as we have discussed this amendment. It seems to me that we are clear now, that what we are talking about is the principle involved. Let me read to you a section of the introduction to the bill. This bill begins, "Whereas it is desirable to encourage and strengthen the role of the family in society, and whereas for that purpose it is necessary to recognize the equal position of spouses as individuals within marriage and to recognize marriage as a form of partnership—" how can we support those principles in a bill that says in principle that a widow or a widower doesn't have the same right to a share of assets that a divorced or a separated spouse has?

I'm not terribly impressed. I'm sure it would have been nice for us to see ahead when we were dealing with Bill 60 and to bring in whatever motion would have been necessary to amend Bill 60 so that it would have fallen in line with the operations of Bill 59, as it's now before us, and the methodology that Bill 59 uses to ensure that these principles I've just spoken about, just read from the first part of the bill, are brought into effect in marriages in Ontario, but that did not happen. That did not happen, and it is not a difficult thing right now to make sure within the terms of this bill—totally appropriate within the terms of this bill—to say quite simply that all the rights that are given concerning the sharing of property in Bill 59 to separated or divorced spouses shall also be given to widows and widowers.

The Attorney General talks about the testator's right. How can we talk about a testator's right that is in defiance of the basic principle enunciated in this bill and spelled out as carefully as we can over two years of work that there shall be a sharing of the assets of the marriage? How can we talk about the right of a testator that goes beyond that? Surely this is the very principle that all these reforms relate to? We want to say that above all else what we're looking for in this package of reforms, and particularly in this bill, is an equality of sharing of those assets built up over the lifetime of the marriage.

I think this is our opportunity quite simply to make sure that that principle applies to a spouse whose marriage breaks up because of the death of the other spouse. It's that simple. There's nothing complicated about it. I think we should move on it now.

Mr. Sterling: I see no problem with the concept involved here. I fully support the idea that a widow would have the same rights as she would have on a separation, but I think we're dealing with two different types of situations.

Mr. Warner: Here comes the "but."

Mr. Sterling: When we're talking about settlement on a separation we're talking about a situation where there are two people—

Mr. Lupusella: We have been trying to believe you.

Mr. Sterling:—and children to take into account. When we're talking about succession law reform we're talking about a situation where one spouse is no longer there to take care of.

Ms. Gigantes: It is just a minimum guarantee.

Mr. Sterling: The other problem that is not taken into account is the fact that this does have a very deep effect on the rest of the Act. If you change this particular section, basically you're saying, "Rip the whole Act open again, and start from scratch."

Mr. Bounsall: No, we're not.

Mr. Sterling: "Section 4 must be amended."

Mr. Bounsall: We have the amendment.

Ms. Gigantes: It's simple, relax.

Mr. Sterling: You have to go through the whole thing to provide for all of the other sections and deal with them.

Mr. Bounsall: We have. There are three in total. There are three other sections.

Mr. Roy: Listen to the legal experts here.

Mr. Sterling: I also might indicate that on the death of one spouse, if we were to put the amendment in, what would the court look at? Would it look at this particular bill or the other bill in determining what the court was going to award to the widow or the widower? If we had a situation where we have an estate of $15,000, fine, it may reach an equitable solution; but what about the normal couple in our society who don't have those kinds of assets? Will the court interpret the situation such that they are to be given the discretion to give less than they would be entitled under the present Succession Law Reform Act?

[4:30]

I go back to the original situation. We are dealing with two different problems. In one we are dealing with succession law reform and in the other we are dealing with a matrimonial dispute. Therefore, I think we should keep them separate and apart from each other.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, despite the rather vaunted objective of the government in this legislation to bring equality to the spouses, it would appear that what the legislation now says, without the adoption of this amendment, is that marriage is a partnership only if it breaks up. It is not a partnership in any other sense in the eyes of the government if it refuses to accept this amendment.

The relief that is under Bill 60 for a spouse who feels a will has deprived her of the support she needs is a different kind of relief. She has to go on hands and knees to the court and say, "I have needs, and my spouse has willed away the family home or any other assets that are sharable. Please give me back some of these—whatever my needs require."

Under Bill 59, she is entitled by right to 50 per cent of the sharable assets. The principle is that she has made a contribution during the marriage to the acquisition of those assets in whatever form her contribution may have been made, either in being the person who stayed in the home and ran the home and looked after the children or in contributing work or money—in any way she has contributed to those assets—and therefore has a right to an equal sharing of them.

Bill 60 does not allow for that kind of consideration to be taken in the assessing of her needs. Therefore, it is not an answer to the question of whether or not she is receiving her share under the partnership concept.

The Attorney General mentioned that the possessory right to the matrimonial home would not have to be contested in the courts; if the will said the home which was in the deceased spouse's name were to go to some other person, she would still have her possessory right. I would concede that is probably true, but she would not have a right to 50 per cent of the value of that home which, under Bill 59, would be her right if the marriage had broken up. I would ask the Attorney General if I am correct in that assumption?

As far as the sacred rights of the testator are concerned, it seems to me that when dower rights were established they restricted the sacred rights of the testator to cut his wife out of the family home completely. It seems to me that was done as a matter of public policy and that this is what is being asked in this amendment, that as a matter of public policy the sacred rights of the testator should be restricted to recognize the principle that is enunciated in this bill, namely that we "recognize the equal position of spouses as individuals within marriage . . ." That is in the preamble to the bill, and I would ask the Attorney General how he can adopt that principle and not adopt this amendment.

Mr. Bounsall: I would like to make a brief comment to the parliamentary assistant. He mentioned that the whole bill needed to be rewritten. It may well need to be rewritten for other reasons, but for this reason there are only three other clauses that need amendment. The legislative counsel has gone through the clauses carefully; two of them, a senior and a junior I understand, looked at it in this regard. The only other section that needs amendment is, of course, the main one, section 4; but, in order to affect section 4, that is why this one is in section 1, and in sections 41 and 45 of this bill.

So it is no problem if that is the only disadvantage which the parliamentary assistant has in his mind in terms of building this appropriate concept into this bill at this time. If he has thought of a few more appropriate amendments that would put this into effect even more we on this side would accept gladly the amendments as proposed by him.

Mr. Sterling: I would only respond to the hon. member that my basic objection is that I believe it should be in the Succession Law Reform Act. I have said it would present problems within this particular Act, in other sections.

Mr. Bounsall: It's too bad the Attorney General wouldn't make that commitment to someone like yourself who is interested in everything being done properly—as a fellow engineer.

Mrs. Campbell: Since everybody is speaking two or three times to each section, Mr. Chairman, I think it is incumbent upon me, since I was the one who invited the Attorney General to give consideration to a commitment to us with reference to the Succession Law Reform Act, to recognize, ab initio—and I think this is where the Attorney General, if I may say so with respect, is perhaps in error because the incident of the marriage surely takes effect ab initio. You don't wander through a marriage to find out at what point you have an economic partnership.

I think that since the Attorney General has been prepared to accept that in family law legislation it would be very sad indeed if he were to take the position now that a testator would have the right to do whatever he liked. I don't think that is the case today even. I don't think we should be involved in that sort of dialogue. I would ask the Attorney General to give his assurances that the dichotomies between these two bills will, in fact, be corrected.

Mr. Renwick: I was hoping the Attorney General would comment on what has been said. I understand he has already spoken about it but I need some clarification.

Wherever the dividing line between the two bills may fall, it can be done just as easily in this bill without having to deal through the succession bill. I may be quite wrong and it is with some temerity at this point that I enter the technicalities of this debate, but it does seem to me that what we are trying to say by this amendment is that it prohibits a testator or a testatrix from, by testamentary disposition or under the law of intestate succession, going below the floor that would be established by this bill. In a very real sense all that the amendment proposes is that that is the floor level below which no one would fall with respect to the disposition being made to the surviving spouse.

It does seem to me that we often have that kind of problem. I don't know whether it's the correct term but I am going to use it whether it is correct or not, it is always necessary to have notch provisions in situations such as this. The fact that while it may appear of relatively late date that the problem has been raised, I can see no reason, unless you can raise a specific insurmountable technical reason, why the change cannot be made in this bill without awaiting some undertaking from the ministry as to whether or not they will change the succession bill.

I think it is extremely important, altogether apart from this particular amendment, that the other bills that have already been passed in the package be left alone for a while and not be subject to amendment from time to time. It would appear to me—again, subject to being told that there's an insurmountable legislative drafting problem involved in it—that the amendment should be accepted and whatever notch provision is required to relate this Act to the Succession Law Reform Act should be done in this Act.

I would ask the minister to seriously consider accepting the amendment, as I would ask our colleagues in the Liberal Party.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister? Are there any further comments?

Mr. Bounsall: If the Attorney General is not responding—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't really wish to respond and have to hear from the member for Windsor-Sandwich on six further subsequent occasions. I'm quite prepared to respond, but since we have heard from the member for Windsor-Sandwich—I think this is the seventh time—I thought he should have another five times before I would demonstrate sufficient temerity to respond.

Mr. Bounsall: I would just like to ask the Attorney General one question. It makes me uncomfortable, it puts me in an uncomfortable spot. I'm interested to know if it puts the Attorney General in an uncomfortable spot when, giving his best advice to whoever comes to see him in whatever capacity they come, he is required to respond to them with: "In the absence of knowing what is in a will which is written, I advise you with your spouse being ill and nigh unto death to institute a commencement for divorce as provided for under subsection 3 of section 4 of this Act."

Doesn't bother you eh?

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Well, I'm not going to respond to foolish questions from the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

Mr. G. Taylor: It's because he's an engineer.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I want to make it very clear, Mr. Chairman, that at no time do we suggest that there's anything sacred about the rights of a testator. I think the dependant relief provisions as now written in the succession law reform legislation make it quite clear that there is no such sacred right. I have been requested by my good friends and colleagues, the justice critics of the official opposition and the New Democratic Party, to review Bill 60 in this context; I have been asked to give them a commitment and in view of the fact that the request has come from these two distinguished members of the Legislature, I will, of course, accede to their request and make such a commitment, because I personally believe there are many factors to be considered, particularly as I believe that any amendment should be to Bill 60, if it's required, and not to Bill 59.

Further, although I have great respect for the views expressed by the member for Riverdale, I'm not at this point prepared to accede to his suggestion that the proposed amendment makes it clear that only a "floor," to quote him, is intended. I think it could be said, for example, that Bills 59 and 60 would be considered cumulative. I think there would be considerable problems which might arise in relation to that, quite apart from what, in my view, would be a substantial change in the law with respect to testation. I might say that I think this conclusion was recognized by the former government of Manitoba, because it's often said to me, particularly from members of the New Democratic Party, that the bill that was proposed and passed by that government was legislation to be looked to in this area. [4:45]

I think it may be of interest to remind the members of the New Democratic Party that even in that Manitoba legislation it was not suggested that this sharing as set out in the bill should take place after death. That government in its wisdom otherwise decided there were very different principles involved. The Canadian Bar Association through the family law and wills and trusts subsections—and I don't suggest they should have the last word or be considered to be the last word—at no time has ever suggested that it was necessary to provide for a fixed share on death.

Those who practise in this area from day to day just didn't see the problem that has been suggested. Notwithstanding these remarks, I repeat my undertaking to the justice critics of the official opposition and the New Democratic Party that I would like to sit down with them and review again Bill 60 with a view to seeing whether or not we can improve that legislation in the direction that has been suggested, notwithstanding the fact that the ink is barely dry on it.

Mr. Renwick: I don't know whether there is any point, in view of the comment made by the Attorney General, in pursuing the matter further. I don't know quite what that undertaking was. It certainly was not acceptance of the basic principle that was involved in the proposed amendment. It was very far from it.

I can well understand a specified concern to want to understand the ramifications of the proposed amendment, but that is quite a different matter than to say you will reconsider it in the light of all of the principles, without indicating that you are prepared to work out on the basis of an acceptance of the principle involved in this amendment a reconciliation between it and the other bill because the other Act may well be a more appropriate Act in which to have the recognition expressed. I would like some clarification from the Attorney General about that.

I know that perhaps I am not speaking exactly consistently with my colleague, the member for Lakeshore, but in spirit we are united in what we are attempting to achieve. If I am incorrect, I am certain that other proponents of this amendment will correct me about it, but I do believe we are talking about a floor and not a cumulated assessment. It has always been very clear law in the law of inheritance that a widow had an opportunity to choose under the Dower Act or another one. She had an election which could be made. "Do I take under one or do I take under the other?"

It would be quite reasonable for the surviving spouse to be in a position where the surviving spouse could make a choice on the basis of equality and say: "I will take under the one provision simply on the mathematical calculation of value rather than under the other." If that is the choice which is going to be made, then I suggest that my conception of what the amendment proposes with respect to the interface, if I can use that dreadful term, between the two bills is a floor and, therefore, a requirement that there be a choice. You either take under this or you take under the succession law and you make up your mind on the mathematical calculations which are involved in it.

That last point is simply a comment. If in fact there's some cumulative concern I don't think there is a problem in solving it, unless I have missed the essential point of it. I had no idea whether or not the Attorney General in his commitment to undertake a reconsideration of Bill 60, insofar as it relates to this point, was saying he accepts the principle but simply wants to work out the legislative technique to accomplish it. His words didn't mean that to me.

Mr. Lawlor: I think the understanding or commitment that I understand us to have—and I would like the Attorney General to affirm it—is simply that the two bills, Bill 59 and 60 be brought into accord, and that in my friend's sense of the term it is a floor we're after, that under Bill 60 at time of death at least as much is receivable is held as would be under the terms of this legislation. I think as things stand there is not only a possible discrepancy but as I see it a real, existing discrepancy and that the two things should be brought into accord. The sooner we sit down and close the gap there and give that basis and sufficiency, the better it will be for the logicalities of the legislation.

Mr. Chairman: If there is no further discussion, I will put the amendment to the committee.

Ms. Gigantes moves that clause (f) of section 1 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subclause:

"(iv) is a widower or a widow."

Shall the amendment carry?

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

This amendment will be stacked.

Mr. Warner: Dragged kicking and screaming into the 20th century.

Mr. Chairman: Is there any discussion on section 2?

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Bounsall: I have an amendment, which you may have in front of you—I'll certainly be sending it down right away—that deals with a replacement for, in essence, the first paragraph in section 3(b). It does not get into, of course, the subclauses (i) to (iv) as they appear in the bill.

Shall I move it?

Mr. Chairman: I see we have three amendments to the same section. It could create a little difficulty in stacking the votes.

Mr. Bounsall: We may have to vote upon them separately, but if the Chairman would look at it, this amendment is the amendment that would occur to the paragraph part right at the beginning of section 3 subsection (b) and does not touch upon the section of 3(b) over the page which deals with the small roman numeral sections.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bounsall moves that clause (b) of section 3 be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "Family assets" means all property and assets including commercial assets acquired during the marriage or in contemplation of the marriage and the accrued appreciation of all property and assets owned by the spouses prior to the marriage, but does not include any damage award, insurance claim, insurance benefit, gift, inheritance or trust benefit conferred upon the spouse with the expressed or implied intention of benefiting that spouse exclusively, or the accrued appreciation of same."

Mr. Bounsall: I must admit that, on this point, I do agree with the Attorney General. I'm getting tired of making the same speech.

Mr. Roy: We're getting tired of listening to it.

Mr. Bounsall: Sometimes I wonder whether my friend ever listens. I'm sure the Attorney General does from time to time and has his disagreement in principle with the things stated.

Mr. Lupusella: He disagrees with most principles.

Mr. Bounsall: This is the section of the bill, as I'm sure the Attorney General and the parliamentary assistant know, that I feel most strongly about. I feel we have exactly the wrong approach in the division of assets in the bill as presented by the government.

We do not recognize that marriage is an equal partnership unless we say that in that partnership all assets acquired will be split in the unfortunate occurrence of a divorce or a separation without a prospect of a divorce or a nullity; and that it is not fair to take into account in an asset split, as proposed in the government bill, possibly an asset which one spouse brought into the marriage. Again, it's fair that the normal appreciation on assets owned jointly before marriage should be considered part of that asset split.

That's the philosophical reason that I support this particular amendment to this bill and would like to see this view of family assets accepted. Anything else is unfair to one or both of the spouses in an asset division.

The mechanistic reason that I am very much in favour of this approach to asset split—and, believe me, in my mind it's much less important than my feeling that what we have is unfair—is that it's a very simple, clean way of arriving at the solution. You simply put your property and assets to the evaluation of an accountant, and he arrives at the figure; and there's nothing complicated, arithmetically, let alone mathematically, about the work the accountant has to do.

Mr. Warner: Even the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) can figure it out.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, the Treasurer can do a little bit more than divide by two.

Mr. Foulds: He can subtract.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, if you can add, subtract and divide by two, you've got it; and I'm sure the Treasurer can do more than that—

Mr. Swart: Mostly subtracting.

Mr. Bounsall: Mostly subtracting, as the member for Welland-Thorold suggests.

There's nothing complicated about it. What it does of course, is it prevents all the arguments that occur before a judge about whether or not this very narrow base of family assets as defined in the bill—all of that narrow group so defined—should be included in the split, because later in the section it's allowed that the judge may consider even the very narrow definition of what are family assets in this government's view of what are family assets.

It also, of course, has before the courts all of those other things not specifically defined as family assets, with all the arguments proceeding and the acceleration and continued rubbing of all the emotions involved before the courts of the province of Ontario.

[5:00]

I'm not particularly concerned that the lawyers will make a pile of money on this section. That depends upon how long the two spouses intend to argue; if they want to argue forever and ever then they should be expected to pay. But I think that's a very, very inefficient use of our courts' time.

Many legal arguments are going to be presented. A spouse who is less advantaged by the family asset definition in this bill will be trying to get a further family asset by arguing the case before the court, while the other one will be trying to remove from the family asset section in this bill some of the assets so defined here. Those arguments are going to take place, where there is contention, ad nauseam before our courts.

As I said in the committee stage of this bill, I wouldn't particularly want to be a judge in our courts in Ontario trying to make a decision on the arguments which would inevitably be placed before me with respect to property assets. I do not envy our judges the load which this bill has placed upon their wisdom and patience and arithmetic abilities. They are most certainly going to have to hire accountants, so the money is going to be spent anyway—but out of the public purse rather than the private purses of those applying for the asset split. Accountants will be needed to help them determine, in some cases, what is going to be a fair split. I really don't look forward with any great sense of enthusiasm to this section of the bill with the assets defined therein as we have them.

I could go on and on and make a whole host of appeals and emotional arguments as I have done on second readings of this bill in the past and as I have done to a lesser extent with my colleagues in the committee. But certainly if I had the immense bad luck to be appointed a judge in this province and have to deal with this part of the bill, it would be simple for me. I would simply take this approach.

Mr. Roy: They wouldn't admit you to the bar.

Mr. Bounsall: Albert, you have been so supportive of the government's position in this throughout, not wanting to change one jot or tittle, that as—

Mr. Roy: No, I have got some important amendments. I am not prepared to stand up and posture for the gathering.

Mr. Bounsall: —you do not have to be admitted to the bar—

Interjection.

Mr. Bounsall: —one really wonders what it is you are trying to get out of this bill.

Interjection.

Mr. Bounsall: You have your QC already—
Mr. Chairman: Order, order. Would the member return to the amendment.

Mr. Bounsall: Indeed I will, Mr. Chairman.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, he is casting aspersions et cetera on the motivations—

Mr. Mackenzie: The Liberals aren't offering much anyhow.

Mr. Bounsall: These irrelevancies from that particular member—

Mr. Roy: We are not prepared to posture.

Mr. Bounsall: —to retain only what the Attorney General wishes to have in the bill have always irritated me almost beyond belief. I would have wished he would have taken as open-minded a view as some of the rest of his colleagues with respect to this bill.

Mr. Bradley: Anybody who agrees with you is open-minded.

Mr. Bounsall: Certainly if I was a judge dealing with this bill, I would simply divide the assets of that couple appearing before me in accordance with the amendments I have suggested here. That would be my judicial decision in each case, because I have all the power, with other sections of the bill, to do precisely that. It allows me full discretion, if I were a judge, to vary what are family assets—as narrowly defined in this bill as it is—and to add other assets to family assets, and to make the splits in whatever way I deem to be fair, as a judge ruling in this particular case. So if I were a judge, this would be very simple for me. I wouldn't probably even need the accountant's help, although I may take some advice from time to time in arriving at what would be a final solution for all those unfortunate enough to come before me.

But to have it left a bill in which family assets are so very narrowly defined with everything in essence argued before the courts is basically a non-Conservative way of doing things. Historically this is a rather strange way for the Conservatives to be operating in this province as to what they expect from our courts and what they would see our courts doing. Not that they haven't put trust in judges over the years, but they have usually had a much more organized view of society and how things should take place in our society. And to leave in this Act, by their definition, an incredible array all over the place, in every direction, of uncertainties—no loose ends tied down at all—is really not the history of the Conservative way of doing things in this province.

You are neglecting your traditions over there in this particular section of this legislation. Not necessarily, as has been said, in respect of their support of women; that's not ever been that clear. You have always been a little too paternalistic in your view of society for that ever to be anything but evident in your dealing with women in our province. Nonetheless, you have had an organized view of society which you certainly move from with the fullest possible force in this assets-split section of this bill.

Unless further impelled by remarks made by other members in the House on this section, I am inclined to leave off at this point, at about a third of the length that I usually make in speeches with respect to the family assets section of this bill, and take my seat and listen to the heartfelt feelings of my colleagues in this particular party, virtually all of whom have some of those same thoughts.

But I feel that as it stands this bill is grossly unfair at this point. You have not come to grips with the mechanistic way of best dealing with this matter before the courts. It really in no way recognizes the equality of the spouses in that marriage partnership. In fact, it is here in the bill that you have the denial of that equal partnership which the preamble so grandly lulls us into thinking we have.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm rising to speak to this motion. When I sat on the committee last year—I sat not as a member of it but I participated—at that time I was very much of the opinion that we should be extending the family assets to include much broader categories than those which were in the bill at that time.

I suppose that what I felt about this particular section and the proposed amendment is really reflected in what I am proposing under section 8. What I am trying to do by that section is to enlarge the scope of the inquiry, if you like, by the court, to give guidelines to the judges without really destroying equality for women in the province; that really bothers me.

If I can explain something of my thinking: last year I had a telephone call from someone who purported to be calling me from the Bay—the Hudson's Bay Company—asking me if I would like to have a charge account. I said I would listen to what they had to say, until I found that this person was putting me, or trying to put me, through the hoops—give all the information about my husband: his occupation, his earnings in order that they might condescend to give me a charge account. Needless to say, they didn't get the information and I was no longer interested in the charge account.

Why am I saying this now on this particular section? It occurred to me that I've been thinking about whether or not women are really viewing this in the old stereotype and not stopping to think about the new woman emerging in our society today. I see the Attorney General nodding. I trust no one will take it that I have been in any kind of cahoots with him in what I'm saying.

What I was looking at and what I see today, for instance, is that more and more women in the law are moving into partnership. If you have a situation—and this may be the only one of its kind, but it's the kind of thing that brought me up very short in looking at this amendment—where you have two women engaged in the practice of law in partnership—let's say one is unmarried and one is married with a dependent spouse—what bothers me is that with the kind of climate that we still have, there wouldn't be a partnership unless there was some way of financing it, apart from the conventional system.

I guess my dream for women in this day and age is not to be limping along on something of this concept of attaching the commercial assets, but rather having the right and the opportunity, to stand up as free people and engage in commerce. It is this kind of concern I have. If we have this, as it is proposed in this amendment, I wonder what the climate in the commercial community is going to be when it comes to assisting women financially, if they wish to undertake some of these commitments in some of the circumstances that I foresee.

It was again basically because of my anxiety to try to reach some solutions which would seem to be more equitable that I looked to section 8 and had the guidance of some of the most forward-thinking people in this province in assisting me in looking at that section. I don't know what the effect would be. I presume that over a period of time there would be some kind of working document that you would come to grips with to try to cover these cases. But I just am of the opinion that we have to somehow protect, say, a partnership from being destroyed suddenly or even a business which could be destroyed suddenly and have a very detrimental effect on the entire family and not just on the spouse.

I am very torn. I think most women perceive this bill as a bill which gives them roughly one-quarter and leaves the husband with three-quarters of the assets.

If you talk to almost any woman you meet—I'm not sure on Yonge Street but on some other street—you will find this is the concept which they have. It certainly is an inappropriate one if we believe in an economic partnership. I have a great concern about the possible destruction of perhaps a valuable commercial asset that can be used for the benefit of the family without totally winding it up.

[5:15]

So I would like to hear any further comments. I am certainly listening to what is being said by the third party, but I would ask them to look at my proposed amendment because I do think it gives a flexibility. I think it gives an opportunity to the court to make the kind of determination that is sought here without putting it right into a section, including the commercial assets, which I believe would have a very negative effect in the commercial community and I don't think we want to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr Chairman, may I speak to this motion, but not in support of it? I agree wholeheartedly with the member for St. George—and I seldom do.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh George; seldom?

Mr. Warner: You'd better rethink your position.

Mr. McClellan: Look at the company you are in.

Ms. Gigantes: That is what you get.

Mr. Warner: Fine company you keep.

Mr. G. Taylor: Once you include commercial assets you have gone a long way to disruption, possibly, of our economic unions. It is difficult enough to put together marriages, and sometimes difficult enough to separate those marriages and perform a dissolution of them on economic grounds without bringing in the commercial aspects of a situation. When the member for St. George talks of bringing about partnerships, that comes to mind so quickly; I can just visualize a situation as you bring in somebody in a partnership.

Mr. Warner: Marriage is a partnership.

Mr. G. Taylor: Particularly the member for Ottawa East—if I were to discuss a partnership with him: "How would you like to come into partnership with me? How is your marriage?"

Mr. Roy: Don't get personal.

Mr. G. Taylor: That is a great way to start a partnership because that is what you would be doing the day you put in commercial assets as an amendment. Every time you make a decision in that commercial vein—every time you make a decision in the partnership, you bring in the wives or the husbands of your partners to discuss whether you make that decision because you might be watering down the commercial assets and possibly the wife's future benefits if there happens to be a dissolution of that marriage.

So now you have not only an economic partnership within the marriage, you have an economic partnership within the entire commercial community that the spouse may be involved in.

Ms. Gigantes: That's nuts.

Mr. G. Taylor: It has been difficult enough in the matrimonial actions I have been involved in over the years as a practising lawyer to disregard the commercial assets and just deal with the matrimonial assets that are presently within the bill. They become a difficult task. But it is just horrendous when you start getting into the commercial aspects.

When the member for St. George said: "What about bringing down a financial empire?" We had pieces of taxing legislation and pieces of corporate legislation—

Mr. Warner: We can make equity a prize.

Mr. G. Taylor: —which required, in some situations where you had three shareholders—and you get some situations where for tax advantages you put shares in a spouse or somebody else in the family. I have seen situations where they can be such a lever that they could have brought down some major corporations with privately held shares. It might have done away with those businesses. I can see even more concern that this would be a problem in the future should these be included.

Mr. Warner: If it was someone like Beckers it would be worthwhile.

Mr. G. Taylor: So, Mr Chairman, when they bring forth the commercial assets in here they insert far too much in a matrimonial situation

Then when you look at what is presently taking place, more and more in these situations where you have a dissolution of marriage, the spouse says: "I'll take what I can get. I want to get rid of him. That is all I want from him." If you are going to go upon the independence of spouses you have to be independent in all respects when you finish off with the dissolution of marriage, so each spouse goes his own way and you split up the assets that are there.

There will be some that say: "I answered the phone for him. I did the books for him at night." That is taken care of in here and later sections by the judge making the decision on whether that should be included. But to include it as a general purpose under the heading "commercial assets," I think such an amendment goes too far and would cause more grief than it would take care of.

It is going to be most difficult now when they say, "Oh isn't this very interesting? An accountant can figure that out." With the way we have this present legislation going, before you get married today you will sit down with your lawyer, your accountant, your tax expert, and anybody else who can give you advice, and those relationships will become far more economic, not even having love enter into it and companionship and other things that go along with a marriage. It will become a totally economic picture from day one to the time it ends. I am sure this Legislative Assembly is not in the field of economic unions from day one to the end.

Ms. Gigantes: How is your marriage anyhow? How is your marriage?

Mr. G. Taylor: There must be something more in a relationship than that. So, Mr. Chairman, I would not support this amendment and I hope my colleagues on this side of the House would not support such an amendment.

Mr. Warner: Shame!

Mr. Chairman, I am a bit disappointed that the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) mentioned during her remarks that she would be interested in hearing further comments from members of the third party, and she then subsequently left the chamber.

Mr. Roy: Well, she is going to be right back. It is not as if she is missing words of wisdom.

Mr. Warner: Like her work in the committee, I suppose.

Mr. McClellan: She won't be here for the vote either.

Mr. Roy: In fact, I should tell her to stay out while you are talking.

Mr. Warner: I think it's very important that we realize a couple of things that we are about as we discuss this particular amendment that has been put forward. Not only does it pertain to the very essence of this bill but it is in effect an extremely important step in that very long, hard-fought battle for those women who throughout the centuries have been oppressed.

I choose that word very carefully, and I know you realize, Mr. Chairman, as I do and as do others in this chamber, that for a great long time women were denied the right to vote. Women could not hold public office. Yes, we have moved from that, and women now have the opportunity to vote and they can hold public office; but surely that is not the end of it. Surely what we have before us is something that is just a step, a historic step, a step in the process to actually bring about equality between men and women.

What bothers me very much when I hear comments such as the ones made by the member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) is that there seems to be an assumption that in most circumstances when a marriage dissolves, both of those people are somehow on an equal footing as to how they should proceed in their life from that point onwards. In the real world out there that is not the case, and everyone in this assembly should know that and know it full well.

Women do not receive the same level of income as men do. Women, in most cases when a family dissolution occurs, have the responsibility of raising the family but have inadequate day-care facilities and normally do not have the same academic standing as men—

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, come on.

Mr. Warner: —but find it very difficult to obtain that kind of upgrading which they require because they don't have the same opportunities in the colleges and universities. Women are placed under some very difficult and trying circumstances, more so than men in most cases, when a family dissolution occurs.

So it is too easy perhaps for some members to simply dismiss this amendment by saying we want to establish independence. Of course women want to feel they are independent, but in the real world in 1978 they don't have the same opportunity for independence that men have. What we have is an opportunity to bring some measure of balance, some measure of protection for women who under many circumstances are left with next to nothing when a family relationship dissolves.

I think that at least the member for Simcoe Centre, and probably others, should understand that in many family situations where there is a business involved, the husband has been successful in his business endeavour because his wife took over the husband's portion of that family responsibility of raising the children. She managed the family books; she got those kids to school on time and got them helped with their homework, and settled the squabbles with the other children on the street, and managed all of those affairs while he was off running his business. But upon the dissolution of the marriage she's not going to be recompensed for all of that hard work in raising the family, because he will have the business assets.

To the Liberal member for Ottawa East—

Mr. Wildman: Is he still here? When is the plane leaving?

Mr. Philip: Tuesday.

Mr. Warner: —I think that this amendment that's before us right now, and I'll put it very boldly, is the principle of the bill. That is the principle of this bill.

Mr. Roy: I missed it until now.

Mr. Warner: I would ask the member for Ottawa East, and others, to take a look at the second "whereas" in the preamble, which says: "It is necessary to recognize the equal position of spouses as individuals within marriage and to recognize marriage as a form of partnership."

I ask the hon. members, then, to look very carefully at the amendment which my colleague, the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich, has placed before the committee. That amendment is the principle of the bill. I don't understand how we could possibly proceed with this bill without the inclusion of this amendment.

I urge all members of the House to take another very close look at the amendment and relate it back to the very principle of the bill, because without that we're not really doing a service to the women of this province who are fighting desperately hard for some measure of equality in our society.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, my colleague the member for Riverdale was saying that this bill has me upset. It's not the bill at all. We've been discussing it now for two years. I can say to my colleague my marriage is fine, thank you; no problem.

Mr. Renwick: Never take the unsupported evidence of one witness.

Mr. Roy: I don't see any problem with the bill as regards any personal situation. I just wanted to clear that up. I didn't hear the comment.

Mr. Bradley: It wasn't worth hearing.

Mr. Foulds: He said, "Never take the unsupported evidence of one witness."

Mr. Roy: But in any event, what I am somewhat confused about is that for the last two years we've been hearing submissions and we've discussed this bill, many aspects of the bill. We've had submissions from a variety of groups, people who felt the bill was going too far, other people who felt the bill was not going far enough. Throughout this we tried to arrive at some proper balance; as the members to my left have talked about, an equal partnership and some equilibrium in the legislation that we're going to bring forth.

My only annoyance is the fact that some of these members who are bringing forward these amendments—and in fact, the best evidence that I have that the NDP to my left is basically posturing and playing to whatever group is going to bring forward an amendment, is the fact that the NDP member for Windsor-Sandwich is the one proposing the amendment. It seems to me if they were serious, they would have their justice critic here and arguing and being in favour of this amendment; and of course he's not. He's followed the progress of this bill and he knows the pitfalls of the amendment as proposed by that member.

Mr. Foulds: So has the member for Windsor-Sandwich; far more than you or the member for St. George have.

Mr. Warner: Nonsense.

Mr. Wildman: That's a specious argument.

Mr. Bradley: Back to sleep.

Mr. Roy: It seems to me that if they're really serious about giving full recognition to the women of this province, they're going to support the amendment as proposed by my colleague in section 8.

Mr. Foulds: That is a grandstand amendment if I ever saw one.

Mr. Roy: If I may say—

Mr. Wildman: Is she the justice critic?

Mr. Roy: If I may say, Mr. Chairman, first of all we tried to have a bill which would concern the majority of people in this province. For the majority of people in this province, their assets are basically what is defined in the family assets, basically the matrimonial home.

Mr. Wildman: The majority of people in the province are women.

[5:30]

Mr. Roy: It seems to me that by proceeding in the fashion they are doing they are going to be creating work for the lawyers. They are going to be driving the absconding or male chauvinists into lawyers' offices to get involved in marriage contracts, and surely that's not something we want to do with this legislation.

Ms. Gigantes: Why would they want to do that?

Mr. Roy: In attempting to achieve a particular solution, they are creating far more problems. They talk about equality. Does the amendment as proposed only share the assets? What about the liabilities? If the bill as amended by the member for Windsor-Sandwich was accepted, what about a failure on the business side? Could they come against the other spouse? These are all things that remain unanswered. Looking at all the NDP amendments which we had before the justice committee, I know some of them are going to be presented here. The members of the NDP have already voted against some of them but they are going to present them here again.

Mr. Foulds: Voted for.

Mr. Roy: They voted against some of those amendments and the NDP members are presenting them now. It seems to me that I don't see in any of these amendments any changes in the support obligations. If we accept your amendment, are you going to change anything on the support obligation side? Are there going to be any assets to attach when you are talking about making payments for support? These are some of the things that are of concern to us.

It seems to me that the approach taken by my colleague from St. George, whose opinion I would accept about the rights, the desires and aspirations of women in this province much ahead of anybody's to my left, is such that she has accepted that if we do want to give equality, the way to do it is under section 8. There should be some discretion and there should not be a straitjacket. If we are talking about giving women independence, that is not the way to do it.

Mr. Foulds: Why don't you speak to the principle?

Mr. Roy: All I can say in closing, is that I have seen the posturing before. I have seen the amendments brought forward by the legal expert, the member for Windsor-Sandwich. He has no problem. Everything can be solved by accountants, by lawyers and others.

Mr. Mackenzie: Pretty weak.

Ms. Gigantes: Talk about posturing.

Mr. Kerrio: They ought to make him a judge.

Mr. Foulds: He'd be better than Phil Givens.

Mr. Roy: As a responsible opposition, we feel that we are going to put forward amendments. This is the reason that I agree with my colleague. I agree with the justice critic in our party that the way to achieve this independence and equality is to proceed under section 8 and not to have a holubolus section as has been proposed and which I am sure many members of that caucus would not even accept.

Mr. Bounsal: That's not true.

Mr. Swart: I am pleased to rise to speak on this section of this bill because it seems to me, as my colleagues have said, that this is the key section to this bill. This is the section where we determine whether we really believe in family law reform. It is one of the most controversial sections because in our society it deals with assets and that sort of thing and not just human relations. It is obviously one of the most controversial and it is certainly the one most important to women.

I cannot help but mention that on the other side of the House there are two women members of this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Three.

Mr. Swart: Okay, three. I would ask the Attorney General if they are staying away from this session because they disagree with the law reform bill or because are so indifferent they don't think it warrants their time to be in the House.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They have heard your nonsense before.

Mr. Swart: I think there is some significance that there is enough concern on this side of the House, and particularly in this caucus, that we have one of the largest turnouts, and right now they have it in that other caucus too, and that our two women members are here taking part in this debate—

Mr. Kerrio: One hundred per cent of our women are here.

Mr. Swart: —and also the women in the caucus on the right. I think that attendance on the opposite side of the House gives some indication of the priority that is given to law reform by the government and the members over there.

I said this is a key section. I think we should recognize, as my colleague from Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) said, that a basic principle of the bill is established here. This section sets the basis or the principles on which the spouses can expect a settlement to be made. It sets out the general principle. Of course, it can be varied by the court to almost any degree, but the court has to start from this base and, therefore, this base is exceedingly important. The preamble has been read into the record here at least twice today. It purports to establish equality between the spouses and a partnership.

I say to you that if we pass this section as is we have legislated inequality and that, in fact, that inequality will largely be against the women in our society. If we want to talk about equality, just let me point out what this has left out in the division of assets. It leaves out any business assets, even though they may have been acquired after the marriage. It leaves out any farm; and you know most of the law reform in this nation was started because of a certain case by the name of Murdoch in western Canada where the woman was left out of the assets.

It could also mean that, on the basis of this section, every farm woman across this nation shall not have any right to the farm, regardless of what contribution she has made.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Read section 8.

Ms. Gigantes: It is not there as a matter of right.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Read section 8. Have you people read the bill?

Mr. Bounsall: Have you?

Mr. Swart: It's not there as a matter of right, not as a basis from which they start to divide the assets.

Mr. Bounsall: The member for Welland-Thorold has been to the committee more than you have.

Mr. Swart: It leaves out all shares and bonds held by either spouse as the base from which you start for the division of the assets.

It leaves out any moneys other than the family bank account, including such things as term certificates, individual savings accounts and all this sort of thing. Those are left out of the base from which the division starts. And in most families now there isn't a great deal of money kept in the individual chequing account because of the poor interest rate. It is kept in some other form of asset, in a private bank account or in renewable term certificates held by one or other of the spouses; those are left out.

Let me give you the example which might perhaps apply to many of us here who come from outside the city of Toronto and have a bank account with the Province of Ontario Savings Office. I suspect many other members have, as I do, an account here that is not a family account.

Mr. Roy: Would they share liability as well?

Mr. Swart: We keep those accounts because sometimes we need money. That would not be divided in case of a breakup of the family.

And it leaves out pension and retirement plans. The other two are familiar to the average family; they know those are part of the normal family assets. It is a concern of the man and wife that when they come to retirement age they'll have enough in the way of a retirement plan on which to get by and live comfortably. They'll often scrimp and save as a couple to put more money into that retirement plan and yet the basis of this division of assets and liability rules out even that. So I say that this bill legislates inequality.

I say to my friends on the right that their amendment to clause 8 is in no way an alternative to writing in the principle in this section. I guess it establishes a difference between us and them and between us and the members on the other side of the House.

Mrs. Campbell: Are you going to support it?

Mr. Roy: That's the difference between reason and folly.

Mr. Swart: No, it's the difference between equality and inequality in the spouses and usually the inequality is exercised against the wife. We say the principle should be established in this section that all assets acquired during marriage be divided equally and then variations can be made if there are special circumstances. After this section, the next nine clauses provide opportunities for the judge to vary this on the application of one party or the other, but the basic principle should be that the assets which are acquired after marriage should be divided equally. It's a principle to which I subscribe and this party subscribes. Sure, variations can be made—there will be circumstances—but that principle should be established in this bill.

The government and the Liberals say, "Normally, total assets will be divided unequally." The principle of this bill says they will be divided unequally, but if there are special circumstances the court can determine that they should be divided equally, or maybe in some other manner. That is actually what this section of this bill says, and I say to you that in no way can I support this section of the bill which legislates inequality when that inequality will primarily be applied against the female partner of the marriage. That's exactly what will take place.

We hear the statement, "Yes, we're moving into a new society," and, of course, we are in many ways, "where women will go into business." The fact still remains that the great majority of those who will suffer from inequality in this bill are the female partners in the marriage. I would plead with our colleagues on the right that they give careful consideration to this amendment by my colleague from Windsor-Sandwich because it makes the only sense if we really believe in family law reform.

Mr. Roy: You are paternalistic towards females in this province.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Chairman, almost everything has been said in regard to this amendment.

Ms. Gigantes: No, not all.

Mr. McClellan: Not at all. Only by your party.

Mr. Kerrio: I think there may be one scenario that may be drawn here. I have the greatest respect for my two colleagues who have taken the lead for us in this particular bill, the member for St. George and the member for Ottawa East. I'd like to say that my concern is, if I were to draw a scenario that would very much concern me, it would have to do with a relationship where a family acquired assets over many years and later on in life one member or the other passes away. They have, through their whole existence—and I think many of us are in that same category—worked to one end, and that is to see their family proceed in a way that would make them better for having been here.

[5:45]

I would suggest that in a relationship where people are past middle age and one member of that relationship passes away, it would be the full intent of those two people to pass on to their children what they have acquired and worked for all their lives, and a marriage of convenience in later years for the association and companionship that it would have to offer certainly would jeopardize what the two original people in that matrimonial contract had expected of life. The children of that first marriage, to whom the two people had dedicated themselves and wished to pass on some of their lifetime's work, certainly would be disadvantaged by such a bill as the one we have before us today.

I can't by any stretch of my imagination support any such bill, and I don't think good-thinking men and women anywhere in this province would support it either. As has been said already by our responsible people and by the people in the government, they will address themselves to a fair and equitable consideration of either spouse having contributed to that relationship by way of effort, money or in any other way where a judgement could be made that they should share beyond what is considered the family assets.

Today we have women who are very concerned and are addressing themselves to where their future lies. We don't have to posture to the point where we are trying to tell them something that simply will not work because of the particular circumstance that has been described by those people who know a good deal more than I do as far as the law is concerned, and because of the kind of relationship that I suggest is occurring more frequently in the lifestyle we have today.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said already and I was not planning on speaking on this bill at all. Being the chairman of the committee that dealt with the bill, I had remained as impartial as possible. But, listening to the arguments of the member for Simcoe Centre and of the member for St. George, I simply had to rise. I guess my conscience got the better of me, for the "Henny-Penny Ducky-Lucky" arguments that were used just don't stand up. The sky is not falling down if this amendment is introduced.

Mr. Warner: The sky is falling on that side.

Mr. Philip: Over the holidays, while the House recessed, I was reading some interesting speeches by somebody whom I am sure the Liberals will be somewhat acquainted with—a man by the name of Gladstone. Gladstone's speeches that I was going through concerned home rule. It may have been a different kind of rule and a different kind of home than we were talking about today, but basically what Gladstone was dealing with was the whole problem of equality of a whole group of people.

It seemed to me that all of the arguments that the Tories used at that time against the prominent Liberal were the economic arguments—arguments similar to those that the member for St. George and the Conservative member for Simcoe Centre seemed to be using in this particular case. Destruction of the commercial enterprise has always been used as an argument for creating inequality.

Mr. G. Taylor: It could kill quite a few jobs—

Interjection.

Mr. Philip: The fact is that the court still has great discretion even if this amendment is passed; and the fact is that if this amendment is not passed, it makes a lie of the bill and a lie of the preamble to the bill.

Mrs. Campbell: I hadn't intended to speak twice on this section, Mr. Chairman, but I feel moved to do so because perhaps over a period of time you gain some experience. I think of a great debate which took place some years ago at the time when I was the president of the Women's Law Association. We had been meeting with women who were demanding the privilege of serving on juries. We said then it was interesting that at the time men did not want to serve on juries, women were claiming it to be a privilege.

There is a kind of relationship here, because it is just at the time when women are taking a more prominent part. Granted a great many of them are not; but more and more women are stepping out and becoming executives, they are becoming involved in the higher echelons of the professions and of the commercial enterprises.

Ms. Gigantes: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Campbell: It is interesting that at this point in time, when they are gaining that stature, we have the proposal that we should knock 'em down. They've been hit badly enough in the past with the old family law tradition, and now you want to take them into the new position where they will be placed at a disadvantage under this bill as you propose it.

I don't think that is appropriate—

Mr. Roy: We don't understand that.

Mrs. Campbell:—and for me to be told that I have supported this government and their arguments is just ludicrous. Let me say this: It goes back to those days when we were sitting debating the employment standards legislation during International Women's Year. Where were the NDP and where were the unions—?

Mr. Bounsall: It was my amendment.

Mrs. Campbell:—where was everybody?

Mr. Roy: Where was the NDP?

Mr. Bounsall: It was my amendment.

Mrs. Campbell: It was not your amendment, it was mine. I am a little tired of being told that as a woman I am not supporting the rights of women. I've been doing it for longer than any of you have.

Mr. Foulds: It's too bad you are faltering in the clutch.

Interjections.

Mrs. Campbell: The fact is that I do understand something about the workings of our communities, of our country, of our province. I am not going to sit idly by while some Johnny-come-latelies—and they are—

Interjections.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I refuse to be called a Johnny-come-lately.

Mrs. Campbell:—are trying to tell me that I am not as concerned about the rights of women as anybody in this Legislature.

Mr. Foulds: That's a sexist remark. At least you could call the member for Carleton East a Jenny-come-lately.

Mr. Roy: You fought the Attorney General more than anyone else.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, I was successful once. If only things had been different.

Mr. Williams: It is interesting to watch the scrapping going on between members of the so-called weaker sex in the House.

Mr. Foulds: Speak for yourself.

Ms. Gigantes: It is a whole new world isn't it?

Mr. Williams: Obviously that is a misnomer and has been quite clearly disproved here this afternoon.

Mr. Kerrio: Where are you going to put the other foot, John?

Mr. Williams: Mr. Chairman, it may be that some people take an Alice-in-Wonderland approach to this matter, or choose to quote nursery rhymes to make their points about what the essential ingredients of this legislation should be. But I think we should by addressing the realities of the legislation—

Mr. G. Taylor: To you the whole world is a nursery rhyme, John.

Mr. Warner: No one expects you to enter the 20th century.

Mr. Williams:—and considering it in its proper context and in a proper perspective. That is, of course, that we are indeed dealing with family law legislation and accordingly dealing with an equitable and proper distribution of family assets. It must be that common sense would dictate what the family assets should be, namely those normally associated with use in and about the matrimonial home, and not assets taken in the total universality approach—

Ms. Gigantes: Not in any of that male property.

Mr. McClellan: None of this real stuff.

Mr. Williams: What interested me during the debate earlier was the fact that so much skepticism was expressed by members, particularly of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Wildman: You'd think if you really believed they were the weaker sex you'd want to protect them.

Mr. Williams: —as to the wisdom that would be displayed by the judges of the courts in exercising the discretion that is given to them in this legislation.

Mr. Wildman: Exorcise?

Mr. Warner: History speaks for itself.

Mr. Williams: It is clearly spelled out that indeed wide discretionary powers do exist where the court has the right, in its opinion, to expand upon division of assets, even though they may be other than family assets as defined in this section.

Mr. Haggerty: John, did you read Chate-laine this month? You should read that article.

Mr. Williams: No, I didn't. To now suggest that our court system isn't sufficiently competent to handle this new type of legislation because there are such broad discretionary powers built into the legislation, I think is to some extent an offence to the judicial system we have in this province, which I consider to be of the highest calibre to be found anywhere.

Surely it's much easier to work from a definition that clearly relates to the family situation and expand upon that, as the court in its wisdom sees fit, rather than to apply a universal definition from which one has to take away. So it is clearly appropriate that the definition should be as spelled out in the legislation, in that as far as exercise of discretionary powers goes, it's clearly spelled out in the other sections of the Act, and will, I think, meet all of the objections that have been raised by the opposition.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would point out to the member for Carleton East that we have about two more minutes. Do you wish to speak at this time?

Ms. Gigantes: I would seek your advice, Mr. Chairman, about whether I should begin because I have some rather lengthy remarks on this section.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If you have some lengthy remarks it would be more appropriate to continue when this adjourned debate continues, which would be Thursday evening.

On motion by Hon. Mr. McMurtry, the committee of the whole House reported progress and asked for leave to sit again.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

APPENDIX
(See page 432)

Answers to questions were tabled as follows:

1. Mr. Ziemba—Inquiry of the ministry: Would the Minister of Revenue table the names of property holders in the borough of North York, Scarborough and Etobicoke receiving farm tax rebates during 1976 giving the number of acres upon which the rebate was paid, the assessment, the property tax levied and the amount of farm tax rebate paid in each case. [Tabled February 21, 1978.]

Answer by the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough):

This is to advise that this ministry will require additional time to complete an answer to this question.

2. Mrs. Campbell—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Attorney General obtain and provide this House with the following information: (a) The number of children sent to Viking Houses, a division of Marshall Children's Foundation from the Peel region provincial court (family division) during the last four years under provisions of the JDA; (b) the number of children sent to Viking Houses under provisions of the JDA from all other family courts during the same period of time; (c) the names of organizations providing assessments to the Peel family court and the terms of their arrangements with that court; (d) the total number of children sent to Viking Houses from the Peel court, the number of those children who were first assessed by the Browndale clinic. [First Tabled December 6, 1977. Tabled February 21, 1978.]

Answer by the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry):

	1974	1975	1976	1977	Total
(a)	4	45	37	17	103
(b) County District	1974	1975	1976	1977	Total
Essex	10	6	2	18
Frontenac	2	2
Ottawa-Carleton	1	1
Peel	4	45	37	17	103
Peterborough	1	1
York (Jarvis St., Etobicoke and Scarborough)	1	1
York (Newmarket)	1	1
York (Willowdale)	2	1	3
	no breakdown by year				10

(c) Addiction Research Foundation, 39 Dundas Street East, Suite 203, Mississauga, Ontario; Addiction Research Foundation, Out-Patient Dept., Clinical Institute, 33 Russell Street, Toronto; Catholic Children's Aid Society of Metropolitan Toronto, Toronto, Ontario; Chedoke-McMaster Centre, P.O. Box 590, Hamilton, Ontario; The Children's Aid Society, Judicial District of Halton, 1160 Blair Road, Burlington, Ontario; The Children's Aid Society, Judicial District of Peel, 49 Kennedy Road South, Brampton, Ontario; Child & Adolescent Services of Hamilton-Wentworth, Mental Health Clinic, Hamilton, Ontario; Clarke Institute of Psychiatry, 250 College Street, Toronto, Ontario; Dean Darnell Social Work Consultants Ltd., 229 Church Street, Oakville, Ontario; Dufferin-Peel Roman Catholic Separate School Board, 100 Dundas Street, West, Mississauga, Ontario; East General and Orthopaedic Hospital Inc., 825 Coxwell Avenue, Toronto, Ontario; Etobicoke General Hospital, 101 Humber-

college, Toronto, Ontario; General Council of Children's Services, Judicial District of Peel, Inter-Agency Committee, INTERCOM—North, INTERCOM—South; Hincks, C. M., Treatment Centre, 440 Jarvis Street, Toronto, Ontario; The Hospital for Sick Children, 555 University Avenue, Toronto, Ontario; Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital, 3131 Lakeshore Blvd. West, Toronto, Ontario; London Family Court Clinic, 80 Dundas Street East, London, Ontario; London Psychiatric Hospital, Children's Psychiatric Research Institute, London, Ontario; Madison Community Clinic (OISE), 17 Madison Avenue, Toronto, Ontario; Ministry of Community and Social Services, Children's Services Division, Probation and After Care Services, 424 Hensall Circle, Suite 101, Mississauga, Ontario; Mississauga Hospital, 100 Queensway West, Mississauga, Ontario; Oakville Reception and Assessment Centre (Independent of Committal to Training School), 475 Iroquois Shore Road, P.O. Box 910, Oakville, Ontario; Oakville Trafalgar

Memorial Hospital, 327 Reynolds Street, Oakville, Ontario; Peel Board of Education, 73 King Street West, Mississauga, Ontario; Peel Family Services, 93 Dundas Street East, Suite 105, Mississauga, Ontario; Peel Memorial Hospital, 20 Lynch Street, Brampton, Ontario; Psychiatric Service of the Juvenile and Family Court, 950 Yonge Street, 8th Floor, Toronto, Ontario; Queen Street Mental Health Centre (Central Youth Services), Child and Adolescent Clinic, 999 Queen Street West, Toronto, Ontario; Rapport House, 140 Queen Street East, Brampton, Ontario; The St. Lawrence Youth Association, Juvenile Court Assessment Clinic, 57 Queen Street, Kingston, Ontario; Thistletown Regional Centre for Children & Adolescents (West Metro Youth Services), Malton Clinic, In Patient and Out Patient, 11 Farr Avenue, Rexdale, Ontario; Toronto General Hospital, University Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

The arrangements with the agencies providing assessments were that the courts would ask for an assessment and if the agency was willing, an assessment was ordered. In some cases, the assessment would have been pre-arranged by the workers or would have already taken place.

(d) Twelve children were diagnosed by Dr. Otto Weininger and the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education doctoral students (Applied Psychology). Space and secretarial assistance was provided by Browndale (Ontario), 17 Madison Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

3. Mrs. Campbell—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Minister of Community and Social Services provide the House with the following information: (a) A list of all known group homes operating in Ontario outside the Children's Boarding Homes Act with four or fewer children; (b) a list of those homes known to be in contravention of fire, zoning, health or safety regulations or laws; (c) a list of all other licensed children's facilities known to be in contravention of any of the above regulations or laws; (d) the exact number of provincial inspectors charged with enforcement of each Act concerning children's facilities now under the children's services branch. [Tabled December 6, 1977.]

Answer by the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton):

(a) Updated February 14, 1978.

1. Able House, R.R. No. 6, Minesing*
2. Alpha Adolescent Project, R.R. No. 2, Dundas; 3. Ausable Springs Ranch, 518 Queens Ave., London (21 homes); 4. Briar-wood, St. Joachim; 5. Cairnlee Community, R.R. No. 1, Inglewood (five homes); 6. Community Homes, 28 Askin St., London (two homes); 7. Community Youth Programmes, P.O. Box 671, Oakville (six homes); 8. Davenport Homes, 2 Abbot Street, Toronto; Davenport Homes, 372 Annette St., Toronto* (Duplex: four children in one unit, three children in other); Davenport Homes, 205 Grenadier Road, Toronto* (duplex: four children in one unit, three children in other); 9. Don Patrol Group Home, 320 Queen Street South, Hamilton*; 10. East York Children's Residence II, 25 Eastdale Ave., Toronto*; 11. Family Affair Home, R.R. No. 2, Breslau*; 12. Four Maples, 82 Queen Street, Streetsville*; 13. Grand River View Home II, R.R. No. 2, Moorefield; 14. Green Acres, 191 Laidlaw Street, Cannington (four homes); 15. Highlands Crossroads, Harcourt*; 16. Hi-Hope, 44 Tyrrell Ave., Toronto*; 17. Holiday Ranch, R.R. No. 1, Breslau*; 18. Homestake House, R.R. No. 1, Kenora*; 19. Inverness Group Home, R.R. No. 2, Elora*; 20. Jubilee Home, 210 Ashworth Ave., Toronto; 21. Longhouse Group Home, Wellandport, 582 Winston Rd., Grimsby; 22. Lovelock Group Home, 185 Prospect St., Newmarket*; 23. Marcus Carvey Home, 567 Christie St., Toronto (two homes); 24. Morningstar, P.O. Box 253, Leamington (nine homes); 25. Nairn Group Homes, R.R. No. 1, Ailsa Craig (23 homes); 26. New Beginnings, 448 Crawford Ave., Windsor; 27. Northome Manor, Johnston Road, North Bay; 28. Ontario Mission of the Deaf, 11 Wilson Court, Georgetown*; Ontario Mission of the Deaf, 7553 Ilington Ave., Woodbridge*; 29. Smith Home, Listowel; 30. Spruce Cross, Sharon; 31. Spruce Hem, R.R. No. 2, Allenford; 32. Stelden House, Orangeville; 33. Stella's Option, 18 Blandorman Rd., Toronto; 34. Stepping Stones, R.R. No. 4, Brampton; Stepping Stones, Nobleton; 35. Storey Group Home, 65 Tracy St., Belleville; Storey Group Home, 30 Meade St., Brighton; Storey Group Home, R.R. No. 7, Brighton; Storey Group Home, 62 Queen St., Campbellford; Storey Group Home, 21 Rolliston St., Lakefield; Storey Group Home, 93 Robinson St., Peterborough; 36. Talitha House, P.O. Box 2112, Cochrane*; 37. Viking House, 50 Long Branch Ave., Toronto*; Viking House, 88 Mulock Ave., Toronto*; 38. Wen-Way Farm, R.R. No. 4, Tara*; 39. Wildwood Farm, Lochlin*; 40. Wilson Home, Schomberg.

* Application for registration has been submitted and is being processed.

 One of the Morningstar homes has applied for registration.

(b) Updated February 14, 1978.

1. Ontario Mission of the Deaf, Georgetown: violation of zoning bylaw. 2. Ontario Mission of the Deaf, Woodbridge: violation of fire safety regulations. 3. Spruce Croft, East Gwillimbury: violations of zoning bylaw.

Appropriate local authorities are aware of these violations. The instance of fire safety violation has also been brought to the attention of the provincial Fire Marshal.

(c) Updated February 14, 1978.

1. Amity Farms, R.R. No. 2, Wellesley: Violation of zoning bylaw of Wellesley Township Twp. Council by a resolution of September 6, 1977 resolved to take no legal action.

2. Amity Farms, 143 Weber St., W., Kitchener: Complies with zoning bylaws concerning use of the building, but needs permission of committee of adjustment for off-street parking. 3. New Horizon Girls Residence, R.R. No. 1, Cobalt: Violation of zoning bylaws of Coleman Township. The Township Council in a resolution of November 8, 1977 has declared that it has no objection to the continuance of the home under the present circumstances. 4. Shaftesbury House, 19 Robinson St., Little Current: A legal dispute is underway between the town of Little Current and Shaftesbury House as to whether or not a restricted area bylaw is valid. Renewal of registration is being deferred pending resolution of the issue.

There are no contraventions of zoning, fire, safety or health laws or regulations in group homes licensed by or responsible to the children's mental health program, corrections program, or observation and detention home program.

(d) Children's Mental Health Centres Act: The Act refers to "inspectors", the program refers to the inspectors as "program advisers". There are seven program advisers responsible for consultation with and supervision of the licensed children's mental health centres. Licensing requirements include an annual fire and health inspection.

Provincial Courts Act (Sec. 21 and 22 (Observation and Detention Homes): Six persons have been assigned by the children's services division to maintain regular communication with the 13 O/D homes on all matters of policy, planning and administration. To achieve this, there are monthly meetings involving all O/D superintendents and the division staff. In addition to the monthly meetings there is daily communication with each of the superintendents for policy and planning purposes.

Training Schools: Every school is required under the Training Schools Act to maintain fire, safety and health standards as specified in the training schools manual of administration and in accordance with provincial standards. The Ontario Fire Marshal and the appropriate medical officer of health undertake legislatively required annual inspections and report their findings to the superintendent and to the senior management of the division. The senior management requires a response on action taken and/or action planned.

An investigation Branch, with an inspector designated by the Training Schools Act reports directly to the associate deputy minister of the division. The inspector monitors all concerns as they pertain to the wards, staff and institutions and follows up on the health action reports filed by the superintendents.

Contract Group Homes—Corrections: The contract group homes are required to provide certificates to prove that fire, health and safety standards are adequately maintained on an annual basis. These certificates are usually produced during the time of the contract renewals. Also note that zoning regulations are adhered to before the initial contract is signed with a group home. An eight person group liaison staff made up of area co-ordinators and others monitor all contracted group homes. On a day to day basis any contravention of standards are immediately handled by the group home liaison staff. Further, the regular visits by correctional program personnel subject the group homes to close scrutiny and compel them to conform to the corrections manual of administration, section for group homes.

Day Nurseries Act: The Day Nurseries Act charges the director to license annually. Each new licence and re-licence requires an inspection for fire, health, safety. The 22 day nursery consultants assigned to ministry district offices are responsible to the director to ensure that appropriate inspections have been carried out.

Child Welfare Act, Children's Institutions Act, Children's Boarding Homes Act, Charitable Institutions Act: There are eight provincial consultants and two superintendents currently involved in the inspection of group homes operating under the authority of the above Acts. In addition to this, staff in children's aid societies supervise, on behalf of children in their care, group homes directly operated by societies, and the arrangements for purchase of service with homes operated by others.

4. Mr. Cunningham—Inquiry of the ministry: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications please table: 1. The individual salaries of all executives with the Urban Transportation Development Corporation; 2. the Urban Transportation Development Corporation reports entitled: (a) Toronto rapid transit network—A description of potential ICTS Routes in Toronto; (b) An evaluation of ICTS in the Eglinton corridor; (c) Commercial viability assessment of ICTS; (d) ICTS cost trade-offs; (e) Station Design (TTC); 3. the Barton Myers study commissioned by the UTDC; 4. the dates, locations and associated costs of any meetings with municipal officials, ratepayer organizations and the public regarding possible rapid transit in the Eglinton corridor. [Tabled February 21, 1978.]

Answer by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow):

1. President and Chief Executive Officer, $55,000; Senior Vice President, Engineering and Operations, $58,700; Senior Vice President Planning & Marketing, $57,500; Vice President, Finance, $42,400; General Counsel, $33,000; Senior Manager, Personnel and Corporate Planning, $34,550.

2. and 3. UTDC offers access to all its development reports to any bona fide public interest agency. Because the nature of the research work involved is of substantial potential benefit to commercial competitors UTDC has maintained a policy of making these reports accessible on UTDC premises only. To date, both the Liberal Party and NDP research officers have requested and been provided complete access to reports in this program.

4. UTDC invited ratepayer groups from all Metro boroughs to describe its relationships to Metroplan process and to brief the ratepayers on ICTS developments. A dinner was held on January 20, 1977 at the Holiday Inn, Don Valley with 70 people attending. The total cost for the dinner was $739.30.

5. Mr. Kerrio—Inquiry of the ministry: How many licences for boxing and wrestling matches under the Athletics Control Act were issued in 1977? How much revenue was paid to the minister under section 5(1) of the Act? What was the average percentage of gross receipts collected from each contest or exhibition as per section 5(1) in 1977? How many charges and convictions have been made under this section since 1970? [Tabled February 21, 1978.]

Answer: by the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch):

Please see attached statement for first part of question.

Athletics Control Act—charges and convictions since 1970: Friday, May 7, 1976; James Cunningham, Jack Timco and Ken Cleveland were separately charged for 16 separate offences under the Athletics Control Act. No evidence was tendered against Mr. Cleveland. After the laying of the charges, our investigations indicated that there was insufficient evidence against Mr. Cleveland to obtain a conviction on any of the charges laid.

Messrs. Cunningham and Timco were convicted for committing an offence contrary to the provisions of subsection 2 of section 13 of the Athletics Control Act, RSO 1970, Chapter 35. Judge Davidson found both guilty of the first charge and fined each of them $100 or 30 days in jail. Under the circumstances, it was felt that the other 15 charges, all of which were seemingly lesser offences under the Athletics Control Act, should be withdrawn.

Office of the Athletic Commissioner
 Statement of Revenue for Calendar Year ending December 31, 1977

	No. of Licence	Cost per Licence	Licence Revenue	2% Tax Revenue	Total Revenue
Professional Wrestling
Gate Taxes				$6,207.39	$ 6,207.39
Licences
Professional Wrestling Licence, Class I	1	x $500.00	$ 500.00		500.00
Professional Wrestling Licence, Class II	95	x 5.00	475.00		475.00
To take part in Exhibitions	140	x 5.00	700.00		700.00
To referee Exhibitions	7	x 10.00	70.00		70.00
To referee Exhibitions	6	x 25.00	150.00		150.00
	249		1,895.00	6,207.39	8,102.39
					$ 8,102.39
Professional Boxing
Gate Taxes				1,120.51	1,120.51
Licences
Professional Boxing Licence	1	x 200.00	200.00		200.00
Professional Boxing Licence	1	x 150.00	150.00		150.00
Professional Boxing Licence	1	x 50.00	50.00		50.00
To take part in contests and exhibitions	30	x 5.00	150.00		150.00
To referee contests and exhibitions	14	x 2.00	28.00		28.00
To manage boxers	11	x 5.00	55.00		55.00
	58		633.00	1,120.51	1,753.51
					1,753.51
Amateur Boxing Licences
Licences to hold contests or exhibitions	94	x 5.00	470.00		470.00
Licence to referee contests or exhibitions ..	17	x 1.00	17.00		17.00
	111		487.00		487.00
Summary Totals	418		3,015.00	7,327.90	10,342.90
					10,342.90

6. Mr. Kerrio—Inquiry of the ministry: What are the names of those who attended the January 24 opening of We Among Others in Paris, France, as official representatives of the provincial government? What was the cost for travel and accommodation for these people? Were any other people sponsored by the provincial government; and if so, what are the names of those sponsored and what is the total of costs incurred by them? [Tabled February 21, 1978.]

Answer by the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Welch):

I respectfully request an extension deadline for the provision of an answer to question No. 6, order paper No. 2. The names of official representatives of the government of Ontario are available. However, individual accounts have not all been received by the ministry, thus not allowing an accurate cost figure at this time.

7. Mr. Kerrio—Inquiry of the ministry: (a) Of all provincial arenas, how many are presently deemed by the Industrial Safety Act to be: 1. Certified safe; 2. certified safe but are on a suspect list; 3. certified for minor repairs; 4. certified unsafe for use, needing major repairs; 5. closed for demolition? (b) In each of the above five categories, how many arenas are presently open to the public? (c) In each category, what were the comparable listings on June 17, 1976? [Tabled February 21, 1978.]

Answer by the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson):

The arena program is at present under review in order to bring to a conclusion, during 1978, the review for structural adequacy of arena buildings throughout the province, which has been ongoing since 1970. This has involved classifying the results in a more precise and meaningful manner. Thus, the information in the form requested is not available. This review is not yet completed but a preliminary report of the present status shows the following:

1. Original drawings submitted to industrial health and safety branch. Certified—262.

2. Structurally inadequate. Operated under monitoring system which consists of: Monitoring is acceptable for one winter period only; engineering report identifying safe load bearing capacity, action level to close arena when wind and snow loads would approach safe capacity. Identified person responsible to monitor weather conditions, commitment to repair or replace next summer—35.

3. Engineer's report received. Repairs recommended. Drawings submitted and certified. Repairs completed—135.

4. Engineer's report received. Repairs recommended. Drawings submitted and certified—48.

5. Confirmed demolished—62.

6. Confirmed destroyed by fire—12.

7. Engineer's report received. Arena structurally inadequate. Owner, by registered letter, ordered not to use arena—63.

8. Engineer's report certifies arena structurally adequate—140.

9. Insufficient information to assess. The arena program was established in two phases. These arenas in this item are in Phase II, arenas to be reviewed in 1978. These arenas are located principally in large urban areas, where there are building departments with building codes and professional engineering staff (for example city of Toronto) or have been built since 1960—267.

10. No jurisdiction. Located on (a) Indian reservation, (b) federal land, defence, et cetera—12.

11. Converted to other use. No longer an arena—25.

Total—1,061.

9. Mr. Reid—Inquiry of the ministry:

1. Would the ministry advise the total number of acres planted for reforestation in the last five years ending December 31, 1977?

2. What species and what amount of each were planted for each year? 3. What was the total cost of this reforestation for each year?

4. What percentage of the planting was done by aerial seeding each year? [Tabled February 22, 1978.]

Answer by the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller):

1. There were 365,578 acres planted for reforestation in the five years ending March 31, 1977. The table following question 4 shows annual data for planting and seeding. Figures for the balance of 1977 will be available in the annual report of the minister for the fiscal year 1977-78.

2. The species and number of trees planted for the five years ending March 31, 1977 are listed in the attached tables.

3. Total costs of *regeneration per year, for the five years ending March 31, 1977 were: 1972-73, $3,363,651; 1973-74, $4,473,053; 1974-75, $5,385,640; 1975-76, $6,145,918; 1976-77, $8,148,209. *Regeneration includes planting, seeding, modified harvest system, seed tree system, and site preparation for natural regeneration.

4. There were 231,641 acres aerially seeded for regeneration in the five years ending March 31, 1977. The following table shows the annual accomplishment for seeding, planting, total and percentage of total done by seeding.

	Aerial Seeding (acres)	Planting (acres)	Total (acres)	Percentage Seeding
1972-73	21,764	88,981	110,745	19.65
1973-74	25,099	77,950	103,049	24.36
1974-75	59,869	72,842	132,711	45.11
1975-76	58,095	66,968	125,063	46.45
1976-77	66,814	58,837	125,651	53.17

USE OF NURSERY STOCK — in year ending March 31, 1973

Tree Species	Private Land	Crown Lands and Agreement Forests	Education or Science	Total
White Spruce	4,898,465	20,724,336	85,425	25,708,226
Black Spruce	148,225	11,674,185	39,575	11,861,985
Jack Pine	755,375	9,088,025	45,000	9,888,400
Red Pine	5,183,410	4,640,900	48,375	9,872,685
White Pine	2,819,550	2,875,483	14,475	5,709,508
Scotch Pine	1,275,725	138,625	900	1,415,250
White Cedar	654,300	97,200	1,275	752,775
Silver Maple	330,250	323,650	1,250	655,150
Black Walnut	430,575	25,950	8,200	464,725
Carolina Poplar	320,750	29,950	700	351,400
Norway Spruce	255,100	7,775	475	263,350
European Larch	206,200	41,450	225	247,875
Red Spruce	3,050	218,625	125	221,800
White Ash	149,525	21,500	1,225	173,250
Red Oak	154,150	11,175	1,025	166,350
Black Locust	116,700	7,350	575	124,625
Tamarack	73,050	21,200	125	94,375
Cottonwood	46,200	20,650	25	66,875
Yellow Birch	16,275	16,275
Other Species	39,738	187,966	2,856	230,560
Total	17,907,113	49,996,720	257,206	68,161,039

USE OF NURSERY STOCK — in year ending March 31, 1974

Tree Species	Private Land	Crown Lands and Agreement Forests	Education or Science	Total
White Spruce	2,553,612	17,692,954	10,675	20,257,241
Black Spruce	82,350	16,595,308	6,500	16,684,158
Red Pine	2,176,067	7,739,989	91,875	10,007,931
Jack Pine	159,625	6,802,737	2,950	6,965,312
White Pine	1,309,435	3,788,436	65,450	5,163,371
White Cedar	1,248,894	654,176	3,650	1,906,720
Scotch Pine	1,070,416	10,960	775	1,082,151
Silver Maple	249,030	228,967	200	478,197
Norway Spruce	404,850	65,973	150	470,973
Carolina Poplar	317,437	103,082	800	421,319
Black Walnut	164,125	218,025	382,150
Red Spruce	2,650	323,375	326,025
White Ash	165,339	100,977	266,316
European Larch	85,540	97,900	50	183,490
Yellow Birch	135,125	135,125
Red Oak	83,888	26,912	225	111,025
Multiflora Rose	800	94,775	95,575

Tree Species	Private Land	Crown Lands and Agreement Forests	Education or Science	Total
Black Locust	48,525	26,003	400	74,928
Tamarack	20,525	24,200	44,725
Hemlock	397	41,010	41,407
Autumn Olive	250	32,775	1,000	34,025
Cottonwood	6,600	17,210	23,810
Other Species	51,075	151,071	4,275	206,421
Total	10,201,430*	54,971,990	188,975	65,362,395

*Excluding W.I.A.

USE OF NURSERY STOCK — in year ending March 31, 1975

Tree Species	Private Land	Crown Lands and Agreement Forests	Education or Science	Total
White Spruce	2,805,631	20,642,867	92,575	23,541,073
Black Spruce	29,800	9,235,638	1,000	9,266,438
Red Pine	2,477,016	7,753,583	95,550	10,326,149
Jack Pine	65,025	7,540,972	37,000	7,642,997
White Pine	1,086,053	2,105,616	34,950	3,226,619
White Cedar	1,089,934	485,764	750	1,576,448
Scotch Pine	885,989	22,700	800	909,489
Silver Maple	260,518	290,944	4,250	555,712
Norway Spruce	278,954	94,887	5,450	378,791
Carolina Poplar	255,375	154,702	1,875	411,952
Black Walnut	138,125	208,150	2,650	348,925
Red Spruce	2,725	114,550	117,275
White Ash	121,135	60,019	4,175	185,329
European Larch	80,670	187,175	200	268,045
Yellow Birch	3,850	133,375	137,225
Red Oak	86,671	116,564	550	203,785
Multiflora Rose	21,625	30,625	4,175	56,425
Black Locust	95,250	48,150	400	143,800
Tamarack	275	40,750	41,025
Hemlock	325	48,226	48,551
Autumn Olive	10,800	30,975	41,775
Cottonwood	41,575	45,500	25	87,100
Other Species	49,203	219,919	10,400	279,522
Total	9,886,524*	49,611,151	296,775	59,794,450

*Excluding W.I.A. Including 7,955,515 W.I.A.

USE OF NURSERY STOCK — in year ending March 31, 1976

Tree Species	Private Land	Crown Lands and Agreement Forests	Education or Science	Total
White Spruce	1,961,064	13,628,692	16,900	15,606,656
Jack Pine	194,400	11,808,206	94,400	12,097,006
Red Pine	1,806,834	6,104,273	16,850	7,927,957
Black Spruce	35,800	6,187,350	1,150	6,224,300
White Pine	1,459,078	2,634,321	15,600	4,108,999
White Cedar	946,980	281,024	2,400	1,230,404
Scotch Pine	741,515	4,210	3,275	749,000
Norway Spruce	379,774	40,376	1,675	421,825
Carolina Poplar	286,221	102,360	2,275	390,856
Silver Maple	139,234	208,223	1,525	348,982

Tree Species	Private Land	Crown Lands and Agreement Forests	Education or Science	Total
Red Oak	202,455	106,169	525	309,149
Black Walnut	166,155	105,300	1,275	272,730
European Larch	36,160	190,450	1,000	227,610
Yellow Birch	750	177,600	875	179,225
White Ash	75,918	51,753	1,600	129,271
Hybrid Poplar	20,700	100,534	121,234
Hemlock	627	94,715	95,342
Black Locust	37,225	44,625	25	81,875
Cottonwood	40,850	10,900	1,175	52,925
Tamarack	94	320	414
Other Species	61,684	300,724	6,565	368,973
Total	8,593,424*	42,181,899	169,410	50,944,733

*Excluding W.I.A. Including 10,707,850 W.I.A.

USE OF NURSERY STOCK – in year ending March 31, 1977

Tree Species	Private Land	Crown Lands and Agreement Forests	Education or Science	Total
White Spruce	1,487,068	12,206,071	80,550	13,773,689
Jack Pine	39,552	9,623,522	2,548	9,665,622
Red Pine	2,243,140	6,335,250	135,434	8,713,824
Black Spruce	181,425	5,335,489	32,100	5,549,014
White Pine	983,098	2,324,648	96,369	3,404,115
White Cedar	630,101	344,490	19,359	993,950
Silver Maple	341,480	291,358	15,959	648,797
Scotch Pine	523,000	7,020	4,100	534,120
Carolina Poplar	283,189	128,474	14,825	426,488
Red Oak	225,238	124,333	16,628	366,199
Yellow Birch	625	357,000	1,000	356,625
Norway Spruce	252,613	64,036	7,900	324,549
Black Walnut	172,602	139,337	11,425	323,364
Black Locust	109,402	41,900	4,275	155,577
European Larch	20,075	103,720	750	124,545
Hemlock	16,357	98,304	500	115,161
Hybrid Poplar	8,525	41,925	2,925	53,375
White Ash	14,585	25,682	2,964	43,231
Cottonwood	1,075	10,300	1,000	12,375
Tamarack	110	110
Other Species	114,576	265,246	14,570	394,392
Total	7,647,726*	37,868,215	465,181	45,981,122

*Excluding W.I.A. Including 7,384,925 W.I.A.

CONTENTS

Tuesday, March 7, 1978

Panasonic expansion, statement by Mr. Davis	417
Council for troubled children and youth, statement by Mr. Wells	417
Council for troubled children and youth, questions of Mr. Wells: Mr. S. Smith, Mrs. Campbell	419
Robarts report, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. S. Smith, Mr. Warner	420
Layoff of nickel workers, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Martel	421
Equal pay, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Martel	422
Hospital privileges, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Nixon	422
Property taxation, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. di Santo, Mr. Swart	423
GATT negotiations, question of Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Sterling	424
Paper mill control orders, question of Mr. McCague: Mr. Gaunt, Mr. Foulds	424
Cabinet committee on Confederation, questions of Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Roy, Mr. Conway	425
OPP role in strike, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Deans, Mr. Lewis	426
OHIP claims procedure, questions of Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Conway	427
Noise levels, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Mackenzie	427
Community college negotiations, questions of Mr. Parrott: Mr. Sweeney, Mr. Bounsall	428
Air pollution, questions of Mr. McCague: Mr. Bounsall, Mr. Cooke	428
Overtime permits, questions of B. Stephenson: Mr. Mancini, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. B. Newman	429
Trucking legislation, questions of Mr. Snow: Mr. Philip	429
Government spending, questions of Mr. Davis: Mr. Ruston	430
Special education, questions of Mr. Wells: Ms. Gigantes	431
Point of order re written question, Mr. Reid	431
Point of privilege re International Women's Day, Ms. Gigantes	431
Tabling answers to written questions 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9, Mr. Welch	432
Income Tax Discounters Amendment Act, Mr. Grossman, second and third readings ...	432
Family Law Reform Act, in committee	436
Recess	456
Appendix, answers to written questions	457

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
 Bradley, J. (St. Catharines L)
 Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
 Brunelle, Hon. R.; Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Cochrane North PC)
 Bryden, M. (Beaches-Woodbine NDP)
 Campbell, M. (St. George L)
 Conway, S. (Renfrew North L)
 Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
 Cunningham, E. (Wentworth North L)
 Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
 Davison, M. (Hamilton Centre NDP)
 Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
 di Santo, O. (Downsview NDP)
 Edighoffer, H.; Chairman (Perth L)
 Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
 Gaunt, M. (Huron-Bruce L)
 Gigantes, E. (Carleton East NDP)
 Grossman, Hon. L.; Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations
 (St. Andrew-St. Patrick PC)
 Haggerty, R. (Erie L)
 Hall, R. (Lincoln L)
 Havrot, E. (Timiskaming PC)
 Hodgson, W. (York North PC)
 Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
 Lawlor, P. D. (Lakeshore NDP)
 Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
 Lupusella, A. (Dovercourt NDP)
 MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
 Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
 Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
 Mancini, R. (Essex South L)
 Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
 McCague, Hon. G.; Minister of the Environment (Dufferin-Simcoe PC)
 McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
 McMurtry, Hon. R.; Attorney General (Eglinton PC)
 Newman, B. (Windsor-Walkerville L)
 Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
 Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
 O'Neil, H. (Quinte L)
 Parrott, Hon. H. C.; Minister of Colleges and Universities (Oxford PC)
 Philip, E. (Etobicoke NDP)
 Pope, A. (Cochrane South PC)
 Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
 Renwick, J. A. (Riverdale NDP)
 Rhodes, Hon. J. R.; Minister of Industry and Tourism (Sault Ste. Marie PC)
 Rotenberg D.; Deputy Chairman (Wilson Heights PC)
 Roy, A. J. (Ottawa East L)
 Ruston, R. F. (Essex North L)
 Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
 Snow, Hon. J. W.; Minister of Transportation and Communications (Oakville PC)
 Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
 Sterling, N. W. (Carleton-Grenville PC)
 Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
 Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)

Sweeney, J. (Kitchener-Wilmot L)

Taylor, G. (Simcoe Centre PC)

Timbrell, Hon. D. R.; Minister of Health (Don Mills PC)

Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)

Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)

Wells, Hon. T. L.; Minister of Education (Scarborough North PC)

Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)

Williams, J. (Oriole PC)

No. 13

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Tuesday, March 7, 1978

Evening Sitting

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 7, 1978

The House resumed at 8:15 p.m.

UNIVERSITY OF WESTERN ONTARIO

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, today is the 100th anniversary of the founding of the University of Western Ontario, and those members of the House who are alumni of that institution are joining with me this evening in wearing a symbol of that birthday.

The University of Western Ontario, which has graduates across this country and across this province, in my opinion has made a fine contribution to the spiritual, intellectual, cultural and scientific life of our community.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the province extend best wishes for a happy birthday to the University of Western Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, so there is no misunderstanding, I would like to thank the hon. member for London North for the presentation of this birthday flower, which I am sure was grown in Brampton—

Mr. Reid: You must have had an honorary degree.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and to make it abundantly clear that while technically I qualify, I want to make sure that everybody understands it was an honorary degree and that my earned degree actually comes from the University of Toronto. I must say, however, there are some days I think I earned the honorary degree more than I did the initial degree.

Mr. Roy: On some days it is not obvious you have any degree.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I do want to say, on behalf of two people I know rather well who are undergraduates at that great institution, they notified me that this was the 100th anniversary at the same time as they made a plea for further student assistance, so I knew of this event taking place.

BUDGET RESOLUTION

Hon. Mr. McKeough moved that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. MacDonald: Sight unseen.

Mr. Lewis: Michael Cassidy doesn't like this budget. I have read his press release. It's an outrageous budget.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Michael Cassidy doesn't like anything.

Mr. Martel: You won't even like the budget when you hear it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker—
(Applause)

Mr. Foulds: Enjoy it, Darcy. It is going to be the last round of applause you get tonight.

Mr. Martel: Darcy, throw them another fish.

BUDGET STATEMENT

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, this is my sixth budget.

Mr. di Santo: Too many.

Mr. Martel: That's why the province is in such a mess.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Some would say I have developed a sixth sense when it comes to preparing them; others would say that after six I should have the sense to quit.

Mr. Foulds: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Carried?

An hon. member: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Interestingly enough one member of the press pointed out earlier today that it was my sixth budget and inquired how much longer I was prepared to carry on delivering budgets and asked did I get tired.

Mr. Martel: Until the Premier steps aside.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I said no, I didn't think I would keep at it all that long. They said, "Will you continue to deliver budgets for Mr. Davis?" I said, "In that case he is going to be around for at least 10 more years, so I have 10 more budgets."

Mr. Cassidy: God save this province.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's the first bit of good news.

Mr. Lewis: Wait for the next election.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I of course also want to thank my deputy minister, Rendall Dick, and my staff. I know I am joined by the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Auld), who with me thanks the ministers and the ministries that have worked very hard to bring both this budget and the estimates which will be tabled together in one place.

I hope you might acknowledge, Mr. Speaker, that we have two former treasurers of Ontario with us tonight, Mr. John White and Mr. Charles MacNaughton, in your gallery. Stand up.

Mr. Cassidy: Would they were back.

Mr. Foulds: I never thought I'd see the day. Bring back Charlie MacNaughton.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, we have a third former treasurer of this province, I think much younger than both of the gentlemen who are in your gallery. Mr. James Allan and Mrs. Allan would like to have been here tonight but they are in Sri Lanka on a holiday and couldn't be here, which says something about Mr. Allan.

Mr. Reid: How come the Treasurer is so healthy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: All members will have followed closely the proceedings of the first ministers' conference held in Ottawa from February 13 to February 15 this year. Ontario played a constructive role on this important occasion in developing a set of economic policies appropriate to today's economic reality. The Premier of Ontario put forward a specific 10-point plan of action for economic growth and development. He also tabled a document entitled "An Economic Development Policy for Canada," which contained a number of solid proposals designed to encourage price stability, improve the business climate and increase private investment, promote exports and replace imports, and reduce regional disparities.

The conference communique reflects in considerable measure the Ontario proposals. Let me comment on some of the more important actions we are taking. First, to encourage price stability, to improve business confidence and to provide room for job creation in the private sector, we have firmly checked growth in the province's spending. Expenditure growth is down for the fourth successive year, and we are holding to our plan to balance the budget by 1981.

Mr. S. Smith: Sure.

Mr. Martel: Even the Premier doesn't believe it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Second, to increase private investment we have introduced substantial tax incentives; we will maintain in this province a competitive tax climate. This budget contains new tax initiatives to further stimulate economic activity. Third, my colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes), will be directing this government's buy-Canadian campaign to promote further exports and replace imports. Fourth, we are encouraging research and development with new initiatives in a number of areas. Fifth, the province of Ontario, having made a substantial contribution to reducing regional disparities in Canada, will continue to encourage and support federal efforts in this most important endeavour.

Let me also comment on the consultative process. For a number of years, this government has been advocating a more open approach to decision-making; we have called for a genuine consultative process. The first ministers' conference and the preparatory meetings of ministers represent substantial progress towards this goal. There will be more frequent meetings in the future, giving the opportunity to assess our actions and build upon the progress already made.

That progress is considerable. Ontario strove for a consensus and, for the first time, a consensus has been arrived at that constitutes a framework within which Canadian economic policy can be developed on a co-ordinated basis. There is a recognition of the need to set explicit objectives, to pursue taxation and expenditure policies consistent with moderating inflation, to improve the business climate and to deal head-on with sectoral problems. All of these things must be done to provide for stable growth of the economy, to create the large number of new jobs needed to employ all of our labour force and to ensure our continued prosperity.

The economic prospects for 1978 and 1979 are favourable. The economy is on a recovery path. Despite concerns about unemployment, inflation and national unity—

Mr. di Santo: What else?

Hon. Mr. McKeough —Ontario recorded considerable progress in expanding job opportunities and restoring competitiveness to the economy in 1977.

Mr. Cassidy: That's why unemployment grew.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Employment grew by 73,000 jobs or two per cent. December 1977 over December 1976 employment was up by 109,000 jobs or three per cent. Seventy per cent of the new entrants to Ontario's labour force, which grew by 2.9 per cent in 1977, were youths or females. Unemployment among young people between 15 and 24 years of age has confirmed that jobs for youth continues to be the major challenge facing governments both in Ontario and in Canada.

Mr. Eakins: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Cassidy: So why don't you act?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Our expectations for 1978 are for a stronger provincial economic performance, with real growth of 4.3 per cent.

An hon. member: You said that last year.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This forecast is close to the middle of the range of current projections coming from a number of private and institutional sources. The Conference Board in Canada, for example, has recently forecast a more optimistic growth rate of 5.1 per cent for Ontario. The general view of increasing strength in the economy as the year progresses is consistent with my own. I see the process evolving at a moderate pace, with considerably stronger growth of 5.5 per cent in 1979. Essentially, I look forward to a strong export performance in 1978, reinforced by more buoyant consumer spending and renewed business investment in 1979. On the employment front, I expect that 100,000 new jobs will be created in 1978 and that the rate of unemployment will show a small decline.

Our recovery from the 1975 recession has been sluggish and irregular. Consumers have been uneasy in the face of high levels of both unemployment and inflation, and have been hesitant to expand significantly their own spending plans. Investment expenditures have been particularly slow at providing strength, reflecting uncertainty about our economic future. In addition, the concerted national effort to break the cost and wage spiral reflected in the anti-inflation program, coupled with general recognition of the need to restore a balance to our economy, has brought forth a sustained effort to limit the growth of government and reduce its involvement in the economy. All of these factors limited our growth last year.

Turning to 1978-79, consumer confidence is on the upswing according to recent surveys. While personal savings are still at historically high levels, the potential for a continued expansion of retail sales is excellent and very encouraging. Moreover, improvements in Canada's trading balance are expected to make a major contribution to growth in Ontario's economy in 1978. Continued strength in the economies of our major trading partners will provide strong stimulus for our exports.

In addition, the major improvement in the competitive position of Ontario industries, brought about by the more realistic level of the Canadian dollar and the substantial improvement in our cost performance, has yet to be fully realized. Ontario manufacturers now face a major opportunity to compete with imports in the domestic market and to make new inroads in foreign markets. In addition, I foresee considerable growth for our tourism industry as the year progresses.

With moderating government expenditures, an improving cost performance and a restoration of consumer and investor confidence, Ontario will be poised for a strong revival of private sector capital outlays in late 1978 and into the next year. Capacity utilization should improve significantly in a number of key sectors and new job creation can be expected to keep pace with a rapidly growing labour force. A better profit performance and an ample supply of credit will provide the base for a more substantial resurgence of investment. Moreover, I look forward to continued strength in investment through 1980-81, as major energy projects across Canada get under way and make their contribution to healthy demand in Ontario. My expectation, therefore, is for a steady expansion of private sector jobs, private sector incomes, and private sector prosperity of lasting benefit to all our citizens.

[8:30]

Ontario and Canada, then, are well positioned for an economic expansion based on private sector initiatives. I would be less than frank, however, if I did not acknowledge the continuing drag on the economy caused by the worrisome uncertainty surrounding Quebec. That uncertainty has hurt confidence and investment, not only in Quebec but throughout Canada.

The first ministers and ministers of finance agreed that general stimulation in the form of increased spending by governments would be counter-productive. It is desirable to hold the trend growth in government spending below the trend growth in the economy. There was also a clear recognition that large-scale tax cuts could not be afforded, because government deficits are already too large.

This message was evident in the extensive discussions I held again this year with representatives of various groups in the economy, including labour, business and the professions. Their informative comments have deepened my perspective of the year just past and focused my attention on the problems ahead. I would like to express my appreciation and that of my staff to them for their participation in the budget formulation process.

On February 16, my ministry released a staff study entitled "Reassessing the Scope for Fiscal Policy in Canada." That paper raises serious questions about the capacity of provincial governments to stimulate employment by further increasing their deficits. The paper shows that both the federal and Ontario governments face large deficits even at high levels of employment.

In reading this staff study, one reluctantly comes to the conclusion that the taxpayers of Ontario would only see marginal returns to the provincial Treasury when government stimulates the economy through general measures. Nearly all of the budget dividends arising from the resulting job creation flow to federal coffers in the form of savings on unemployment insurance.

Accordingly, the fiscal actions of this budget are framed within the realities of Ontario's overall budget capacity. They aim to be selectively stimulative as we continue on our program of balancing the Ontario budget by 1981.

The maintenance of competitive industry is of paramount importance to Ontario, and this government recognizes the vital role of investment and profits in the economic growth process. Taxation is an important element of business costs, and it is essential that tax policies reflect the realities of international competition. The fiscal measures I am proposing in this budget have been developed in full recognition of their impact on Ontario's competitive position.

I would like to call the members' attention to the study that I am tabling with this budget entitled "Ontario's Retail Sales Tax Exemption Program for Production Machinery and Equipment: An Economic Assessment." This document is a report to the Legislature on the economic impact of that incentive. It is an important study which represents the combined input of the corporate sector, the Institute for Policy Analysis of the University of Toronto and Treasury staff.

The results are strongly positive. The tax incentive stimulates investment, output and final demand. It also creates jobs.

Mr. Cassidy: That is not true. You destroyed 15,000 jobs this year. A loss of 15,000 jobs.

Mr. Havrot: Shut up, supermouth.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: Throw him another fish.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The results are strongly positive. The tax incentive stimulates investment, output and final demand. It also creates jobs.

Mr. Cassidy: Not according to your study.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In fact, the institute concludes its assessment of the program with these words—

Mr. Warner: Your programs have never created a job.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: "It would be difficult to think of any other policy which, if taken at the provincial level, would stimulate production levels to as great an extent." This is evident in the high benefit cost ratio of the incentive, which shows $3 of income generated for $1 of tax forgone.

The retail sales tax exemption improves Ontario's competitive position by lowering front-end costs. This study shows that in Ontario—

Mr. Foulds: What did you get from Denison?

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—our taxation levels compare favourably with those of nearby jurisdictions with which we compete. We cannot be complacent in this regard, however, as tax levels can quickly change and offset our advantage. In the United States, for example, President Carter has recently proposed a package of tax changes which would, among other things, reduce the rate of corporate tax by four percentage points and make the US investment tax credit considerably more generous. If changes such as these are implemented, the province and the federal government must be prepared to review our combined tax levels to ensure that we remain competitive.

The impact of inflation on profits is also of concern to this government. In 1976 we established the Ontario Committee on Inflation Accounting to study this particular problem. The committee's report was made public in July 1977. The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants has a central role to play in further developments in this area and I would ask them to pursue more aggressively improvements in financial reporting.

The federal and provincial governments have made substantial progress in the consultative process. Greater understanding and stronger relationships between all groups in our society—labour, business and government—is one of the keys to success in the eighties. The Partnership for Prosperity Conference was convened in February 1977, and the Premier's Advisory Committee on Ontario's Economic Future formed shortly after. As well, the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has announced that he is forming joint committees of labour, business and governments, in which Ontario will play a full role, to study and make recommendations for various sectors of the economy. These are important initiatives.

Mr. Mackenzie: Put some of the unemployed on those committees and they'll make good use of the dollars.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Ontario must be prepared to meet the challenges of the eighties and to develop economic policies which will ensure the continued growth and prosperity of our key sectors, particularly agriculture, resources and manufacturing. We must deal with the economic adjustments that will follow tariff changes. In these important tasks, the government needs advice from all participants in the economic process.

I propose three selective and essential actions to expand employment for Ontario's youth, to improve the situation in the mining industry and to stimulate the hospitality industry. The government of Ontario has led the way in Canada in providing employment opportunities for our energetic young people. In 1977 we implemented a five-point program which provided jobs and introductory training to the labour market for some 47,000 young people at a cost of $65 million.

Of these Ontario initiatives, perhaps the most successful was the Ontario Youth Employment Program, which paid $1 per hour towards the wages of young people aged 15 to 24. The response by Ontario businesses and farmers to this new employment incentive was overwhelming; more than 12,000 employers participated in the program, creating 21,500 new summer jobs.

Mr. Cooke: What about all the ones you laid off?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Ten thousand of these employers replied to the Premier expressing their satisfaction with OYEP and indicating strongly that they would like to see it operate again in 1978. I propose to reintroduce OYEP in 1978 and expand it in two significant ways. The incentive grants will be increased to $1.25 per hour, and the program will run for a full 25 weeks as compared to 16 weeks last summer.

Furthermore, all employers who created jobs under the program last year will be eligible for the $1.25 subsidy on both their 1977 level of OYEP jobs plus new job creation. An initial funding level of $17.2 million has been provided in the 1978 estimates, with the expectation that OYEP 1978 will generate some 30,000 jobs for young Ontario people. If additional funding is required it will be forthcoming.

The government will also expand significantly in 1978 its other youth-oriented employment programs. Funding for the Ontario Career Action Program will rise 33 per cent to $9.3 million, allowing some 5,750 young people to gain the work experience which will help them to secure employment upon leaving school. The capacity of our Junior Rangers' camps will be expanded to the maximum to provide places for an additional 300 applicants and the Experience program will be enlarged by some 2,100 jobs, for a total of 13,500 positions for young people seeking a rewarding summer in public service before resuming their studies. Altogether, Ontario's commitment to opportunities for youth will involve a total expenditure of $78 million for 1978, generating more than 60,000 jobs.

Mr. Martel: Now for the bad news.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: These Ontario actions will help reduce the unacceptably high unemployment rate among our 15 to 24 age group. But more permanent programs are needed.

Mr. Sargent: What is your program for permanent jobs?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No amalgam of public job creation programs, however well intentioned, can provide the challenges, the rewards and the career prospects which our young people deserve. That is why the Premier at the recent conference of first ministers urged the federal government to find ways of diverting UIC payments to youth into private sector incentives—

Mr. Peterson: Where did you get that idea?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —which create productive and lasting jobs to meet the legitimate expectations of these new adults in our society.

Mr. Peterson: It's a very creative idea.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The mining industry has played an important and innovative role in the development of our economy in terms of growth, foreign exchange—

Mr. Cassidy: Another sellout.

Mr. Martel: Listen to what the people in Sudbury say.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —support of secondary industry and regional development.

Mr. Warner: It should also buy Canada.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This sector is now in a serious slowdown. Many mining companies appear to be directing their new activities to Third World countries, which are still largely unexplored and where more attractive incentives are available.

Mr. Bounsall: And we paid for it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I'm disturbed that Ontario's mining exploration expenditures in the last five years have declined and very few mines have been developed. The first ministers have agreed on the need for a joint federal-provincial review of the taxation of the resource industries by finance and resource ministers.

Mr. Martel: The gall.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: My colleague the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller) and I will be participating in this important review. However, some interim action is essential and I am therefore proposing the following amendments to the Mining Tax Act, effective March 7, 1978: An exemption for new mines and major expansions of existing mines—

Mr. Martel: You couldn't even put up $3 million to save jobs.

Mr. Davidson: You're giving away the store again.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —the carry-forward of unused processing allowance and the removal of mandatory minimum deductions of depreciation and exploration and development expenditures and full allowance of foreign processing costs incurred in the processing of Ontario ore.

Mr. Lewis: That's not what they asked for.

Mr. Warner: What a giveaway.

Mr. Martel: You will export some more jobs.

Mr. Mackenzie: How many more are you going to put out of work? It's the sickest budget we have ever had.

Mr. Martel: You gave the store away and look what happened.

Mr. Sargent: Denison Mines excepted.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: These changes will encourage the search for and development of new mines in Ontario and even out the burden of the mining tax over the metals cycle. As an additional incentive, I am also proposing to allow certain expenses related to social assets.

Mr. Wildman: Inco didn't even ask for that.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To attract and retain employees, mining companies located in isolated regions of the province provide housing, social and recreational facilities. Operating and maintenance costs of social assets in Ontario will be allowed as a deductible expense after April 9, 1974.

Mr. Cassidy: What a windfall! That goes back four years.

Mr. Martel: You are giving the store away.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I estimate these measures to assist the mining industry will cost $5 million in 1978-79. In years of stronger markets, they will yield considerably greater tax savings to our vital resource industry. Equally important, these measures will provide a climate of certainty and confidence which is essential to high-risk investments. They will benefit small and medium-sized operations as well as the large integrated mining corporations.

Mr. Sargent: That is a long way from Denison's profit.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In the case of uranium for Ontario Hydro, these measures will apply only to new contracts.

Travel costs and costs of accommodation in Canada have risen considerably over the last few years—

[8:45]

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —even faster than the general cost of living. Travellers from the United States and abroad, as well as Canadians themselves, have been turning more and more to alternative destinations and as a result, the nation's balance of trade in travel has deteriorated seriously. Ontario, as the principal Canadian destination of both Canadian and non-Canadian travellers, has, of course, felt this impact most directly.

To counteract these trends, I am proposing to suspend until the end of 1979 the full seven per cent retail sales tax on all taxable accommodation.

Mr. Swart: Build another Minaki Lodge.

Mr. Martel: You are now going to open Minaki Lodge, are you?

An hon. member: This whole government has become the Minaki Lodge.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, this change will be effective for all guests checking in after midnight tonight.

Mr. Breithaupt: What are people going to do for the next three hours?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It will also apply to the full price of hospitality services sold as a package deal under the American plan, with the exception of charges for liquor. It will provide a total tax saving for travellers and tourists in Ontario of about $30 million in 1978-79. This tax saving, coupled with recent currency developments and the industry's own efforts to restrain costs, will result in significant reductions in average room costs.

Here in Toronto, for example, the price of a room has already been effectively reduced by 15 per cent since November 1976 for our American friends and by as much as 40 per cent over the same period for visitors from Japan and western Europe. This tax exemption will also lower the cost of charter arrangements for Canadian travel recently announced by the federal government.

Mr. Davidson: If you keep talking, they will believe they can save some money.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The hospitality industry, as the second largest sector in the Ontario economy, can be expected to experience considerable benefits from these changes. The spillover effects in terms of employment growth, new construction and improvements to existing facilities should be substantial as visitors and Canadians alike experience the pleasures of an Ontario vacation. These beneficial effects will be realized most directly in the restaurant industry and retail trades.

I am confident that the hospitality industry will respond with vigour and imagination to this new opportunity to establish Ontario as a prime international vacation centre.

An additional incentive to strengthen the economy in the form of a 100 per cent tax credit for new jobs in industrial research, development and design, was proposed by the Premier in Ottawa. It would cost $100 million or more a year for the next five years in terms of tax revenues forgone by federal and provincial governments, but would generate tangible benefits to our economy. It would build up our capacity for essential innovation, improve our productivity and export performance and make Canada less dependent on foreign technology. It would also pay large dividends in terms of better jobs for talented young people—

Mr. Davidson: If it is such a good idea, why don't you do it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —jobs which fully utilize the skills of our college and university graduates.

Mr. Cassidy: Where have you been for 34 years?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This research and development tax incentive should be implemented on a national scale with full participation of both the federal government and the provinces. I have already informed the Minister of Finance that Ontario wants to proceed along these lines immediately and that we are willing to assist in the formulation of a powerful incentive program.

In passing, let me point out that the R and D program should be available to all corporations doing business in Canada, both large and small. We cannot afford to let concern about a "branch plant economy" limit the potential benefits which will flow to all Canadians. The program should also apply to a broad spectrum of—

Mr. Wildman: R and D and branch plants don't go together.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —research and development, including, for example, a draughtsman in a tool and die shop or other project designers.

Mr. Nixon: Then do it.

Mr. Martel: What was that? A throwaway paragraph?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on September 16, 1977, I outlined the broad dimensions of the government's 1978 spending plan. The key feature of that plan was a target of 6.9 per cent for our expenditure growth rate in the 1978-79 fiscal year. The government has stuck to its target. The Chairman of Management Board will table estimates which hold our spending growth rate for 1978-79 to seven per cent.

Mr. Cassidy: Regardless of the consequences.

Mr. Foulds: We haven't even finished last year's supplementaries.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This will be the fourth year in a row that Ontario has progressively reduced its spending growth rates.

Mr. Cassidy: On the back of municipalities.

Mr. Warner: While pushing up the property taxes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We have proven that government can reduce its claim on total resources. This message is finally beginning to sink in at Ottawa as well.

Mr. Foulds: You sink in a quagmire.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Perhaps the most significant result of the first ministers' conference was the agreement to restrain government spending below the growth in the economy. That is one of the essential policies we have been advocating for building a stronger economy in the years ahead. We are targeting for a balanced budget to make room in the economy for the private sector to grow and to flourish.

Mr. Peterson: And to juggle the books. You are selling off your assets, you know that, Bill.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The government has made difficult decisions, and we have substantially reordered the priorities to hold our spending growth to seven per cent, but I believe we can continue to maintain essential public services. Indeed, in a number of areas there are improvements in levels of service.

Mr. Martel: He's more right wing than Genghis Khan.

Mr. Cassidy: He makes old Genghis look like a Marxist.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Health care, for example, has been allocated additional funding of some $276 million in 1978-79, or 29 per cent—

Mr. Davidson: You've just raised the premiums.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —of the total spending increase of $952 million. That represents an increase of 8.1 per cent. To accommodate our priorities and the unavoidable increases for such items as public debt interest and pension contributions, we have reduced our government operating costs and our payroll budget to the minimum. Let me reiterate that at seven per cent, unlike the government of Canada we are actively eating inflation.

Mr. Makarchuk: What is the increase in OHIP premiums?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I'm only a plumber, not a psychiatrist.

Mr. Roy: You are much too modest.

Mr. Makarchuk: Which way does it flow, Darcy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There's nothing wrong with being a plumber.

Mr. Warner: This plumber puts the economy down the drain.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I work under the old math, not the new math; but seven per cent is a lot more than the eight per cent we heard about from those people last fall.

Mr. S. Smith: Where will they find $300 million?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have included for the information of members a table which compares Ontario and federal spending since 1974-75. I have also included a table which illustrates how the government rationed its limited funds among these competing expenditure claims. To those who would say to us the job can be done better—

Mr. Martel: You are getting all flustered, Darcy.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Repeat it, Darcy, they missed it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To those who would say to us the job can be done better—

Some hon. members: Right.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right, eh? Well, I would suggest that they lay the specifics before this Legislature so that the school boards, the municipalities, the public service unions and citizen groups, each of whom claim they deserve more, can respond. Put it in front of us.

Mr. Roy: We have.

Mr. Cassidy: Boy, it is group against group and region against region.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, as members are aware, the province—

Mr. Cassidy: Abdication of your responsibility.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —allocates some 30 per cent of its budget to support local government under a revenue-sharing formula known as the Edmonton commitment. Last September 16—

Mr. Swart: It is called the Edmonton twist now.

Mr. Breithaupt: You don't really believe that, do you?

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: The charter of Bramalea is going next.

Mr. Warner: Commitment always was a joke to you.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Last September 16, I announced Ontario's financial assistance to local governments would be $4.23 billion for 1978-79 and I provided a general outline of our transfers so municipalities could commence their 1978 budget planning. In our estimates process we have made some adjustments to the distribution of our transfers and raised the total, despite the fact that revenues have come in considerably below the forecast level upon which the Edmonton commitment was based. Total financial assistance for 1978-79 is increased to $4.39 billion.

For the information of members I have included a table which shows the Edmonton commitment distribution of $4.23 billion announced in September and compares it with the total of $4.39 billion contained in the printed estimates. I detect that some representatives and employees of some local governments are reluctant to share our commitment to expenditure restraint.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Fancy footwork.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They protest that I have redefined the commitment to cutback on provincial transfers.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right, you have.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The facts prove otherwise.

Mr. Peterson: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Over the five years since this revenue-sharing arrangement has been in operation—that is from 1973-74 through 1977-78—the province has delivered

$13.581 billion in actual transfers to local governments—

Mr. Wildman: Only on paper.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —versus a cumulative entitlement under the original Edmonton commitment formula of $13.583 billion. That's a shortfall or underdelivery of $2 million, or one-fiftieth of one per cent.

Mr. Swart: You have changed the rules of the game.

Mr. Peterson: You are just telling little lies, eh?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would be ecstatic, sir, if the province came anywhere close to such a balance in its financial arrangements with the federal government. I make no apology, sir, for reformulating the Edmonton commitment—

Mr. Cassidy: Now you admit it.

An hon. member: Destroying it.

Mr. Cassidy: You short-changed them.

Mr. Roy: Reformulated it!

Mr. Cassidy: Manipulating.

Mr. Wildman: Who did you hold discussions with, Darcy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I make no apology for reformulating the Edmonton commitment to include major elements of provincial assistance—

Mr. Warner: How can you call it a commitment if you keep changing it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —which should have been in the formula right from the beginning. In particular, I added our provincial payments to the teachers' superannuation fund, which are just as valuable a form of financial assistance to school boards—

Mr. Swart: Unilaterally, without discussion.

Mr. Cassidy: No consultation. Good grief.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —as are general legislative grants. On the revised and more realistic basis, the province has been more than fair to local governments—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Margaret, don't get upset.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —overdelivering its commitment by some $444 million through the end of 1977-78.

Mr. Swart: On your formula.

Mr. Cassidy: Your figures. Only you believe that.

Mr. Lewis: Somebody better give John White a Valium.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, with declining school enrolments and with populations which may not be growing, I question whether or not school-board and municipal spending needs to increase more than our own.

While on the topic of local government I would like to briefly discuss several other important matters of longer-term significance.

Mr. MacDonald: So long-term you will never get around to it.

Mr. Cassidy: Property tax is going up.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: First let me clarify how the government is proceeding with the complex matter of property tax reform.

Mr. Martel: Ten years now, Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have established a working committee of local elected representatives who are to report back by March 31, 1978.

Mr. Martel: Should be good for another three elections at least.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They are to make recommendations on the fundamental issues of implementation of market value assessment and the tax principles set out in the January 4 white paper. After we have agreement on an acceptable way to implement market value assessment and property tax reform, then the province will proceed to the complementary matters of grant reform—

Mr. Makarchuk: We will have an election and then we will decide.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and a revised revenue-sharing arrangement with local government. The overall tax burdens on residences—

Mr. Breithaupt: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Swart: You will change it again.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —will not increase due to reform and there will be a phasing-in process, particularly for single-family dwellings. I have cautioned the committee, however, not to look for an easy way out by loading more of the burden on to industry.

[9:00]

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Ontario's tax system must remain competitive, not just at the provincial level but at the local level as well. I am aware that some American jurisdictions are using the local tax base as assistance for industry. I do not think, however, that what is, in effect, a municipal giveaway would be appropriate in Ontario.

Mr. Swart: No, they get a provincial one.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Second, I expect to act on the findings of five important studies on the reform of local government structure —Metropolitan Toronto, regional Niagara, regional Ottawa-Carleton, the county of Northumberland and the district of Parry Sound.

Mr. Sargent: You have been kicking this thing around for 15 years. And you know you are not going to do it this year.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You wouldn't know, Eddie; you are never here.

Mr. Roy: The minister doesn't contribute anything even though she is here.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: These studies represent an important contribution to the task of making local government more responsive and efficient.

Third, I would like to indicate my intention to pursue the matter of reciprocal taxation. As members know, Ontario entered into a reciprocal tax agreement with the federal government as of October 1, 1977; it is working well. Under this arrangement, governments pay taxes to each other on those purchases and other activities which are taxable in the private sector. This minimizes special exemptions and greatly simplifies tax administration. Under property tax reform, the province will be paying full local taxes on its properties, hence it is logical for local governments to pay provincial taxes—

Mr. Swart: And taking it away in transfer payments.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —that is sales tax, fuel taxes and licence fees. In the long run, this will streamline the overall tax structure in Ontario and simplify our statutes.

Mr. Cassidy: You take with one hand and you take with the other. There is no fairness at all there.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Let me turn to another aspect of our commitment to reform of the property tax. At the recent first ministers' conference, Prime Minister Trudeau singled out Ontario's tax credit system for high praise. Let me share with the House this quote from Mr. Trudeau's speech on February 13.

Mr. Makarchuk: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: "Many of you, in your own jurisdiction, have been equally creative. Premier Davis, your government in Ontario has introduced a refundable tax credit system to provide relief from property and sales tax"—

Mr. Peterson: You really like that man, don't you, Darcy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —"for low- and middle-income taxpayers. Perhaps this is a model that should be pursued on a broader scale."

Mr. Roy: What did Joe Clark say?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Budget Paper B, appended to this statement, explains in detail how our tax credits work to relieve property tax burdens in the most equitable and efficient way. We propose to build on this proven system to meet our commitment in a charter for Ontario, which promises this government will—

Mr. Breithaupt: The Bramalea bombshell.

Mr. Nixon: Another charter.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —"reduce the municipal tax burden on senior citizens, and work towards the ultimate elimination of this particular tax for the majority of Ontario's senior citizens."

Mr. Reed: And plant two trees for one.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In conjunction with the implementation of property tax reform—

Mr. Martel: This should be worth another 10 years, Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —the basic tax credit to senior citizens will be enriched from $290 to $510, thereby offsetting in total—

Mr. Martel: Ten more years.

Mr. Makarchuk: Give us the date.

Mr. Martel: You were talking property tax reform when I came in here 10 years ago.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the Treasurer should repeat that.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, some may have missed that. So let me repeat it.

In conjunction with the implementation of property tax reform, the basic tax credit to senior citizens will be enriched from $290 to $510, thereby offsetting in total more than 80 per cent of their property tax burden.

Mr. Swart: It's a long way down the pike.

An hon. member: When?

An hon. member: Before the next election, of course.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Within the economic and financial objectives the government has set for this year I have decided it is necessary to raise additional revenues. Having examined various alternatives I am proposing a balanced and equitable package of tax actions to raise an additional $374 million. These actions will not detract from the economic recovery nor will they impair Ontario's competitive position.

The control of health costs continues to be a high priority of this government. Expenditures on insured health services increased 14.5 per cent in 1976-77 and 9.2 per cent in 1977-78.

Mr. Warner: You've got a mess over there and you can't clean it up.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: For 1978, we expect an even better performance. Nevertheless, the financing of health costs continues to be unbalanced—

Mr. Cassidy: What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —with the share covered by OHIP premiums steadily declining. Premiums retain a visible link with the cost of services.

Interjection.

Mr. Warner: The highest in Canada.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Consequently, I am proposing to increase OHIP premiums to restore the balance in financing.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We have considered other alternatives and rejected them. My colleague in Health, and my former colleague in Health have both worked hard to control costs. They have argued eloquently against deterrent fees, quite rightly pointing out that such a policy would deny access to our high quality health care system for those least able to pay.

An hon. member: Thank God for small mercies.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Effective May 1, 1978, OHIP premiums will increase by $6 per month—

An hon. member: They can't even afford OHIP.

Mr. Warner: Cruel punishment.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —for single subscribers and $12 per month for families.

Mr. Cassidy: Do they call you Scrooge?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That will produce new premium levels of $22 per month and $44 per month for single persons and families respectively.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: At the same time, our system of premium assistance will be enriched to ensure that this increase does not impact on low and modest income families.

Mr. Makarchuk: You're hitting the working poor.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would also point out to members that while the OHIP increases will raise payroll costs to employers, our Ontario companies will still enjoy a considerable advantage on this score over their US counterparts.

Mr. Davidson: Why don't you talk yourself out of work?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Even with the higher premiums, the effective rate of payroll taxation in Ontario is below that in the US, and this differential in our favour will widen when the American social security financing amendments take effect in 1978 and subsequent years. This necessary adjustment—

Mr. Cassidy: Necessary adjustment?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —to OHIP premiums will generate an additional $271 million. As a result—

Mr. Cassidy: It is far more than an adjustment.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —premiums in 1978-79 will again cover one-third of the costs of insured health services, which approximates the long-run norm recently recommended by the joint advisory committee on methods to control health costs.

Full details of these OHIP changes are provided in appendix C to this statement.

Mr. Cassidy: The worst committee this province has seen for years.

Mr. McClellan: Very representative committee, wasn't it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I also propose to raise additional revenue from alcohol and tobacco.

Mr. Foulds: Why isn't Lorne Henderson applauding this one?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Effective April 1, 1978, the gallonage fee on beer will be increased by seven cents per gallon, and the markups on spirits, wines and imported beer will also be raised.

An hon. member: Easy money.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The markup increases will be slightly smaller on imports, as we begin to neutralize over the longer term what has been, in effect, an Ontario tariff. These increases will generate about $40 million in additional revenues in 1978-79.

As of midnight this day, the tax on cigarettes will be increased 2.8 cents to a total of 22 cents per package of 20, and the tax on cigars and pipe tobacco will also be raised.

Mr. Martel: You will have to quit smoking your pipe, Bill.

Mr. S. Smith: Now you have gone too far.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And healthier for all of us.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I estimate that these new rates will produce $30 million in additional revenue.

Mr. Martel: Throw your pipe away, Bill.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Following the practice of past years, full details of these changes are set out in the tax appendix to this statement.

I am also proposing to increase the compensation paid to appointed tobacco tax collectors from the present maximum level of $700 to $1,000 per annum, effective April 1, 1978.

While on the subject of compensation, I would point out to members that the level of compensation paid to motor vehicle agents has not been changed since 1972. As an incentive to encourage motor vehicle agents to tighten up their appraisal of used cars and generate higher tax collections, I am now proposing increases in compensation, effective April 1, 1978.

Mr. Davidson: Talking about compensation, what about workmen's compensation?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am proposing two further measures to raise revenues.

First, effective March 8, 1978, the retail sales tax exemption for railway rolling stock will be withdrawn and the seven per cent tax will be applied on the basis of miles travelled in Ontario. Similar tax treatment is now in effect in Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and these provinces—unlike Ontario—also levy a tax on the diesel fuel used in locomotives.

Second, the capital tax levied on loan and trust companies will be changed to parallel the treatment of banks, effective for fiscal years ending after March 7, 1978.

I estimate that these two changes will increase our revenues by $18 million.

Let me turn now to measures relating to our tax structure and collection procedures.

The federal changes to the Income Tax Act, as implemented by Bill C-11, will be paralleled in most instances in our corporate income tax. Our schedule of instalment payments under the Corporations Tax Act will also be changed to match the federal schedule. This will simplify the work of business accountants and also result in a one-time cash flow adjustment of $70 million in favour of the province.

I would like to inform members that some Ontario-based insurance companies have been forced to pay retaliatory taxes in the United States as a result of the 1976 increase in our premiums tax from two per cent to three per cent. This has put them at a competitive disadvantage in selling life insurance and sickness and accident insurance in the United States. In view of these developments, I propose to move Ontario's premium tax back to two per cent on life insurance and sickness-and-accident insurance effective March 8, 1978.

Mr. Swart: There is no insurance company that makes that profit.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Moreover, I have requested that the federal government, in its negotiations of the Canada-US tax treaty, seek an exemption for the provinces from these retaliatory tax provisions. Ontario will also parallel the federal changes to the income taxation of insurance companies. These two measures, taken together, will cost a net of $5 million in 1978-79.

The Ontario economy is steadily adapting itself towards energy conservation.

Mr. Cassidy: We're creeping. One of the reasons is your government.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To assist in this process, I propose to remove the retail sales tax from storm doors and storm windows, effective March 8, 1978.

An hon. member: Whoopee.

Mr. Peterson: What about toilet seats?

Mr. Cassidy: What's the point of keeping in heat you can't afford because you're unemployed?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This measure will cost $15 million in 1978-79 and bring the government's total package of energy conservation exemptions to $25 million per year.

I am pleased to announce that Ontario's personal income tax rate for 1978 will remain at 44 per cent, the second lowest among the 10 provinces.

Mr. Swart: But a $270 million hike in OHIP premium taxes.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you add all the other taxes? Come on, Bob; tell him. Add on the other taxes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would also like to inform the members that Ontario intends to seek amendments to its tax collection agreement—

Mr. Deans: It's a lot of nonsense. It's hypocrisy.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you just close the shop? You've mortgaged it all; just close it.

Mr. Havrot: Go home and grow a beard.

Hon. W. Newman: Why don't you buy a razor?

Mr. Martel: I'm going to rush out and buy a door.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would also like to inform the members that Ontario intends to seek amendments to its tax collection agreement with the federal government—amendments which will ensure direct provincial participation in the preparation of annual income tax estimates and payment flows and guarantee our access to the necessary tax data.

Mr. Cassidy: That's because you blew it last year.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Would the hon. member give me a list of those people who voted for him? I'd like to write them all a thank-you letter—a great big thank-you letter.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm a lot closer to the premiership than you'll ever be.

Mr. Speaker: If the Treasurer would stick to his text, he might be less provocative.

Hon. Mr. Welch: How do you know he's not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Michael, you really asked for that.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have real sympathy for the leader of the third party. My staff have received two brown envelopes from the NDP research staff.

Let me summarize the tax changes that I have outlined. The tax increases I have proposed amount to some $359 million in total, plus the $70 million in cash flow from acceleration of corporation instalment payments. The tax cuts for mining, tourism, insurance and energy conservation amount to $55 million. Altogether, these tax actions will contribute $374 million towards Ontario's financial requirements for the 1978 fiscal year and bring us back on course towards a balanced budget.

Mr. Warner: You created the debts.

Mr. Deans: Darcy, you created this deficit.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The government's success in trimming the public sector provides the opportunity to develop complementary borrowing and investment strategies. Accordingly, in this budget I am introducing a number of significant changes in the province's long-run financial planning. These changes are explained in detail in budget paper C and in budget paper A.

Mr. Warner: You created it, now you explain it away.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Consequently, I shall only deal with the main features in this statement.

First, the province will reduce its borrowing from the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System in the form of non-marketable debentures to $100 million in 1978-79 and to zero in following years.

Mr. Kerrio: He had to do that.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This will leave OMERS free to invest its entire surplus in marketable securities in the private sector and in other marketable securities. I understand that OMERS will redeploy a substantial part of this additional capital into Ontario Hydro bonds.

Two, the direct lending activities of the Ontario Mortgage Corporation will be phased out as current commitments are completed. The province will commence immediately to sell back to the private sector institutions the large mortgage portfolio that OMC has acquired.

Mr. S. Smith: Just sell your assets—$120 million.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You ought to think about this before you say too much. You know, you've got more positions—you'll flip in the morning—you've got more positions than Nadia Comaneci. You really have.

Mr. S. Smith: You flopped tonight.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I said if he had more positions than Nadia Comaneci.

Beginning in the 1978 fiscal year, the province will switch its capital assistance to universities, school boards, hospitals and sewer and water projects from amortized loans to up-front grants. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) will re-examine the role of the Ontario development corporations as direct lending agencies—

Mr. Breithaupt: And a good thing too.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and explore with the private sector alternative financing mechanisms such as loan guarantees.

These changes are of fundamental significance. In particular, the redevelopment of internal pension funds into private sector investments is an important achievement. This is directly attributable to this government's success in reducing both our spending and our reliance on deficit financing.

The financing of Canada's economic growth is itself a major challenge which we have to face. The trimming of government deficits is a necessary contribution to stable credit markets. In Ontario we have not borrowed in the public market on our own account for the past two years. We are not just concerned about the impact of government borrowing and of regulatory policies, but also the overall flows of funds in the economy.

Consequently my ministry will be expanding its analytical work in this area to provide fuller information to the government on the availability and cost of credit.

Mr. Foulds: If you don't want to govern why don't you resign?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the balanced package of tax proposals I have put before you, along with our restrained spending plan, will keep Ontario's finances in sound shape.

Mr. Warner: Is this the best you can do?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The revenue shortfall we experienced in 1977-78 represents only a temporary setback to our goal of a balanced budget. For the 1978 fiscal year I am estimating our overall cash requirements will decline to $1.55 billion—

Mr. Makarchuk: That's what you said last year.

Mr. Swart: Same figure as last year.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —which is within $200 million of the target set in last year's budget.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is starting to sound like a record that is stuck in its groove.

Mr. Cassidy: What about your budgetary deficit? How big is your budgetary deficit?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This prudent fiscal plan means that once again Ontario will not need to borrow in the public capital market.

Mr. Peterson: You are proud of the stupidest things, Bill.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Our non-public sources of funds will be more than sufficient to finance our cash requirements.

Ontario's economic outlook is encouraging, however an early federal budget is important. I would expect that the federal Minister of Finance will introduce measures flowing directly from the first ministers' communique—

Mr. Peterson: Under your leadership, of course.

Mr. Warner: Darcy for Premier.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Ontario stands ready to respond to important federal initiatives.

Monsieur le Président, avant de terminer, je tiens à dire aux membres de cette Assemblée que le présent discours marque un moment important dans l'histoire d'Ontario. Pour la première fois au cours 111 années que compte maintenant la Confédération, le budget de l'Ontario est publié dans les deux langues officielles du Canada. Monsieur le Président, je suis fier de remettre des exemplaires du budget en langue française au Premier ministre Davis, aux chefs des partis d'opposition et à mon collègue, le député de Cochrane Nord (M. Brunelle).

Mr. Sargent: You should have stayed in bed.

Mr. di Santo: The accent is terrible.

Mr. Peterson: Get the job of Diefenbaker.

Mr. Martel: Except in Ontario.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is still deficit even if it is in French.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, very simply—

Mr. Makarchuk: You are a bad debt in any language.

Mr. Sargent: You should be on the Gong Show.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You over there make a mockery of what your leader said; you really do.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you recognize it officially then?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: For the first time in 111 years this budget has been produced in both official languages of our country—

Mr. Martel: That is called progress, it only took 111 years.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —something which I think we can all take some pride in.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, this equitable and constructive budget is thanks to the sound management and prudent financing policies of this government. It reaffirms our commitment to balance the budget and to promote a healthy economy.

Mr. Cooke: Throws people out of work.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It builds upon our achievements at the first ministers' conference.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's what you said last year and the year before.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It expands significantly Ontario's job programs for young people; it cuts taxes to help tourism and the hospitality industry.

Mr. Cooke: It throws civil servants out of work.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It introduces new long-term incentives for expansion of the mining industry; it restrains spending, yet meets the social and public needs of our people; and it prepares us for the challenges of the eighties. With faith in private enterprise and our control of the public sector, and with the leadership of William Grenville Davis, I believe our citizens can be confident of the future.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, to give the assembled throng some relief, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why don't you say what a great budget it was?

On motion by Mr. Peterson, the debate was adjourned.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ONTARIO LOAN ACT

Hon. Mr. McKeough moved first reading of Bill 24, An Act to authorize the Raising of Money on the Credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This is the usual bill which we bring in at this time of the year to authorize our borrowing from the Canada Pension fund and certain other places.

TOBACCO TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved first reading of Bill 25, An Act to amend the Tobacco Tax Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The purpose of this Act is to provide for the increase in the tobacco tax as indicated in the budget and also for an increase in the compensation to the tobacco tax collectors.

INCOME TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved first reading of Bill 26, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: This bill is administrative in nature and is required under the terms of the tax collection agreement between Ontario and Canada.
[9:30]

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved first reading of Bill 27, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, consequent to the Treasurer's budget statement, this bill is to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act and includes provisions to enact proposals in his budget, but in addition the bill includes provisions to clarify the treatment of promotional giveaways and other similar material.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved first reading of Bill 28, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to amend the Corporations Tax Act and it contains provisions to enact the Treasurer's budget proposals, but in addition it includes several tax simplification measures and other administrative measures to bring Ontario's law even closer to that of the federal government.

MINING TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved first reading of Bill 29, An Act to amend the Mining Tax Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 9:35 p.m.

ERRATUM

No.	Page	Line	Should read:
11	413	55	Stong, A. (York Centre L)

CONTENTS

Tuesday, March 7, 1978

Re 100th anniversary, University of Western Ontario, Mr. Van Horne, Mr. Davis	471
Budget resolution, Mr. McKeough	471
Budget statement, Mr. McKeough	471
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Peterson, agreed to	484
Ontario Loan Act, Mr. McKeough, first reading	485
Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, Mr. Maeck, first reading	485
Income Tax Amendment Act, Mr. Maeck, first reading	485
Retail Sales Tax Amendment Act, Mr. Maeck, first reading	485
Corporations Tax Amendment Act, Mr. Maeck, first reading	485
Mining Tax Amendment Act, Mr. F. S. Miller, first reading	485
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Welch, agreed to	485

SPEAKERS IN THIS ISSUE

Bernier, Hon. L.; Minister of Northern Affairs (Kenora PC)
Bounsall, E. J. (Windsor-Sandwich NDP)
Breithaupt, J. R. (Kitchener L)
Cassidy, M. (Ottawa Centre NDP)
Cooke, D. (Windsor-Riverside NDP)
Davidson, M. (Cambridge NDP)
Davis, Hon. W. G.; Premier (Brampton PC)
Deans, I. (Wentworth NDP)
di Santo, O. (Downsview NDP)
Eakins, J. (Victoria-Haliburton L)
Foulds, J. F. (Port Arthur NDP)
Havrot, E. (Timiskaming PC)
Kerrio, V. (Niagara Falls L)
Lewis, S. (Scarborough West NDP)
MacDonald, D. C. (York South NDP)
Mackenzie, R. (Hamilton East NDP)
Maeck, Hon. L.; Minister of Revenue (Parry Sound PC)
Makarchuk, M. (Brantford NDP)
Martel, E. W. (Sudbury East NDP)
McClellan, R. (Bellwoods NDP)
McKeough, Hon. W. D.; Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs
(Chatham-Kent PC)
Newman, Hon. W.; Minister of Agriculture and Food (Durham-York PC)
Nixon, R. F. (Brant-Oxford-Norfolk L)
Peterson, D. (London Centre L)
Reed, J. (Halton-Burlington L)
Reid, T. P. (Rainy River L)
Roy, A. J. (Ottawa East L)
Sargent, E. (Grey-Bruce L)
Smith, S.; Leader of the Opposition (Hamilton West L)
Stephenson, Hon. B.; Minister of Labour (York Mills PC)
Stokes, Hon. J. E.; Speaker (Lake Nipigon NDP)
Swart, M. (Welland-Thorold NDP)
Van Horne, R. (London North L)
Warner, D. (Scarborough-Ellesmere NDP)
Welch, Hon. R.; Minister of Culture and Recreation, Deputy Premier (Brock PC)
Wildman, B. (Algoma NDP)

No. 14

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)
Daily Edition

Second Session, 31st Parliament

Thursday, March 9, 1978

Afternoon Sitting

Speaker: Honourable John E. Stokes

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, QC

CONTENTS

A list of the speakers taking part in the debates in this issue of Hansard appears, in alphabetical order, at the back of this issue.

Daily contents of proceedings also appears at the back of this issue. Reference to a cumulative index of previous issues can be obtained by calling the Hansard Reporting Service indexing staff. (Phone 965-2159)

Hansard subscription price is $15.00 per session, from: Sessional Subscription Service, Printing Services Branch, Ministry of Government Services, 9th Floor, Ferguson Block, Parliament Buildings, Toronto M7A 1N3. Phone 965-2238.

Published by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.
Editor of Debates: Peter Brannan.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

SOVIET EMIGRATION

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to call the attention of hon. members of this Legislature to an action now being undertaken by three senior professors at the University of Toronto. They are Professor James Ham, dean of graduate studies; Reverend J. M. Kelly, president of St. Michael's College, and Dr. Louis Simonovich, chairman of the department of medical genetics.

These distinguished professors have invited all their colleagues at the University of Toronto to authorize them to press upon the Prime Minister of Canada their request that the government of Canada take "urgent and effective action to persuade the Soviet authorities to permit unhampered emigration for all those who have committed no crime, but foresee in the Soviet Union a life of intolerable discrimination."

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the unanimous consent of the hon. members to a motion that we applaud this initiative of the University of Toronto professors.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to add my voice to the voice of the Leader of the Opposition in support of that particular resolution, which I have already signed. I hope all members of the House agree to take this action in an effort to ensure that human rights are respected in the Soviet Union.

[Later:]

Mr. S. Smith: Point of order, if I might; on a separate matter, Mr. Speaker.

On the matter of Soviet emigration, I was asking unanimous consent of the hon. members to a motion that we applaud the initiative of the University of Toronto professors. I'd be guided by you, Mr. Speaker, as to whether such consent is forthcoming and what action should be taken at this point.

Mr. Ruston: Who's in charge over there?

Ms. Gigantes: Agreed, agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, agreed; we said that.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INCO AND FALCONBRIDGE LAYOFFS

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege.

On March 6, the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy) rose on a point of personal privilege as a result of comments made in the select committee report on the Inco and Falconbridge layoffs. He referred to comments made by my colleagues the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie), the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams) and myself, on page 28 of the Inco Falconbridge select committee report.

In the report tabled, the New Democratic Party members made the following statement pertaining to one of the recommendations in the Interim Report on the Select Committee on Economic and Cultural Nationalism: Natural Resources, Foreign Ownership and Economic Development: "Some 23 major recommendations were made by this committee, one of them calling for public ownership of the resource industries. Again this government failed to act."

The member for Mississauga South on March 6, 1978, indicated that no recommendation which called for public ownership of the resource industry was made. He stated there was "a recommendation . . . which called for 75 per cent Canadian ownership of equity after 15 years, but that does not mean . . . government or state ownership."

The member for Mississauga South went on: "Further, on page 74 of the interim report, there is a recommendation that says the government should be empowered to take up to 50 per cent of the equity in new ventures in the non-renewable natural resources sector. But neither myself—and I'm speaking about the member for Mississauga South—"nor the member for London South (Mr. Walker) agreed to that recommendation. In any event, a recommendation stating that the government should be empowered to take an equity position is not the same as calling for public ownership of the resource industries."

The member for Mississauga South continued: "The additional comments of the four members of the third party implied that members of the select committee and members of this party"—and in brackets I indicate the Conservative Party—"were in favour of public ownership of the resource industry. That is not a factual statement . . ."

Mr. Speaker, that is the the point I want to make—when the member for Mississauga South said, "That is not a factual statement." It is this final remark by the member with which I cannot agree and at which I take umbrage.

What in effect the member for Mississauga South is attempting to do is disclaim that his party, the Liberal Party and the NDP jointly called for public ownership of new development in the non-renewable resources sector. A rose by any other name is still a rose.

The member for Mississauga South might like to argue that their calling for 50 per cent equity position in new ventures in the non-renewable sector did not indicate his colleagues meant public ownership; that's nonsense. The select committee on economic and cultural nationalism recommended—and I'm quoting from that—"that government should be empowered to take up to 50 per cent of the equity in new ventures in the non-renewable natural resources sector."

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to turn, when you have an opportunity, to page 87 of the select committee's report and direct your attention to the dissenting opinions of the members for Mississauga South and London South, which I want to quote. Their words are as follows: "This recommendation permits the government, at its option, to acquire up to 50 per cent equity in mining enterprises. This ignores the fact that the private sector may have invested heavily in exploration and be at the same stage of developing, economically, a viable operation." They go on—and this is very salient to the point I am making—"This is grossly unfair to the private sector and would in effect be a move towards nationalization, in part, of the non-renewable natural resources industry."

Mr. Laughren: They should make up their minds. They can't have it both ways.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the member for Mississauga South's statement of last Monday when he said, "In any event, a recommendation stating that government should be empowered to take an equity position is not the same as calling for public ownership of the resource industry." Yet in his dissenting opinion in 1974, Mr. Kennedy says, "This is grossly unfair to the private sector and would in fact be a move towards nationalization."

Mr. Lewis: He can't have it both ways.

Mr. Martel: The only members who dissented from that report—

Mr. Rotenberg: What's your point of privilege?

Mr. Mackenzie: Skewered by his own words.

Mr. Martel: The only members who dissented from that recommendation were the members for Mississauga South and London South. The rest of the committee knew full well what we meant was being discussed. In fact, so did the members for Mississauga South and London South, because they in fact so indicated by their dissent to signing that particular recommendation. The member for Mississauga South cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Rotenberg: You always have.

Mr. Martel: His party and the members of his party, as well as the Liberal and New Democratic members, knew what they were signing. One only has to read the select committee report, pages 66 to 75, to be aware. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me an opportunity for clarifying that point of personal privilege.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It has confused the issue more.

Mr. Speaker: While I listened with a great deal of patience to the presentation made by the member for Sudbury East, I don't think it constituted a point of privilege.

Mr. Martel: Sure it did.

Mr. Speaker: It's a difference in an opinion or an interpretation as to what was meant by the recommendations, and it varies significantly from the interpretation placed on it by the member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Havrot: It's a waste of time.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has had an opportunity. I listened patiently to his point of privilege last week. I listened to a rebuttal of it. I don't think either one of them was a legitimate point of privilege.

Mr. Kennedy: Could I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I don't know what could possibly be out of order. We haven't even started routine proceedings yet.

Mr. Kennedy: Would you give me a try, Mr. Speaker? Would you give me a try on a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: I'll let you try.

Mr. Cassidy: We tried; and we won't come back a second time.

Mr. Kennedy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I repeat, I know of no recommendation in that report calling for public ownership of the resource industry and the member is just clouding the issue.

Mr. Martel: You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Kennedy: We don't want it both ways, we just don't want it your way.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

THUNDER BAY COURTHOUSE

Hon. Mr. Henderson: During the last session of the Legislature—

Mr. Sargent: He should take over the Treasurer's job.

Hon. Mr. Henderson:—the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) asked my predecessor several questions concerning the condition of the provincial criminal courthouse in Thunder Bay. In order to clear up certain misconceptions which were apparent in the report of the inspection panel, on which the hon. member based his questions, I have obtained a consulting engineer's report which I am now proposing to table.

In summary, the report indicates the building is structurally sound, although there has been some settlement. The settlements are below the limits at which distress might be expected to occur to a structure and have not affected the operation of the building. There are no unusual ground-water conditions at the site. In particular, no evidence of artesian condition or wells or springs has been found. The drainage system from the basement is being examined and repairs will be undertaken as the need is shown to exist. Repairs to the roofing and waterproofing in the basement will be undertaken in the near future. Copies have been given to the opposition.

Mr. Kerrio: Did the report consider the north side?

OPP ROLE IN STRIKE

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would like to make a brief statement today clarifying the role of the Ontario Provincial Police—

Mr. Deans: Here comes the apology.

Mr. Warner: Disgusting.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—in the labour dispute at Huron Park involving Fleck Manufacturing Company Limited and the United Automobile workers.

Mr. Lewis: The minister should discipline severely all of those who are involved.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As a result of questions put by the hon. member for Wentworth to my colleague, the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson), in the Legislature on Tuesday, I requested a complete report on the picket-line incidents and the situation at the plant generally from OPP Commissioner Harold Graham.

First of all, I want to stress that the OPP has not taken sides in the dispute but was present at the plant strictly to maintain the peace.

Mr. Deans: Of course it did. It took sides on Friday when it went in.

Mr. Lewis: It has.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Secondly, the decision to inform workers of their rights and responsibilities during the strike was made by the local OPP detachment commander, Sergeant Roy Glover.

Mr. Martel: They do that every day.

Mr. Lewis: That is ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I have been assured he was not contacted in any way by James Fleck, deputy minister of Industry and Tourism, any member of his family or any government official at Queen's Park with a request to speak to the workers.

The detachment was first involved in this labour dispute when a plant employee, Mary Lou Richards, came to the Exeter detachment on February 23, 1978, seeking advice on the rights of strikers. She was given that information. She is a member of Local 1620 of the United Automobile Workers and a UAW representative in the plant. On the morning of Friday, March 3, 1978, Sgt. Glover sent Constable W. F. MacIntyre, his community services officer, to the plant when advised by management that a strike was pending and that there were rumours of impending trouble. Constable MacIntyre returned to headquarters and briefed Sergeant Glover on the situation.

At 2 p.m. that same afternoon, Constable MacIntyre and Corporal Freeth returned to the plant at Sergeant Glover's direction. Constable MacIntyre was in civilian dress, which, as a full-time plain-clothes officer, is his normal attire. Corporal Freeth was in full uniform. The workers were assembled and Constable MacIntyre addressed all employees and advised them of their rights and of the laws regarding intimidation, mischief, damage, threats and weapons.

It was made abundantly clear that the police would not take sides in the matter—

Mr. Deans: Oh, come on.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—and that the OPP presence would be strictly for the purpose of maintaining the peace.

Mr. Deans: By the very fact he was there he was taking sides.

Mr. Makarchuk: You don't call that intimidation.

Mr. Lewis: That is an incredible intrusion on free collective bargaining, an unforgivable intrusion.

An hon. member: Bring the OPP under public control.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Several questions posed by the employees were answered. Constable MacIntyre's comments were based on material contained in the OPP's in-service training manual on strikes.

Mr. Lewis: It is really unforgivable. Where has it ever happened before?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: A copy of this manual is in every detachment library.

I do not intend to comment today on the picket-line incidents involving a union representative and a picketer, as charges have been laid and this matter will be decided by the courts. I can only say that Commissioner Graham has assured me that his men are acting impartially in this strike and intend only to maintain peace on the picket line.

Mr. Martel: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Lewis: They are intimidating women on the picket line. You should have a judicial inquiry.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Scarborough West doesn't have to react to every statement that is said.

[2:15]

Mr. Lewis: I don't react to every statement, only the absurd statements; only the provocative statements.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's just about every statement.

An hon. member: Here comes another one.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I won't be provocative.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: In view of some questions raised in this House and in related news stories concerning my deputy minister, I want to say that after examining the facts and discussing—

Mr. Deans: There was no question in this House.

Mr. Makarchuk: The minister should be embarrassed.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I am going to respond to the interjection because I think if Hansard is checked, the member will find there was reference made by the hon. member for Wentworth concerning the Deputy Minister of Industry and Tourism. If there was no reference made to him, then it will not be necessary for me to make a statement.

Mr. Deans: I said "whether the name is Fleck or otherwise." That was my comment.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: In view of some questions raised in this House and in related news stories concerning my deputy minister, I want to say that after examining the facts and discussing this personally with Mr. Fleck, I am confident that the position of Fleck Manufacturing and Mr. Fleck's role as deputy minister conjure up no conflict of interest.

From what Mr. Fleck has told me, I am satisfied that he has no involvement in the day-to-day general administration of this company. Further, my investigation of the matter convinces me that this company receives no preference or special treatment from government or any of its agencies.

By way of background, I must explain that Huron Industrial Park, the former Canadian Forces base in Centralia, is located in Huron county on Highway 4, approximately 25 miles north of London and four miles south of Exeter.

In 1967, the Ontario government commissioned a firm of management consultants, Stevenson and Kellogg Limited, to conduct a feasibility study into the practicability of converting the base into an industrial/educational complex. The results were positive. In the same year the property was acquired from the Department of National Defence and ownership was transferred to the Ontario Development Corporation for administration and operation.

The park comprises 767 acres of developed land zoned into six general areas—an industrial complex, educational complex, residential complex, commercial complex, recreational complex and an airfield. One hundred and fifty-two thousand square feet is occupied by the Centralia College of Agricultural Technology and the Animal Health and Veterinary Services School.

The industrial complex totals 396,000 square feet, primarily located in seven hangars each providing in excess of 42,000 square feet. Current rental rates for these hangars range from 74 to 85 cents per square foot per year, depending upon the year in which the present tenant assumed his lease. All leases contain an escalation clause providing for rate increases annually.

Mr. Sargent: A pretty cozy deal, eh?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Since 1973, Fleck Manufacturing has occupied 45,755 square feet in hangar No. 1. This space was first leased in 1968 to the Hall Lamp Company, who went into receivership in 1973. During their occupancy, the rental rate was 50 cents per square foot per year.

Fleck Manufacturing Limited first occupied the space through arrangements made with the receiver/manager. In September 1974 the Fleck organization assumed a five-year lease from ODC at an initial rate of 63 cents per square foot, with a five-cent-per-year escalation clause. The company is now in the fourth year of this lease, paying 78 cents per square foot. This will rise to 83 cents in September of this year.

Mr. Sargent: You can't even get storage for that.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The hon. member is well aware what happens when anything goes into receivership; he's probably been through it more times than anyone else in the House.

I would like to add that every effort has been made to make Huron Industrial Park a profitable, self-sustaining complex, providing employment and job opportunities at no cost to the taxpayer. This had proved to be the case, and at present, based on recognized accounting standards, Huron Industrial Park operates from its own funds and has accumulated a reserve of $1,425,000. This reserve is available for new capital expenditures or for replacement and refurbishing of existing services and facilities.

Mr. Martel: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, there is a point of order.

Mr. Martel: There is a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: No, there isn't.

Mr. Deans: There is.

Mr. Speaker: There isn't.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, there is a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Anything that results from a ministerial statement can be legitimately raised in question period.

Mr. Makarchuk: His statement is out of order.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, there is a point of order. Would you kindly listen to it?

Mr. Speaker: There isn't. Are you denying the minister the right to make a statement in this House?

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Martel: If you would kindly listen.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Martel: There is something out of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: There is something out of order.

An hon. member: How can you know when you won't listen?

Mr. Lewis: Is it not possible for you to listen before you rule?

Mr. Speaker: You may rise on a question of privilege or to correct something that was said.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a question of privilege which relates to a correction of the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Try it.

Mr. Lewis: Fair enough. It's good of you to allow it, sir.

Under the rules of this House, opposition critics are entitled to copies of ministerial statements before they are delivered—under the rules of this House, Mr. Speaker.

The statements were not delivered. My colleague simply wished to draw that to the attention of the minister and the Speaker—that we have that right by rules of the Legislature.

Mr. Martel: Maybe you should apologize.

Mr. Lewis: I don't know whether that's a point of order or a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: My apology. That is a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The reason I didn't think that was a possibility was that I was just delivered a letter from the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) where he said he had been accused of the same thing. I found out the minister was not at fault; the actual copies of statements had been delivered to the office of the leader of the New Democratic Party at least 20 minutes prior to the statement having been delivered in the House.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but that's not John Rhodes. We know the way Rhodes operates.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely correct. I did not deliver it before the reading of the statement. However, the statements were just produced this morning. I had the copies here on my desk—

Mr. Lewis: I'm just drawing it to your gentle attention.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —and they were delivered—two copies to the leader of the New Democratic Party, two copies to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: My humblest apologies—

Mr. Lewis: They are accepted with good grace.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —and heaven knows, I would not want to break any of the rules of the House—

Mr. Lewis: I know that, sir. I know that.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: —in keeping with the method followed by the New Democratic Party.

NORTH PICKERING INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am today tabling the report of the commission of inquiry into the acquisition by the government of certain lands in the community of North Pickering.

Members will recall that this inquiry was established in October 1976 after the report of the Ombudsman on this subject, the response of the Ministry of Housing and hearings of the select committee on the Ombudsman as part of a two-tribunal hearing, one by this commission and one by an officer of the Office of the Ombudsman, Mr. Keith Hoilett.

The commission was to consider, recommend and report on three main areas of contention:

1. The merits of claims for additional compensation in cases placed in dispute by the response of the Ministry of Housing; any other cases handled by any of the five named land agents;

2. The amount of any additional compensation;

3. The allegations of misconduct against Terry Bortolotti, James Gilhespie, William Thompson, Joseph Kuzik and J. E. Spafford.

The order in council establishing the commission stated that "all matters referred to this commission shall be heard and determined in proceedings of an adversarial nature."

It is important to note that these references and directions were drafted in accordance with an agreement signed by the Ombudsman and the then Minister of Housing (Mr. Rhodes) on October 1, 1976. This agreement was reached after discussions were carried on at the direction of the select committee on the Ombudsman. An interpretation of these terms of reference was made by the Court of Appeal of Ontario at the request of counsel for the claimants and the commission proceeded on the basis of this judicial instruction.

The report records the statement of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), made in this House on March 2, 1972, announcing the whole North Pickering program and comments upon the resulting efforts that were made to inform landowners who might be affected by the project. These efforts included the distribution of pamphlets, newsletters and newspaper supplements, and meetings held in the area.

The commission began its hearings on November 4, 1976, and the report records the history of the proceedings and outlines the perceived duties of the commission.

Unfortunately, these duties were to a large extent complicated by the refusal of the applicants to appear before the commission. In spite of notices published in the daily newspapers and served on the former landowners, none appeared at the final hearing or gave evidence with the exception of one claimant who gave part of her evidence in chief. However, some 47 exhibits were filed and considered.

In relation to allegations against the five land acquisition agents, the commission found these agents were experienced in real estate matters and qualified for the positions they held.

The notes they made at the time of their visits to owners and the comments made therein demonstrated that they had sought to serve the interests of the owners and fully appreciated their obligations to treat them fairly and justly, the commission found.

It also found that they did not attempt to minimize the value of the property but pointed out those factors which would tend to increase the value of that property and that they were sensitive to the rights of the owners and endeavoured to promote such rights.

The commission pointed out that one of the complainants was a lawyer and a considerable number of the other complainants had acted on the advice of their solicitors. The commission has no reason not to assume that those solicitors were qualified and competent to—and did—properly advise their clients and protect their interests.

I will quote very briefly from the conclusion of the report:

“A careful consideration and weighing of the report of the Ombudsman, especially the summaries of the representations made by the complainants and the interviews conducted by the Ombudsman and the evidence led on behalf of the five land acquisition agents before this commission, leads to the conclusion that none of the allegations of misconduct made in the report of the Ombudsman on the North Pickering project against [the five agents named] is justified. . . .”

FUNDING OF SOCIAL SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) and myself, I would like to report the results of a meeting of federal and provincial ministers of welfare and social services in Ottawa on March 6 and 7.

As hon. members are aware, the provinces and the federal government have been involved in discussions for more than three years regarding a new arrangement to replace Canada Assistance Plan funding of social services. This, of course, does not include sharing of income maintenance, which will continue to be shared under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Before providing details of the meeting, I would like to highlight relevant background information regarding this issue.

Since the introduction of the Canada Assistance Plan in 1966, provincial expenditures on “federally approved” social services have received 50 per cent cost-sharing from the federal government. This federal assistance has been very valuable in the development of Ontario’s social services system. While we appreciate this support, it should be made very clear that federal cost-sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan has never been available for all the social services that our people require.

Consequently, this government initiated, and in many cases maintained, a number of important social services at 100 per cent provincial expense. This occurred because the necessary services were either ineligible for federal sharing or shareable only if certain restrictive conditions were met. Extended care for the elderly and adult mental retardation services were 100 per cent funded by the province at the outset, although some federal cost-sharing ultimately was obtained for both.

Mr. McClellan: Some? It’s $123 million.

Hon. Mr. Norton: However, services such as children’s mental health centres, children’s mental retardation services, elderly persons’ centres, meals-on-wheels and a number of other programs were initiated and are maintained to this day at 100 per cent provincial expense. The magnitude of this can be seen readily by the fact that approximately $110 million of expenditures on children’s services under the Ministry of Community and Social Services receive no federal cost-sharing.

My intention is not to criticize the federal government nor to minimize their contribution. Rather, it is my intention to indicate that the Canada Assistance Plan has not been fully adequate to meet the needs of the people of Ontario.

In these circumstances, Ontario welcomed federal initiatives in 1975 to develop a new and more appropriate approach to funding of social services. Unfortunately, the proposed new Social Services Act, Bill C-57, which was tabled in June 1977, did not meet our requirements. It offered a broader base for cost-sharing and would have provided assistance for a number of services which were not shareable under the Canada Assistance Plan. However, we were concerned about the potentially restrictive aspects of the proposed legislation.

The Social Services Act was extremely detailed in respect to the range of cost-shared services, eligibility for service and user charges paid by the recipients. As such the Act did not provide the degree of flexibility required by the province and gave the federal government greater potential control and leverage over provincial social services.

It was also administratively cumbersome as the federal government subsequently did acknowledge.

[2:30]

Therefore, Ontario responded promptly and positively to the federal government’s September 1977 offer to block fund services instead of proceeding with Bill C-57. The block funding approach did not meet Ontario’s stated preference for tax points transfer. However, it was an extremely positive step on the part of the federal government. It confirmed their confidence in the ability and the willingness of the provinces to fulfil their responsibilities in a flexible manner in accordance with provincial priorities.

The original offer was unilaterally revised by the federal government in December 1977. This revised block funding offer was the subject of our meetings this week where the ministers agreed that a new arrangement for federal funding of social services will commence on April 1, 1978. The funding formula will be based upon:

1. The amount the provinces will have received in 1977-78 for social services under the Canada Assistance Plan, the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Agreement, and the Rehabilitation of Young Offenders Agreement;

2. An additional per capita "enrichment factor" associated with a more comprehensive coverage of social services and intended to provide for further development of services. This amount will not be payable until 1979 and will be escalated thereafter for the ensuing 10 years;

3. An escalator factor for each subsequent year based on the gross national product experience and increases in population;

4. A "levelling" adjustment that would gradually eliminate over the 10-year period the provincial differences above or below the national average contribution by Canada so that at the end of the period each province would receive the same per capita contribution.

The agreement will apply for a 10-year period. It contains three general conditions pertaining to residency, recognition of federal contribution, and provision of information. The block funding offer has not met all of the Ontario government's expectations, nor those of other provinces. As noted previously, Ontario would have preferred a tax point transfer. Fiscal realities led the federal government to postpone unilaterally the enrichment factor for one year, thus reducing the expected federal contributions to the provinces by $132 million in 1978-79.

